2. Of S. George, called commonly the Garter, inſtituted by King Edward the third, to increaſe virtue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or as ſome will, in honour of the Counteſs of Saliſburies Garter, of which Lady the King formerly had been inamoured. But this I take to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder, and the Order; firſt publiſhed by Polydore Virgil, a ſtranger to the affairs of England, and by him taken upon no better ground than fama vulgi, the tradition of the common people; too trifling a Foundation for ſo great a building; Common bruit, being ſo infamous an Hiſtorian, that wiſe men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. But for this fame or common bruit, the vanity and improbabilities thereof have been elſewhere canvaſſed. Suffice it to obſerve in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto this Order, in teſtimony of that bond of Love and Affection, wherewith the Knights or Fellows of it were to be bound ſeverally unto one another, and all of them jointly to the King as the Soveraign of it. So ſaith the Regiſter of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did ſo fit the habit unto that deſign, Ut omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat. But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26 Knights, of which the Kings of England are Soveraigns: and is ſo much deſired for its excellency, that 8 Emperours, 21 Foreign Kings, 22 Foreign Dukes and Princes, beſides divers Noble men of other Countries, have been Fellows of it. The Enſign is a blew Garter buckled on the left leg, on which theſe words are embroidered, viz. Hony ſoit qui mal y penſe. About their necks they wear a Blew Ribband, at the end of which hangeth the Image of St. George, upon whoſe day the Inſtallations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3. Of the Bath, brought firſt into England, 1399. by Henry the Fourth. They are created at the Coronation of Kings and Queens, and the Inſtallation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights thereof diſtinguiſhed by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Batchelors, of whom they have in all places the precedency; unleſs they be alſo the Sons of Noblemen, to whom their birth gives it before all Orders.

4. Of Baronets, an Order inſtituted by King James in the 9th year of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Ulſter. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of thoſe of the Garter, nor of the younger Sons of the Nobility. But this being Hereditary, not perſonal, and rather Civil than Military; is not ſo properly to be ranked amongſt Orders of Knighthood.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lyons paſſant Gardant, Sol. The reaſon why theſe Arms quartered with the French, took the ſecond place, are, 1. Becauſe that France at the time of the firſt quartering of them, was the larger and more famous Kingdom. 2. That the French ſeeing the honour done to their Arms, might more eaſily be induced to have acknowledged the Engliſh Title. 3. Becauſe the Engliſh Arms were compounded of the Lion of Aquitain, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutchies.

There were in England, at and ſince the time of the Reformation, WALES.

WALES is bounded on all ſides with the Sea, except towards England, on the Eaſt; from which ſeparated by the River Dee, and a line drawn to the River Wie. Anciently it extended Eaſtwards to the River Severn, till by the puiſſance of Offa the great King of the Mercians, the Welch or Britains were driven out of the plain Countries beyond that River, and forced to betake themſelves to the Mountains; where he cauſed them to be ſhut up and divided from England by an huge Ditch, called in Welch, Claudh Offa, i.e. Offa's Dike: Which Dike beginning at the influx of the Wie into the Severn, not far from Chepſtow, extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Cheſter, where the Dee is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Law made by Harold, That if any Welch-man was found with a Weapon on this ſide of it, he ſhould have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales ſome derive from Idwallo, the Son of Cadwallader, who with the ſmall remainder of his Britiſh Subjects, made good the faſtneſſes of this Country, and was the firſt who had the title of King of Wales. Others conceive, that the name of Welch and Wales, was given them by the Saxons: who having poſſeſſed themſelves of all the reſt of the Country, called the Britains, who lived here, by the name of Walſh, which in their Language ſignifieth as much as Aliens; becauſe they differed from them both in their Laws and Language: which is the general opinion. Moſt probable it is, that as the Britains derive their Pedigree from the Gauls (as before was proved) ſo they might ſtill retain the name; and were called Walliſh by the Saxons, inſtead of Galliſh: the Saxons uſing in moſt words W. for G. as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed the rather, becauſe the Frenchmen to this day call the Country Galles, and the eldeſt Son of England, Le Prince de Galles: as alſo that the Dutch or Germans (of whom the Saxons are a part) do call ſuch Nations as inhabit on the skirts of France, by the name of Wallons.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures poſſeſſing the Counties of Hereford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth, and Glamorgan, all Glouceſterſhire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Worceſterſhire on the ſame ſide alſo: their chief Towns, Ariconium, now Hereford, (not reckoned ſince the time of Offa, as a part of Wales,) Baleum, now Buelth, in Brecknock; Cobannium, now Abergavenny, in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor, in the County ſo named; and Bovium, now Boverton, in Glamorgan. 2. The Dimetæ, poſſeſſing Cardigan, Caermarthen, and Pembrokeſhires, whoſe chief Towns were Loventium, now New-Caſtle, in Caermarthen; Maridunum, or Caermarthen it ſelf: and Octopitæ, where now ſtands S. Davids, by the Welch called Menew, whence that Biſhop hath the name of Menevenſis in Latine, 3. The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Angleſey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery; with the North part of Worceſterſhire beyond the River Severn, and all Shropſhire, on the ſame ſide of the River. Their chief Towns were Segontium, now Caer Seont, in Carnarvonſhire; Cononium, now Conwey in the ſame County; Bonium, where after ſtood the famous Monaſtery of Banchor, in Flintſhire; and Mediolanium, now Llanvillin, in the County of Montgomery. By theſe three Nations was all that Tract poſſeſſed, which lieth on the other ſide of the Severn. A very ſtout and hardy people, and ſo impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept conſtantly in Britain, as before is ſaid, were planted in and near theſe people, the better to contain them in due obedience: that is to ſay, the ſecond Legion at Caer Leon upon Uſk, of which more anon; and the twentieth at Deuvana, where now ſtands Weſt-Cheſter. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation ſubject to the power of Rome; and no leſs difficult to bring them under the Command of the Saxons: whom they withſtood, when all the reſt of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to ſee their Victors overcome by the Normans, before themſelves had yielded to a Foreign yoke.

The Chriſtian Faith planted amongſt the Britains, in the time of Lucius, they ſtill retained, when all the reſidue of the Iſland had been relapſed to Paganiſm: and they retained it not in ſecret, as afraid to own it, but in a well conſtituted Church. Inſomuch that Auguſtine the Monk, when he firſt preached the Goſpel to the Engliſh Saxons, found here no fewer than ſeven Biſhops; that is to ſay, Herefordenſis, Tavenſis, Paternenſis, Banchorenſis, Elwienſis, Wiccienſis, and Morganenſis (or rather Menevenſis:) all which, excepting only Paternenſis, do ſtill remain amongſt us, though in other names, Hereford, and Worceſter, (Wiccienſis) reckoned now in England; St. Davids or Menevenſis, Tavenſis or Landaff, Bangor, and Elwyenſis or St. Aſaph, in Wales, according to the preſent boundaries and limits of it: And as they did retain the Faith, ſo they retained it after the tradition of their Predeceſſors; neither ſubmitting unto Auguſtine as Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor to the Pope from whom he came, as Oecumenical, or chief Paſtor of the Church of Chriſt; nor receiving any new Doctrines or Traditions from them: but ſtanding to thoſe Principles of Liberty, and Religion, which they were poſſeſſed of, till all the world almoſt had yielded to that powerful See. Not manumitted from the vaſſallage and thraldom to it, till they embraced the Reformation of the Church of England in Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Worſhip: the Liturgie whereof was by the command of Queen Elizabeth, tranſlated into the Welch or Britiſh; as the Bible alſo was by virtue of an Act of Parliament in the fifth of that Queen, the care thereof committed to the Biſhop of Hereford, and the four Biſhops of Wales. But becauſe the Bible then ſet forth was only in the large Church Volume; it was in the beginning of the Reign of King Charles reduced to a more portable Bulk, at the coſt and charge of my Couſin Mr. Rowland Heylin, one of the Aldermen of London; who alſo cauſed the Book called The Practice of Piety to be printed in that Language for the inſtruction of the People; and a Welch or Britiſh Dictionary to be made and publiſhed, for the underſtanding of the Language.

But to return unto the Church, and Affairs thereof, for the better ordering of the ſame, it hath been long ago divided into four Dioceſſes (beſides that of Hereford) for the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; thoſe Dioceſſes ſubdivided into 9 Arch-Deaconries, as before in England: all ſubject heretofore to their own Primate or Archbiſhop, reſiding in the City of Iſca Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda, called by the Welch or Britains, Caer-Leon, or the City of the Legion, from the ſecond Legion, fixt there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Uſk, becauſe ſituate on the River ſo named. But this City being too much expoſed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archiepiſcopal See was tranſlated to Menew, ſtanding on a Promontory in the extream Angle of Pembrokeſhire, by David then Archbiſhop thereof, and near of kin to Arthur that renowned King of the Britains: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Menew being left off, the See and City came to be called St. Davids. From David unto Sampſon the 26. Archbiſhop of the Welch, (being above 400 years) did they hold this Dignity; but then the Peſtilence extreamly raging in theſe parts, Archbiſhop Samſon carried with him the Epiſcopal Pall, and therewith the dignity it ſelf to Dole in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbiſhop in Wales, in name and title, though the power proper thereunto ſtill remained amongſt them: the Welch Biſhops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving Conſecration from any other hands than their own Biſhop of St. Davids, till Biſhop Bernard was compelled to ſubmit himſelf to the Power and Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the firſt.

But it's time to look upon the face of the Country as it ſtands at the preſent, which we find Mountainous and Barren; not able to maintain its people but by helps elſewhere. To make amends for which defect, there were ſome Silver Mines diſcovered in it not long ſince, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet; not only to the great honour of his own Country, but to the profit and renown of the whole Iſland of Great Britain. Their chief Commodities are courſe Clothes, entituled commonly by the name of Welch Freeze, and Cottons; which Merchandiſe was heretofore brought to Oſweſtre (the furtheſt Town of Shropſhire) as the common Empory; and there bought by the Merchants of Shrewsbury. But the Welch coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Country, occaſioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their Commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and enforced them to ſettle the whole Trade at Shrewsbury, where it ſtill continueth.

To ſpeak of Mountains in a Country which is wholly mountainous, were a thing unneceſſary: yet of moſt note are thoſe of 1. Snowdon, 2. Brechin, 3. Karduvaure, and 4. Plinlimmon. Not much obſervable but for their vaſt height, and thoſe many notable Rivers which iſſue from them. The principal whereof are, 1. Dee, in Latine called Deva, ariſing out of Karduvaure Hills in Merionethſhire, and running into the Sea not far from Cheſter. Over this River Edgar King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge, by eight inferiour Kings, Vaſſals and Tributaries to him, that is to ſay, Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland. Mac-cuis, King of the Iſles, Dufwall, Gryffith, Howel, Jago, and Indethel, Princes or Kings of Wales: uſing theſe words to ſuch as attended on him, that then his Succeſſors might call themſelves Kings of England, when they did the like. This was in the year 973, and the laſt of his Reign. 2. Wie, in Latine called Vaga, ariſing from Plinlimmon Hills, and emptying it ſelf into the Severn at Chepſtow. More in the heart of the Country (for theſe are but borderers for the greateſt part of their courſe). 3. Conwey, which riſing in Merionethſhire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abur Conwey. 4. Tyvie, which riſing in Montgomeryſhire, and paſſing between the Counties of Cardigan, Penbroke, and Carmarthen, runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5. Chedlady, which runneth quite through Pembrokeſhire, emptieth it ſelf into Milford Haven, one of the moſt capacious and ſafeſt Havens, not of England only, but of all the World.

The Men are of a faithful carriage towards all men, eſpecially towards one another in a ſtrange Country, and towards Strangers in their own. Of a temper queſtionleſs much inclining to Choler, as being ſubject to the Paſſion by Ariſtotle called ἀκροχολία, by which men are quickly moved to Anger, and as ſoon appeaſed: of all Angers the beſt and nobleſt. Their Language (the old Britiſh) hath the leaſt commixture of foreign words of any in Europe; and by reaſon of its many Conſonants and guttural Letters, is not ſo pleaſing as ſome others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much ſtudied by thoſe of other Nations; in regard that ſuch of the Inhabitants who have addicted themſelves to learning, have rather choſe to expreſs themſelves in the Latine or Engliſh tongues, than that of their own Native Country. The principal of which (not to ſay any thing of Merlin, the Tages of the Welch or Britiſh) were 1. Gildas, for his great knowledge ſirnamed Sapiens. 2. Geofry of Monmouth, and 3. Giraldus Cambrenſis, the Hiſtorians; and of later times, 4. William Morgan, the Tranſlator of the Bible into Welch, for which performance moſt deſervedly made Biſhop of Landaff. 5. Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6. Owen the Epigrammatiſt, &c.

The whole Country (not taking the Countries of Shropſhire and Monmouth into the reckoning) contain in it 12 Shires only: of which, ſeven were ſet out by King Edward the firſt, that is to ſay, Glamorgan, Pembroke, Carmarden, Cardigan, Merioneth, Angleſey, and Carnarvon. The other five, viz. the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock, were after added out of the Marchlands by King Henry the 8. Theſe 12 Shires are again contracted or ſubdivided into 4 Circuits, for the adminiſtration of Juſtice. Of which the firſt containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint, and Denbigh; the ſecond thoſe of Carnarvon, Angleſey, and Merioneth; the third thoſe of Carmarden, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth thoſe of Glamorgan, Brecknock, and Radnor.

In theſe 12 Shires are reckoned one Chaſe, 13 Foreſts, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain alſo 1016 Pariſhes, amongſt which, four Cities, 55 Market Towns, and 41 Caſtles of the old erection. The Cities ſmall, poor, and inconſiderable. The Market Towns, thoſe eſpecially on the Marches and out-parts of the Country, very fair and ſtrong; as being not only built for Commerce and Trade, but fortified with Walls and Caſtles to keep in the Welch: and ſo employed, till the incorporating Wales with England took away all occaſion of the old hoſtilities. And for the Caſtles in the Inlands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is edax rerum, but chiefly by the policy of the Kings of England, who would not ſuffer any places of ſtrength to remain in a Country almoſt inacceſſible, and amongſt men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruines of them are now brought to ruine.

But to proceed more particularly; the four Cities (or Epiſcopal Sees) are 1. S. Davids, formerly the Metropolitan of Wales, ſituate on the Promontory in Pembrokeſhire, by the Ancients called Octopitæ; in a ſafe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welch moſt feared; but incommodious enough for all the reſt of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not ſo ſafe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in reſpect of ſundry other Nations, who have often ſpoiled and defaced it. For ſtanding near the Sea, it hath been frequently viſited and ſpoiled by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pyrats; inſomuch that the Biſhops were enforced to remove their dwelling to Caermarthen: which brought the City (ſmall enough before, when it was at the biggeſt) to the condition of a Village. 2. Llandaffe, upon the River Taffe, whence it took the name; Llan, in the Welch or Britiſh, ſignifying a Church; Llandaffe, the Church upon the Taffe: the Biſhops whereof derive their Lineal ſucceſſion from thoſe of Caer-Leon upon Uſk; though the Primacy or Archbiſhops See were removed to Menew. A ſmall Town now it is, God wot, nothing to rank it for a City but the Cathedral Church, and the Prebends houſes. 3. S. Aſaph, a ſmall Town in Flintſhire, ſo called from S. Aſaph, the ſecond Biſhop hereof; left here by Kentigern a Scot, by whom the Cathedral Church was founded, about the year 560. Situate on the Banks of the River Elwy, thence called Llan-Elwy by the Welch, the Biſhop Elwynenſis in ſome Latine Writers. 4. Bangor, upon the Menai, a branch of the Iriſh Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three; but only for the Cathedral founded here by the firſt Biſhops, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards re-edified by Henry Dean, Biſhop hereof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note, (for theſe Cities have not ſo much in them which is worth the noting) are 1. Shrewbury counted now in England but heretofore the Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, who had here their Palace: which being burnt in ſome of their broils with England, is now converted into Gardens for the uſe of the Townſmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welch and Engliſh, the common Empory of both; well built, and ſtrongly ſituate on a riſing ground, almoſt encompaſſed with the Severn; that part thereof which is not fenced with the River, being fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, the work of Roger de Montgomery, the firſt Earl hereof, Anno 1067. Over the River for convenience of paſſage it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Weclh Bridge, which is towards Wales; built by Leoline or Llewellen the firſt, one of the Princes of North-Wales; wh[illegible] they conceive to be that Statua which is there ſtandin[illegible] on the Gate. Remarkable ſince the times of King Henry the ſixth, for giving the Title of Earl to the Noble Family of the Talbots: a Family of great Honour, and as great an Eſtate, till the parcelling of the Lands betwixt the Daughters and Coheirs of Gilbert Talbot late Earl hereof; according to the ill Cuſtom of England, where many times the Eſtate goes to the Females, and the Honour (with nothing to maintain it) to the next Heir Male. 2. Banchor, by Beda called Bancornaburg, a famous Monaſtery of the Britains: containing above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelihood: moſt cruelly and unmercifully ſlaughtered by the Saxons, at the inſtigation of Auſtin the firſt Archbiſhops of Canterbury, offended that they would not yield unto his authority. 3. Carnarvon, on the Menai before mentioned, not far from Bangor, (the Monaſtry of Banchor being in Flintſhire) well walled, and fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle by King Edward the firſt, after his conqueſt of the Country; formerly much reſorted to, for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4. Denbigh, well ſeated on the Banks of the River Iſtrad, which from thence runs into the Cluyd, the faireſt River of all thoſe parts. A Town well traded and frequented, eſpecially ſince it was made by King Henry the 8. the head Town of a County: before which time of great reſort, as being the head Town of the Barony of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodlieſt Territories in England; having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5. Matravall, not far from Montgomery, heretofore a fair and capacious Town, honoured with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powysland, thence called Kings of Matravall; now a poor Village. 6. Caermarthen, Maridunum anciently, whence the modern name, the Britains adding Caer unto it: not called ſo from Caer-Merlin, or the City of Merlin, inchanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave hereabouts, as old Fablers and Romances tell us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church; to which there was a purpoſe in the time of King Edward the ſixth, of removing the Epiſcopal See from S. Davids. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, ſtands Dinevour Caſtle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South-Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevour; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Caermarthen. 7. Haverford Weſt, ſituated in the Cherſoneſe, or Demy-Iſland of Pembrokeſhire, by the Welch called Roſs; by the Engliſh, Little England beyond Wales, by reaſon of the Engliſh tongue there ſpoken: a Town the beſt traded and frequented of all South-Wales. 8. Milford, in the ſame County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the moſt ſafe and capacious Haven in all the Iſland, conſiſting of ſundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which make it capable of entertaining the greateſt Navy: the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9. Monmouth, ſituate at the mouth or influx of the River Munow (where it falleth into the Wie) whence it had the name. A Town belonging anciently to the Houſe of Lancaſter, the Birth-place of King Henry the Fifth, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular enough to renown the place. and therefore we ſhall add no more. 10. Ludlow, a Town of great reſort, by reaſon of the Court and Council of the Marches, kept here for the moſt part ever ſince the incorporating of Wales with England, for the eaſe of the Welch, and bordering Subjects, in their Suits at Law.

Situate on the confluence of the Temd, and Corve, and beautified with a very ſtrong Caſtle: the Palace heretofore of ſome of the Princes of Wales of the Blood-Royal of England, at ſuch times as they reſided in this Country (of which mo[illegible]non); and of late times, the ordinary Seat of the Lord P[illegible]ſident of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shropſhire on that ſide of the Severn, as a part of England. Of Angleſey and the Towns thereof, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, now taking notice only of Aberfraw, the Royal Seat ſometimes of the Princes of North-Wales, called thence Kings of Aberfraw.

The Story of the Britains till the time of Cadwallader their laſt King, we have had before. After whoſe retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies; that is to ſay, the Corniſh-Britains, the Britains of Cumberland, and the Britains of Wales. The Corniſh Britains governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the firſt Monarch of England, by whom ſubdued An. 809. and made a Province of that Kingdom. The Britains of Cumberland had their own Kings alſo (ſome of whoſe names occur in Story) till the year 946. when conquered by Edmund King of England, the Son of Athelſtan, their laſt King being named Dummilus, as Matthew of Weſtminſter informs us. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preſerve the name and reputation of their Country: although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Walliſh-men or Welch; and much ado they had to make good that title: all the plain Country beyond Severn being taken from them by Offa King of the Mercians: and themſelves made Tributaries for the reſt by Egbert before mentioned, by Athelſtan afterwards. Which laſt impoſed a Tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattel yearly; exchanged in following times for a Tribute of Wolves. But howſoever, they continued for a time the Title of Kings, whoſe names are thus ſet down by Glover, in his Catalogue of Honour, publiſhed by Milles.

The Kings of Wales.

A.Ch.

690 1 Idwallo, Son of Cadwallader.

720 2 Roderick, Son of Idwallo. 25.

755 3 Conan, Son of Roderick. 63.

818 4 Mervin, the Son in law of Conan. 25.

843 5 Roderick II. ſirnamed the Great, Son of Mervin, who divided his Kingdom, (ſmall enough before, amongſt his Sons: giving Guinedth, or North Wales to Amarawdh his eldeſt Son; to Cadel his ſecond Son, Deheubarth or South-Wales; and Powys-land to his youngeſt Son Mervin: conditioned that the two younger Sons and their Succeſſors, ſhould hold their Eſtates in Fee of the Kings of North-wales, and acknowledge the Soveraignty thereof, as Liegemen and Homagers. According unto which appointment, it was ordained in the Conſtitutions of Howel Dha, the Legiſlator of Wales, that as the Kings of Aberfraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in a way of tribute to the Kings of London; ſo the Kings of Dynevour and Matravall, ſhould pay in way of Tribute the like ſum to the Kings of Aberfraw. But notwithſtanding the reſervation of the Soveraignty to the Kings of North-Wales, Roderick committed a great Solœciſm in point of State, by this diſmembring of his Kingdom; eſpecially at a time when all the Kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occaſions to work upon the weakneſs of the neighbouring VVelch: which had they continued under one ſole Prince, might have preſerved their liberty, and themſelves a Kingdom as well as thoſe of Scotland, for ſo long a time, againſt the power and puiſſance of the Kings of England. Yet was not this the worſt of the miſchief neither; his Succeſſors ſubdividing (by his example) their ſmall Eſtates into many parcels, inſomuch that of the Eight tributary Kings which rowed King Edgar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of VVales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we muſt follow in our ſtory, according to the diviſion of the Country made by him into three Eſtates of North wales, South-wales, and Powys-land.

1. NORTH WALES, or Guinedth, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Carnarvon, the Iſle of Angleſey, and the greateſt parts of Denbigh and Flintſhires. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Denbigh, Carnarvon, Aberfraw, ſpoken of before; and ſome in Angleſey, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter. The Country (Angleſey excepted) the moſt barren and unfruitful part of Wales; but withall the ſafeſt and furtheſt from the danger of the incroaching Engliſh; which poſſibly might be the reaſon why it was ſet out for the portion of the Eldeſt Son, in whom the Soveraignty of the Welch was to be preſerved by the Kings or Princes of North Wales.

877 1 Amarawd. 36.

913 2 Idwallo, Son of Amarawd.

3 Merick, Son of Idwallo.

4 James, or Jago, Brother of Merick.

1067 5 Conan, Son of James or Jago.

1099 6 Gryffith ap Conan.

1120 7 Owen Guinedth, Son of Gryffith.

1178 8 David ap Owen, Son of Owen Guinedth.

1240 10 David ap Llewellen.

1246 11 Llewellen II. Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David ap Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales of the Britiſh Race. Of whom it is ſaid, that once conſulting with a Witch, he was told by her, that it was his deſtiny, to be carried in triumph through London, with a Crown on his head. Hereupon making ſome Excurſions on the Engliſh Borders, he drew upon himſelf the whole power of King Edward the firſt, which not being able to withſtand, and the King as willing on the other ſide not to fight with Mountains; Commiſſioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tiptoff, and ſome others, for the King of England; for the Welch Prince, Grono ap Heylyn, a great man of that Country, deſcended from Breckwel Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land, (from whom, if Cambden Clarencieux be of any credit, the Author of theſe Papers doth derive his Pedigree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditary Cup-Bearer, and from thence their name; (Heylyn, Promus, ſive a poculis, quæ vox in proprium nomen abiit, ſaith the Welch Dictionary) By thoſe Commiſſioners it was concluded and agreed on, that Llewellen ſhould enjoy a part of the Country with the title of Prince, during his life: the reſt in preſent, and the whole after his deceaſe, to be ſurrendred over to the King of England. But David the Brother of Llewellen finding himſelf excluded by this agreement, from the hope of ſucceſſion, incenſed his Brother and the Welch to a new Revolt: the iſſue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of Juſtice; and the death of Llewellen, ſlain in Battel near the Buelth in Brecknockſhire. Whoſe head being pitched upon a ſtake, and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Horſeman carried triumphantly through London, An. 1282. And ſo the Propheſie was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-wales, after they had for the ſpace of 405 years reſiſted not only the private Undertakers and Ad- venturers of England, but the Forces of many Puiſſant Monarchs; whoſe attempts they always made fruſtrate, by retiring into the heart of their Country, and leaving nothing for the Engliſh to encounter with, but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatal period of the Britiſh Liberty being come, they were conſtrained to yield to the ſtronger. What followed after this, we ſhall ſee anon.

The Arms of theſe Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions Paſſant gardant counterchanged.

2. POWISLAND contained the whole Counties of Montgomery, and Radnor, all Shropſhire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the reſt of Denbigh and Flinſhires; comprehending by the eſtimation of thoſe times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages: the word Cant ſignifying an Hundred, and Tret a Village. The principal Cities or Towns of it, were, S. Aſaph, Shrewsbury, Matraval, ſpoken of before. A Country more partaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guinedth, or North Wales; but always lying in harms way, by reaſon of the Neighbourhood of the more potent Engliſh: and therefore given by Roderick to Mervin, his youngeſt Son, partly becauſe he was the youngeſt; but chiefly becauſe he was a man of an approved valour, and ſo more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and diſmembred by the Earls of Cheſter and Shrewsbury, who took from them a good part of Flint, Denbigh, and Shropſhire; and by the Princes of North-wales, who caſt many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Succeſſors of Prince Mervin, I find no good Conſtat, more than of Brockwell Skythrac, before remembred. The laſt that held it at all entire was Meredyth ap Blethyn, who following the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Madoc, and Gryffith, his two Sons. Of which Madoc dyed at Wincheſter, An. 1160. in the time of King Henry the ſecond, his part hereof depending after his deceaſe, on the Fortunes of Guynedth: and Griffyth was by Henry the firſt made Lord of Powys (the ſtile of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his race it continued till the time of King Edward the firſt: to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith, the 5. from Gryffith ap Meridith before mentioned, ſurrendred his place and title; and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the cuſtom of England. Avis, or Hawis, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was married unto John Charleton, Valect (or Gentleman of the Privy Chamber) to King Edward the ſecond, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powis. Edward the fifth alſo of this Line of the Charletons, was the laſt of that Houſe; his Daughter Jane conveying the Eſtates and Title to the Houſe of the Greys; and of them alſo five enjoyed it, the laſt Lord Powis of the Line or Race of Mervin, being Edward Grey, who dyed in the days of our Grand-Fathers. And ſo the title lay extinct, until revived again in the perſon of Sir William Herbert of Red-Caſtle, deſcended from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke; created Lord Powys by King Charles the firſt, An. 1629.

The Arms of the Princes of Powyſland, were Or, a Lyon Rampant, Gules.

3. SOUTH-WALES, or Deheubarth, contained the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, and Brecknock; the greateſt and moſt fruitful part of all Wales, but more expoſed to the invaſion of Foreign Nations, Engliſh, Danes, Flemings, and Norwegians, by whom the Sea-Coaſts were from time to time moſt grievouſly plagued: Inſomuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their Seat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at firſt, unto Dynevour Caſtle, as a place of greater ſtrength and ſafety: where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dynevour, as before is ſaid. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaffe, S. Davids, ſpoken of already. The Kings and Princes, as far as I can find upon any certainty, are theſe that follow.

The Princes of South-Wales.

A. Ch.
877	1	Cadel, the Son of Roderick Mawre.
	2	Howel.
907	3	Howel Dha, Soveraign King of Wales.
948	4	Owen, the Son of Dha.
	5	Meredith, Son of Owen.
998	6	Aeneas, or Evenus, Brother of Meredith.
	7	Theodoret the Great.
1077	8	Rheſe ap Theodore.
1093	9	Gryffith ap Rheſe.
	10	Rheſe II. ap Gryffith.
	11	Gryffith ap Rheſe, the laſt Prince of South-Wales of the Line of Cadel, after they had with great ſtrugling maintained their Liberty for the ſpace of 300 years and upwards: but ſo, that though they ſtill preſerved the title of Princes, they loſt a great part of their Country to the Norman-Engliſh.

For in the Reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Newmark a Noble Norman, ſeized upon thoſe parts which now make the County of Brecknock, being then a fair and goodly Lordſhip: and Robert Fitz-Haymon, with ſome other noble Adventurers, made themſelves Maſters of Glamorgan; in which the Poſterity of ſome of them are ſtill remaining. Incouraged by their good ſucceſs, Arnulph of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the firſt, won from the Welch a great part of Dyvet, which we now call Pembrokeſhire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer, about the ſame times did prevail exceedingly in the Conqueſt of Cardigan and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no one Country left entire, but Caermarthen only, too little to maintain them in ſo high a title. And though this laſt Gryffith, in the time of the Wars in England, betwixt Maud the Empreſs, and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of his loſt Eſtate; yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long; himſelf deceaſing ſhortly after and his two Sons, Cymmerick and Meredith, being taken by King Henry the ſecond, who moſt cruelly put out their eyes: Yet did the Welch, as well as poſſibly they could, endeavour to preſerve the liberty which their Fathers left them; till the Felicity and Wiſdom of King Edward the firſt, put an end unto the Wars of Wales, and ſetled them in ſome degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to ſpeak of this, we are to ſhew another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the ſucceſſion of them before laid down; and made according to the Hiſtory of Wales, writ by Humfry Lloyd: this Catalogue containing the ſucceſſion of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Guynedh, Deheubarth, or Powys-land; ſuch as gave law unto the reſt, and had the honour to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes only of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Heptarchie. Only we ſhall find ſome in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expreſſed in the former Tables: but ſuch as by ſtrong hand had intruded into thoſe Eſtates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, overpowered by them.

The Kings and Princes of Wales, according to the Welch Hiſtory.

A.Ch.
683	1	Ivor, a potent Interloper, upon Cadwallader's departure uſurped the Kingdom.
990	2	Idwallo, or Edwall, Son of Cadwallader, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne.
720	3	Roderick Malwinnoe, the Son of Idwallo.
755	4	Conan Tieudaethwy, the Son of Roderick.
820	5	Mervin Vrich, in right of Eiſylht his Wife, the Daughter of Conan.
843	6	Roderick Mawre, (who divided Wales into three Eſtates) the Son of Mervin.
877	7	Amarawdh, Prince of Guinedth, the Son of Roderick Mawre.
913	8	Edwal Voel, Prince of Guynedth, Son of Amarawdh; made tributary to Athelſtan King of England.
940	9	Howel Dha, (or the Good) Prince of Debeubarth, and Powys.
948	10	Jevaf, and Jago, Sons of Edwal Voel, to whom King Edgar did releaſe the Tribute ordained by King Athelſtan, to be paid in money, for a tribute of Wolves; of which we ſpake before when we were in England.
982	11	Howel, the Son of Jevaf, ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Wales, his Father being ſtill alive, and of right Prince of Guinedth.
984	12	Cadwallan, the Brother of Howel.
986	13	Meredith ap Owen, Prince of Debeubarth.
992	14	Edwal III. Son of Merick, the Eldeſt Son of Edwall Voel; which Merick had been pretermitted, as unfit for Government.
1003	15	Aeden ap Blethored, an Uſurper.
1015	16	Llewellen ap Sitſylth, deſcended from Amarawdh, the firſt Prince of Guinedth or North-Wales.
1021	17	Jago ap Edwal, Prince of Guinedth, Son of Edwal the third.
1037	18	Gryffith ap Llewellen, the Son of Llewellen ap Sitſylth, and the Lady Angharad.
1061	19	Blethyn and Rhywallon, Sons of Angharad, the Daughter of Meredith ap Owen Prince of Debeubarth, by a ſecond Husband.
1073	20	Trahaern ap Caradoc, Couſin to Blethyn.
1078	21	Gryffith Prince of Guinedh, Son of Conan, the Son of Jago ap Edwal, one of the Princes of the ſame, did Homage to William the Conqueror, and was the laſt that had the title of King of Wales.
1137	22	Owen Guinedh Prince of Guinedh, and Soveraign Prince of Wales, Eldeſt Son of Gryffith.
1169	23	David ap Owen Prince of Guinedh, the younger Son of Owen Guinedh.
1194	24	Llewellen, Son of Jorwerth, eldeſt ſon of Owen Guinedh, excluded by David his younger Brother.
1242	25	David ap Llewellen Prince of Guinedh, Son of Llewellen ap Jorwerth.
1246	26	Llewellen Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the laſt Soveraign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader; overcome and ſlain in Battel by King Edward the firſt, An. 1282. as before is ſaid: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great buſineſs, he gave unto his Engliſh Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signiories and Eſtates; as well to reward them for their ſervice in the Conqueſt, as to engage ſo many able men, both in purſe and power, for the perpetual defence and ſubjection of it. As for the Lordſhip of Flint, and the Towns and Eſtates lying on the Sea-Coaſts: he held them in his own hands, both to keep himſelf ſtrong, and to curb the Welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politick Emperour Auguſtus) pretending the eaſe of ſuch as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himſelf only.

This done, he divided Wales into ſeven Shires, viz. 1. Glamorgan, 2. Carmarden, 3. Pembroke, 4. Cardegan, 5. Merioneth, 6. Carnarvon, and 7. Angleſey, after the manner of England. Over each of theſe, as he placed a particular Engliſh Lieutenant, ſo he was very deſirous to have one general Engliſh Vicegerent, over the whole Body of the Welch. But this when they mainly withſtood he ſent for his Wife, then great with Child, to Carnarvon, where ſhe was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof the King aſſembled the Britiſh Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which could not ſpeak one word of Engliſh, and whoſe life no man could tax. Such a one when they had all ſworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; ſince which time our Kings Eldeſt Sons are called Princes of Wales. Their Inveſtiture is performed by the impoſition of a Cap of Eſtate, and a Coronet on his head that is inveſted, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a Verge, being the emblem of Government; by putting a Ring of Gold on his finger, to ſhew him that now he is a Husband to the Country, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a Patent, to hold the ſaid Principality to him and his Heirs Kings of England. By which words the ſeparation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themſelves ſo excellent an occaſion, of obliging unto them their eldeſt Son, when they pleaſe. In imitation of this Cuſtom, more ex Anglia tranſlato (ſaith Mariana) John the firſt of Caſtile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Aſturias; which is a Country ſo craggy and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spaniſh Princes even to theſe times, are honoured with this Title of Prince of the Aſturias.

Notwithſtanding this provident care of Edward the firſt, in eſtabliſhing his Empire here; and the extream rigour of Law here uſed by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welch blood) they ſeldom or never contained themſelves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by act of Parliament) one Nation with the Engliſh, ſubject to the ſame Laws, capable of the ſame preferments, and priviledged with the ſame immunities. He added alſo 6 Shires to the former number, out of thoſe Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to ſend Knights and Burgeſſes unto the Engliſh Parliaments: ſo that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the Engliſh and Welch; an happy Union.

The ſame King Henry eſtabliſhed for the eaſe of his Welch ſubjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are miniſtred according to the Faſhion of the Kings Courts of Weſtminſter. The Court conſiſteth of one Preſident who is, for the moſt part, of the Nobility, and is generally called, the Lord Preſident of Wales; of as many Counſellours as it ſhall pleaſe the King to appoint; one Attorney, one Sollicitor, licitor, one Secretary, and the four Juſtices of the Counties of Wales. The Town it ſelf (for this muſt not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Caſtle, which hath been the Palace of ſuch Princes of Wales, of the Engliſh blood, as have come into this Country, to ſolace themſeves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldeſt ſon of Henry the 7th.: both being ſent hither by their Fathers to the ſame end, viz. by their preſence to ſatisfie and keep in order the unquiet Welch-men. And certainly, as the preſence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, ſo would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot ſay: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very ſmall, by theſe reaſons following, viz. 1. By the Compoſition which Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales, made with Edward the firſt: who being Prince of North Wales only, and diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of that, was fain to redeem the reſt, of the ſaid King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our preſent money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the reſidue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2ly, by thoſe two circumſtances, in the marriage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above-named Prince Arthur. For firſt, her Father Ferdinando being one of the warieſt Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Cheſter. And ſecondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perſwaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that ſo great a Treaſure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from thoſe of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and pecular device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with three Oſtrich Feathers, and inſcribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I ſerve; alluding to that of the Apoſtle, The Heir while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the Black Prince, at the Battel of Creſcie, from John King of Bohemia; who did there wear it, and whom he there ſlew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now ſhut up my diſcourſe of Wales, with that teſtimony of the people, which Henry the ſecond uſed in a Letter to Emanuel Emperour of Conſtantinople; The Welch Nation is ſo adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men; ready to ſpend their blood for their Country, and pawn their life for praiſe: and adding only this, That ſince their incorporating with the Engliſh, they have ſhewed themſelves moſt loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King, and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, as well as any of the beſt of their fellow-Subjects; whereof they have given good proof in theſe later times.

There are in Wales.

The BORDERS.

BEfore we come into Scotland, we muſt of neceſſity paſs through that Batable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms; called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, ſubtile, nimble, and by reaſon of their often skirmiſhes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the Engliſh Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the Eaſt, and that of Dunbriton on the Weſt (the firſt Fryth, by the Latines called Bodotria and the later Glotta:) betwixt which, where now ſtandeth the Town of Sterling, was an antient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Frith of Edenburgh; on a Croſs ſtanding whereupon, was writ this Paſport;

> I am Free-march as paſſengers may ken,
> To Scots, to Britains, and to Engliſh-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Daniſh oppreſſion, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but alſo took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Weſtmerland. The Norman Kings again recovered theſe Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, Eaſt; the Solway, Weſt; and the Cheviot hills in the midſt. Of any great wars made on theſe Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the firſt; who taking advantage of the Scots diſagreements about the ſucceſſor of Alexander the third, hoped to bring the Country under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end: the Wars ſurviving the Author; ſo that what Velleius ſaith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well ſay of the Scots and Engliſh: for almoſt 300 years together, aut bellum inter eos populos, aut belli præparatio, aut inſidæ pax fuit. In moſt of theſe conflicts the Scots had the worſt. So that Daniel in his Hiſtory ſeemeth to marvail how this Corner of the Iſle could breed ſo many, had it bred nothing but men, as were ſlain in theſe wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the ſecond, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became ſo terrible to the Engliſh Borderers, that an hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a cuſtom among the Turks, not to believe a Chriſtian or a Jew complaining againſt a Turk, except their accuſation be confirmed by the Teſtimony of ſome Turk alſo; which ſeldom hapning, is not the leaſt cauſe why ſo little Juſtice is there done the Chriſtians. In like manner, it is the Law of theſe Borderers, never to believe any Scots complaining againſt any Engliſh-man, unleſs ſome other Engliſh-man will witneſs for him; and ſo on the other ſide. Ex jure quodam inter limitaneos rato (ſaith Cambden in his Elizab.) nullus niſi Scotus in Scotum, nullus niſi Anglus in Anglum, teſtis admittitur. This Cuſtom making void in this faſhion all kinds of accuſations, was one of the greateſt cauſes of the Inſolencies of both ſides committed. Beſides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but ſometime were Scots, ſometime Engliſh, as their preſent crimes and neceſſities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and ſecure their Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the Eaſt, the other over the Weſt, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the Eaſt Marches had his Seat at Berwick, (a Town of great ſtrength, and which for the conveniency of its ſituation tion, was the firſt thing which the Engliſh took care to defend, and the Scots to ſurpriſe) of which he was alſo Governour. The Warden of the Weſt Marches had his Seat in Carlile, which Henry the 8. for that cauſe well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no ſet place of reſidence, but was ſometimes in one place, ſometimes in another, according as occaſion required; the Office being executed for the moſt part, by the Wardens of the Eaſtern or Weſtern Marches. But Imperii medium eſt, terminus ante fuit, by the bleſſed Marriage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; theſe Officers, and the cauſe of them, the Wars, are quite extinguiſhed.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, ſeparated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hills, extending from the one to the other. It is in length (according to Polydore Virgil) 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place diſtant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Country ending like the ſharp point of a Wedge. And for the length aſſigned unto it by Polydore, it muſt be made up by meaſuring the Crooks and Windings of the ſhores, every where thruſting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For meaſuring in a ſtrait Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Straitby-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Berwick unto Straitby-head, is a great deal ſhorter. So that there is no ſuch over-ſight in the Maps of Britain, nor ſuch neceſſity to correct them, as was ſometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: ſometimes Albania, from Albanie or Braid Albin, a principal Province in the North. But the moſt uſual name is Scotia or Scotland; though the reaſon of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Ægyptian Pharaoh; of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reaſon (though that none of the beſt) from the Scotti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame; whom they will have to ſieze firſt on ſome parts of Spain, from thence to tranſplant themſelves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than meer Iriſh, (whoſe language, habit, and the moſt barbarous of their cuſtoms, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do ſtill retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot ſignifying in their Language, a body aggregated into one out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch. Scot illud dicitur, (ſaith Camden out of Matthew of Weſtminſter) quod ex diverſis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur. Firſt mentioned by this name in ſome fragments of Porphyrie (who lived about the time of the Emperor Aurelian) as they are cited by S. Hierom: after the death of Conſtantine much ſpoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in haraſſing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands, and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Iriſh Scots inhabiting the Hebrides, and the Weſt parts of the Continent adjoyning to them, more barbarous than the Wild Iriſh at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King James obſerved in his moſt excellent Baſilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or Engliſh Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this ſide the two Fryths of Dunbritton and Edenburgh, and the plainer Countries along the German Ocean; are the more civil of the two, as being of the ſame Saxon race with the Engliſh. This is evident, firſt by their Language, being only a broad Northern Engliſh, a Dialect only of that tongue: 2. By the teſtimony of the Highlanders themſelves, who are the true Scots, and ſpeak the old Iriſh language, by whom the Lowlandes and the Engliſh are called by the ſame name of Saxons: 3. by the general conſent of all Hiſtorians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbers or Engliſh Saxons, beyond Humber, extended as far Northwards as the two Fryths before mentioned; and there continued for the ſpace of 300 years: and 4. By the confeſſion of ſome ingenious Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, That the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the ſame time, the Saxons might extort the Eaſtern ſhore lying next their Country, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Weſtern parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands, from whence they firſt paſſed into Britain.

The Country for the moſt part, eſpecially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford ſuſtenance for the Natives of it; were they not a people patient of want and hunger; temperate in diet, and not accuſtomed unto that riot and exceſs, uſed commonly in richer and more plentiful Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many Trees either for Building or for Fewel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not induſtrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are coorſe Cloth, Fiſh in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two laſt their Mountains do afford ſome rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their beſt Writers, for ſome barbarous Cuſtoms entertained amongſt them. One of which was, If any two were diſpleaſed, they expected no law, but bang'd it out bravely, one and his Kindred, againſt the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the Peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word ſo barbarous, that were it to be expreſſed in Latine or French, it muſt be by Circumlocution. Theſe deadly Feides, King James in his moſt excellent Baſilicon Doron adviſeth his ſon to redreſs with all care poſſible; but it pleaſed God to give him ſo long a life as to ſee it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater Victory over that ſtubborn born people, than ever did any foreign Prince, or any of his Predeceſſors could do before him; an act indeed truly Royal, and worthy himſelf. Another Cuſtom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongſt the Heathen, and much leſs in Chriſtendom, which took beginning, as the Scotiſh Hiſtorians affirm, in the Reign of Ewen the third, who is the Fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the firſt Fergus. This Ewen being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto laſciviouſneſs, made a Law, That himſelf and his Succeſſors ſhould have the Maidenhead, or firſt Nights lodging with every Woman, whoſe husband held Land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all thoſe whoſe husbands were their Tenants or Homagers. This was, it ſeems, the Knights-ſervice which men held their Eſtates by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Conmor: who at the requeſt of his Wife Margaret, (ſhe was the ſiſter of Edgar Atheling) aboliſhed this Law, and ordained, That the Tenants by way of commutation, ſhould pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which Tribute the Hiſtorians ſay is ſtill in force. It was called Marcheta mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horſe in the old Gallique (implying the obſcene ſignification of Equitare) as Mr. Selden thinks; or from Marca, the ſum of money by which it was afterward redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this laſt Cuſtom was of ſuch a barbarous and bruitiſh nature, that the Cuſtom of the Indians in giving to the Bramine the firſt nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in proſtituting their Wives & Daughters to the luſts and pleaſure of their Gueſts; have not more unchriſtianity in them, than this of thoſe Scottiſh Chriſtians, if I may ſo call them.

Theſe Cuſtoms ſhew the antient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neighbouring Nation: nor are they ſo broken of the former, but that they are obſerved by a modern Writer, to be ſtill greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as alſo to be a ſubtile and politick people, inclined to Factions and Seditions among themſelves, which he that reads their Sories cannot chooſe but ſee. A people, as King James obſerveth in his Baſilicon Doron, ever weary of the preſent ſtate, and deſirous of novelties, accuſtomed to judge and ſpeak raſhly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always carried themſelves with ſuch untractableneſs, that more Kings have been betrayed, murthered, and depoſed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themſelves without theſe relations, and they are ſaid to be an induſtrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well verſed in Grammatical Learning, of which moſt of their Gentry have a ſmattering. And of moſt note in point of Learning, have been 1. Marianus (ſirnamed) Scotus, and 2. Hector Boetius, the Hiſtorians. 3. John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4. George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unſound States-man; whoſe Hiſtory, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more miſchief in the World, than all Machiavels works. Not to have been remembred here, but becauſe he was Pædogogue to 5. King James, of moſt famous memory; whoſe printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6. Napier, the Laird of Marchiſton. 7, 8. Barcklay, the Father and the Son. 9. John Skene, the beſt Antiquary of this Nation. 10. Doctor John Maxwel, the late learned Biſhop of Roſs, and my very good friend; beſides ſome others of leſs note.

The Chriſtian Religion was here planted by divers men according to their ſeveral Nations who did here inhabit amongſt the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn, or Holy Iſland; amongſt the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eaſtern parts, by Ninias, Biſhop of Candida Caſa, or Whit-herne, in Galloway; amongſt the Northern-Picts, An. 555. and finally amongſt the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, ſent to them hither for that purpoſe by Pope Celeſtine. An. 435. or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the ruſt and rubbiſh of the Romiſh Church, (degenerated from it ſelf in the latter days) it was here made by a ſtrong hand, according to the judgment of Knox and others: nor taking counſel with the Prelates nor ſtaying the leiſure of the Prince, as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelates, out of all authority; made by that means, more naturally ſubject unto alterations than it had been otherwiſe; or only to be made good by the ſame violence, which firſt introduced it. 'Tis true, that for a while, being in danger of the French, and of neceſſity to ſupport themſelves by the power and favour of the Engliſh: they bound themſelves by a ſolemn Subſcription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to obſerve that form of Worſhip which was there eſtabliſhed. Religionis cultui, & Ritibus cum Anglis communibus ſubſcripſerunt; as is affirmed by Buchanan, their own State-Hiſtorian. But no ſooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leaſure to effect their ends; and have endeavoured ever ſince by practices, and correſpondency with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thruſt their own Conſtitutions and Form of Worſhip on the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Biſhops, (as in all parts elſe;) but ſo as they exerciſe their Functions and Juriſdictions in all places, equally, whereſoever they come: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceſſes, till the time of Malcolm the third, An. 1070, or thereabouts. Nor had they any Archbiſhops till the year 1478. The Archbiſhop of York being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once ſettled in an orderly and conſtant Hierarchy, they held the ſame unto the Reformation began by Knox: and when he and his aſſociates approving the Genevian plat-form, took the advantage of the minority of King James the Sixth, to introduce the Presbyterian Diſcipline, and ſuppreſs the Biſhops; forbidding them by their own ſole authority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church, and Cantoning the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own aſſigning. And that the King might not be able to oppoſe their doings, they kept him under by ſtrong hand, impriſoned him at Sterling, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful Servants, and ſeized upon his principal Fortreſſes: and in a word, ſo baffled and affronted him upon all occaſions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom, and retire to Venice. Which doubtleſs he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by ſome of great place, & power) had not the hopes of coming at the laſt to the Crown of England, made him ſtay it out: So that his Maxim of No Biſhop, no King, was not made at random, but founded on the ſad experience of his own condition. And though upon the ſence of thoſe inconveniences, which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, reſtore again the Epiſcopal Order, and ſetled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the ſame reſtleſs ſpirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Son, An. 1638. did violently eject the Biſhops, and ſuppreſs the calling; and ſet up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Country are, 1. The Lake of Nirton, part of whoſe waters do congeal geal in Winter, and part of them not. 2. That in the Lake of Lennox, being 24 miles in compaſs, the Fiſh are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3. That when there is no wind ſtirring, the waters of the ſaid Lake are ſo tempeſtuous, that no Mariner dares venture on it. 4. That there is a Stone called the Deaf ſtone, 12 foot high, and 33 Cubits thick; of this rare quality, that a Muſket ſhot off on the one ſide, cannot be heard by a man ſtanding on the other. If it be otherwiſe (as he muſt have a ſtrong Faith who believes theſe wonders) let Hector Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hills upon the Borders; and Mount Grampius ſpoken of by Tacitus; the ſafeſt ſhelter of the Picts, or Northern Britains againſt the Romans, and of the Scots againſt the Engliſh; now called the Hills of Albany, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of theſe ſpringeth the 1. Tay or Taus, the faireſt River of Scotland, falling into the Sea about Dundee, in the Eaſt ſide; and 2. the Cluyd, empting it ſelf into Dunbritton Frith, on the Weſt ſide of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of moſt note, are, the 3. Banoc, emptying it ſelf into the Frith of Edenburgh; on the Banks whereof was fought that fatal Battel of Banocks-bourn, of which more anon. 4. Spey, 5. Dee, the Ocaſa of Ptolomy: none of them of any long courſe, by reaſon that the Country Northward is but very narrow.

In reference to Eccleſiaſtical affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceſſes, to which the Dioceſs of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews) hath been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneſchalſies and Sheriffdoms, which being for the moſt part hereditary, are no ſmall hinderance to the due execution of Juſtice. So that the readieſt way to redreſs the miſchief (as King James adviſed) is to diſpoſe of them as they fall or Eſcheat to the Crown, according to the laudable cuſtom (in that caſe) in England.

The greateſt Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots, ſhewed themſelves ſo faithful, that the French King committed the defence of his perſon to a ſelected number of Scottiſh Gentlemen: and ſo valiant, that they have much hindered the Engliſh Victories in France. And certainly the French feeling the ſmart of the Engliſh puiſſance alone, have continually heartned the Scots in their attempts againſt England, and hindred all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they brake the match agreed on, between our Edward the ſixth, and Mary the young Queen of Scots. Their greateſt enemy was the Engliſh, who overcame them in many battels, ſeized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the moutainous and unacceſſible woods had not been more advantagious to the Scots, than their power: for ſo much King James ſeemeth to intimate in his ſpeech at White-Hall, 1607, And though, ſaith he the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on the defenſible ſide; and may in part thank their hills and inacceſſible paſſages, that ſaved them from an utter overthrow, at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But

Jam cuncti gens una ſumus, ſic ſimus in ævum:

One only Nation now are we,
And let us ſo for ever be.

The chief Cities are Edenburgh (of old called Caſtrum Alatum) in Lothien, where is the Kings Palace, and the Courts of Juſtice. It conſiſteth chiefly of one ſtreet extending in length one mile, into which run many prety lanes; ſo that the whole compaſs may be nigh three miles: extending from Eaſt to Weſt on a riſing ground, at the Summit or Weſt end whereof ſtandeth a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep and precipitous Rock, which comandeth the Town; ſuppoſed to be the Caſtrum Alatum, ſpoken of by Ptolomy. Under the command or rather the protection of which Caſtle, and through the neighbourhood of Leith, ſtanding on the Fryth, and ſerving as a Port unto it; & finally by the advantage of the Courts of Juſtice, and the Court Royal, called Holy-Rood-Houſe, it ſoon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withal factious and ſeditious, conteſting with their Kings, or ſiding againſt them upon al occaſions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Soveraign Lords, but by incorporating Leith, indulging it with the priviledges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royal and the Courts of Judicature; which they more fear than all the Plagues that can befal them. It belonged in former times to the Engliſh Saxons, (as all the reſt of the Country from the Fryth to Barwick) from whom, oppreſſed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Anno 800 or thereabouts. 2. Sterling, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom ſo called; a ſtrong Town, and beautified withal with a very fair Caſtle, the birth-place of King James the ſixth, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain. Near to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, hapned the moſt memorable diſcomfiture that the Scots ever gave the Engliſh: who beſides many Lords and 700 Knights and men of note, loſt in this Fight (as the Scottiſh Writers do report) 50000 of the common Souldiers (our Engliſh Hiſtorians confeſs 10000, and too many of that) the King himſelf (Edward the 2.) being compelled to flie for his life and ſafety. Some of the Scotiſh Writers tell us, that the purer ſort of Silver, which we call Starling money, did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our ſilver Bulloin comes from Bulloin in Luyckland, or from the Port of Bulloin in France; the truth being that it took that name from the Eaſterlings or Merchants of Eaſt Germany, drawn into England by King John, to refine our Coin. 3. Glaſco, in Cluidſdale, honoured with an Archbiſhops See, and a publick School (to which ſome give the name of an Univerſity) founded here by Archbiſhop Turnbul, Anno 1554. 4. S. Andrews the chief Town of Fiſe, an Archiepiſcopal See, and an Univerſity; by the Latins called Fanum Reguli: which, and the Engliſh name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, tranſlated firſt from Patras in Peleponneſus where he ſuffered death, unto Conſtantinople; and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albatus Regulus, in the year 378 (if they be not miſtaken in the time, who made the ſtory.) Over which Relicks he is ſaid to have built a monaſtry, which after grew to be a City: called from the founder Fanum Reguli; in honour of the Saint, S. Andrew. The Biſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City ſeated on the Ocean, near the fall of the Ethan, overlooked with a ſtrong and goodly Caſtle, the Archbiſhops ſeat. 5. Falkland, in the ſame Province or Fiſe, beautified with a retiring houſe of the Kings, reſorting thither often on receſs from buſineſs, or for the commodity and pleaſure of hunting, which the place affords. 6. Dundee, in Latine, Taodunum, a rich and noted Port at the mouth of the Taye, the chief Town of Anguis. 7. Aber-don, at the mouth of the River Done, whence it had the name, (the word Aber in the Britiſh ſignifying the mouth or influx of a River) an Univerſity, and Biſhops See. 8. Perth, or St. Johns Town, ſeated on the Tay, but in the middle of the Kingdom; walled and repleniſhed with an induſtrious people: the chief Town of the Sheriffdom of Perth. 9. Scone, on the farther ſide of the Taye, adorned heretofore with a famous Monaſtry; the uſual place for the Inauguration of the Scottiſh Kings: the fatal ſtone, on which they did receive the Crown, (the Palladium of the Scottiſh Kingdom) here kept, till the removal of it unto Weſtminſter, by King Edward the firſt. Upon which ſtone there were of old ingraven theſe Verſes,

Non fallat fatum, Scoti quocumque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

Tranſlated in old Meeter thus:

The Scots ſhall brook that Realm as natif ground,
If Weirds fail not, whaire ere this Stone is found.

Moſt happily accompliſhed in the Succeſſion of King James the ſixth, to the Crown of England. 10. Dumbritton (Britannodunum in the Latine) ſeated in a graſſie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Cluyd, upon two ſteep and precipicious Rocks, flanked on the Weſt with the ſaid two Rivers, and on the Eaſt with a miry Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the ſtrongeſt hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Famine or Treaſon, and the chief Town of the Weſt ſide of Scotland; the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoyning.

The Antient Inhabitants of this Country dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadeni, poſſeſſing Tevidale, Twedale, March and Lothien, whoſe chief City was Caſtra Alata, now Edenburgh. 2. The Damnii, dwelling in Cluydsdale, Lennox, Sterling, and Menteith, whoſe chief City was Vanduara, now Renfraw; Lindum, now Linlithquo. 3. The Selgovæ inhabited in Liddiſdale, Tivedale, Eskdale, Annondale, and Niddiſdale, whoſe chief place was Carbantorigum, now Caer-Laverock: and 4. The Noventes, containing Galloway, Carrick, Kyle and Cuningham. Principal places of the which were, Lucopibia, now Whithern, and Berigonium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongſt the Picts or barbarous Britains, divided generally into Caledonii and Meatæ, the Nations of moſt Note were, 5. The Caledonii properly ſo called, taking up all Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Perth, Angus, and Fife. 6. The Vermines of Mernis and Mar. 7. The Talzali of Buquhan. 8. The Vacomagi of Loquhabre and Murray. 9. The Cantæ of Roſs and Sutherland. 10. The Contini of Cathneſs; and 11. The Cornubii of Strathnavern, the furtheſt Country Northward of all the Iſland. Chief Towns of which were, Tamia, Banatia, Orea, Devana, and Tueſis; which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans, hath been ſhewn before. On the withdrawing of whoſe Forces, ſo much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was poſſeſſed by the Saxons, the reſidue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts; ſave that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held made themſelves maſters alſo of the Plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the paſſage out of Germany was both ſhort and eaſie. By which accompt, beſides thoſe places in the Eaſt, they were poſſeſſed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Teiſidale, Tweedale, March, Lothien, Liddiſdale, Euſedale, Eskdale, Annandale, Niddiſdale, Cluydsdale, Galloway, Carick, Kyle, Cunningham, Lennox, and Sterling, being the richeſt and moſt flouriſhing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots for their part hath the Counties of Cantire, Argile, Braid-Albin, (or Albanie) Lorne, Loquhabre, and Strathnavern, lying on the Weſt and North: the other Northern moity (excepting ſome parts near the Coaſt of the German Ocean poſſeſſed by the Saxons) containing the now Counties of Cathneſs, Southerland, Roſs, Murray, Buquham, Marre, Mern, Angus, Athol, Perth, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into theſe parts, hath been ſhewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of thoſe who will have them to deſcend from the Agathyrſi, a people of Scythia) they were no other than ſuch of the natural Britains, as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but ſtill preſerved their Country in its former Liberty; called therefore by Tertullian, inacceſſa Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and uſing ſtill their antient Cuſtom of painting their bodies, after the reſt of their Country-men had conformed themſelves to more civil courſes, were by the Romans called Picti: and by that name firſt mentioned in the Panegyrick of Eunomius, in the time of Conſtantine the Great. They long poſſeſſed theſe parts without an Inmate, even till the year 424. when the Iriſh-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly poſſeſſed themſelves of the Weſtern Iſles, firſt ſet foot in Britain: with whom they had continual War, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Weſtern parts, and withdraw themſelves into the Eaſtern. Afterwards growing into better terms with the other, and willing to enlarge their Borders toward the more flouriſhing South, they contracted an Offenſive and Defenſive League againſt the Britains; who on all ſides, they moſt miſerably tortured, till vanquiſhed and beat back by the conquering Saxons, againſt whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Etheldred King of the Northumbers, and the invaſion of the Danes on the reſt of England; they got into their hands all Bernicia, or ſo much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Twede, and Solwaye; reckoned from that time forwards a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt theſe two Nations. It hapned at the laſt, that Achaius King of the Scots, married Ferguſia, Siſter unto Hunguſt, King of the Picts, and had by her a Son called Alpine, who after the death of Hunguſt dying without Iſſue, and having none of a nearer kindred was in the Judgment of the Scots, to ſucceed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alledging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, choſe one Ferreth of their own Nation, to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long War, victorious for the moſt part, in concluſion ſlain. The quarrel notwithſtanding did remain betwixt the two unfriendly Nations, till at the laſt, after many bloody battels and mutual over-throws (the Scots being for the moſt part on the loſing ſide) Kenneth, the ſecond of that name, vanquiſhed Donsken, the laſt King of the Picts, with ſo great a ſlaughter of his people, that he extinguiſhed not their Kingdom only, but their very name; paſſing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Pictiſh Nation: unleſs perhaps we will believe that ſome of them paſſed into France; and there, forſooth, ſubdued that Country which we now call Picardy.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I ſhall begin the ſame with Fergus, the ſecond of that name in the Accompt of their Hiſtorians: leaving out that rabble of 39 Kings (half of them at the leaſt before Chriſts Nativity) mentioned by Hector, Boetius, Buchanan, and others of their Claſſick Authors. Neither ſhall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more Judicious and underſtanding men of the Scotiſh Nation, (and for others I take little care) ſince I deal no more unkindly with their firſt Fergus and his Succeſſors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his. The firſt Scotiſh King that ſetled himſelf in the North of Britain, is, according to the above named Hector Boetius, one Fergus, which in the time that Coyl governed the Britains, came (forſooth) into theſe parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Eugenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued ſucceſſion: which Eugenius, together with his whole Nation, is ſaid to have been expelled the Iſland, by a joynt confederacy of the Romans, Britains, and Picts. Twenty and ſeven years after the death of this Eugenius, they were reduced again into their poſſeſſion here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the ſecond of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scotiſh Kingdom in Britain, holding the ſtories of the former 39 Kings to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this aſſertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain, being placed in the 424 year of CHRIST, at what time the beſt Writers of the Roman ſtory for thoſe times, report the Scots to have firſt ſeated themſelves in this Iſland.

The Kings of chief note in the courſe of the whole Succeſſion are, 1. Achaius, who died in the year 809 and in his life contracted the offenſive and defenſive league with Charles the Great, between the Kingdoms of France and Scotland. The conditions whereof were, 1. Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2. Let the Enemies unto one, be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3. If the Saxons or Engliſh-men invade France, the Scots ſhall ſend thither ſuch numbers of Souldiers as ſhall be deſired, the French King defraying the charges; 4. If the Engliſh invade Scotland, the King of France ſhall at his own charges ſend competent aſſiſtance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully obſerved, or longer continued, than this between theſe two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occaſions ſo readily aſſiſting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by-word, He that will France win, muſt with Scotland firſt begin. 2. Kenneth the ſecond, who having utterly ſubdued and deſtroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the preſent Scotland, deſerved to be accompted the firſt Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or ſo few in number, that they paſſed afterwards in the name & accompt of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3. Malcolm the firſt who added Weſtmerland, and Cumberland, unto his Dominions given to him by King Edmund of England, the ſon of Athelſtane, to have his aid againſt the Danes, or to keep him neutral. After which time, thoſe Counties were ſometimes Scotiſh and ſometimes Engliſh, till finally recovered by King Henry the ſecond, and united to the Crown of England; never ſince disjoyned. 4. Kenneth the third who, by conſent of the Eſtates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary, to deſcend from the Father to his Eldeſt Son, before which time (keeping within the compaſs of the Royal Family) the Uncle was ſometimes preferred before the Nephew; the eldeſt in years, though furtheſt off, before the younger Kinſman, though the nearer in blood. After which time (the oppoſition and interruption made by Conſtantine the third, and Donald the fourth excepted only the Eldeſt ſons of theſe Kings, or the next in birth, have ſucceeded ordinary in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of thoſe Tributaries and Vaſſall Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, near Cheſter, in ſuch pomp and Majeſty. 5. Machbeth of whom there goeth a famous ſtory, which ſhall be told at large anon. 6. Malcolm the third, the ſon of Duncane, who lived in England during the whole time of Machbeths, Tyranny; and thence brought into Scotland at his return, not only ſome Civilities of the Engliſh garb; but the honourary titles of Earls and Barons, not here before mentioned. At the perſwaſion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Siſter of Edgar, ſurnamed Atheling, and after his deceaſe the right Heir of the Crown of England) he aboliſhed the barbarous cuſtom ſpoken of before. He did Homage to William the Conquerour for the Crown of Scotland, but afterwards ſiding againſt him with the Engliſh, was ſlain at Alnwick. 7. David, the youngeſt ſon of Malcolm the third, ſucceeded his two Brothers, Edgar and Alexander (dying without Iſſue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Siſter and Heir of Edgar Atheling, and Daughter of Edward the Eldeſt ſon of Edmund the ſecond, ſirnamed Ironſide, King of England, had the beſt title to that Kingdom alſo: but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Norman Conquerours, with whom, by reaſon of the great puiſſance of thoſe Kings, and the little love which the Engliſh bare unto the Scots, not able to diſpute their Title by force of Arms. From Maud the Siſter of this David, married to Henry the firſt of England, deſcended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeths death: from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King James the ſixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeths, ſucceeded in the Crown of England, in right of his deſcent from another Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the ſeventh. So that in his perſon there was not an union of the Kingdoms only, under the Title of Great Britain, but a reſtoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir) to the Crown of England; the poſſeſſion whereof had for ſo long time continued in the Poſterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this deſcent it followeth moſt undeniably, that though the Norman Conqueror got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund the ſecond, ſirnamed Ironſide; and that his Succeſſors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeths death: yet James, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain, ſucceeded by a right deſcent from the Saxon Line; without relation to the Conqueſt of the Norman Baſtard. 8. William, the Brother of Malcolm the fourth, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Son Prince Henry, (who died in the life of his Father) being taken priſoner at the Battail of Alnwick, did homage to King Henry the ſecond for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon reſtored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the ſucceeding Kings, when their Affairs with England and the World abroad became more conſiderable, we ſhall ſee anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the ſtory of Machbeth, than which for variety of action, and ſtrangeneſs of events, I never met with any more pleaſing. The ſtory in brief is thus: Duncan King of the Scots had two principal men, whom he employed in all matters of importance Machbeth, and Banquho. Theſe two travelling together through a Foreſt, were met by three Fairies Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the firſt making obeyſance unto Machbeth, ſaluted him Thane (a title unto which that of Earl afterwards ſucceeded) of Glammis: the ſecond, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequal dealing, ſaith Banquho, to give my friend all the honours, and none unto me; to which one of the Weirds made anſwer, That he indeed ſhould not be King, but out of his loyns ſhould come a Race of Kings, that ſhould for ever rule the Scots. And having thus ſaid, they all ſuddenly vaniſhed. Upon their arival to the Court, Machbeth, was immediately created Thane of Glammis; and not long after, ſome new ſervice of his requiring new recompence, he was honoured with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the former; he reſolved not to be wanting to himſelf in fulfilling the third, and therefore firſt he killed the King, and after, by reaſon of his command among the Souldiers, and common people, he ſucceeded in his Throne. Being ſcarce warm in his ſeat, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banqubo: whom hereupon ſuſpecting as his ſupplanter, he cauſed him to be killed, together with his whole Poſterity; Fleance one of his Sons, eſcaping only with no ſmall difficulty, into Wales. Freed as he thought from all fear of Banqubo and his Iſſue, he built Dunſinan Caſtle, and made it his ordinary ſeat: and afterwards on ſome new fears, conſulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Eſtate; was told by one of them, that he ſhould never be overcome, till Bernane Wood (being ſome miles diſtant) came to Dunſinan Caſtle; and by another, that he ſhould never be ſlain by any man which was born of a Woman. Secure then as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the ſpace of 18 years; for ſo long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the meaſure of his iniquities, Mac-duffe the Governor of Fife, aſſociating to himſelf ſome few Patriots, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyranny; privily met one evening at Bernane Wood: and taking every one of them a bough in his hand, (the better to keep them from diſcovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunſinan Caſtle, which they took by Scalado. Macbbeth eſcaping was purſued by Macduffe, who having overtaken him urged him to the combat; to whom the Tyrant, half in ſcorn, returned this Anſwer, That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his deſtiny never to be ſlain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then ſaid Macduffe, is thy fatal end drawing faſt upon thee; for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mothers belly: which words ſo daunted the cruel Tyrant, though otherwiſe a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very eaſily ſlain; and Malcolm Conmer, the true Heir of the Crown, ſeated in the Throne. In the mean time Fleance ſo proſpered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Country; and on her begat a Son called Walter; who flying out of Wales, returned into Scotland; and his deſcent once known, he was not only reſtored to the Honours and Eſtates of his Anceſtors, but preferred to be Steward of the houſe of Edgar the ſon of Malcolm the third, ſirnamed Conmer; the name of Stewart, growing hence hereditary unto his Poſterity. From this Walter deſcended that Robert Stewart, who ſucceedeed David Bruce in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned ſucceſſively in that Kingdom. But now it is time to leave off particulars, and look into the general Succeſſion of

1213	22	Alexander II. Son of William.
1250	23	Alexander III. Son of Alexander the 2d, after whoſe death, dying without any Iſſue, An. 1285. began that tedious and bloody Quarrel about the ſucceſſion of this Kingdom, occaſioned by ſundry Titles and Pretendants to it: principal whereof were Bruce and Baliol, deſcended from the Daughters of David Earl of Huntingdon, younger Son of William, and Great Uncle of Alexander the third, the laſt of the Male Iſſue of Kenneth the 3d, thoſe of nearer Kindred being quite extinct.

And when the Scots could not compoſe the difference among themſelves; it was taken into conſideration by King Edward the firſt of England, as the Lord Paramont of that Kingdom: who ſelecting 12 Engliſh, gliſh, and as many of the Scots to adviſe about it, with the conſent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Dervorguilla his Wife; Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of the ſaid David; who having done his homage to the ſaid King Edward, was admitted King.

1300 24 John Baliol, an Engliſh-man, but forgetful both of Engliſh birth, and Engliſh Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hoſtile manner, and was taken priſoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himſelf Maſter of all Scotland, which he held during the reſt of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.

1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Iſabel his Mother, the ſecond Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and conſequently a degree nearer to the King deceaſed than Baliol was, though deſcended from the elder Siſter) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the firſt; but not fully poſſeſſed thereof until after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the ſecond, at the fight of Banocks-bourn, not far from Sterling, ſpoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering ſo firmly to the Engliſh; who thereupon harried Scotland with Fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the Engliſh. Invading England when King Edward was at the ſiege of Calice, he was taken priſoner by Q. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windſor, where he was priſoner for a while with King John of France. Releaſed at laſt on ſuch conditions as beſt pleaſed the Conqueror. 29.

1371 28 Robert II. ſirnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by deſcent from the eldeſt Siſter of David Bruce, was extracted alſo from ancient Princes of Wales (as was ſaid before:) reſtoring thereby the Britiſh blood to the Throne of Scotland.

1390 29 Robert III. Son of Robert the ſecond called John before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own Brother the Duke of Albany, who had an aim at it for himſelf. 16.

1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken priſoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was croſſing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Uncle. Reſtored unto his Country in the beginning of the Reign of King Henry the ſixth, after 18 years abſence, he was at laſt moſt miſerably murdered by the Earl of Athol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

1462 32 James III. ſlain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491 33 James IV. married Margaret the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the ſeventh, but at the ſoliciting of the French, (againſt the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the abſence of King Henry the eighth) with 100000 men: but was met with by the Earl of Surrey (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Foldden; where he was ſlain, together with two Biſhops, twelve Earls, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. Son of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time ſuch good correſpondency with the Engliſh, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred againſt them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Wharton, then Warden of the Weſt Marches. The Battels being ready to joyn, one Sir Oliver Sincleer the Kings Favourite, though otherwiſe of no great Parentage, was by the Kings directions proclaimed General: which the Scotiſh Nobility took in ſuch indignation, that they threw down their Weapons, and ſuffered themſelves to be taken priſoners; there being not one man ſlain on either ſide. The principal priſoners were the Earls of Glencarn, and Caſſiles; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somerwell, Flemming, whith divers others: beſides many of the principal Gentry. 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully-begotten Child of James the fifth, ſucceeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promiſed in Marriage to King Edward the ſixth of England; but by the power of the Hamiltons carried into France, where married to Francis, then Dauphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the ſecond. After whoſe death, ſhe married Henry Lord Darnly, eldeſt Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox. Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, ſhe was compelled to flie into England; where after a tedious impriſonment, ſhe was put to death in Fotheringhay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire, and interred at Peterburgh, Anno 1586.

1567 36 James VI. the Son of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnley, was crowned King in his Cradle alſo. He married Anne, the Daughter of Chriſtian the third, King of Denmark; was choſe of the Order of the Garter, Anno 1590. and ſucceeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Anno 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent fore-ſight of Henry the ſeventh, who having two Daughters, beſtowed the Eldeſt (contary to the mind of his Council) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French: that ſo, if his own Iſſue male ſhould fail, and that a Prince of another Nation muſt inherit England; then Scotland as the leſſer Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which ſucceſſion of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecy of the fatal Stone, ſpoken of before, did receive accompliſhment. And ſo perhaps might that aſcribed in the Polychronicon to an holy Anchoret living in King Egelreds time, which is this, Engliſhmen, for that they wonneth them to drunkenneſs, to treaſon, and to retchleſneſs of Gods houſe, firſt by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third time by Scots, whom they holden leaſt worth of all, they ſhall be overcome. Then the world ſhall be unſtable, and ſo divers and variable that the unſtableneſs of thoughts ſhall be betokened by many manner diverſity of Clothing. For on this Union of the Kingdoms, this Prediction ſeems to have been accompliſhed; the circumſtances mentioned in the ſame ſo patly agreeing, and the Scots never ſubduing England, but by this bleſſed Victory. Unleſs perhaps the Accompliſhment thereof be ſtill to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great Defeat at Bannocks-bourn, in which was ſlain 50000 Engliſh, as the Scotiſh Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing ſo terrible for a time, that an hundred of the Engliſh would flie from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus eſtimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 ſterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure ſtrangers to Traffick: the Demain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean, the Country in moſt places, barren, and many of the Subjects, thoſe eſpecially of the Out-Iſles, and the Weſtern parts, ſo extreamly barbarous, that they adde very ſmall improvement to the publick Treaſury.

And anſwerable to the ſhortneſs of their ſtanding Revenue, were their Forces alſo. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardſhip; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces ſeldom held together above 40 days; and then, if not a great deal ſooner, did disband themſelves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to ſerve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them ſuch and ſo many of their Vaſſals, as the preſent ſervice did require; uſed to provide for themſelves and their followers, tents, money, victuals, proviſion of all ſorts, and all other neceſſaries; the King ſupplying them with nothing. Which being ſpent, they uſually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reaſon, why the Scots in the time of hoſtility betwixt the Nations, made only ſudden & tumultuary incurſions into England; without any thing of ſpecial moment: and that they have not acted any thing elſewhere in the way of Conqueſt, but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the 4th, when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, (being then in France) conſiſted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populoſity: few of thoſe men being armed or trained up to ſervice, and therefore eaſily diſcomfited by a far leſs Army. It's true that in the year 1643. the Scottiſh Covenanters raiſed an Army conſiſting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons; with Arms, Artillery, and Ammunition correſpondent to it: which was the gallanteſt Army, and the beſt appointed, that ever that Nation did ſet out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained & payed by the two Houſes of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per menſem, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare neceſſaries for it, without any charge unto themſelves. And though the Army which they ſent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferiour unto this number, but far ſuperiour to it both in Horſe & Arms, and other neceſſary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horſe and Arms being ſuch as they had gotten out of England in the former War.

In point of reputation amongſt Foreign Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambaſſadors and Agents, had place in all General Councils, and Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, before thoſe of Caſtile: and by the Statiſts of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for abſolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only ſince the firſt years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted their ſubjection and vaſſalage to the Crown of England. For that anciently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonſtrated by theſe following Arguments. 1. By the Homages, and other ſervices, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto thoſe of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conquerour; as William one of his Succeſſors did to K. Henry the ſecond: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by ſome pretended) but for the very Crown it ſelf: Kenneth the third, being alſo one of thoſe eight Tributary or Vaſſal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interpoſing of King Edward the firſt, and the ſubmiſſion of the Scots to that interpoſing, in determining the controverſie of ſucceſſion betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like caſe, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artoys, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in queſtion betwixt the Lady Maud, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the ſaid Crown of France, determined of the controverſie betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blais, for the Dukedom of Bretagn. 3ly, By the confeſſion and acknowledgment of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Eſtates of Scotland, ſubſcribed by all their hands and Seals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the ſuperiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of ſuch advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherouſly delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit conceſſion of the Kings themſelves, who in their Coins, Commiſſions, and publick Inſtruments, aſſume not to themſelves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is ſome ſuperiour Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgments and Arreſts of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the firſt, but in ſome times ſince. For when William Wallis a Scotiſhman by birth, and the beſt Souldier of that Country, was taken Priſoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to ſuffer death as a Traytor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgment, had he been a Priſoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the caſe of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom in the ſame Kings Reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the third, it was reſolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts caſe, when it was objected that one of the Witneſſes was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his teſtimony was to be allowed of, becauſe the Scots in the Law of England did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths Reign, deſired a Medietatem Linguæ, becauſe he was a Scotchman, & ſo an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, becauſe the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So alſo, when Robert Umframville, Lord of Kyme was ſummoned to the Parliment of England, in the Reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus,(which is a dignity in Scotland;)and after in a Writ againſt him was called only by his own name of Umframville, without any addition of that honor; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vaſſalage of the Kings of England, 6. and laſtly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my cuſtody) granted by King Edward the firſt, in the laſt year of his Reign, to Peter Dodge of Stopworth in the County of Cheſter, one of the Anceſtors of my Mother: in which it is expreſſed, that the ſaid Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent ſervices, encontre ſon grand Enemy & Rebel, Baliol, *Roy d'*Eſcoſſe & Vaſſal de Angleterre; that is to ſay, againſt his great Enemy and Rebel Baliol King of Scotland, and Vaſſal of England. A thing ſo clear, that if King James had not been extreamly tender of the honour of his native Country, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New Invention, in hammering the Caſe of the Poſt-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgment and Reviver of their old Subjection would have ſerved his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable perſon of that Kingdom of Scotland, employed unto the Court in a buſineſs of no mean conſequence to the peace and quiet of his Country: I found him ſo ſenſible of the inconveniences of their preſent Government, by reaſon of the Kings abſence, and the frequent diviſions and partialities of his Council there; that he confeſſed that Nation could be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the Engliſh Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

The principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of S. Andrew, inſtituted by Hungus, King of the Picts, to encourage his Subjects in the War againſt King Athelſtane of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thiſtles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: the Motto Nemo me impune laceſſit. It took this name becauſe after the Battel, Hungus and his Souldiers went all barefoot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Poſterity would henceforth uſe his Croſs as their Enſign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whenſoever they take in hand any war-like enterprize.

2. But this Order being expired many Ages ſince, there is now no Order of Knight-hood in it, (except Knights Batchelors) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James, An. 1622. for the planting of that Country by Scotiſh Colonies; in imitation of the Orders of Baronets in England, for the plantation of Ulſter. Hereditary, as that alſo is, but the Knights hereof diſtinguiſhed by a Ribband of Orange-Tawney.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Treſſure counter-flowred: which Treſſure counter-flowred was added to the Lion by Achaius King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France: ſignifying (ſaith Hector Boetius one of their Hiſtorians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde muniendum; that the Scotch Lion ſhould be guarded by the riches of France.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is environed on all ſides with the Ocean; parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called S. Georges Chanel. Situate on the Weſt of Britain, next unto which it is the biggeſt Iſland of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles: and is ſeated under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longeſt day being 16 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts.

It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Iſle of Britain. But the general name hereof is Ireland; by the Latines called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though ſome frame a wreſted Etymologie from Iberus, a Spaniſh Captain and ſome from Irnaulph, once a ſuppoſed Duke hereof; as others, ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which ſignifieth in their own language a Weſtern land. And yet I muſt not pretermit the Etymon given us by Bochartus, (more near the name than moſt of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Ibernae, a Phœnician word, ſignifying the furtheſt Habitation: there being no Country known amongſt the Ancients, which lay Weſt of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cæſarea, Noahs Neece, inhabited here before the Flood; and how 300 years after the Flood, it was ſubdued by Bartholanus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Giants. Afterward Nemethus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Grecian, came hither: and laſt of all Gaothel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs Daughters, who muſt needs name this Iſland Scotia. But not to honour ſuch fopperies with a confutation, doubtleſly the firſt Inhabitants of this Iſland ame out of Britain. For Britain is the nigheſt Country unto it, and ſo had a more ſpeedy waſtage hither. Secondly, the ancient Writers call this Iſland, a Britiſh Iſland: And thirdly, Tacitus giveth us of this Country this verdict, Solum, cœlumque cultus & ingenia hominum, haud multum a Britannia differunt; the Soil and Air, the habits and diſpoſition of the people, were not much unlike the Britains. For further evidence whereof, it was obſerved, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England, by King Edward the firſt, that many of their Laws and Cuſtoms were thoſe of the Iriſh: which ſhews, that they did both deſcend from the ſame Original. But then we muſt obſerve withal, that they were counted far more barbarous and ſavage by moſt ancient Writers, than thoſe of Britain are deciphered at the firſt diſcovery: ſaid by Strabo to be Man-eaters; accuſtomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of thoſe whom they ſlew in fight. Nor were the Women, though the ſofter and more tender Sex, free from ſuch wild and ſavage Cuſtoms, it being a conſtant courſe amongſt them, when they were delivered of a man-child, to put ſome meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a Sword, wiſhing therewith it might not dye but in the midſt of Arms, and the heat of Battel. Both Sexes uſed to trim themſelves with the Teeth of Fiſhes, white as the driven Snow, or the poliſhed Ivory; and therein placed the greateſt part of their pride and bravery.

Nor are the modern Iriſh much abhorrent from ſuch barbarous cuſtoms, as plainly ſhew from what Original they deſcend; altered but little by converſe with more civil Nations. Of natural conſtitution generally ſtrong and nimble of body, haughty of heart, careleſs of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, conſtant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you ſhall no where find worſe; if they be good, you ſhall hardly meet with better. The Diet, eſpecially of the meer Iriſh, is for the moſt part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with Oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating fleſh many times without bread, which they digeſt with Vſquebaugh; and give their bread-corn to their horſes inſtead of Provender. But more particularly, thoſe of the richer ſort in all parts, and of all ſorts thoſe which inhabit within the Pale (as they themſelves call it) and in ſuch places where the Engliſh Diſcipline hath been entertained; conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparel: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Iriſh of the poorer and inferior ſort) moſt extreamly barbarous; not behaving themſelves like Chriſtians, ſcarcely like me. All of them ſo tenacious of their ancient cuſtoms, that neither power, nor reaſon, nor the ſenſe of the inconveniences which they ſuffer by it, can wean them to deſert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their uſe of Ploughing, not with ſuch gears or harneſs, as in other places; but by tying the hindmoſt horſes head to the tail of the former; which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unſerviceable by the ſoon loſing of their tails, and withal is a courſe of ſo ſlow a diſpatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week, as a good Teem well harneſſed would perform in a day; yet no perſwaſion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtful and ridiculous cuſtom. And when the Earl of Strafford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by Act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on ſuch as ſhould after uſe it: the people thought it ſuch a grievance, and ſo injurious to the Nation, that among other things demanded towards a Pacification of the preſent troubles, their Agents and Commiſſioners inſiſted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we ſhall hereafter meet with in another place. Near of kin to which, is a lazie cuſtom that they have of burning their ſtraw (rather than put themſelves to the pains to threſh it) by that means to part it from the Corn. From which no reaſon can diſſwade them, nor perſwaſions win them. They have among them other cuſtoms as abſurd, though leſs inconvenient: as placing a green buſh, on May-day before their doors, to make their kine yield the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as ſoon as they ſee it, deſiring her to leave them in as good health as ſhe found them; and many others of like nature.

They uſe a language of their own, but ſpoken alſo in the Weſt of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands; which though originally Britiſh, or a Dialect of it, by reaſon of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Eaſterlings, or Ooſt-mans, and Engliſh Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welch, for ought I can learn.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached among them by S. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civil parts, and the Engliſh Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or natural wild Iriſh, (and many of the better ſort of the Nation alſo) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own ſuperſtitious fancies, as in former times. And to ſay truth, it is no wonder that they ſhould; there being no care taken to inſtruct them in the Proteſtant Religion: either by tranſlating the Bible, or the Engliſh Liturgie, into their own Language, as was done in Wales, but forcing them to come to Church to the Engliſh Service, which the people underſtand no more than they do the Maſs. By means whereof, the Iriſh are not only kept in continual ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Proteſtant Churches: but thoſe of Rome are furniſhed with an excellent Argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language which the common Hearers do not underſtand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when theſe diſtempers are compoſed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Chriſtian inſtruction and devotion in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it ſelf is abundantly fruitful, but naturally fitter for Graſs and Paſturage, than it is for Tillage: as may be ſeen in ſuch places where the induſtry of man is aiding to the natural goodneſs of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either over-grown with Wood, or encumbred with vaſt Bogs, and unwholſom Mariſhes; yielding neither profit nor pleaſure unto the Inhabitants. In ſome places, as in the County of Armagh, ſo rank and fertile, that the laying of any ſoil or compoſt on it, doth abate its fruitfulneſs, and proves the worſt Husbandry that can be.

It hath been anciently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongſt whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apothegm: when offered many preferments to leave his Country, he returned this Anſwer, It becomes not them to embrace other mens goods, who for Chriſts ſake had forſaken their own. Of no leſs piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Raſe, Archbiſhop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flouriſhed about the year 1350. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Iſland, that (amongſt other Priviledges which it hath above other Iſlands) it foſtereth no venomous Serpent, and that no ſuch will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her ſelf we find her ſpeaking in the Poet.

Illa ego ſum Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum naſcentium Origo,
Jus commune dedit cum Creta altrice Tonantis,
Angues ne noſtris diffundant ſibila in oris.

I am that Iſland which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, Icy-cold:
Secur'd by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother dear,
That poiſonous Snakes ſhould never here be bred,
Or dare to hiſs, or hurtful venom ſpread.

The other miracles of this Iſland are, 1. That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thruſt a piece of wood, he ſhal find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned into Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-ſtone: richly deſerved by him, if the tale be falſe, who did firſt report it. 2. That the Kine will yield no Milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at leaſt their Calves-skins ſtuffed with ſtraw or hay. It is ſaid alſo, that all the breed of this Country are of leſs ſize than they be in England, except Women and Grey-hounds, and thoſe much bigger than with us.

As for the Clergie of this Country, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons, in former times: ſome of their Biſhops being ſo poor, that they had no other Revenues than the Paſture of two Milch-Beaſts. And ſo far had the Monaſteries and Religious Houſes invaded by Appropriations, the Churches Rights; that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught, the whole ſtipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 ſhillings, in ſome places not above 16. So that the poor Iriſh muſt needs be better fed than taught: for ad tenuitatem Beneficiorum, neceſſario ſequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum, Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Prieſts, ſaid Panormitan rightly. But this is remedied in part by his Sacred Majeſty King CHARLES, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the ſuit of the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury) reſtored unto this Church all the Impropriations and Portions of Tithes, which had been veſted in the Crown. An action of moſt ſingular Piety and Princely Bounty.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are, 1. The Shannon (the Senas of Ptolomy) which ariſing in the Mountains of Letrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it paſſeth forwards; loſeth it ſelf after a courſe of 200 miles (of which 60 Navigable) in the Weſtern Ocean. 2. The Liff, by Ptolomy called Libnius, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3. Awiduffe, or Black Water, as the Engliſh call it. 4. Slane, ſuppoſed to be the Medona of the ancient Writers. 5. The Showre. 6. The Boyne, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue, out of the Canto of the Marriage of the Thames and Medway, in the Faiery Queen:

> There was the Liffie rowling down the lea,
> The ſandy Slane, the ſtony Aubrian,
> The ſpacious Shenin, ſpreading like a Sea,
> The pleaſant Boyne, the fiſhy-fruitful Banne,
> Swift Awiduffe, which of the Engliſhman
> Is called Black-Water; and the Liffar deep,
> Sad Trowis that once his people over-ran,
> Strong Allo tumbling from Slewlogheer ſteep,
> And Mullo mine, whoſe waves I whilom taught to weep.
> There alſo was the wide-embayed Mayre,
> The pleaſant Bandon crown'd with many Wood;
> The ſpreading Lee, that like an Iſland fair
> Incloſeth Cork with his divided flood;
> And baleful Oure, late ſtain'd with Engliſh blood,
> With many more,————

So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the marriage of Thames and Medway.

But beſides theſe Rivers, this Iſland is in moſt places well ſtored with Lakes, yielding great plenty of Fiſh to the parts adjoining. The principal of which, 1. Lough-Erne, containing 15 miles in breadth, and 30 miles in length; ſhaded with Woods, and ſo repleniſhed with Fiſh, that the Fiſhermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their Nets. It hath alſo in it many Iſlands, one moſt remarkable for the ſtrange and horrid noiſes which are therein heard, called therefore by the Vulgar, St. Patricks Purgatory. Almoſt as big as this is 2. the Lake of Corbes, which loſeth it ſelf in the Sea not far from Galloway. A Lake of 26 miles in length, and four in breadth: ſaid to have in it 30 Iſlets, abounding with Pine-Trees. 3. Lough-Foyle, ſuppoſed to be the Logia of Ptolomy. 4. Lough-Eaugh, out of which the River Banne, abundantly well ſtored with Salmons, hath its firſt Original. And beſides theſe and many others of leſs note, there are ſaid to be three Lakes in the Province of Meth, not far aſunder, and having an entercourſe of Waters: but of ſo different a temper, that the Fiſh which are proper to the one, (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar ſorts) will not live in the other: but either die, or by ſome ſecret conveyances, find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought.

It was divided anciently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it ſelf, that is to ſay, 1. Leinſter, 2. Meth, 3. Vlſter, 4. Connaught, and 5. Munſter: but of late time the Province of Meth is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinſter.

1. LEINSTER, by the Latines called Lagenia, hath on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Chanel, (commonly called S. Georges Chanel) by which parted from the Iſle of Great Britain; on the Weſt, the River Newrie, (Neorus, as the Latines call it) which divides it from Mounſter; on the North, the Province of Meth; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitful generally than the reſt of Ireland, becauſe better cultivated and manured, as having been longeſt in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants do derive themſelves, and for that reaſon more conformable to the civilities and habit of the Engliſh Nation. Well watered, beſides a large Sea-coaſt, with many fair and pleaſant Rivers, the principal whereof, 1. the Barrow, called in Latine Birgus; 2. the Newrie, 3. the Showre, and 4. the Liffie, (the Libnius of Ptolomy) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth the Counties of 1. Dublin, 2. Kilkenny, 3. Caterlough, 4. Kildare, 5. Leaſe, or Queens County, 6. Ophalie, or Kings County; and 7. Weiſhford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Caſtles well fortified, and able to make good reſiſtance againſt an Enemy; the Engliſh being forced to fortifie themſelves in their Plantations with ſtrong holds and fortreſſes, againſt the incurſions of the Natives.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Dublin, ſuppoſed to be the Eblana of Ptolomy; by the Iriſh called Balacleigh, becauſe being ſeated in a fenny and mooriſh ſoil, it was built on piles, as the word doth ſignifie in that language. Situate at or near the mouth of the River Liffe, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are many times encumbred with heaps of Sand. The City very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the Iſland, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity, beſides the benefit redounding from the Courts of Juſtice. In thoſe reſpects well fortified againſt all emergencies; and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publick. The Principal of which, are the Caſtle, wherein the Lord Deputy reſideth, built by Henry Loandres once Archbiſhop here: a Colledge founded by Queen Elizabeth, to the honour, and by the name of the bleſſed Trinity; the Cathedral Church dedicated to S. Patrick, the Apoſtle of the Iriſh Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Chriſt-Church, beſides thirteen others deſtinated to Parochial meetings. Being deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Daniſh Wars, it was re-edified by Harold, ſirnamed Harfager, King of the Norwegians, then Maſters of moſt parts of the Iſland; and after the ſubjection of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colony of Briſtol men. 2. Wieſhford, or Wexford, the Menapia of Ptolomy, ſituate on the mouth of the River Slane, ſuppoſed to be the Modona, of the ſame Author; the firſt of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colony of Engliſh. 3. Kilkenny, on the River Newre, the chief Seat of the Biſhop of Oſſory, and the faireſt Town of all the Inlands: ſo called quaſi Cella Canici, the Cell or Monaſtery of Canicus, a man of great renown for piety, in theſe parts of the Country. 4. Kildare, an In-land Town alſo, and a Biſhops See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the ancient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honoured with this Title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of ſo unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adverſaries cloſed their charge againſt him with this expreſſion, Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; The King replyed, that then this Earl ſhould rule all Ireland; and ſo for his Jeſts ſake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5. Roſſe, once populous, well traded, and of large circumference, now a ruine only; nothing remaining but the Walls, which were built by Iſabel, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conqueror of this Iſland for King Henry the ſecond. 6. Philips Town, the Principal of the County of Ophalie, or Kings County; ſo called in honour of King Philip; as 7. Marieburg, the chief of Leaſe, or the Queens County, was in honour of Queen Mary. 8. Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified againſt the incurſion of the Iriſh, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9. Caterlogh, commonly, but corruptly Carlough, a Town of great ſtrength, and the chief of that County. 10. Rheban, not otherwiſe of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolomy.

2. METH, by the Latines called Media, by Giraldus, Midia; becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, hath on the South Leinſter; on the Weſt, Connaught; on the North, Vlſter; on the Eaſt, the Iriſh Sea, or S. Georges Chanel. A ſmall, but rich and pleaſant Province: well ſtocked with people, and ſtored with all things neceſſary for their ſuſtentation; and for a ſweet and wholſom air not inferiour to any. Divided into three Counties only, that is to ſay, 1. Eaſt-Meth, 2. Weſt-Meth, and 3. Long-ford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 14 Caſtles of good eſteem. By reaſon of which ſtrength, it is called by ſome Writers, the Chamber of Ireland.

Towns of moſt conſequence herein, are 1. Trim, the chief Town of the County of Eaſt-Meth, the ancient Barony of the Lacies; poſſeſſed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County, and the Lords of the greateſt part of Vlſter. 2. Tredah, more properly Droghedah, ſituate on the River Boine on the edge of Vlſter, to which Province belongs ſo much of the Town as lieth on the North-ſide of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by Art as Nature very ſtrongly fortified, and furniſhed with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Droghedah, from the Bridge there built upon the River for the conveniency of paſſage (as the word ſignifieth in that Language) and therefore called Pontana by ſome Latine Writers. 3. Molinga, the chief Town of Weſt-Meth. 4. Delvin, in the ſame County alſo, the Barony of the Nugents, an ancient Family in this Tract. 5. Longford, of moſt note in the County ſo named, but not elſe obſervable.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for Leinſter ſince the firſt Conqueſt of it, hath been inſeparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was firſt granted in Fee-Farm by King Henry the ſecond, to Hugh Lacy, a man of great merit and employment in the Conqueſt of Ireland; who left it unto Walter his younger Son. By Margaret and Matilda, the Neeces of this Walter by his Son Gilbert, one moyety hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of March, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the Fourth: and the other moyety to the Verduns, by whom diſperſed and ſcattered into divers Families. Accompted for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th, in whoſe Reign it was divided into Eaſt-Meth, and Weſt-Meth; to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3. VLSTER, by the Latines called Vltonia, is the largeſt Province of all Ireland, bounded on the South with Meth and Connaught; on the Weſt, with the vaſt Iriſh Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean, to which Ptolomy gives the name of Hyperborean; and on the Eaſt, with St. Georges Chanel. A Country fruitful of it ſelf, but in moſt places formerly overgrown with Woods, and drowned in Mariſhes and great Bogs, by the natural ſlothfulneſs of the people: made more reſponſal to the Husbandman both for Corn and Paſturage, ſince the late Plantation of the Britiſh, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1. Louth, 2. Cavon, 3. Fermanath, 4. Down, 5. Monaghan, 6. Armagh, 7. Colrane, 8. Tirconnel, 9. Tir-Oen, and 10. Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Caſtles for the defence of the Country, and keeping under the wild Iriſh; wilder and more untractable in theſe Northern parts, than the reſt of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and ſpacious Sea, on three ſides thereof; many great Lakes in the body of it, beſides the Rivers of 1. Boyne, called in Latine Boanda, which divides it from Meth, 2. the Bann, 3. Moandus, and 4. the Eyn, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Armagh, on or near the River of Kalin, the chief Town of the County ſo called, and the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An ancient City, but ſo miſerably defaced by fire in Tir Oens Rebellion, that it can ſcarce preſerve the reputation of a Market-Town. 2. Carlingford, and 3. Dundalk, both ſituate on the Sea ſide, and both within the County of Louth. 4. Knock-Fergus, the chief of Antrim, more properly Rock-Fergus, (and in that ſenſe called Carick-Fergus by the Iriſh) ſo called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Iriſh Scots, who there ſuffered Shipwrack. Seated upon a large and capacious Bay (the Vinderius of Ptolomy) which giveth it both a ſafe and commodious Port; as well by natural ſituation, as the works of Art, very ſtrongly fortified; by reaſon of the Neighbourhood of the Scots in Cantire, from which little diſtant. 5. London-Derry, a Colony of the Londoners, beſt built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6. Dungannon, the principal Seat and reſidence in former times, of the great Oneals. 7. Dungall, the principal of Tir-Connel. 8. Robogh, a ſmall Village at preſent, but anciently a Biſhops See: fit to be mentioned in this place, in regard it ſtill preſerveth ſome foot-ſteps of the old Robogdii, an Iriſh Tribe, and placed by Ptolomy in this tract, where they gave name unto the Promontory by him called Robogdium, now the Fair Foreland; as is probably conceived by the learned Cambden.

This, as it is the largeſt Province of all this Kingdom, ſo was it with moſt difficulty ſubjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. Firſt conquered by John Curcy, a valiant Engliſh-man, in the Reign of King Henry the ſecond, by whom created Earl of Vlſter. But being maligned for his eminent Virtues, and after proſcribed by King John, this Title and Eſtate were both conferred upon Hugh Lacie, the Lord and Conquerour of Meth, whom before we ſpake of. By an Heir General of the Lacies, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the marriage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the laſt Earl of that Family, mily, it came to Lionel Duke of Clarence, the ſecond Son (then living) of King Edward the third; as by his Daughter Philip, to the Earls of March, from them by the like marriage to the Houſe of York, and in the perſon of King Edward the 4th, to the Crown again. But being neglected by the Engliſh, in the whole courſe of their Government, eſpecially in the Wars betwixt York and Lancaſter, it was cantoned into many Eſtates & Principalities, by the great Lords of the natural Iriſh, (who had born too great ſway here in the former times): and ſo eſtranged from the civilities of England, and their Allegiance to that Crown, as if it had never been in ſubjection to it. In which eſtate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Country were pleaſed to give them): till the Rebellion firſt, and afterwards the vanquiſhment of Hugh Oneal, the then Earl of Tir-Oen, brought it in full ſubjection to the Engliſh Government, of which more hereafter.

4. CONNAUGHT, in Latine called Connacia; by the Iriſh, Connaught, is bounded on the North with Ulſter; on the Weſt with the main Ocean; on the South with Munſter, from which parted by the River Shanon; and on the Eaſt, with Meth and ſome part of Leinſter. So called from the Nagnata, an old Iriſh Nation; or from Nagnata a Port-Town; both placed by Ptolomy in this Tract. The ſoil of the ſame temper with that of Ulſter; as woody and as full of bogs till theſe later times, in which indifferently well cleared of both inconveniences.

It hath been alſo called by our Engliſh Writers, the County of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sons of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Glouceſter, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the firſt: and is divided at the preſent into theſe five Shires, that is to ſay, 1. Letrim, 2. Roſcommon, 3. Maio, 4. Slego, and 5. Galloway and Twomond. In which are comprehended but 8 Towns of any conſequence, for Commerce and Traffick, (an argument of the imperfect Plantation of it by the Engliſh Conquerors); and about 24 Caſtles for defence of the Country, of old erection, beſides ſuch Fortreſſes as have been raiſed occaſionally in theſe later troubles.

Places of moſt note and obſervation, 1. Toam, an Archbiſhops See. 2. Athenry an ancient Town, but decayed and ruinous; of moſt renown for being the Barony of John de Bermingham, a noble Engliſh man, who had great poſſeſſion in this tract. 3. Letrim, the chief Town of the County ſo named, neighboured by the Curlew-Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the Engliſh, in Tir-Oens rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shenin or Shanon, whoſe courſe we have before deſcribed. 4. Slego, and 5. Roſcommon, the chief Town of their ſeveral Counties. 6. Athlone, a piece of great ſtrength, and the great Key of Connaught. 7. Twomond, not otherwiſe much obſervable, but for giving the title of an Earl to the Family of O Brian, (deſcended from the Kings of Connaught) advanced unto that honour by King Henry the 8th. 8. Galloway the principal of this Province, a Biſhops See, and the third City of the Kingdom for beauty and bigneſs. Situate near the fall of the great Lake or River of Corbes, in the Weſtern Ocean, defended on that ſide from the fury of the Sea, and the fear of Invaſions, by the interpoſition of ſome Iſlands (called the Iſles of Arran) very ſtrongly fortified. A noted Empory, and lately of ſo great fame with foreign Merchants, that an out-landiſh Merchant meeting with an Iriſh-man, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland ſtood; as if Galloway had been the name of the Iſland, and Ireland only the name of ſome Town.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, as the reſt of thoſe Provinces; the laſt King whereof was Roderick, ſurnamed the Great, who having a great hand over the reſt of the Roytelets, entituled himſelf ſole Monarch or King of Ireland. But being forced to ſubmit himſelf to King Henry the ſecond, his Country at the laſt was brought into ſubjection to the Crown of England, by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloceſter, William de Bermingham, and other Noble Adventurers of the Engliſh Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours; yet the greateſt part of the ſpoil, together with the title of Lords of Connaught, fell to the Family of the Burghs; from them to Lionel Duke of Clarence, and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was ſhewn. Cantoned again amongſt the Iriſh and degenerate Engliſh, as Ulſter was, by the ſupine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tir-Oen, involving all the Chiefs of the Iriſh Nation in the ſame cauſe with him, involved them alſo conſequently in the ſame deſtruction.

5. MOUNSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North with Connaught; on the Eaſt with Leinſter; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick or Weſtern Ocean; and on the South, with the Vergivian. By the natural Iriſh it is called Mown, whence the Engliſh had the name of Mounſter. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertility of the Soil, yields not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into ſix Counties, viz. Limerick, 2. Waterford, 3. Cork, 4. Deſmond, 5. Kerry, and 6. Tipperary; which two laſt anciently enjoyed all the rights of a County Palatine: And in theſe Shires are comprehended (beſides many ſafe Stations and Roads for Shipping) 24 Towns of Note and Trading, and 66 Caſtles of old erection.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Caſſiles, in the County of Limerick, an Archbiſhops See, advanced unto that honour by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150. 2. Limerick, the principal of that County, and the fourth in eſtimation of all the Kingdom: Situate in an Iſland compaſſed round about with the River Shanon, by which means well fortified; a well frequented Empory, and a Biſhops See; diſtant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but ſo accommodated by the River, that Ships of Burden come up cloſe to the very Walls. The Caſtles and the Bridg-pieces of both great ſtrength and beauty, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the ſituation. 3. Clonmel, in the County of Tipperary, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 4. Holy Croſs, in the ſame County alſo, once flouriſhing by reaſon of the great reſort of Pilgrims, to ſee and worſhip there a piece of the holy Croſs, as it was ſuppoſed: which ſuppoſition as it drew much Wealth unto the Town, ſo it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County alſo. 5. Thurles in the ſame County, which gives the Title of a Viſcount to the Earls of Ormond, but not elſe obſervable. 6. Waterford, on the River Showre, a well traded Port, a Biſhops See, and the ſecond City of the Kingdom. Of great fidelity to the Engliſh ſince the Conqueſt of Ireland, and for that cauſe endowed with many ample priviledges. Firſt built by ſome Norwegian Pirates, who though they fixed it in one of the moſt barren parts and moſt foggy air of all the Country, yet they made choice of ſuch a ſafe and commodious ſite for the uſe of Shipping, that of a Neſt of Pirats it was eftſoons made a Receipt for Merchants, and ſuddenly grew up to great Wealth and Power. 6. Cork, (by the Latines called Corcagia) the principal of that County, and a Biſhops See: well walled, and fitted with a very commodious Haven; conſiſting chiefly of one ſtreet reaching out in length; inhabited by a civil, wealthy, and induſtrious people. 7. Dunk Eran, an old Epiſcopal

See, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Ivernis of Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable. 8. Kinſale, upon the mouth of the River Bany, a commodious Port, oppoſite to the Coaſts of Spain, and fortified in Tir-Oens Rebellion by a Spaniſh Garriſon, under the command of Don John de Aquila: but ſoon recovered (after the defeat of that Grand Rebel near the Walls hereof) by the valour and indefatigable induſtry of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom. 9. Baltimore, 10. Toughall, and 11. Bere-haven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of ſafe Roads or convenient Havens. 12. Leſmore, of old a Biſhops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which Shire it ſtandeth. Nothing in point of ſtory ſingular which concerns this Province; but that it was ſo carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputy himſelf) called the Lord Preſident of Munſter: by whoſe vigilancy there have hapned fewer Rebellions here, than in any Province of this Iſland.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Iſland, being originally Britains, (as before is ſaid) were in the time of Ptolomy diſtinguiſhed into the Nations of Rhobognii, Darnii, Volontii, Venicnii, and Erdini, poſſeſſing the Northern parts, now Ulſter; the Auteri, Cangani and Nagnatæ, inhabiting Connaught: the Velibori, Uterni, Vodii, and Coriondi, in the South, now Mounſter; and the Menapii, Cauci, Blanii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meth and Leinſter. Principal Cities of the which, were Eblana, now Dublin; Menapia, now Waterford; Nagnata, which Ptolomy honoured with the Title of Urbs inſignis; Rhigia, Rheba, Macolicum, Laberus, Ivernis, &c. not eaſily diſcernable by what names we may call them now: this Country never being ſo happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Maſters of Civility and good Letters in the Weſt of Europe: and by that means, the actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and ſilence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be ſeated here, and from hence firſt to take poſſeſſion of the Hebrides, or Weſtern Iſles, next of the Weſtern part of Britain on the North of Dunbritton Frith. Afterwards ſome of the Saxon Monarchs caſt their eyes upon it, and made themſelves Maſters of Dublin, and ſome other places; but being incumbred with the Danes, could not hold them long: being hardly able to defend their own againſt the people. The next that undertook the conqueſt, were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Normans, all paſſing in the Chronicles of that time, under the name of Norwegians: who firſt only ſcowred along the Coaſts in the way of Piracy. But after finding the weakneſs of the Iſland, divided amongſt many petit and inconſiderable Princes, they made an abſolute conqueſt of it under the conduct of Turgeſius, whom they elected for their King: ſoon rooted out by the policy of the King of Meth, the only Iriſh Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petit King by name Omo-Laghliben, had a Daughter, of renowned beauty, whom Turgeſius demanded of her Father to ſerve his luſts: and he ſeeming willing to condeſcend to the motion, as if honoured by it, made anſwer, That beſides his Daughter, he had at his diſpoſing many others of more exquiſite beauties, which ſhould all be ready at command. Turgeſius ſwallowing this bait, deſired him with all ſpeed to effect the meeting. But the King of Meth, attiring in the habits of Women, a company of young Gentlemen, who durſt for the common liberty adventure their ſeveral lives: conducted them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber. And they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modeſty ſake he had in him, he had commanded all his attendants to avoid the room) aſſaulted him, now ready for and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Methian King had by this time acquainted diverſe of the better ſort with his plot; all which upon a ſign given, ruſh into the Palace, and put to death all the Norwegians, and other attendants of the Tyrant. After this, the Roytelets enjoyed their former Dominions, till the year 1172. in which Dermot Mac Morogh King of Leinſter, having forced the Wife of Maurice O Rork King of Meth, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom, came to the Court of England for ſuccour. To this Petition, Henry the ſecond then King, condeſcended: ſending him aid under the leading of Richard de Clare, ſirnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, who reſtored King Dirmot, and brought a great part of the Iſland under the Engliſh ſubjection. John, King of England, was the firſt who was entituled Lord of Ireland; which ſtile was granted him by Pope Urban the third, who for the ornament of his Royalty, ſent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Tir-Oen ſtiled him Defender of the Iriſh Liberty, he was by Clement the 8. honoured with the like plume. But here we are to underſtand, that though the Kings of England uſed no other title than Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings thereof in effect and power, Lords Paramount, as we uſe to ſay. And though themſelves retained only the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his Engliſh Subjects, the honourable, but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. And they retained this title of Lords, till the year 1542; in which Henry the 8th, in an Iriſh Parliament, was declared King of Ireland, as a name more ſacred, and repleat with Majeſty, than that of Lord: at which time alſo he was declared to be Supream Head under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended juriſdiction of all foreign Powers, eſpecially the uſurped authority of the Pope of Rome renounced by Law, though ſtill acknowledged by too many of his ſuperſtitious and untractable People.

The Government of this Country, ſince the firſt Conqueſt by the Engliſh, hath been moſt commonly by one Supream Officer, who is ſometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, moſt generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; than whom no Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, or comes nearer the Majeſty of a King in his Train and State. For his aſſiſtance he hath a Privy Council attending on him, though reſident for the moſt part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or caſes of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the ſtanding Rule of all civil Government, they owe their being and original to the Engliſh Parliaments. For in the Reign of King Henry the 7th, Sir Edward Poynings, then Lord Deputy, cauſed an Act to paſs in the Iriſh Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, were to be entertained and ſtand in force as the Laws of Ireland. On which foundation they have raiſed many Superſtructures both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, ſummoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by another Statute made in the time of the ſaid Poynings, the People are enabled to make Laws for their own good Governance, conditioned they were firſt tranſmitted to the Court of England to be conſidered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the Houſes of the Iriſh Parliaments. Which Laws commonly called Poynings Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongſt them; though the laſt much ſtomached and repined at; not only as a badge of their Subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb or Martingal to hold them in.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe good Laws, and the ample power of their Commiſſion, the Lord Deputies could never abſolutely ſubdue the Iſland, or bring the people to any civil courſe of life; the Fathers inflicting an heavy curſe on all their poſterity, if ever they ſhould ſow corn, build houſes, or learn the Engliſh tongue. To this indiſpoſition of the Iriſh themſelves, let us add the defects of the Kings of England, and Iriſh Deputies, in matters of civil policy, as I find them particularized by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy diſcourſe of this Subject: I will only glean a few of them. Firſt then, ſaith he, a barbarous Country is like a field overgrown with weeds, which muſt firſt be well broken with the Plough, and then immediately ſown with good and profitable ſeed: ſo muſt a wild and uncivil people, be firſt broken and ploughed up by war, and then preſently ſown with the ſeed of good Laws and diſcipline; leſt the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the firſt defect in our Engliſh Kings, not to tame and take down the Stomachs and pride of this people, though either civil or foreign wars perhaps occaſioned this neglect: and alſo the Iriſh Deputies, who at ſuch times as the people upon a ſmall diſcomfiture, were creſt-faln, neglected the ſo keeping of them by ſeverity of diſcipline. The ſecond overſight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave ſuch large poſſeſſions and Regalities unto the firſt Conquerors, that the people knew no Authority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. The Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Iriſhry, but to ſome particular Families and Provinces only: inſomuch as there were but five great Lords of the natural Iriſh, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to ſay, O Neal in Ulſter, O Connohor in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Lemſter, O Malaghlin in Meth, and O Brian in Twomond; known by the name of Quinque Sanguines in ſome old Records. By means whereof the reſt of the people being in the condition of Out-Laws, or at the beſt of Aliens, had no incouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themſelves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputies or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholſom Laws againſt the barbarous cuſtoms of the Common people, and the merciless oppreſſions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terrour, not for reformation. Fifthly, add unto theſe (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choice of their Deputies: ſometimes conferring that high Office as a Court preferment, without relation unto the merits of the perſon, and ſometimes ſending men of weak or broken Fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Maſters ſervice, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this flock. Sixthly, And yet beſides theſe Errors of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themſelves; who building all their Forts and Caſtles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Faſtneſſes to the natural Iriſh; the ſtrength whereof not only animated them to Rebel upon all occaſions: but ſerved too fitly to continue them in their ancient Barbariſm.

In theſe terms of wildneſs and non-ſubjection ſtood Ireland, till the latter end of Queen Elizabeths reign, at what time the rebellion of Hugh O Neal Earl of Tir Oen had engaged almoſt all the Iriſhry in that deſperate action which ending in the overthrow of that ingrateful Rebel, and all his partizans, not only cruſhed the over-much powerableneſs of the Iriſh Nobility; but made the final and full conqueſt of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is ſuppreſt, doth make the Prince ſtronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies, and left the ſowing of it unto her ſucceſſor King James, who omitted no part of a skilful Stateſman. 1. Then there was an ἀμνηϛία or Act of Oblivion made, whereby all the offences againſt the Crown were remitted, if by ſuch a limited day the people would ſue out their Pardons, and by the ſame Act, all the Iriſhry were manumitted from the ſervitude of their Lords, and received into the Kings immediate Protection. 2ly, The whole Kingdom was divided into Shires and Judges Itinerant appointed to circuit them: whereby it hath followed, that the exactions of the Lords are laid aſide, the behaviour of the people narrowly looked into, the paſſages before unknown unto our Souldiers, are laid open by our Under-Sheriffs and Bayliffs; and the common people ſeeing the benefit and ſecurity they enjoy by the Engliſh Laws, and loth to plead always by an Interpreter, begin to ſet their children to School, for the learning of the Engliſh tongue. 3ly, The Iriſh were not rooted out, as in the firſt plantation in Lemſter, and the Engliſh only eſtated in their rooms: but were only removed from the Woods, Bogs, and Mountains, into the plain and open Country: that being like wild trees tranſplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4. whereas there was but one Freeholder in a whole Country, which was the Lord himſelf, the reſt holding in Villenage, and being ſubject to the Lords immeaſurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant; now the Lords Eſtate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himſelf, which was ſtill left unto him; and that which was in the hands of his Tenants, who had Eſtates made in their Poſſeſſions, according to the Common courſe of England, paying inſtead of uncertain Iriſh taxations, certain Engliſh rents: whereby the people have ſince ſet their minds upon repairing their houſes, and manuring their lands, to the great increaſe of the private and publick Revenue.

But that which moſt advanced the reduction of Ireland to a ſetled and civil Government, and rooted it in a ſubjection to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, and Tirconnell, Sir John Odaughertie, and other great men of the North, poſſeſſed of large Territories and great Juriſdictions. Who being both uncapable of Loyalty, and impatient of ſeeing the Kings Judges, Juſtices, and other Miniſters of State, to hold their Seſſions, and execute their Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer within the parts where they commanded: without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conſcience, forſook the Country, and left their whole Eſtates to the Kings diſpoſing. By whoſe directions, their Lands were ſeized upon and ſold to ſeveral Purchaſors, the City of London infeoffed in a great part of them, a great Plantation made in Ulſter of Engliſh, Welch, and Scots, by the united name of a Britiſh Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raiſing money to advance and indear the work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the Engliſh, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, & not abandoned ſo great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being factious for another, did not eaſily brook) and the uniting of both people in the bonds of amity: the Iriſh looking on the Scot as a meer Intruder, but on the Engliſh as his old Maſter or his Fellow Subject. Howſoever, ſo great a part of the Country (and that which heretofore was the neſt of the Rebels,) being thus diſpoſed of, it came to paſs, that Ireland, which before ſerved only as a grave to bury our beſt men, and a gulf to ſwallow our greateſt treaſures; being governed neither as a Country Free, nor conquered: was brought in ſome hope, by the prudence and policy of her laſt Kings and late Lord Deputies, to prove an orderly Commonwealth; civil in it ſelf, profitable to the Prince, and a good ſtrength to the Britiſh Empire. For to ſuch Order it was reduced, in a little time, that the wayfaring men might travel without danger, the Ploughman walk without fear, the Laws adminiſtred in every place alike, the men drawn unto Villages, the Woods and Faſtneſſes left to beaſts; and all reduced to that civility, as our Fathers never ſaw, nor could we well ſample out of ancient Hiſtories.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are ſaid by Walſingham in the time of Edward the 3d, to have been yearly 40000 pounds; but his ſucceſſors, till of late, have ſcarce got ſo much as the keeping of it coſt them: King Richard the ſecond being by the ſame Walſingham reported to have ſpent 30000 marks out of his own purſe, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Country were ſo profitable to Edward the third, or no, I determine not, though I find good reaſons to perſwade me, that Walſingham was not well acquainted with the ſtate of that Exchequer. But ſure I am, that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the ſaid Kings Reign, and more duely paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Cuſtom houſe amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the laſt year of King James his Reign. Not to ſay any thing of the great improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, becauſe they fell together with him.

The ſtrength of this Kingdom conſiſteth partly in the ſituation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas; partly in the many Caſtles firſt built and fortified by the Engliſh Planters; and partly in a ſtanding Army continually kept up by the Kings of England, for defence of their hold and intereſt againſt the Rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raiſe both of Horſe and Foot, could never be conjectured at, till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually poſſeſſed only of thoſe four Counties which they called the Pale, that is to ſay, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meth (which laſt hath ſince the time of King Henry the 8th been ſubdivided into three) were not able to raiſe any great power out of that Eſtate, but were forced to ſend Souldiers out of England (as occaſion was) to preſerve their Soveraignty in Ireland. The greateſt Levy which I read of, was that of 1500 Iriſh, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the ſiege of Harflew in Normandy. And on the other ſide, the great Lords of the natural Iriſh, and degenerate Engliſh, being divided into Factions amongſt themſelves, and never joined in any one principle of common intereſt, were more inconſiderable than the weak, but united Forces of the Kings of England. And though moſt of them at the laſt, were drawn into a confederacy with the Earl of Tir-Oen, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Army did exceed at any time, the number of 8000 men; and thoſe not well appointed neither. So that the beſt eſtimate which can be made of the Forces of Ireland, muſt be meaſured by the Armies raiſed in the late Rebellion, when the Iriſh had both time, and leiſure, to get themſelves ſome reputation in the World, and make proviſion for a War. In proſecution of which, he who conſiders the many Armies they have raiſed, ſince their firſt muſtering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neal; the many defeats which have been given them, and thoſe as many new recruits after each defeat; all of them raiſed out of the bodies of their own people, without ſupply from other Countries (beſides ſuch as have ſerved againſt them for the King): muſt needs conclude that they want not men enough for ſervice; nor skill, nor courage to attempt the moſt difficult enterpriſes.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harp Or, ſtringed Argent. Which Coat, King James, (to ſhew himſelf the firſt abſolute King of Ireland) firſt cauſed to be marſhalled with the Royal Arms of Great Britain.

The LESSER ISLANDS

AND now we come at laſt to the LESSER ISLANDS, diſperſed in ſeveral parts of the Britiſh Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1. The Orcades, 2. Schetland, 3. The Hebrides, 4. Man, 5. Angleſey, 6. The Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 7. The Sorlings, or Iſles of Scilly, 8. Wight, 9. Thanet, 10. Sunderland, 11. Holy Iſland.

I. The ORCADES or Iſles of Orkney are in number 32, ſituate over againſt Cathneſs, the moſt Northern Country of all Scotland; and ſeparate from one another by ſome narrow Straights. The ſoil indifferently Fruitful, exceedingly well ſtored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattel; plentiful in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans: but deſtitute of Wheat, and unfurniſhed both of Woods and Trees. But their chief commodity is their Fiſh, which the Inhabitants catch upon the Coaſts in great abundance. Thoſe of moſt note in all the cluſter, are, 1. Heth conceived to be the Ocetis of Ptolomy: as 2. Fair Iſle, on good reaſon thought to be the Dumna of Pliny; the chief Town of it being ſtill called by the name of Dumo. 3. Hey, taken or miſtaken for the Dumna of Pliny, but not elſe obſervable. 4. Pomona, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles; in breadth, where it is broadeſt, ſix. The chief Town of it Kirkwall, honoured with a Biſhops See, and ſtrengthened with two Caſtles. This Iſland is well ſtored with Tin and Lead, and is at this day by the Inhabitants called Mainland.

The people of theſe Iſles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers, but no drunkards; Bibaciſſimi ſunt incolæ, nunquam tamen inebriantur. They uſe the Gothiſh Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whoſe poſſeſſion they once were; and of whoſe qualities they ſtill retain ſome ſmack. The Iſles themſelves in the time of Solinus were not inhabited, being then overgrown with ruſhes; (now in a meaſure, populous and fertile, as before was ſaid) and were firſt diſcovered by Julius Agricola, the firſt that ever ſailed about Britain. In later times they were poſſeſſed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the year 1266; when Magnus King of Norway ſurrendred them up to Alexander King of Scotland; which Surrender ſome of the ſucceeding Kings did afterwards ratifie: the claim heretofore being finally relinquiſhed by Chriſtiern the firſt, King of Denmark and Norway, on the marriage of his Daughter Margaret with King James the third, An. 1474. ſome money being added to make good the Contract, without which the Danes would not forgo their pretenſions to them.

II. Two days ſayling North of theſe Orcades, lyeth

SCHETLAND, an Iſland belonging to the Crown of Scotland; and is by many Learned men, upon very good reaſons, ſuppoſed to be the Thule of the Antients. For firſt, it ſtandeth in the 63 degree of Latitude, in which Ptolomy placed Thule. Secondly, it lyeth oppoſite to Bergen in Norway; againſt which Pomponius Mela hath ſeated it. And thirdly, Caſper Peucerus hath obſerved, that this Schetland is by Mariners called Thylenſel; a name in which that of Thule is apparently couched. That Iſe-land was not Thule (as moſt ſay) we ſhall ſhew you when we come to Norwey, and the Northern Iſlands. Here we add only, That the Antients did report many ſtrange things of it, and ſome of them beyond all belief. Pliny affirming that they had no day here for all the Winter (nulla per brumam dies, as his own words are) with whom agree Solinus and many others, as to that particular. Iſidore adds, (Origen. lib. 14. c. 6.) nullum ultra eam diem eſſe, that beyond this Iſle there was no day in any place; as if here had been the end of the World and Nature. But Pytheas in Polybius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Iſle there was no diſtinction of Earth, Air, and Water: ἀλλὰ σύγκριμα τι ἐκ τούτων, but a confuſed mixture of all together, like the primitive Chaos of the Poets. The reaſon of which ſtrange report, was the audaciouſneſs of thoſe who had ſeen the Iſland, and thought that whatſoever they ſaid of it would not be diſproved, becauſe of the remoteneſs of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciouſly ſpoken was that of Syneſius, a right Learned Prelate, Ἡ Θούλη διδοῦσα τοῖς διαπλέουσιν αὐτὴν ἀνεύθυνα καὶ ἀνέλεγκτα ψεύδεσθαι. Thule (ſaith he) gave thoſe who had ſailed unto it, the opportunity of lying without controll. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers have made too much uſe of in theſe laſt times alſo.

III. The HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Weſtern Iſlands, ſituate on the Weſt of Scotland, are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1. Ila, 24 miles long, and 16 in breadth; plentiful in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2. Jona, Famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scotiſh Kings; whoſe chief Town is Sodore, once a Biſhops See, called hence Sodorenſis; his juriſdiction comprehending theſe Iſlands with the Iſle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th, Anno 840. or thereabouts. His dwelling for the moſt part of it in the Iſle of Man, as the wealthier and more pleaſant part of his Dioceſs; till the conqueſt of it by the Engliſh; at what time thoſe of the Weſtern Iſlands, withdrew themſelves from his obedience, and had a Biſhop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sodorenſes; but at laſt this took the name of Inſulanus, Biſhop of the Iſles, which he ſtill retains. 4. Mela, by Ptolomy called Maleos, (that of Ila beforementioned being his Epidia) mountainous and hilly, but affording good Mines of Lead and Copper; 25 miles more in compaſs than that of Ila. 4. Lewis, or Leviſſa, the largeſt of all the Hebrides, ſaid to be 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth, the more Weſtern of the two Ebudaes ſpoken of by Ptolomy: the other being now called Skye, famous for the multitude of Sea-Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6. Racline, the Recina of Ptolomy, the ſmalleſt of the Hebrides, and moſt near to Ireland. The reſt of leſs note, not known, or not inhabited in the time of the Romans, and not very well peopled at the preſent, I forbear to name: ſome of them rather Rocks than Iſlands, others ſcarce having graſs enough to hide their bareneſs. The people of them all, as well in language as behaviour, reſemble the Wild Iriſh, and are called Red ſhanks: a people, as King James affirmeth in his Baſilicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all ſhew of Civility; ſuch as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Diſcipline. Legum ſeveritate, & judiciorum metu, ſe alligari non patiuntur, ſaith judicious Cambden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a Contract betwixt Magnus King of Norway, and King Alexander the third: the Orcades being bargained for at the ſame time alſo.

South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritton-Frith, lieth the Iſle of Rothſay, (now called Buthe) which gives the Title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland: and the Iſle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is ſituate juſt over againſt the Southern part of Cumberland, from which it is diſtant 25 miles; and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland; becauſe it foſtered venemous Serpents brought hither out of Britain. By Ptolomy it is called Monœda, or the further Mona, to difference it from that which we call Angleſey; by Pliny, Monabia; Menavia, by Oraſius and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas an old Britiſh Writer. The Welch at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Maning, and the Engliſh Man. It is in length 30 miles, in breadth 15, and 8 in ſome places. The people hate Theft and Begging; and uſe a Language mixt of the Norwegian and Iriſh tongues. The Soyl is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oats, Barley, and Wheat; with which they uſe to ſupply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it ſelf, yet queſtionleſs the Weſtern Iſles, which are a member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God John Mericke late Biſhop of this Iſland, in a Letter to Mr. Cambden, at ſuch time as he was compoſing his moſt excellent Britannia. Our Iſland (ſaith he) for Cattel, for Fiſh, and for Corn, hath not only ſufficient for it ſelf, but ſendeth alſo good ſtore into other Countries. Now what Countries ſhould need this ſupply (England and Ireland being afore-hand with ſuch proviſion) except Scotland, or ſome members thereof, I ſee not.

Venerable Bede numbred in it 300 Families, and now it is furniſhed with 17 Pariſh Churches. The chief Towns are, 1. Balacuri. and 2. Ruſſin, or Caſtle-Town, the Seat of a Biſhop, who though he be under the Archbiſhop of York, yet never had any voice in the Engliſh Parliament. In this Iſland is the Hill of Sceaful, where on a clear day one may ſee England, Scotland, and Ireland: here alſo are bred the Soland Geeſe, of rotten Wood falling into the Water. This Iſland was taken from the Britains by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland. Afterwards the Norwegians ſeized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings hereof ruling over the Hebrides, and ſome part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 3d of Scotland, by a mixt title of Arms and purchaſe. After which times it was ſometime Engliſh ſometimes Scottiſh, as their fortunes varied; till in the end, and about the year 1340. William Montacute Earl of Salisbury, deſcended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and ſold it to the Lord Scrope, who being condemned of Treaſon, Henry the Fourth gave it Henry Piercy Earl of Northumberland; but he alſo proving falſe to his Soveraign, it was given to the Stanleys now Earls of Derby.

The Kings of Man of the Daniſh or Norwegian Race.

1065	1	Godred, the Son of Syrric.
1066	2	Fingal, Son of Godred.
1066	3	Godred II. Son of Harold.
1082	4	Lagnan, Eldeſt Son of Godred the ſecond.
1089	5	Donald, Son of Tado.
1098	6	Magnus, King of Norway.
1102	7	Olave, the third, Son of Godred.
1144	8	Godred III. Son of Olave.
1187	9	Reginald, baſe Son of Godred the third.
1226	10	Olave, the lawful Son of Godred the third.
1237	11	Harold, Son of Olave.

2243 12 Reginald II. Brother of Harold.
1252 13 Magnus II. Brother of Reginald.
1266 14 Magnus III. King of Norway, the laſt King of Man of the Daniſh or Norwegian Race.

The Kings and Lords of Man of the Engliſh Blood.

1395 2 William Lord Scrope, King of Man.
1399 3 Henry Earl of Northumberland, King of Man.
1403 4 William Lord Stanley, Lord of the Iſle of Man.
5 John Lord Stanley.
6 Thomas Lord Stanley.
7 Thomas Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1503 8 Thomas Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1521 9 Edward Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1572 10 Henry Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
1593 11 Ferdinando Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
12 William Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
13 James Lord Stanley Earl of Derby, Lord of the Iſle of Man, now living An. 1648. King in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civil power and juriſdiction over the Inhabitants under the Fiſe and Soveraignty of the Crown of England, together with the nomination of the Biſhop, whom he preſents unto the King for his Royal aſſent, then to the Archbiſhop of York for his conſecration. And this I take to be the reaſon why the Biſhop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honour, but ſuch as held immediately of the King himſelf; nor was it reaſon that they ſhould.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Iſland ſituate in the Iriſh Sea, over againſt Carnarvonſhire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow Straight, which they call the Monai. By the Britains themſelves, as by the Welch at this day, it was called Mon, from whence the Romans had their Monai: but being conquered by the Engliſh, it obtained the name of Angleſey, as one would ſay, the Iſland of the Engliſh-Men (eye in the Saxon language ſignifying an Iſland.) A place of ſuch a fair revenue to the Princes of it, that Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales being ſtripped of almoſt all the reſt of his Eſtates by King Edward the firſt, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per Annum for this Iſland only.

And to ſay truth, the Iſland is exceeding Fruitful both in Corn and Cattel: from whence the Welch are liberally ſtored with both: and therefore it is ſaid proverbially, Mon Mam Cymri, that Angleſey is the Mother of Wales. In length from Eaſt to Weſt, about 20 miles, and 17 in breadth. Containing in that compaſs 74 Pariſhes, divided into ſix hundreds, & hath in it only two Market Towns: that is to ſay, 1 Beaumaris, ſeated on a flat or mariſh ground, near the Menai, built by King Edward the firſt to ſecure his Conqueſt: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2 Newburg, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welch called Roſſur: in former times it had an Haven of ſome good receipt, but now choaked with ſand. The other places of moſt note are, 3 Aberfraw, a ſmall village now, but heretofore the ſeat Royal of the Kings of Wales, and 4ly, Holyhead, ſeated on a head-land or Promontory thruſting into the Seas, made holy (or thought ſo at leaſt) by the religious retirement of Saint Kuby, or Kibius, one of the Diſciples of St. Hilary of Poictiers; from whence by the Welchmen called Caer Cuby: of moſt note for the ordinary paſſage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Antiently this Iſland was the ſeat of the Druides, and brought with no ſmall difficulty under the power of the Romans, by Suetonius Paulinus: the people fighting in other parts of Britain for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Gods to boot: Being deſerted by the Romans with the reſt of Britain, it remained in the poſſeſſion of its own natural Princes, till the fatal period of that State, when added to the Crown of England by the puiſſance of King Edward the firſt, by whom made one of the ſhires of Wales as it ſtill continues.

Not far from Angleſey, ſomewhat inclining to the South, is the Iſle of Bardſey, by Ptolomy called Edri, by Pliny Adros, by the Welch Enlhy; extended towards the Eaſt with a rocky Promontory, but rich and fruitful towards the Weſt: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in the former times. Southwards from hence and over againſt St. Davids, are two other Iſlands, the one called Selame, plentiful of wild honey; the other named by the Welch Lymen, by the Engliſh Ramſey; thought to be the Limni of Ptolomy, the Silimnum of Pliny, but not elſe remarkable.

VI. THE ISLANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I muſt take them in my paſſage to the Iſles of Scilly. Of thoſe the firſt is Flat-Holm; for the flat and level; the 2. Stebolm, from the ſteep and craggy diſpoſition of it: both by the Welch called Echni, and both ſituate over againſt the County of Somerſet. More towards the opening of the Chanel, lyeth the Iſle of 3 Chaldey called by the Welchmen Inis Pir, of as ſmall note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Iſle of 4 Lundey, over againſt Devonſhire, the principal Iſland of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent paſturage, well ſtored with Conies, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good diſtance from any part of the land, in the midſt of the ſalt and brackiſh Ocean, and yet yieldeth many Springs of Freſh water for the uſe of the people; inhabiting for the moſt part in a Town of the ſame name with the Iſland. A place of very great ſtrength and ſafety; begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks: and having but one way of acceſs into it, and that ſo narrow that two men cannot go a breſt.

VII. The Iſles of SCILLY, in number 145, are ſituate over againſt the Weſtern Promontory of Cornwal, from which diſtant 24 miles; and lye round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Diſcovered firſt by the Silures, a Phœnician Colony in Spain, oppoſite againſt which they lie; thence called Silures by Solinus: much traded and reſorted to by the ſaid Phœnicians from the Iſle of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhauſtible Mines of Tinn, which they found amongſt them. A Trade ſo great and gainful to them that they held it a great point of State: κρύπτειν ἅπασι τὸν πλοῦν, to keep it as a ſecret from all the world, as we find in Strabo: who adds the ſtory of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, incountred in his voyage hither, by ſome Roman Veſſels; and ſplitting his ſhip on the next ſhore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; was rewarded for his honeſt care, and recompenced for the loſs of his ſhips and goods, out of the publick Treaſury. From this abundance of Tin, the Græcians when they came to know them, called them Caſſiterides: (Caſſiteros in that language ſignifying Tin) accordingly Herodotus, οὔτε νήσους οἶδα Κασσιτερίδας ἐούσας ἐκ τῶν ὁ κασσίτερος ἡμῖν φοιτᾷ, affirming that he knew not thoſe Iſlands called Caſſiterides, from whence Tin was brought. The richneſs of this commodity, the pleaſures of the place, and the Weſtern ſituation of them makes many of the Græcians call them Heſperides: miſtaking them for the Fortunate Iſlands. By Solinus they are called Silures; as before is ſaid, Sigdeles in the corrupt Copies of Antonius; inſulæ Sillinæ, by Severus Sulpitius: from whence we have the name of the Iſles of Scilly. The Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitful in Corn and Herbage, beſides the treaſures hid within well ſtored with Conies, Cranes, Swans, and moſt ſorts of wild Fowl. Ten of them more eſteemed than the reſt, are called by the names of 1 Armuth. 2 Agnes, 3 Sampſon, 4 Scilly, 5 Breſar, 6 Ruſco, 7 S. Hellens, 8 Arthur, 9 S. Maurice, and 10 S. Maries: Of which the moſt famous in the account of former times, was that of Scilly, as giving name unto the reſt; but in the preſent eſtimate S. Maries is accompted the chief of all: 8 miles in compaſs; fruitful of all neceſſaries, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle built by Queen Elizabeth; well manned and Garriſoned, for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongſt theſe Iſlands, capable of the greateſt Navies.

Theſe Iſlands firſt diſcovered by Hamilco a Carthaginian, ſent by that State to ſearch into the Weſt Coaſts of Europe, became of great fame afterwards both in Greece, & Italy; by reaſon of the Mines of Tinne ſpoken of before: So beneficial to the Romans, that they uſed to ſend hither their condemned Priſoners to work in the Mines; as the beſt ſervice to be done by their forfeited lives. And hither amongſt others, Juſtantius, a fierce Priſcillianiſt, for his factious and ſeditious carriage, was ſent by Maximus; ad Sillinam inſulam ultra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpitius hath it. After the Romans had forſaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and poſſeſſion of the Natives; from whom ſubdued, and added unto the Engliſh Crown by Athelſtane the eighth King of England. Now ordered for Civil matters, as a part of Cornwal; for military, by their own Captain, ſubordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that Country; and for the Tin-Trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwal, who by reaſon of their employment in theſe Mines have many priviledges and exemptions more than other Subjects: but of late limited and reſtrained by Act of Parliament.

VIII. The Iſle of WIGHT lieth over againſt Hampſhire, from which it ſeemeth to have been divided; the paſſage betwixt it and Hurſt-Caſtle on the oppoſite ſhore, being very narrow; and the name of it intimating ſome ſuch diviſion. For by the Britains it was antiently called Guith, which ſignifieth a breach or ſeparation, from whence the Engliſh have their Wight; the turning of Gu. to W. being familiar with the Saxons, and all other Dutch people: and from the ſame root probably the Romans had the name of Vectis, Vecht, Wight, and Guith, being words of near reſemblance, that we need not travel further for an Etymologie. The Iſland of an Oval form, 20 miles in length, and 12 miles broad about the midſt; from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the Eaſt & Weſt. Naturally Fenced about on all ſides, on the South eſpecially, where it looks toward France, on which ſide inacceſſible by reaſon of the ſteep and craggy Rocks, the whole length thereof; and not much leſs ſafe on the North-Weſt, where the remainder of the Rocks, (which they call the Shingels, and the Needles) not worn away either at or ſince the firſt ſeparation from the other ſhore, make the paſſage dangerous; except to ſingle Ships, and thoſe not unacquainted with the courſe of the Chanel. Towards the North-eaſt more flat and level, and therefore fortified with the two Caſtles of the Cows and Sandham. There is alſo the Caſtle of Yarmouth in the Weſt of the Iſland, and that of Garesbrook in the midſt but more towards the North) in which laſt there is ſaid to be Armour for 5000 men; and in each Village (of which here are 33, beſides many Market Towns) a piece of Ordnance. Yet do not all theſe Arms and Caſtles add ſo much to the ſtrength of it, as the natural courage of the People; warlike and ſtout, and trained up unto the poſtures of War from their very childhood.

The ſoil hereof abundantly anſwereth the pains of the Husbandman, ſo plentiful of Corn, and all the fruits of good paſturage, that they have not only enough for themſelves, but furniſh the markets of Southampton and Portſmouth but the laſt eſpecially) with the greateſt part of the Wheat, Fleſh, Cheeſe, and Butter, which is ſpent amongſt them. Inſomuch that the Souldiers of Portſmouth preſuming on the ſtrength of the Town, have been uſed to ſay, That if they had the Iſle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the world beſides. Their Sheep here of ſo fine a fleece, that the Wool hereof hath the ſecond eſteem next to that of Lemſter, (in the County of Hereford) and precedency of that of Cotſwold.

Their chief Towns, 1 Yarmouth, on the North Weſt of the Iſland, ſeated on a convenient Haven, which is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance to that of Rochel; and that Haven defended with a ſtrong Caſtle. 2 Brading, another Market-town. 3 Newton, an antient Burrough, and priviledged ſending Burgeſſes to the Engliſh Parliament. 4 Garesbrook, a large Town, and neighboured with an antient Caſtle. 5 Newport, now the chief of all the Iſle, called in the times paſt, Medena, afterwards Novus Burgus de Medena, at laſt Newport; ſeated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of leſſer burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by a civil and wealthy people.

The Iſland firſt ſubdued to the Romans by the valour of Veſpaſian, (afterwards Emperor of Rome) in the time of Claudius. Extorted from the Britains by Cerdick, King of the Weſt-Saxons, and by him given to Stuffa and Whitgar, two of that Nation, who had almoſt rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the laſt Country of the Saxons which received the Goſpel, and then upon compulſion too; forced to it by the power as well as the perſwaſion of Cedwalla the Weſt-Saxon King. Took from the Engliſh in the time of the Norman Conquerour, by William Fitz-Osborn Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the firſt Lord thereof. From whoſe Family, by the gift of Henry the ſecond, it paſſed to that of Redvars, or Rivers, (de Riparis) then Earl of Devonſhire: and on failing of that Houſe returned to the Crown in the Reign of Edward the firſt. Never ſo much ennobled as by Henry the ſixth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his Reign crowned him King of Wight, An. 1445. Which title ended with his life about two years after.

IX THANET, is a little Iſland in the North-Eaſt of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts with the Sea; into which it ſhooteth with a large Promontory called the North fore-land, the Cantium of the antient Writers: and towards the Weſt, ſevered from the main land of Kent by the River Stoure, which is here called Yenlade, but ſevered ſo, that by the benefit of a Cauſey and paſſage for the waters in convenient places, it is united to the Continent or main Land of Kent. The quality, ſite, and figure of it, take in theſe old Rhythms (for I dare hardly call them Verſes) extant not long ſince in a Window of the chief Church there, viz.

Inſula rotunda Thanatos, quam circuit unda,
Nobilis & munda, nulli eſt in orba ſecunda.

That is to ſay,
Thanet is round with circling waters bound,
A neat and noble ground, none like it to be found.

Called by Solinus, Athanatos, in ſome Copies Thanatos, from whence the Saxons had their Thanet. Famous, as in other things, ſo in theſe particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at, when they firſt came into Britain; the firſt Livery and Seiſin, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the improvident bounty of Vortiger, to whoſe aid called in; and the landing place of Auguſtine the Monk, when he brought the Goſpel to the Saxons. The whole about two miles in length,and four in breadth,was reckoned to contain in thoſe times, 600 Families; now very populous for the bigneſs,and plentiful of all commodities neceſſary, but of corn eſpecially. The people generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land; well skilled,as well in ſteering of a ſhip at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both induſtrious. Of moſt note in it, 1 Stonar, a Port-town, the uſual landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britains, who having vanquiſhed the Saxons in many battels,and finally driven them out of the Iſland, deſired to be here interred on a conceit, that his dead corps would fright them from landing any more upon theſe Coaſts. And this perhaps he did in imitation of Scipio African, who having had a Fortunate hand againſt thoſe of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Africk, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coaſts of Italy.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Iſland only at an high-water,when environed on all ſides with the Sea; at other times joined unto the Land,or of an eaſie paſſage from the one to the other: pulled by ſome tempeſt, or by the working of the Sea from the reſt of the Land: whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-Eaſt part of the Biſhoprick of Durham, over againſt the influx of the River Were. Rich in its inexhauſtible mines of Coal, and for that cauſe ſeldom without the company of foreign Merchants,yet not to have been here remembred,but that it hath been thought worthy by our Soveraign LordKing Charles, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, to confer the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Scropes and Spencers; the firſt in the third year of his Reign, An. 1627. the ſecond in the 18th, An. 1642.

XI. THE HOLY ISLAND lieth upon the Coaſt of Northumberland, not far from Berwick, ſtretched out in length from Eaſt to Weſt, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and of great ſafety,but more Famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Chriſtianity amongſt the Northumbers,made a Biſhops See, by S. Aidanus, one of the firſt Apoſtles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignity by that godly man, for the ſolitude and privacy of it; which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarn; but the Religious lives of ſo many pious Biſhops, Monks,and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy Iſland. The See continued there 353 years, that is to ſay, from the year 637, to 990, under 22 Biſhops, hence called Biſhops of Lindisfarn; then removed to Durham: the inſolencies of the Danes,(who then raged terribly on thoſe Coaſts)compelling them to abondon that Religious ſolitude.

Thus have we taken a ſurvey of the Britiſh Iſlands, and ſhewn by what means Ireland and all the leſſer Iſlands became united either to the Crown of England or Scotland; and thoſe two Kingdoms to each other joyned in the perſon of the ſame King, and the participation of his Favours, though different ſtill in Laws,and ſome forms of Government, as moſt of the Eſtates of Spain,at the preſent time. United alſo in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being ſwallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleaſed King James to own for his ſtile Imperial. And for a memory thereof, to cauſe a piece of Gold to be coined of 20 s. (ſince raiſed to 22 s.) which he called the Unity, ſtamped on the one ſide with his picture, and this Inſcription, JACOBUS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANIÆ FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other ſide with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, FACIAM EOS IN GENTEM UNAM. All we have now to do, is to lay down the names of thoſe puiſſant Princes,whom God hath raiſed to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602 1 James, the ſixth of that name, King of the Scots, Son of Mary Queen of Scots Daughter of James the fifth,the Son of James the Fourth,and of the Lady Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of Henry the ſeventh of England: which Margaret being after married to Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret alſo (the only child of her Parents) married to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lenox; by whom ſhe was made the mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King James the ſixth,by the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots. So that King James deſcending from the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the perſon of Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory; was the next heir to the Crown of England, and was accordingly with all joyful acclamations proclaimed and acknowledged King in the City of London, March 24. An. 1602. (according to the accompt of the Church of England) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nurſing Father of the Church, and a lover of Learning. He dyed at Theobalds, March 27. 1625. having reigned 23 years, and four days over.

1625 2 Charles, ſecond Son of King James, and of Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before)the 63d King in deſcent from Cerdick King of the Weſt-Saxons; the 45th King of England, in deſcent from Egbert; the 24th from the Norman Conqueror; the 64th Monarch of the Engliſh, and the ſecond Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his reign he married the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry the 4th, and Siſter to Lewis the 13th, French Kings; by whom bleſt with a Royal Iſſue of Sons and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revenues of theſe Britiſh Monarchs,we cannot put the eſtimate of them in a better way than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each ſeveral part; out of which Items the ſumma totalis of the whole both in power and treaſure, will be eaſily gathered.For though theſe Monarchs never had any occaſion, to muſter and unite the Forces of their ſeveral Kingdoms upon any one Action, yet by conſidering what they have been able to do divided; we may conclude of what they may do, if need be, being now united. And ſo we are to do in marſhalling the Arms of the Britiſh Monarchy, where are 1 Quarterly France and England, 2ly Scotland,3ly Ireland,the Fourth as the firſt. I ſhut up this diſcourſe of the Britiſh Empire, with thoſe words of Scripture (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QUÆ DEUS CONJUNXIT NEMO SEPARET.

BELGIUM.

Having purſued the Fortunes of the Roman Empire through the four Weſtern Dioceſes or Diviſions of it, wholly ſubdued to the command of that conquering State: let us next look on thoſe Countries which lay farther North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but conquered in part, or elſe were reckoned as the members of ſome greater Province. Of this laſt ſort was all that Tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded on Eaſt with Weſtphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the higher Germany; on the Weſt with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain; on the North with the River Ems, which parts it from Eaſt-Frieſeland; on the South with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-eaſt with the Dukedom of Lorrain.

By the Latines (eſpecially of theſe laſt times) it is called Belgium, from the Belgæ, the moſt potent people of all theſe parts; and ſometimes alſo Germania inferior or the Lower Germany, (in the ſame ſenſe as by the Engliſh it is called the Low-Countries and the Netherlands) from their low ſituation, and the conformity which they have with the Germans in Laws, Languages, Cuſtoms and Manners; ners. By ſome it hath been called by the aggregate name of the Seventeen Provinces, from the like number of ſeveral and diſtinct Eſtates united under the Command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which, though but one of the Seventeen Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands; the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings: and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reaſon of the great Trade and Traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe; or in reſpect that lying nearer than the reſt to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Country was under the command of many Princes, of which the Earls of Flanders were eſteemed moſt potent. And though this name continued alſo after the incorporating of moſt of theſe Provinces in the Houſe of Burgundy, at which time they were called the Eſtates of Flanders: yet ſince the falling off of Holland and the reſt of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath loſt this honour, the name of Flanders being now reſtrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name moſt current amongſt the Latines of this Age, yet I ſee little reaſon for it. For firſt, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Eſtates which are not now within the compaſs of theſe Belgick Provinces; that is to ſay, the Dukedoms of Lorrain, Berg, Juliers, and a great part of Cleve, the Biſhopricks of Triers, Mentz and Colen, and ſo much of the Kingdom of France as takes up all Picardy, with parts of Champagne and of France ſpecially ſo called. Secondly, Gallia Belgica extended ſomewhat farther yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Elſaſs, the whole County of Burgundy, and ſo much of Switzerland as lieth on the French ſide of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of Weſt-Frieſeland, Groening, Over-Yſſel, Zutphen, together with all North-Holland, and ſo much of Gelderland and Vtrecht as lieth on the farther ſide of the middle Chanel of the Rhene, were never accounted of as parts of either Belgium or of Gallia Belgica, (though now within the compaſs of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germany; clearly without the limits of the ancient Gaul, of which Body Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman eſtimate.

As for the Belgæ, from whence we have the names of Belgium and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themſelves within the Rhene, eſteemed by Cæſar to be the valianteſt of the Gallick Nations for theſe three reaſons. 1 They were the fartheſt from Provence, where the Roman Civilities and more affable courſe of life was embraced. 2 They dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and ſo wanted thoſe allurements to Effeminacy which are in Countries of traffick. 3 They bordered on the Germans, a warlike Nation, with whom they were continually in Arms. This people ſeeing the proſperous ſucceſs of Cæſar's Victories in Gaul, joined together in a League, and muſtered an Army of 269000 Fighting men againſt him. But ſeeing they could not draw him out of his Fortreſſes, they retired again, and that in ſuch diſorder, that three Legions (for no more was Cæſar's Army) put them to an infinite ſlaughter. After this, Cæſar, fighting againſt them ſeverally, overcame them all; and made their Country, and the Country of the bordering Germans, whom he alſo vanquiſhed, ſubject unto the Roman Empire. By Conſtantine the Great it was made part of the Dioceſs of Gallia, and by him caſt into five Provinces: that is to ſay, 1 Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorrain and the Land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Triers; 2 Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardy, and the Country of Cambray, with parts of Champagne and France ſpecial, of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3 Germania Prima, comprehending Alſatia, part of the Palatinate, and the Biſhoprick of Mentz, the Metropolitan City of that Province; 4 Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Gelderland, Vtrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flanders, Hainault, Namur, Luxemburg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen, which laſt was honoured with the title of Metropolitan; 5 Maxima Sequanorum, ſo called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundy, and ſo much of Switzerland as lieth on the French ſide of the Rhene, of which Beſancon was the Mother-City. But at this time none of the Provinces above ſpecified are comprehended under the accompt and name of Belgium, but ſuch as were poſſeſſed in theſe later Ages by the Houſe of Burgundy; ſome petty Seigniouries and Eſtates which properly do belong to Germany being added to it: that is to ſay, the Lordſhip of Weſt-Frieſeland, given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald; the Earldom of Zutphen, united unto that of Gelders by Earl Otho of Naſſau; and finally the Eſtate of Groening Over-Yſſell, and ſome part of Vtrecht, by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion we do now conſider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compaſs 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles; and is ſituated in the Northern temperate Zone, under the 7. 8. and 9. Climates: the longeſt day in the midſt of the 7th Climate, where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 9th Climate increaſed to 16 hours three quarters, or near 17 hours. The Air in theſe later days is grown more wholeſom than formerly; partly by the wonderful increaſe of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible induſtry of the people, who, by draining the Mariſhes, and converting the ſtanding waters into running Streams have purged the Air of many groſs and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence uſually ariſe in times foregoing.

The Country is very populous, containing well-nigh three millions of ſouls; the men being for the moſt part well-proportioned, great lovers of our Engliſh Beer, unmindful both of good turns and injuries, of good wit for inventing, and of a moſt indefatigable induſtry for perfecting the rareſt Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as alſo for Arras-hangings, Dornix Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariner's Compaſs. They reſtored Muſick, and found out divers Muſical Inſtruments, being naturally good Muſicians, & generally ſo given unto it, and ſo perfect in it, that therefore (till the Art of Muſick grew more common) there were not many Great-Mens houſes which had not Muſicians to teach their Children. To them belongeth alſo the invention of Chariots, the laying on of Colours with Oyl, the working of Pictures in Glaſs, and the making of Worſteds, Seyes and Tapeſtries, the making of which and other Stuffs, being driven out of their Country by the Duke of Alva, they firſt taught the Engliſh. The Women generally are of good complection, well-proportioned, eſpecially in the Leg and Foot, honourers of Vertue, active, and familiar. Both within doors, and without they govern all: which, conſidering the natural deſire of Women to bear rule, maketh them too imperious and burthenſom.

They uſe for the moſt part the German and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoining to France, that is to ſay, Luxemburg, Namur, Artois, Hainault, and ſome parts of Flanders and Brabant, they uſe the French; but the ſame very corruptly and imperfectly, by reaſon of that mixture which it hath of the Dutch or German; yet ſo, that one may eaſily diſcern thoſe people to be French originally, or ſome remainder of the old Gauls, maſtered by the French, but not rooted out: from their Language or firſt Original called to this day by the name of Wallons, the Germans uſually changing G into W, as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and in the like caſes Wales for Galles, I know there is another Etymology of the name of Wallons; ſome making them to be of the Burgundian race, who, at their firſt paſſing over the Rhene, enquired their way of the Countrey-people in theſe words, Ou allons, i.e. Whither go we? which being oft repeated by them, occaſioned them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtleſs, but of no ſolidity, nor to be farther honoured with a confutation.

The Country in thoſe parts which lie towards Germany, eſpecially on the South-eaſt bordering upon Cleveland and Lorrain, is ſomewhat ſwelled with Hills and over-ſhaded with Woods, the relicks of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof: But towards the Weſt and North, where it joins to the Sea, it is plain and level, full of Flats and Mariſhes, affording very little Corn, but abounding in Paſturage, which yields a great increaſe of Butter and Cheeſe, good ſtore of Beeves, and Horſes of more than ordinary bigneſs. By reaſon of which low and level ſituation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troubleſom and unruly Sea, it hath been formerly much ſubject to Inundations; inſomuch as in the time of King Henry the 2. Flanders was ſo overflown, that many thouſands of people, whoſe dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new ſeats, and were by that King firſt placed in Yorkſhire, and then removed to Pembrokſhire. Since that, it hath in Zeland ſwallowed eight of the Iſlands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages: many of whoſe Churches and ſtrong buildings are at a dead low water to be ſeen. And as once Ovid ſaid of Helice and Buris, Cities of Achaia, ſo may we of theſe;

Invenies ſub aquis, & adhuc oſtendere nautæ
Inclinata ſolent cum mœnibus oppida verſis:

That is to ſay,

The waters hide them, and the Sailors ſhow
The ruin'd Walls and Steeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into their Countries are Linen, Scarlets, Worſted, Seyes, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffs; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheeſe, &c. Of which, excepting Cheeſe and Butter, there is nothing of the natural growth of the Country: the reſt being Manufactures which they make out of ſuch materials as they fetch out of Foreign Regions. But the Commodity which yieldeth them moſt benefit is that of Fiſh, not caught upon their own Coaſt neither, but either in the Northern Seas or the coaſt of England: the very Herings which they caſt on the ſhoars of England (to the no ſmall diſhonour of the Engliſh Nation) bringing them a Revenue (beſides what is purſed up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Cod-fiſh, which they catch on the Coaſts of Frieſeland, amounting to 150000 l. ſterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the people living till of late in perpetual peace. The chief of thoſe whoſe names have been tranſmitted to us are, 1. Civilis, a Prince of the Batavians, for ſubtilty of wit compared to Hannibal and Sertorius; of which in the long War againſt the Romans, in the time of Veſpaſian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperour of Germany. 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople. 4. Philip the Good, and 5. Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundy. 6. Charles the Fifth Emperour and King of Spain: And of late times the Princes of the Houſe of Naſſau and Orange, tranſplanted hither in the Regency of Maximilian out of higher Germany. And, to ſay truth, their Genius doth not lie ſo much for Land-ſervice as it doth for the Seas; in which they have been very Famous, and not leſs fortunate. For of this Nation was Oliver Vander Noordt, the Fourth that compaſſed the world; Jacob le Maire, the firſt Diſcoverer of the Streight or Fretum which now beareth his name, beſides divers others. And generally the people are ſo expert in Navigation, (eſpecially thoſe bordering on or near the Coaſts) that they ſeem born for and to the Seas: many of which, being born on Ship-board and bred up at Sea, know no other Country, and brook the Land as ill as a Fiſh doth the dry ground. Which natural inclination to it, and the neceſſity they have of employing themſelves that way, (the Country not being otherwiſe able to provide ſuſtenance for thoſe multitudes of men which it doth abound with) hath ſo exceedingly increaſed their Shipping, that it is thought that they are maſters of more Veſſels of all ſorts, taking one with another, than almoſt all the reſt of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Eraſmus, the great reſtorer of Learning in theſe parts of the World. 2. Juſtus Lipſius, as eminent a reviver of the Latin Elegancies. 3. Joſeph Scaliger, the Son of Julius, ὁ περὶ πᾶν πεπαιδευμένος, a man not to be fellowed in all parts of Learning; but of equal Arrogance. 4. Rudulphos Agricola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Douſa, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Caſſander, 11. Dr. James Hermin. 12. Gerard Voſſius, eminent Divines. And 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but ſeaſoned with more modeſty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Janſenius, and 15. Pamelius, two right Learned Men, but of the Pontifician party.

As much unfortunate it hath been in ſome wretched Hereticks, in none more than in David George, born at Delf in Holland, who called himſelf Chriſt and King immortal. Flying from Delf to Baſil with his wife and children, An. 1545. he there taught his Doctrine, viz. 1. That the Law and Goſpel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to ſave ſuch as received it. 2. That he was the true Chriſt and Meſſias. 3. That he was not to reſtore the Houſe of Iſrael by Death or Tribulation, but by Love and Grace of the Spirit. 4. That he had been till that preſent kept in a place unknown to all the Saints. And that this laſt Point might obtain the eaſier credit amongſt the people, he bound his Diſciples, firſt, to conceal his Name; ſecondly, not to reveal of what Condition he had been; thirdly, not to diſcover the Articles of the Doctrine to any man in Baſil without his permiſſion. But for all this great care of his, within three days after his death (which happened in the year 1556.) his Doctrines, being made known, were condemned by the Senate and Church of Baſil, his Goods confiſcate, and his Bones moſt deſervedly taken up and burnt. Of ſomewhat leſs impiety, but of no leſs phrenſie, was 2. John of Leyden, (another Town of the ſame Province) who from a Tailor was made King of the Anabaptiſts, when they had raged in Munſter, and there we ſhall hear farther of him. 3. Cappinus, and 4. Quintinus, both Flemmings, the joint Authors and Co-founders of the Sect of the Libertines.

The Chriſtian Religion was planted in ſeveral Provinces by ſeveral men: in Holland, Zeland, and Frieſland, by Wilibrode an Engliſh man, the firſt Biſhop of Vtrecht, whence by degrees it gained on the reſt of the Country; theſe being the firſt people of the Franks, or Germans, converted totally to the Goſpel. In tract of time it fell from the Primitive Purity, participating of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they deſired to reclaim themſelves, they were therein oppoſed by the King of Spain and his Miniſters. Hence the beginning of the Troubles; enlarged afterwards on pretence of Civil rights invaded and infringed by the Spaniard's affecting a more abſolute Dominion over them than their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Country doth ſtand divided betwixt the States and the Spaniards, ſo ſtands it with Religion alſo: the Spaniard permiting only the Religion of the Church of Rome within the Provinces and Eſtates under his command; and the States General indulging the free uſe of all Religions (even the very Jews) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Foreſts of this Country are, 1. That of Ardenne, which in the time of Cæſar extended from the banks of Rhene as far as Tournay one way, and Champagne another way, and was in compaſs 500 miles in the leaſt accompt. In which circuit there were comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxemberg, Luyckland, Namur, and Hainault; together with the Land of Gulick in the higher Germany, as ſome Writers ſay. At this time, though the greateſt of all Gaul Belgick, it reacheth but from Liege, to Theonville; 30 leagues in length: and yet not all that Woodlands neither, though within the Verge of the Foreſt; there being much Tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground, the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, ſituate almoſt in the midſt of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Nonuen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the firſt extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up cloſe to Ypres. 4. Pondsberg, in the Confines of Hainault and Flanders, near unto Mont-Gerard. All theſe were parts of this great Foreſt of Ardenne, which once overſhadowed all this Country. 5. Normault, in Hainault, in which is much Char-coal made; ſuppoſed for that reaſon to be a part of that Foreſt which the old French called La Charboniere. 6. Echterwald, in Gelderland, near Arnham, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Rhene, which ariſeth out of two Springs in the Lepontian Alpes amongſt the Griſons, united into one ſtream near Chur: thence paſſing by the Cities of Conſtance, Baſil, Spire, Wormes, Mentz, and Colen, it is again divided about the confines of Gelderland into four Branches or Chanels. Of which the firſt is called the Wael, which runing through Gelderland by Nimmegen and Bommel, loſeth it ſelf in the Maes. The ſecond, which keeps the name of the Rhene, paſſeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted chanel to Vtrecht, and ſo through Holland unto Leyden. The third, called the Leck, taketh his courſe through the Provinces of Vtrecht and Holland, and ſo into the Sea betwixt Dort and Rotterdam. And the fourth, called the Yſſel, which paſſing by the Towns of Zutphen and Deventer betwixt Gelderland and Over-Yſſel, emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean near Amſterdam. And of theſe Branches I have given the exacter reckoning, partly becauſe the courſe of that famous River is otherwiſe not eaſie to be obſerved; and partly becauſe the knowledge of a great part of theſe Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the courſe of this River; it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leyden) which anciently divided Germany from Gallia Belgica. A River of ſuch reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belgæ uſed to caſt the children which they ſuſpected to be illegitimate: For were they born of lawful bed, they floated on the waters; if of unlawful, they ſank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding ſaith, Naſcentes explorat gurgite Rhenus. But the great ſearcher of Antiquities, Verſtegan, is of opinion, that thereby they only inured their Children to hardneſs, and made trial of their ſtrength; Adultery being rarely found among them, and ſo theſe kinds of experiments needleſs. 2. Moſa, the Maes, as the Dutch or the Meuſe, (as the French men call it, which ſpringing from the Mountains of Vange in the confines of Lorrain, and not far from the Fountains of the Seine and Marne, runneth through Lorrain, Luxemburg, Luyckland and Namur; from thence by Ruremond and Venlo, two known Towns of Gelderland, where turning towards the Weſt, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence paſſing by Maeſtricht, divides Brabant from Holland, watering the Town of Grave in the one, and of Dort in the other; and falleth into the Sea not far from Brill with ſo great a violence, that the waters of it for a long ſpace do continue freſh. 3. Ems, in Latine called Amiſius, dividing the two Frieſelands; of which more in Germany. 4. Scaldis, which ariſing in Picardy, and running through Artois, and between Hainault and Brabant, meeteth with the Sea a little above Antwerp. And 5. Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Beſides which Rivers, and others of inferiour note, (which we ſhall meet withal in their proper places) here are great ſtore of Lakes, Pools and Mariſhes, which do both fortifie the Country, and provide it of Fiſh: beſides many navigable Chanels, made by the hand of man from one River to another, for the convenience of paſſage, and the more eaſie tranſport of their Commodities.

The Shoar of this Country hath been much worn out by the Sea, eſpecially that of the Iſlands of Zeland, and ſuch as lie ſcattered about Holland; where they are defended with Banks and Ramperts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. Theſe Banks are about ten ells in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom. They are made of the hardeſt clay that may be gotten; in the inſide ſtuffed with wood and ſtone, on the outſide covered with mats ſtrong and thick made.

The former Inhabitants were divers, and were as differently diſpoſed of in their ſeveral Countries. That is to ſay, the Atrebates in the greateſt part of Artois; the Morini in the reſt of Artois, and thoſe parts of Flanders which make up the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervii in Hainault, Namur, and Flanders Gallicant; the Batavi in South-Holland, and ſo much of Gelderland and Vtrecht as lies on the South-ſide of the Rhene, with the Menapii intermixt in the Dukedom of Gelders; the Mattiaci in the Iſles of Zeland; the Aduatici and part of the Tongri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with parts of the Treviri in Luxemburg, and of the Eburones in Luyckland and the Dukedom of Limbourg: all which were Belgick Nations, and therefore anciently accompted of as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern ſide of the middle Chanel of the Rhene there dwelt the Friſii minores in North-Holland, and ſo much of the Diſtrict of Vtrecht as lies on the farther ſide of that chanel; the Friſii majores in Weſt-Frieſland and the State of Groning; ſome parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zutphen and the reſt of Gelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-Yſſel: all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Thoſe which paſſed under the accompt and name of Belgæ being ſubdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation, by the valour and good fortune of Julius Cæſar, continued ſubject to the Romans, without any notable diſturbance unto their affairs but the Rebellion raiſed againſt them by Civilis Prince of the Batavians in the time of Veſpaſian. In the declining of the Empire they were poſſeſſed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz or Oſtenreich, united by Childerick the third to the reſt of France, and made a member of that Kingdom; as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. In the diviſion of whoſe Empire amongſt his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the reſidue of theſe Countries on this ſide of the Rhene made up a ſpecial part of the Kingdom of Lorrain. Thoſe on the farther ſide of the middle Chanel of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vaſt Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the diviſion of the ſpoil ſpoken of before fell to the ſhare of Lewis ſirnamed the Ancient, the firſt King of Germany, and after his deceaſe to his Succeſſours in that Eſtate, whether Kings or Emperours. And ſo we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings, of France, Lorraign, and Germany; by what means ſubdivided into leſſer parcels, (no fewer than nineteen in all) we ſhall ſee anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French Conqueſts in the reſt of Gallia, there ſtarted up in Belgica two great Eſtates, founded by Auberon, Regnault and Ranchaire, Sons of Clodion, the ſecond King of the French; who being diſherited of their Father's Kingdom by Merove Maſter of his Horſe, to whoſe Tuition and Guardianſhip they had been committed, betook themſelves to the moſt defenſible places of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, and the Countries on the banks of the River Moſelle; where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Moſelle we ſhall ſpeak elſewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders and ſome part of Brabant, together with all Hainault, Namur, Limburg, Luxemburg, and the Dukedom of Bouillon. Grown to this greatneſs by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer Conqueſts, and the diſmembring of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and truſting too much to that greatneſs, they drew upon themſelves the jealouſie of thoſe mightier Princes; occaſioning Clotaire the ſecond to give their Country unto Dagobert his eldeſt Son, then King of Metz, whom he furniſhed with convenient Forces for the conqueſt of it; Brunulph, the then Prince hereof, being by him diſcomfited and ſlain in Battel. By Sigebert, who ſucceeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainault is taken out of it, and given to Albert, one of the youngeſt Sons of Brunulph. By Dagobert himſelf, ſucceeding in the Realm of France, (and whilest he lived ſole King of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to theſe Princes, were diſmembred from it, and laid unto two new Eſtates of his own erecting. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great Houſe, or to comply with the ill Cuſtoms of thoſe times, the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the ſame time alſo, for the portion of ſome other of the younger Brethren. The reſt of the Eſtate, with the Title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldeſt Son: whoſe poſterity, notwithſtanding this great diminution, grew to ſuch eſteem, that Judith, the Widow of Buin, and Siſter of Boſon, Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit Wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, by whom (the more to honour his Family) the ſaid Boſon was created King of Arles and Burgundy. During the Empire of Otho the firſt, the Earldom of Luxemburg was divided from it, and given to Sigefride, one of the younger Sons of Ricuine the preceeding Prince; and ſo perhaps was Limbourg alſo for another of them. The reſt remained to Godfrey the eldeſt Son, who by Matilda, a Daughter to Otho the ſecond, was Father of another Godfrey, who ſucceeded after Charles and Otho, the third Duke of Lorrain: that Dukedom being ever ſince enjoyed by the Houſe of Ardenne, and there we ſhall hear farther of it. This ſaid, and ſo much of the Story opened as concerns the general, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium, divided at the preſent into ſeventeen Provinces, beſides the two great Biſhopricks of Liege and Cambray, which being always under the protection of the Belgick Princes, partakers of their fortunes, either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their Eſtates, ſhall have their turn in the deſcription of theſe Countries, divided generally

- 2 Biſhopricks,
  - 1 Liege or Luyck,
  - 2 Cambray.
- 4 Dukedoms,
  - 1 Limbourg, 2 Luxemburg,
  - 3 Gelderland, 4 Brabant.
- 1 Marquiſate, viz. of the Holy Empire.
- 7 Earldoms,
  - 1 Flanders, 2 Artois,
  - 3 Hainault, 4 Namur,
  - 5 Zutphen, 6 Holland, 7 Zeland.
- 5 Baronies,
  - 1 Weſt-Frieſeland,
  - 2 Utrecht, 3 Over-Yſel,
  - 4 Machlin, 5 Groening.

Of theſe nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artois; the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown, but ſeldom did deſcend ſo low as to do their Homage, quitted at laſt to Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, and his Succeſſors, by King Henry the ſecond of France, in the Treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The reſt were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germany, and Regent of thoſe Countries for his Son Philip, (who had a purpoſe to ſubject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundy. But neither ſince, nor before that time, would the Princes of the Houſe of Burgundy acknowledge any ſuch ſubjection, but governed theſe Eſtates as abſolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or Subordination to the Emperour or Imperial Officers; never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there impoſed, nor holding themſelves bound by any Conſtitutions which were made therein. So that theſe ſeveral Relations being out of uſe, we muſt behold it at this time as it ſtands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: beginning firſt with thoſe Provinces which belong to the Spaniard, the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein firſt with Flanders, as of moſt eſteem.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

THeſe two I have thought fit to join together, becauſe at firſt but one Eſtate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or ſix Deſcents again united, and have ſo continued ever ſince.

1. FLANDERS is bounded on the Eaſt with Hainault and Brabant, on the Weſt with the Engliſh or German Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland and a branch of the Scheld, and on the South with part of Picardy in France, interpoſing betwixt Calice and Greveling. So called, as ſome ſay, à Flando, becauſe it lieth open to the winds; as others ſay, from Flandbert, the Son of Bleſinda, Daughter of Clodion, the ſecond King of the French. Some fetch it from a Town of this name, ſituate in that part of the Country where now Ardenburg ſtands; ſo long ſince ruined, that very few except themſelves could ever hear of it: and others (which I think moſt probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the ſecond, the firſt who governed in theſe parts by the name of Foreſter.

The Soil is indifferently fruitful in Corn and Paſture; the Air healthful, temperate and pleaſant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compaſs above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) and 1154 Villages, which ſtand ſo thick, (as needs they muſt in ſo narrow a compaſs) that the Spaniards, at their firſt coming in with King Philip the ſecond, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into 1 Imperialem, 2 Gallicam, and 3 Teutonicam; or 1 Flanders Imperial, 2 Flanders Gallicant, and 3 Flanders Flammengant.

1 FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greateſt of the three, is bounded on the Eaſt with Imperial Flanders and the River Scheld on the Weſt with the Engliſh Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland, and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallicant. The chief Towns of it, 1 Caunt, in Latine called Gandavum, ſeven miles in compaſs, but taking in the Suburbs, which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at leaſt. One of the greateſt Cities of Europe for extent of ground, but not ſo populous as many of a leſs capacity; there being much waſte ground even within the Walls. Commodiouſly ſeated on the banks of the Scheld and the Ley, both which run through it, and make in it 26 Iſlands, joined together with 98 Bridges: and had not her many Seditions ruinated her Beauties, ſhe might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaſter, commonly called John of Gaunt, and Charles the fifth Emperour, and King of Spain: which laſt, to reſtrain the people from their old Seditions, which had been very troubleſom to his Predeceſſors, (the Gauntois taking on them many times to rule and over rule their Princes) built a ſtrong Citadel in the place where ſtood the Abby of Saint Bavons. For Churches, Monaſteries, and other places of Devotion, there were numbred in it 55, all of them anſwerable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private Buildings being alſo very ſtately, if not majeſtical. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often Seditions of this people drawing upon themſelves the vengeance of their angred Prince; and their Wealth much empaired by the long Wars, and the diverſion of their Trading by the Hollanders, who command the Seas. 2 Bruges, or Brugge, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of ſuch Wealth, and the people in thoſe times ſo willing to ſhew it, that Queen Joan, the Wife of Philip the Fair, having been there, and marked the pomp of the Women, complained that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the Walls, wonderfully well peopled; the Buildings fair & ſumptuous, (amongſt which 60 Churches and Religious houſes) the Streets large and ſtraight, and a ſpacious Market-place, from which the 6 principal Streets of the City do paſs directly on to as many Gates, which is very pleaſant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port nor River, as before was ſaid, yet was it ancienly of ſo great Trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-Towns of Chriſtendom; flouriſhing chiefly by the benefit of the Engliſh Cloth, and ſenſibly decaying when the Engliſh Traffick was removed hence to Antwerp. It was called by Earl Baldwin, An. 890, is diſtant three leagues from the Sea, and ſeated on a fair and deep Chanel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoining Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial Chanels are in theſe Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3 Ypres, a Town ſeated very ſtrongly, and almoſt impregnable, on a ſmall River ſo named: a reaſonable rich Town, and well built, though moſt of the Houſes be of Timber, very well ſerv'd with Water, convey'd into every houſe almoſt in leaden Pipes, of which there is ſo great a number, that the Foundations of it ſeem to be laid in Lead. 4 Bourbourg, a fine ſtrong Town, but little pertaining to the French King, in the right of the houſe of Bourbon. 5 Comines, on the River Lis or Ley, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the Birth-place of Philip de Comines, that notable States-man and Hiſtorian. 6 Courtray, on the ſame River of Ley, one of the ancienteſt Towns in Flanders, yet ſtill continueth, well built, of very great ſtrength both by Art and Nature, famous for a great Overthrow given the French, Anno 1301, for which the Town was called of long time the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7 Ardenburg, (called in times paſt Rodemburg) a pretty Town, enriched every year with a great Horſe-fair every June, and beautified with one of the goodlieſt Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part hereof which properly is called Flanders; that name being firſt given to the parts hereunto adjoining, as ſome conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the reſt of the Country. 8 Biervliet, both a Town and Iſland, and furniſhed with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the ſalting of Herrings was here firſt invented by one William Bukeleme, who died An. 1397. 9 Winocksberg, ſo called of a goodly Abby built upon an Hill in the honour of St Winock an Engliſh man of an holy life; ſacked by the French, An. 1538, but ſince re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10 Greveling, on the Sea-ſide, which, ſince the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the ſtrongeſt Town in the Low-Countries. 11 Oudenard, ſeated on the Scheld, a fair ſtrong Town, and of very great Traffick, eſpecially for Tapeſtry and the fineſt Linens, which are here made: the Birth-place of Margaret, Dutcheſs of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, that renowned Souldier.

The principal Ports of Flanders, being four in number, are all of them ſeated in this part. 1 Dunkerck, a ſmall, but ſafe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Greveling alſo) in the right of the Houſe of Vendoſme; but ſtrongly garriſoned by the Spaniard, even in times of Peace, becauſe of the importance of their ſituation both by Sea and Land. Moſt memorable in theſe days, for that the people of it in the times of War ſo infeſted the Seas. 2 Scluys, ſeated at the mouth of the Chanel of Bruges, beautified with a very fair Haven, able to contain 500 good Ships; and is now ſubject to the States, with whoſe ſafety it could not well ſtand to let the Spaniards enjoy any ſafe & large Harbours ſo near unto them. Over againſt it lieth the Iſle of Caſſandt, (famous for the birth of George Caſſander, a moderate and learned Papiſt) formerly as big again as it is at the preſent, having then a fair Town in it, and many rich Villages; of which there is but one remaining, (of the ſame name with the Iſland) the reſt all ſwallowed by the Sea. 3 Newport, a pretty Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built on a well-frequented Haven, but not very ſafe, and therefore not much uſed by the men of War, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunkerck. Near to this Town, Anno 1603, was fought the Field-battel betwixt the Archduke Albert and the States; the Victory, next under God, being gotten for the States by the valour of the Engliſh, and the excellent Conduct of the Veres. 4 Oſtend, not walled till the Low-country Wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finiſhed till the Arch-duke ſate down before it: inſomuch as the Arch-dutcheſs Iſabel is ſaid to have ſworn, that ſhe would not ſhift her Smock till the Town were taken: who, had ſhe kept that raſh Oath, had been very lowſie; the Town (then garriſoned with Engliſh) holding out againſt the ſaid Arch-duke a Siege of three years and as many months.

2. IMPERIAL FLANDERS, ſo called, becauſe it was long under the obedience of Emperours, is ſevered from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was ſometimes called Bracant, of a Caſtle of that name, deſtroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire, Earl of Flanders: and is now called the County of Aloſt, from the chief Town thereof ſo named; the Juriſdiction whereof, containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the Walls of Gaunt and the Gates of Oudenard. The Town is ſtrong, and indifferently fair, ſituate on the River Dender, moſt Famous in theſe times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulſt, a walled Town, and the chief of the four Towns in the County of Waes; the other three being, 3. Axele. 4. Mouchant. 5. Aſſeneds; of which little memorable, but that they were all taken from the Empire by the ſaid Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the Fourth. 6. Dendermond, ſituate at the mouth of the Dender where it entreth into the Scheld; a ſtrong Town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fuſtians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A diſtinct Seignioury of it ſelf, with many rich Villages belonging to it; incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Marriage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which houſe it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld: Famous in former time for an antient Caſtle, in which were kept the Monuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times for being the Birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Coſmographer. 8. Mont-Gerhard, called by the French Grandmount, a fine and pleaſant Town ſeated on the Dender. Which three laſt Towns, together with Bornhem, a Fair large Village, having ſome Juriſdiction on the parts adjoining, made up that Eſtate which was called the Proper or Domaine of Flanders, becauſe not holden of the Empire or the Kings of France, but in the Soveraignty alone of the Earls hereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, ſo called from the French language there ſpoken, lieth on the South of Flanders Flammengant; having Hainault on the Eaſt, Artois on the Weſt, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Liſle, in Latine Inſula, ſo called from its Iſland-like ſituation, among Ponds, Pools, Mariſhes, dried up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barbu, who built the Town, Anno 1007, which afterwards was called by Baldwin de Liſle, his Son (born in this Town, and hence ſo named) Anno 1066. The Town made rich by Manufactures and reſort of Merchants, accompted the beſt Town of Traffick, next Amſterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be ſeen the Ruines of an ancient Caſtle called Brug, the Seat or Manor-houſe of the ancient Foreſters, who had the Government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Doway, (Duarum in Latine) a fair and ſtrong Town ſeated on the Scharp, having many Fountains, good Buildings, and a great number of Churches; made an Univerſity by King Philip the ſecond of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or Colledge for Engliſh Fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleaſant Town, and well traded for the making of Serges; which, with the other two, make up the three Eſtates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled Town, but of very great Trading; there being yearly 25000 pieces of Cloth ſent hence to Italy, and thence to Conſtantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty and ſtrong Town, ſeated on the Scheld, well built, and full of ſtately and magnificent Churches and Religious Houſes and anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopal. A Town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puiſſant Prince; taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, An. 1513. to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Ducats for their preſent Ranſome; reſtored by him unto the French, An. 1518. for the ſum of 600000 Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who reſtored it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long diſmembred; but ſo that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Seignioury of Tourneſis, having a goodly Juriſdiction over the Country round about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Country of Tourneſis, pleaſantly ſeated on the Scharp; in which is one of the richeſt Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbot thereof having the temporal and ſpiritual Juriſdiction over it and the parts about it. And ſo much for the Corography of the Earldom of Flanders, inhabited by the Nervii and Morini in the time of Cæſar.

2. ARTOIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Flanders Gallicant and the Country of Cambray, on the South and Weſt with Picardy, on the North with Flanders Flammengant and the River Lis. The name is derived from the Atrebates, the old Inhabitants hereof: the Air exceeding temperate, and the Soil ſo Fruitful, that it ſerveth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the Weſt part hereof towards France lieth the Earldom of S. Paul, ſo called from the chief Town thereof; a goodly Seignioury, and of great Juriſdiction and Revenue, containing, beſides many Villages, the good Town of Pern, a walled Town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were lineally derived from Walleran, brother of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany and Earl of Luxemburg; the laſt of which was Lewis of Luxemburg, made Conſtable of France by King Lewis the eleventh, with whom, as alſo with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he plaid ſo many croſs tricks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealouſie of one another, he was at laſt by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whoſe death this goodly Seignioury fell to the Houſe of Vendoſme in France, by the Marriage of Francis Earl of Vendoſme with Mary the Daughter of this Lewis, to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French King's; the Heirs-males being made uncapable of Succeſſion in it by the Attainder and Confiſcation of the ſaid laſt Earl. By means whereof the Houſe of Vendoſme was intituled to many fair Eſtates in Artois, Flanders, Hainault, and much good Lands in France, which they were poſſeſſed of; Francis the 2. Son of that Francis, and Francis the only Son of this, being intituled, whilſt they lived, Earl of S. Paul, and Dukes of Tutteville.

The Arms of theſe Earls were Argent, a Lion Gules armed and crowned Or, his tail forked of the ſecond.

As for the reſidue of Artois, the Towns of moſt importance in it are, 1. Arras, in Latine Atrebatum civitas, the chief City of the Atrebates the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar, and ſtill the chief City of this Province; a large, populous and well-fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopal, and ſtocked with an induſtrious people, the firſt makers of the Cloth of Arras, which took name from hence: divided into two diſtinct Towns, both of them walled, and called by two ſeveral names; the leſſer called La Citte, ſubject to the Biſhop, beautified with a Fair and Stately Cathedral Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manuſcripts; the leſſer called La Ville, ſubject to the Prince, having large Streets, and a rich Monaſtery of the yearly Revenue of 20000 crowns. By Ptolemy it is called Regiacum, ſeated within a bow-ſhot of the River Scarp, and heretofore the Metropolitan Town of Flanders, till Artois was diſmembred from it; ſince which time the chief City of this Province, as before is ſaid. 2 S. Omar, a fair Town, and well peopled, ſeated upon the River Aa, ſome eight Dutch miles from the Ocean; ſo called from S. Omar, or Audomarus, Biſhop of the Morini, who built a Monaſtery in this place, from which grew the Town, the ſecond of eſteem and rank in all the Country. Near to it is a goodly Lake of freſh water, in which are many little Iſlands affording good Paſturage for Cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by faſtning a Cord unto the buſhes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of Fiſhes, who hid themſelves there for ſhelter againſt the Weather. 3. Bethune, a ſtrong Town; and ſeated amongſt excellent Paſtures, of which the people make great plenty of the beſt Cheeſe: which, with the Territory hereof, fell to Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Daniel the Lord of this Town, honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldeſt Son, who from this place had the name of Robert de Bethune. 4. Ayre, on the Lis, a ſtrong Town, with a Caſtle of great Antiquity. 5. Bapaulme, a little, but well Fortified Town; and yet more ſtrong, becauſe it cannot be beſieged for want of freſh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwalled Town, but Fenced with a very ſtrong Caſtle, beſieged by the French, Anno 1554. but being overcome in a ſet Field by Charles the fifth, they were fain to raiſe the Siege and go home again. 7. Heſdinfert, on the confluence of two little Riverets, Blangis and Canche; a Frontier-town on the edge of France, one of the ſtrongeſt and moſt defenſible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fifth out of the ruines of old Heſdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer ſerviceable, and raiſed this Town in ſtead thereof, ſomewhat nearer France. 8. Terwin, or Teroane, the Tervanna of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinum of Antoninus, a Frontier-town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the eighth, Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A Siege not only memorable for the iſſue of it, but for two other matters of great moment. The one, that the Emperour Maximilian came and ſerved in perſon under the colours of S. George, with the Engliſh Croſs upon his breaſt: the other, that the French intending to victual the Town, had ſo great an overthrow, that had the Engliſh followed their Fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themſelves maſters of all France; the French King being ſo aſtoniſhed at the news hereof, that he prepared to flie into Bretaign. But the Engliſh more minded the Spoils and riches of Terwin, than the ſequel of an abſolute Victory; Et frui maluerunt victoriâ, quàm uti, as the Hiſtorian ſaid of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of Fortunes in the hands of the French, and by ſome reckoned and accounted of as part of Picardy. There are, beſides theſe, three walled Towns more, that is to ſay, Liliers, Lens, and La Baſſee, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854 Villages.

Theſe Countries of Flanders and Artois were anciently, if not a part, (as the parts hereof about Tourney moſt undoubtedly were) yet much of the ſame nature with the great Foreſt of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waſte of Woods and Deſerts, till the Conqueſt of it by the French; the Sea-coaſts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex thoſe Shores and the inland Countries meanly planted, for want of Corn and other neceſſaries for the life of man: ſubject in part to the great Princes of Ardenne, till the diſcomfiture of Earl Brunulph by Dagobert ſole King of the French, by whom about the year 621 this wild Country, extending then as far as the River Some, and comprehending, beſides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardy, was given unto one Lideric de Bucque with the title of Foreſter, to be holden under the Sovereign of that Crown. In whoſe poſterity it continued with the title of Foreſters till the time of Baldwin the firſt, the ſon of Odoacer, the ſeventh of the Foreſters whoſe names occur upon record; there being a long intermiſſion of their names and memories during the Ravagements and Depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having firſt raviſhed, and afterwards married, Judith, Siſter to Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperor, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Sovereignty thereof reſerved as before it was: in whoſe Iſſue it remained intire, till Philip the firſt Earl of that name gave unto Philip Auguſtus, King of France, the Country of Artois, with the Earldom or Country of Veromandois, part of Picardy, in Marriage with Iſabel his Niece, Daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault. By Lewis the eighth, Son and Succeſſor of Philip Auguſtus, Artois was given in Portion to his youngeſt Son Robert, made the firſt Earl of Artois by King Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the Marriage of Lewis the firſt of Flanders with Margaret the Heir of Artois and of the Earldom of Burgundy, both theſe Eſtates were added unto this of Flanders, now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great acceſſion of eſtate it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millane was the prime Dukedom of Europe: theſe Earls being priveledged to write themſelves Dei gratiâ, all others Dei clemenciâ only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to ſo great eſteem, that it was generally uſed for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the Marriage of Margaret, Daughter of Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, this great Eſtate became united to that Houſe, and afterwards was conveyed to that of Auſtria, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in due time and place. In the mean ſeaſon let us take a brief ſurvey of

The Earls of FLANDERS & ARTOIS.

1205 19. Joan, eldeſt Daughter of Baldwin the Emperor, firſt married to Ferdinand, Son of Sancho King of Portugal, and after to Thomas the 3d Son of Thomas Earl of Savoy; both in her right called Earls of Flanders.

1244 20. Margaret, Siſter of Joan, and 2d Daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, Widow of William of Dampierre, governed the Eſtate of Flanders as long as ſhe lived, admitting William her eldeſt Son to the title of Earl, which he continued till his death (being many years before his Mother's) Anno 1255.

1278 21. Guy of Dampierre, the ſecond Son of Margaret, admitted to the title of Earl on the death of his Brother, and to the Eſtate it ſelf on the death of his Mother.

1304 22. Robert III. ſirnamed of Bethune, who married Yoland, Heir of Odo of Bourgogne, Earl of Nevers, by whom he had a Son called Lewis, who married Mary, Daughter and Heir of James Earl of Rethel.

1347 24. Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders, Nevers and Rethel, in right of his Father, and of Artois and Burgundy in right of his Mother whom he ſucceeded at her death, but the time I find not.

1369 25. Philip II. ſirnamed the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, ſucceeded in the Earldoms of Flanders, Artois, &c. in right of Margaret his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Lewis de Malain, whom he married ſolemnly at Gaunt, Anno 1369. Of which Philip and his Succeſſors in theſe Eſtates we ſhal hereafter ſpeak in a place more proper.

The Earls of ARTOIS.

1234 1. Robert of France, Grand-ſon of Philip Auguſtus, and Iſabel the Daughter of Baldwin the 8th, made the firſt Earl by Lewis the 9th.

1245 2. Robert II. Son of Robert.

1302 3. Otheline, Earl of Burgundy, ſucceeded in right of Maud his Wife, the Daughter of Robert the 2.

1315 4. Philip the Long, King of France, Earl of Burgundy and Artois in right of Joan his Wife, the Daughter and Heir of Maud and Otho, or Otheline.

1331 5. Eudes, Duke of Burgundy, Earl of Burgundy and Artois in right of Joan his Wife, the eldeſt Daughter of Philip.

6. Philip, the only Son of Eudes, in right of his Mother Earl of Artois, and ſo called in his Father's life-time.

1349 7. Philip III. Son of Philip II. and Nephew of Eudes, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Artois, who died young and without iſſue, An. 1361.

The Arms of Flanders are Or, a Lion Sable, langued and armed Gules. Thoſe of Artois being Semé of Flower-de-Luces Or, in a field Azure, a File of three Labels Gules charged with with as many Caſtles of the firſt.

3. HAINAULT.

HAINAULT is bounded on the Eaſt with Namur, on the Weſt with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardy and Champagne in France. It was anciently called Saltus Carbonarius, from the abundance of Charcoal made in the Woods and Foreſts of it; by ſome Writers of the middle times, the Lower Picardy; by the Latine Writers of theſe times called Hannonia. It ſeemeth to have taken this new name from the River Haine, or Hania, which paſſeth through it, and the word Holt, ſignfying a Wood, as being overſpread in a manner with the Foreſts of Normault, St. Amand, de Faignd, and that of Poodsberg. And then Hainault will be quaſi Haine holt, i. e. a Country of Woods and Foreſts on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French, (as the word importeth:) but by the Dutch beſt known by the name of Henegow, i. e. the Country bordering on the Haine, as the name ſignifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compaſs 950 Villages, and 24 Towns; in and amongſt which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms or Pairries, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeys, one Lord Marſhal, (beſides other Officers of the Prince) deſcending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The Air hereof is very good, and the Soil fruitful, by reaſon the Country is watered with ſo many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and ſeveral leſſer Streams, beſides divers Lakes, Mariſhes, Ponds and Pools, which do much enrich it; the Country abounding in moſt places with freſh Meadows and ſweet Paſtures, good Fruits, and profitable Trees, but eſpecially with great plenty of Corn. Here are alſo in ſome parts of it notable Mines of Iron and Lead, and excellent Quarries of the beſt Stone, fit for all kind of Buildings.

The principal of theſe Towns are 1 Monts, ſituate at the confluence of Haine and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural ſtrength unto it; fortified beſides with a very ſtrong Wall, three large deep Ditches, and an ancient Caſtle. The Town is great, beautiful and rich, adorned with ſumptuous buildings, both private and publick, and repleniſhed with wealthy Merchants and men of Trade; the principal of all the Province, erected into an Earldom by Charles the Great, and ſometimes uſed for the ſtyle of the Earls of Hainault. In this Town is the noble Nunnery of S. Valdrade, once a Dutcheſs of Lorrain, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies & Gentlewomen of Noble Families, in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns, in the afternoons according to their Birth and qualities; who when they pleaſe may leave the Cloiſter, and be married. The Abbeſs hath Juriſdiction both in the Town and Country about it, and anciently did put the Earls of Hainault into poſſeſſion of the State. Another Nunnery like this (but not of ſuch large Revenues) there is at 2 Maubeuge on the Sambre, a good Town of Merchandiſe. 3 Valenchiennes, ſeated on the Scheld, and a little River called Ronelle, which make not only in it many pleaſant Iſles, but paſs almoſt under every man's houſe to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The ſite hereof is ſo ſtrong by Nature, (beſides the Fortifications of Art) that on the one ſide it may be eaſily made unapproachable by water, and on the other ſide is ſo defended by Hills, that it can hardly be beſieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large, and beautiful Town, eſpecially for publick Buildings: the Chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the ancient manner of Architecture, with ſumptuous Arches & goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyry; the Earl's Palace, and the Town-hall, Buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanſhip. The Birth-place of Henry the 7th, Emperour of Germany, of Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike, and of Froiſſart the great French Hiſtorian. Finally a Town which, for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by it ſelf, having under the Juriſdiction of it 3 Towns, 132 Villages; which on occaſion of Appeal reſort not to the Provincial Council at Monts, but the great Council at Mechlin. 4 Chimay, upon the River Blanche, near a pleaſant Foreſt, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldeſt Son of the Duke of Aerſchot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who hath here a very goodly Palace. 5 Halle, ſeated on the Sinne, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongſt the Papiſts, by reaſon of an Image of the bleſſed Virgin famed for many Miracles. Of which ſee Lipſius on that ſubject. 6 Beauvais, or Bavay, an old Town, at a Pillar whereof begin all the ways leading into France, made of paved-ſtones by Bruneault the Wife of Sigebert King of Metz and Auſtraſia, who with Fridegonde the Wife of Chilperick, and Katharine Medices, the Wife of Henry the 2d, are ſaid to be the three Furies of France. 7 Landrecie, on the River Sambre, famous for the notable reſiſtance which it made to Charles the 5th, 1543. 8 Marienburg, built by Mary Queen of Hungary, Governeſs here for the ſaid Charles, An. 1524, to ſerve as a Bulwark againſt France, on which it frontiereth. 9 Philip Ville, built and well fortified for the ſame reaſon by K. Philip the 2d. 19 Bouchain, upon the Scheld, in the County of Oſtrinand, which County is the Title of the firſt Son of Hainault: and by that name William the eldeſt Son of Albert Earl of Hainault and Holland, was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2d. 11 Conde, a good little Town ſeated on the Scheld, the moiety whereof belonged heretofore to the Houſe of Montpenſier in France, as 12 Enghien, a Town of great trade for Tapeſtry, to the Houſe of Vendoſme: from whence the Princes of Conde and Dukes of Enghien do derive their Titles. 13 Beaumont, upon the knap of a goodly Hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the preſent to the Dukes of Aerſchot, but anciently the Partage of the ſecond Son of the Earls of Hainault. 14 Bins, or Binche, on a branch of the River, Hain, one of the Jointure-Towns of the Counteſſes of Hainault, much beautified and made a place of pleaſures by Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom it was given by Charles the fifth, (commonly called the Queens Paradiſe) but burnt and utterly deſtroyed by the French, Anno 1554. 15 Aeth, ſeated on both ſides of the Dender; a little, but a pleaſant and wealthy Town; here being held the Staple of Linen for all this Country, and the Cloth here ſold amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Hiſtory of Hainault, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the moſt valiant and moſt potent people of all the Gauls, poſſeſſed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and ſome part of Flanders, able to bring, and de facto did bring into the field, when the Belgæ muſtered up their united forces againſt Julius Cæſar, no fewer than 50000 fighting men. Wone from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, continuing ſo till the death of Brunulph, diſcomfitted and ſlain in battel by Dagobert ſole King of the French, whom his Father in his life-time had made Duke of Ardenne, and deſigned unto the conqueſt of it. But the fury of the War being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it eſtated upon other Houſes, and the reſt alotted out amongſt his Children, Alberic, ſirnamed the Orphelin, one of his younger Sons, was by Sigebert King of Metz or Auſtraſia enfeoffed of this Country, by the name & Title of Earl of Hainault. Twice this Eſtate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1 In the perſon of Baldwin 5. Earl of Flanders, ſucceeding hereunto in right of Richild his Wife, Daughter of Regnier the 3d. 2 By the Marriage of Baldwin the 6th of Hainault with Margaret Counteſs of Flanders, Siſter and Heir of Philip of Elſaſs, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the firſt time by the uſurpation of Flanders, wreſted from Arnulph the 3d, by his Uncle Robert, and the ſecond time by the intruſion of John de Aveſnes, natural ſon of Margaret the ſecond Daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, into the Eſtate and Earldom of Hainault; it was finally annexed to Holland by the Marriage of John de Aveſnes to Adelize or Aleide, Daughter and (at the laſt) Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland, Zeland, &c. from which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundy.

The Earls of HAINAULT.

1. Alberic, one of the younger Sons of Brunulph Earl of Ardenne.
2. Waultier, Son of Alberic.
3. Waultier II. Son of Waultier the firſt.
4. Waultier III. Son of Waultier the ſecond.
5. Albon, in right of his Wife, eldeſt Daughter of Waultier the third.
6. Albon II. Son of the ſaid Albon by that Wife.
7. Manaſſier, Son of Albon the ſecond.
8. Regnier, Son of Manaſſier.
9. Regnier II. Son of Regnier the firſt.
10. Regnier III. Son of Regnier the ſecond.
11. Baldwin V. of Flanders, and the firſt of that name in Hainault, ſucceeded in right of Richild his Wife, the ſole Daughter to Regnier the third.

1070 12. Arnulph, Son of Baldwin and Richild, deſpoiled of his Eſtate and life by his Uncle Robert, who ſeized on the Earldom of Flanders.

1071 13. Baldwin II. Brother of Arnulph, ſucceeded in Hainault.

14. Baldwin III. Son of Baldwin the ſecond.
15. Baldwin IV. Son of Baldwin the third.
16. Baldwin V. Son of Baldwin the fourth.
17. Baldwin VI. of Hainault, Son of Baldwin the fifth, and the eighth of that name in Flanders, into which alſo he ſucceeded in right of Margaret his Wife, Siſter and Heir of Philip of Elſaſs, Earl of Flanders.

1199 18. Baldwin VIII. of Hainault, and 9. of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople.

1205 19. Joan Counteſs of Hainault and Flanders, firſt married to Ferdinand of Portugal, and then to Thomas Earl of Savoy.

1244 20. Margaret the younger Siſter of Joan, married to William of Bourbon Lord of Dampierre, by whom ſhe had William and Guy, both Earls of Flanders.

21. John de Aveſnes, baſe Son of Margaret, begot before her marriage by Buſchart her Guardian, the Prior of St. Peters in L'iſle, by force and fraud extorted Hainault from his Brethren born in lawful wedlock, and married Aleide Daughter and Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland; whoſe Succeſſors in both Eſtates we ſhall meet with there, and amongſt them with William the 2. Father of Queen Phillippa, Wife of Edward the 3d, one of the moſt conſiderable of all the number.

The Arms hereof are quarterly Flanders and Holland.

4. The Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY.

SOuthward from Hainault lieth the Biſhoprick of CAMBRAY, continuing a goodly Town and Territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainault, now a State diſtinct; rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, than ſubject to them.

The principal City hereof is Cambray, (called in Latine Cameracum) ſeated on both ſides of the River Scheld, a fair, goodly, and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them induſtrious, eſpecially in making that fine linen Cloth from hence called Cameras, or Cambrick. The private Buildings are very fair, but the publick much fairer, eſpecially the Monaſteries and other Churches, of which the moſt remarkable is that of our Lady, an ancient and ſumptuous Fabrick, and the See Epiſcopal. From hence the Country and Territory hereunto adjoining is called Cambreſis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are, 1. Chaſteau Cambreſis, ſix leagues from the City, remarkable for the Treaty held there betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. in which a Peace was happily ſetled amongſt all the chief Princes of Chriſtendom, after a long and tedious War between thoſe Kings and the Confederates of each; and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the ſaid Kings of France and Spain, the Emperour, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, againſt the Seignioury of Venice, Anno 1508. called the League of Cambray. 2. Aveſnes le ſec, (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Aveſnes in Hainault) near which are digged excellent white Stones for building, little inferior unto Marble.

This Biſhoprick was Founded in the perſon of S. Diogenes, a Græcian born, An. 390, or thereabouts: whoſe Succeſſors in tract of time became ſo potent, that at the laſt the Biſhop hereof became both the Lord ſpiritual and temporal of the Town and Territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and was in the end made an Archbiſhop by Pope Paul the Fourth, An. 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperours, afterwards by Henry the fifth, given in protection to Robert of Jeruſalem, Earl of Flanders; and finally ſetled and confirmed on all his Succeſſors by the Emperour Frederick, An. 1164. Which notwithſtanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times poſſeſſed it: but governing with too great inſolence, they were driven out by the people in the time of Lewis the 11th, and the Town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, Governour of theſe Countries for his Son Philip. Charles the fifth, in the year 1543, built a ſtrong Citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town againſt the French, but indeed to keep it for himſelf. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alenzon, (Brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, An. 1582. but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of victuals. Since that continually poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, and by them ſtrongly garriſoned; but ſo, that the people ſtill enjoy their ancient Priviledges, and are governed by their own Laws and Biſhops, as in former times.

THE Earldom of NAMUR hath on the Eaſt Hainault, on the Weſt the Biſhoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxemburg: ſo called from Namur the chief Town of it; Namurcum and Namurcenſis Comitatus in our Latin Writers. The Country is very ſmall, containing only 182 Villages, and four walled Towns; but plentiful of all Commodities, and repleniſhed with a loyal and induſtrious people. Particularly the Air hereof is very wholeſom; the Country watered with many Rivers and pleaſant Brooks (amongſt which the Sambre and the Maes) which, beſides the benefit of Portage, yield great plenty of Fiſh. The Hills, whereof it hath not many, are cloathed with Woods, abounding with all kind of Fowl and Veniſon; the Vallies eminently fruitful of all ſorts of Grain, rich Mines of Lead, Quarries of Marble of all colours, as alſo of Porphyrie or Jaſper, and great plenty of Coal. In Mines of Iron ſo abounding, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcan's Forge may ſeem to be reſtored to the world again, and ſeated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, ſo it keeps them from idleneſs. And as for the Nobility, they are generally valiant, given to all military exerciſes fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greateſt vertue of a Subject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was ſaid; that is to ſay, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where reſideth the Council for the Country, from which lieth no Appeal but to Mechlin only. Seated it is between two Hills on both ſides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuſe. The City is rich, inhabited for the moſt part by the Nobility, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, Founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardenne and Monſtier are two Nunneries of Ladies, like thoſe of Monts and Maubuge ſpoken of in Hainault. 2. Bovines, upon the Meuſe, ſacked by the French, Anno 1554. ſince repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a ſmall Town, but of moſt exact Fortifications, built by Charles the fifth, An. 1555. to oppoſe the French, who had then poſſeſſed themſelves of Marienburg, a Town of Hainault. 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but ſtanding in a goodly and Fruitful Country. Of the Villages the chief is Done, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and honoured with the title of a Viſcountie; 2. Floren, 3. Vaſcie. and 4. Sauſon, of much beauty and greatneſs.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were a part of the Nervii. It was firſt made an Earldom by ſome of the Deſcendents of the Sons of Clodion, the ſecond King of the French, who being diſpoſſeſſed of their Father's Kingdom by Meroveus, the Maſter of his Horſe, (to whom he had committed the Guardianſhip or Tuition of them) were forced to betake themſelves to the moſt defenſible places of the great Foreſt of Ardenne and the parts adjoining, where they Founded the great Earldoms of Ardenne and Moſelle, as before is ſaid, divided in ſucceeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls this Earldom was poſſeſſed, I am yet to learn, the Eſtate being ſmall, and conſequently the Princes of it not much conſiderable. They were allied to the Royal Houſe of France by the Marriage of Albert Earl hereof with Irmingrade Daughter of Charles of France, the firſt Duke of Lorrain: and after unto the Houſe of Flanders, by the Marriage of N. the Daugher and Heir of Peter, the laſt Earl of that race, to Henry the Second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, and Brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the firſt Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople, whom he ſucceeded in that Empire. After whoſe death it came by Yoland his Daughter to Peter Earl of Auxerre, who ſucceeded alſo in the Empire, and after his deceaſe to Philip his younger Son. But he deceaſing without Iſſue, and Robert his elder Brother reigning in Conſtantinople, it was ſeized on by Philip the Brother of Henry, who, to aſſure himſelf thereof, took to Wiſe Mary Daughter of Philip Auguſtus King of France. By a Niece or Couſin of this Philip it was conveyed in Marriage to Henry Earl of Luxemburg, (the Father by a former Wife of Henry the ſeventh, Emperour and Earl of Luxemburg) and finally brought back again to the Houſe of Flanders, by the Marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, with Iſabel Daughter of that Henry by the Heir of Namur, and in his Iſſue it continued (for ought I can find) till it was ſwallowed up, with the reſt of the Belgick Provinces, by the Houſe of Burgundy. So that the higheſt we can go in ſearch of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charles of Lorrain, which was 540 years after the coming in of the Sons of Clodion. From which time downwards the Succeſſion is confuſed and broken, and towards the latter end diſcontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good order as I could, and here preſent them in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Earls of NAMVR.

1. Albert, the Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, ſpoken of before.
2. Godfrey, the Son of Albert, and Father of Alice Wife of Baldwin the fifth of Hainault, & Mother of Baldwin the ſixth of Hainault, and the eighth of Flanders.
3. Peter the Son or Brother of Godfrey.
4. Henry the ſecond, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, in right of N. his Wife, the Heir of Peter, Emp. of Conſtantinople alſo on the death of Baldwin the 9th his elder Brother.

1216 5. Peter II. Son-in-Law of Henry Emperour of Conſtantinople, and Earl of Namur.

6, 7. Philip the younger Son of Peter, and John the elder Brother of Henry, both taking to themſelves the title of Earl of Namur, the one at Conſtantinople, the other in the Netherlands, and both deceaſing without iſſue.

8. Philip II. Brother of John and Henry, without Iſſue alſo.
9. John II. ſirnamed of Dampierre, the third Son of William of Dampierre by Margaret Counteſs of Flanders, Daughter and Heir of the Emp. Baldwiu, ſucceeded by the gift of his Mother, challenging the diſpoſing of it as next Heir of Philp the ſecond, or in the right paramount of the Earldom of Flanders, enjoyed upon a better Title by
10. Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, and elder Brother of John the ſecond, in right of Iſabel his Wife, Daughter of Henry Earl of Luxemburg by the Heir of Namur; but I neither find her Name nor Parents.
11. John III. Son of Guy and Iſabel.
12. John IV. Son of Guy by a former Wife, the Brother of John the third by the whole blood being abſent or unfriended, and ſo put beſide.
13. Guy II. the Brother of John the Fourth by the ſame Venter.
14. John V. Son of Guy the ſecond, who in the year 1307. married a Niece of Lewis the ninth of France by Robert Earl of Clermount a younger Son.
15. John VI. who in the year 1429. ſold his Eſtate to Duke Philip the Good, to be enjoyed by him on the death of Theodore, the next Heir hereof, infirm, and (as it ſeems) without hope of Children.
16. Theodore, or Theodorick, the laſt Earl of Namur, after whoſe Death Duke Philip entred on this Earldom by the former Contract, and as the next Heir of the Houſe of Flanders, it continuing ever ſince unto his Poſterity.

The Arms hereof are Or, a Lion Sable, debruiſed with a Bend Gules.

6. LVXEMBVRG.

LVXEMBVRG is bounded on the Eaſt with the Moſelle and the Land of Triers, on the Weſt with the Meuſe or Maes and a branch of the Foreſt of Ardenne, on the North with Luyckland, Namur, and a part of Hainault, and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorrain; ſo called from the Caſtle near the Town of Luxemburg, ſelected by Sigefride the firſt Earl hereof for his Seat and Reſidence.

The whole is divided into parts: the Eaſtern part being called Faveune, Fruitful of Corn, and yielding withal ſome Wines, ſome Mines, and many excellent Quarries of goodly Stone; the Weſtern called the Ardenne, a remainder of that ſpatious Foreſt, which ſometimes overſhadowed all this Country, barren of Corn, but very plentiful of Veniſon, and of Foul good ſtore.

The people of this Country are not all of one Language: thoſe nearer Germany, as in Luxemburg, Arlun, Rodemark, Theonville, and the reſt on that ſide, ſpeaking the Dutch; as thoſe of Montmedy, Marville, Dampvillers, with the reſt bordering on France, do a corrupt or broken French. In which regard the Pleadings held before the Council reſiding in Luxemburg are made in both Languages, that ſo they may be underſtood by all that have buſineſs there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the Seventeen) ſpeak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of Vertue, Courteſie and Hoſpitality towards one another, and of great Truth and Faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worſt Landlords in all theſe Countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peaſants of France, contrary to the uſe and Liberties of the reſt of the Netherlands. Both ſorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers, and for the moſt part end their Controverſies amongſt themſelves, without any Proceſs.

The whole Country containeth in compaſs about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles; in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Luxemburg or Lucemburg, built in the place where anciently ſtood the Auguſta Veromanduorum of Ptolemy; and took this new name quaſi Lucis burgum, from the image of the Sun there worſhipped; ſeated on the Alſinuntius, or Alze, which runneth through it; large, and of a ſtrong ſituation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the ſpoils which the long Wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it before the Treaty of Cambray. However, it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the Reſidence of the Council hereof, and the Sepulchre of John King of Bohemiah, ſlain in the Battel of Creſſy againſt the Engliſh, An. 1348. 2. Arlun, on the top of an high Hill, ſo called quaſi Ara Lunæ, from an Altar conſecrated to the Moon in the time of Paganiſm. 3. Theonville, on the Moſelle, over which it hath a goodly Bridge, a Frontier town near Metz and the border of Lorrain, and for that cauſe made marvellous ſtrong; but taken by the French, An. 1558. and reſtored the next year by the Peace of Cambray. 4. Boſtonack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it ſtandeth. 5. Montmedy, on an high Hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Dampvillers, once a very ſtrong place alſo: both taken and ranſacked by the French, An. 1552.

7. Marville,

7. Marvelle, upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belongeth to the Duke of Lorrain, the other to the King of Spain as Duke of Luxemburg for which cauſe it is called la Ville commune. 8. Rock di March, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle. 9. Yvois, a place once of great importance, ſacked by the French An. 1552. and reſtored by the Treaty of Cambray, on condition it ſhould never more be walled. 10. La Frette on the Chiers, a Town of the ſame condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France ſtandeth the Principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks of the River Maes, from the borders of Lorrain on the South, to the great Foreſt of Ardenne and the Dukedom of Bouillon on the North. A ſmall, but very fair Eſtate, of fruitful Soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and ſome Towns of note: the principal whereof are, 1. Jamais upon the borders of Lorrain, by the Duke whereof it was taken, after a long ſeaſon, from the Lady Charlotte, the laſt Heir-general of the Houſe of Mark, An. 1585. and laid unto that Dukedom as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Donchiery, a ſtrong Town of war, bordering on Tiraſche in Picardy, to which by ſome it is aſcribed. 3. Sedan, in Latin called Sedunum ad Moſam, becauſe ſituate on the banks of the Maes or Moſa, the uſual Reſidence of the Prince: a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80 braſs pieces of Ordnance; honoured with a ſeat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar-School and an Univerſity, is in the Criticiſm of theſe times called a Schola illuſtris, to which men may ſend their children to learn good Letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a priviledge reſerved only to the Univerſities. So that theſe Schools may be ſomewhat like our Collegiate-Churches of Weſtminſter, Wincheſter and Eaton, but that the younger Students in theſe laſt named are more reſtrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, than in the other, though theſe more liberally indowed for the encouragement and reward of Learning than all the Scholæ illuſtres of either Germany. 4. Mouſon, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence on the River Maes, upon ſome jealouſies of State, garriſoned by the French, as alſo is Sedan it ſelf, and moſt of the other good Towns belonging unto this Principality; but ſo that the Revenues of it, execution of Juſtice, and all other rights of Soveraignty, are ſtill enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This Eſtate anciently was a part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, from which it was diſmembred for the Portion of ſome younger Prince, at ſuch time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain, after Charles and Otho the firſt Dukes; or elſe excepted and reſerved by Godfrey, ſirnamed of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, and King of Hieruſalem, when he ſold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Biſhop of Liege. By many mean Conveyances and alterations of the Owners it came at laſt to the Houſe of Aremberg, a Family of great wealth and power in Weſtphalen, (a Province of Germany not far off) by the Heir-general of which Houſe it was brought in Marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark about the year 1330, from whom deſcended Robert Earl of Mark, and Soveraign of Sedan with the Towns annexed, who ſucceeding his Mother in the Eſtates of Sauſi and Florenge, Fiefs holden of the Dukedom of Bouillon, and eagerly affecting to unite the Eſtates together, (as they had been anciently) purchaſed the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon of Eberhard Earl of Mark his Brother, Biſhop and Cardinal of Liege, and conſequently Duke of Bouillon alſo. Proud of his honour, and being ſomewhat too ſtiff in maintaining the Rights of his new Dukedom againſt a Sentence paſſed in the Imperial Chamber, in a Suit there depending betwixt two of his Vaſſals, he took up Arms againſt the Empire, with far more courage than diſcretion. For being in the courſe of that War worſted by Charles 5. (for whom he was too weak an enemy) the Town of Bouillon, being taken by the conquering Emperor, was afterwards reſtored to the Biſhops, and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French, (as his Anceſtors from the time of Charles 8. had done before) and died Anno 1535, leaving his Titles and Eſtate unto Robert his Son, one of the Marſhals of France, whoſe Grandſon, called alſo Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, and afterwards of France alſo, dying without Iſſue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the diſpoſal of his Eſtates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Siſter. And he ſo well diſcharged his truſt, that (having ſetled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in Marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turenne, in France, (one who had done him very good ſervice in the courſe of his long War, againſt the Leaguers) and with her the poſſeſſion of Sedan, and the Title of Bouillon; whoſe poſterity do ſtill enjoy it. The whole Succeſſion of theſe Princes we ſhall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again to the Dutchie of Luxemburg, It was at firſt a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, diſmembred from it in the time of the Emperour Otho the firſt by Sigefride the Son of Ricuinus Prince thereof, who, in the diviſion of that Eſtate amongſt his Brethren, had this for his Portion, with the Title of Earl. Of his Succeſſors there is little to be found upon good record in a conſtant order of Succeſſion, until the time of Henry 1. Father of Henry 2. Emperor of Germany, and they of a Royal Progeny of Kings & Princes; two of the which are moſt conſiderable, though all of them of eminent quality in their ſeveral times, viz. 1 Henry, elected and crowned Emperor by the name of Henry 7. ſaid to be poiſoned by a Frier in the holy Chalice, to prevent ſome deſigns he had againſt the Pope, in aſſerting the Imperial power in Italy. 2 John, the Son of this Henry, choſen K. of Bohemia, in regard of his Marriage with Elizabeth the Daughter of Wenceſlaus King thereof, the poſſeſſion of which Realm he left unto his poſterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles 4. the eldeſt Son of this John, in the perſon of Wenceſlaus his younger Brother. What elſe concerns it we ſhall find in this following Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of LVXEMBVRG.

1. Sigefride, the Son of Ricuine, Prince of Ardenne, the firſt Earl of Luxemburg.
2. Gilbert, the Father of Ogine, Wife of Baldwin the fourth of Flanders; but whoſe Son I find not.
3. Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was alſo Earl of Luxemburg by the right of Marriage, Father of Agnes the Wife of Simon the ſecond Duke of Lorrain.
4. Conrade, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the Daughter of Luxemburg, Father of Catharine, Wife of Matthew the ſecond, Duke of Lorrain.
5. Henry Earl of Luxemburg, ſlain in the quarrel of Rainold Earl of Geldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.
6. Henry II. Son of Henry the firſt, by means of his Brother Baldwin, Elector of Triers, was choſen Emperour of the Germans, the ſeventh of that name, Anno 1308, firſt crowned at Aken, Aken, and afterwards at Rome; one of the laſt Emperours that meddled in the affairs of Italy.

1319. 7. John, Son of Henry II. Earl of Luxemburg, married Elizabeth, Daughter of Wenceſlaus the elder, K. of Bohemia; of which he was upon that Marriage elected and crowned King, Anno 1311, in the life of his Father; ſlain by the Engliſh in the Battel of Creſſy, Anno 1346.

1383 9. Wenceſlaus II. eldeſt Son of the ſaid Charles 4. Emperour and King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.

1419 10. Sigiſmund, Brother of Wenceſlaus, ſucceeded Wenceſlaus in all his Eſtates, to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the Marriage of Mary, Daughter of King Lewis the firſt.

11. Elizabeth, Daughter of John Duke of Gorlitz, (a Town of Luſatia) the Brother of Sigiſmund, by the gift of Sigiſmund her Uncle, being then alive, the better to fit her for the Bed of Anthony of Bourgogn Duke of Brabant; after whoſe deceaſe ſhe married John the 3. Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. But having no Iſſue by either of them, ſhe ſold her intereſt in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good.

12. Philip the Good ſucceeded on the Sale aforeſaid made by the ſaid Elizabeth, in purſuance of the Contract and Agreement made at her firſt Marriage, for ſettling this Eſtate in the Houſe of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Succeſſors in theſe Belgick Provinces, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter.

The Arms are B. ſix Barrulets A. ſupporting a Lion G. crowned and armed Or.

7. LIMBOVRG.

THE greateſt of the Eſtates of Belgium for extent of Territory, at the time of their Incorporating in the Houſe of Burgundy, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Limbourg, and Brabant, the Marquiſate of the Holy Empire, and the Seignioury of Mechlin, with the Sovereignty of Liege or Luyck-land.

LIMBOVRG hath on the Eaſt the Dukedom of Gulick in High Germany, on the Weſt the Biſhoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South the Dukedom of Luxemburg. The Soil is fruitful of all neceſſary Commodities, excepting Wines, the want whereof is recompenſed with moſt excellent Wheat, great ſtore of Fewel, and plenty of the beſt Iron Mines in all theſe Countries: all which Commodities it hath of ſo great excellency in their ſeveral kinds, that it is ſaid of them proverbially, that that their Bread is better than Bread, their Fire hotter than Fire, and their Iron harder than Iron. It is alſo well ſtored with medicinal Simples, and enriched with a Mine of Copperas, (by Pliny called Lapis æroſus, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with Braſs makes Lattin, and increaſeth the Braſs by one third part. Lapis æroſus multum æris habet, & ex eo fuſo fit æs, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the leaſt of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities; viz. 1 Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Eſtate, pleaſantly ſeated on a Hill amongſt ſhady Woods, under which runneth the River Weſdo; which, having watred the whole Country, emptieth it ſelf into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep Precipice, of no eaſie acceſs. 2. Valkenburg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reaſonable fair Town, with a large Territory, two Dutch miles from Maeſtricht; conquered from Reynold, Lord hereof, by John the third Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Caſtle, the Territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the ſecond. 4. Rhode le Duc, a little old Town with as old a Caſtle, half a league from Valkengborg. 5. Carpen, ſituate between Gulick and Colen, beautified with a Collegiate-Church and a ſtrong Caſtle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garriſon for defence of the place. Each of theſe Towns hath Juriſdiction on the parts adjoyning, but with Appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract, and the Biſhoprick of Liege adjoyning, were the Eburones. When it was firſt made an Earldom, I am yet to ſeek. Moſt probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, it was at firſt a member of that Earldom alſo, diſmembred from it for the Portion of ſome younger Son, as Luxemburg and Namur were, or ſeized on by ſome ſtrong Pretender (as Gulick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorrain, and the direct Heirs of the Houſe of Ardenne, were abſent in the Wars of the Holly Land. But whenſoever & by whomſoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, An. 1172. Henry, one of the Dukes hereof, married his Daughter Margaret to Godfrey the third, Duke of Brabant, which gave that Houſe ſome colour to pretend unto it; backed with a better Title on the death of another Henry, the laſt Duke of Limbourg, whoſe next Heir, Adolph, ſold it to John Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former Marriage, An. 1293. But Reynold Earl of Geldres, thinking himſelf to have a better Title than Adolph in right of Ermingrade his Wife, the Daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, put in his plea, and challenged it by force of Arms: but being vanquiſhed and taken priſoner by the ſaid Duke John in the Battel of Worancan, was fain, for his Releaſe, to releaſe all his Claim and Title to the Dukedom of Limbourg, after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the Houſe of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or and Gules.

8. LVYCK-LAND, or, the Biſhoprick of LIEGE.

WEſtward of Limbourg, but a far mightier Eſtate than it, lieth LVCYK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Biſhoprick of LIEGE, Leodienſis, as the Latin and French Writers call it; anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the Houſe of Burgundy, as Lords of that Country. By ſome it is accompted of and deſcribed as a part of Germany; but for the reaſons before mentioned I ſhall place it here. It is environed on all ſides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to ſay, with the Dukedom of Limbourg and the Earldom of Namur on the Eaſt, with Brabant on the North and Weſt, on the South with Luxemburg.

The Air hereof is very wholſom, and the Earth as fruitful, abounding with all kind of Grain and Fruits, with ſome ſtore of Wine; and as for Fleſh, Fiſh, Fowl and Veniſon, it hath very great plenty, and that too of an excellent taſte: leſs fertile it is in ſuch parts hereof as lie towards Luxemburg, in which it is moſt ſwelled with Hills, and over-ſpread with ſhady Woods, remainders of the great Foreſt of Ardenne, within which it ſtood. But the chief Riches of this Country is under ground, conſiſting in Mines of Lead and Iron, and ſome few of Gold; Quarries of Alabaſter, mingled with all ſorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimſtone, and unexhauſtible pits of Coal: which laſt it hath in ſuch abundance, that there is digged within the compaſs of one league of the City of Liege, not only ſufficient for that great City, but ſo much over-plus as, being ſold at mean prices about the Country, amounts unto 100000 Ducats of yearly value. The Coal much ſweeter than elſewhere, and of nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oil, and the ſtrong fervour of it taken off by caſting Salt on it.

The whole Country containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800 Villages. The principal of which are 1. Liege or Luyck, (in Latine Leodium) ſituate in a pleaſant Valley environed with Hills, the Meuſe entring it in two branches, accompanied with four leſſer Riverets, which make in it many delightful Iſlands. The compaſs of it is about four miles; the ordinary Buildings very fair, all built of Stone; the Biſhop's Palace a magnificent and ſumptuous piece; the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32 Parochial, all of them for their riches and beauty excelling all in any City of France or Germany. Beſides theſe, there are ſo many Covents, Monaſteries and Religious Houſes about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred; all of them of ſuch fair Revenues, ſo well endowed, and the Religious perſons there of ſo great authority, that it is called the Paradiſe of Prieſts, and that deſervedly. It is alſo an Univerſity of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time 9 Kings Sons, 24 Dukes Sons, 29 Earls Sons, beſides Barons and Gentlemen; the greateſt part of which were Canons of the Church of S Lambert, which is the Cathedral of the City. Yet notwithſtanding it hath taſted of the malice of Fortune as well as others, being firſt deſtroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundy, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Biſhop as Lord temporal of it; from whom (being long ſince made an Imperial City) there lieth an Appeal to the Chamber of Spire. 2. Dinant, upon the Meuſe, near Namur, of very great Traffick, till deſtroyed by Charles of Burgundy in the ſame year with Liege: hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again ſacked by King Henry the ſecond of France, Anno 1854. 3. Muſeck, upon the Meuſe or Maes alſo, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the ſame nature with that of Monts and others ſpoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bilſen, another Town of this Biſhoprick; the Abbeſſes of each having the priviledge of Coining both Gold and Silver. 5. Lootz, by the Dutch called Borchlom, in the County of Dieſtein; made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the Title and poſſeſſion of Ogier the Dane, ſo famous in the Hiſtory of Gallen of France and others of the old Romances. 6. Franchimont, which gives the Title of a Marqueſs to the Biſhop of Liege. 7. Centron, or S. Truden, a fair Town, ſo called of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoey, ſo called of a violent River which there runs into the Meuſe. 9. Tungres, the chief City of the Tongri, which together with the Eburones were once the inhabitants of this Tract; in which are ſtill the ruines of a Temple conſecrated to Hercules. Anciently it was an Epiſcopal See, tranſlated hence to Maeſtricht, and at laſt to Liege; and in thoſe times ſo great and of ſuch renown that Attila the Hun deſtroyed in it 100 Churches; now but a very ſmall Town, and not worth the mentioning but for theſe Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence, amongſt the ſhady Thickets of the Foreſt of Ardenne, is 10. that ſo celebrated Village, and thoſe famous hot Baths frequented from all the places of Europe, called the Spa; not ſo pleaſant as wholſom, not ſo wholſom as famous. Yet are they good for ſundry diſeaſes, as the Tertian Ague, the Dropſie, the Stone, the Exulceration of the Lungs, the Sciatica, &c. They are of moſt virtue in July, becauſe they are then hoteſt; and to ſuch as taſt them they relliſh much of Iron, from ſome Iron Mines, it ſeemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. Theſe Baths were of great fame in the time of Pliny, who doth thus deſcribe them: Tungri Civitas fontem habet inſignem, plurimis bullis ſtillantem ferruginei ſaporis, quod ipſum non niſi in fine potûs intelligitur. Purgat hic corpora, febres tertianas diſcutit calculorumque vitia. So he lib. 31. c. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this preſent time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Bouillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this accompt) followed the ſame Fortunes with the reſt of Belgica, till the Conqueſt of it by the French, by whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain; in the diviſion of which Kingdom between the Kings of France and Germany, it fell unto the ſhare of the Kings of France, as lying almoſt wholly on the Weſt or French ſide of the River Maes, which parted their poſſeſſions in that broken Kingdom. Won from Lotharius the French King (the laſt but one of the Caroline Race) by Otho the 2. it was by him made part of the Dukedom of Lorrain then by him erected, and continued as a part thereof, till ſold by Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain to the Biſhops of Liege, (of which more anon) ſince which time it hath been the Patrimony of thoſe wealthy Prelates. As for the Biſhoprick of Liege, it was founded at Tungres, as before was ſaid; after the ſackage of which City by Attila it was removed Anno 498 by S. Servatius unto Maeſtricht. But the people of Maeſtricht having martyred S. Lambert their Biſhop, Anno 710, by Hubert, his deſigned Succeſſor, with the leave of Pope Conſtantine, it was tranſlated to this place, and a Cathedral Church here founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Succeſſors did ſo well husband their advantages, that they did not only buy the Dukedom of Bouillon, but the City and Territory of Liege, ſold unto Speutus and Obertus ſucceſſively Biſhops of it by Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain, at his departure hence to the Holy Land: not much increaſed ſince that in Lands, though they be in Titles, the Biſhop being ſtiled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bouillon, Marqueſs of Franchimont, Earl of Loetz and Hasbain. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 30000 Ducats yearly; his Subjects living very well under him, at eaſie Rents, and growing for the moſt part unto good eſtates. An argument whereof may be, that when the Liegeois had rebelled againſt Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, (under whoſe Clientele they were as Duke of Brabant) they bought their Peace of him at the price of 600000 Florens of the Rhene, to be paid in ſix years. After which again rebelling againſt Charles the Warlike, (as they have been obſerved to be the moſt rebellious City in Europe, excepting Gaunt) they were able to wage 30000 men; but not being able to withſtand the Forces of their Lord Protector, they fell into that miſerable deſtruction ſpoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria: but were counted Neutrals in the Quarrels betwixt the King of Spain and the States Confederate, as formerly between the Spaniard and the French; though many times they ſuffer in the conteſtations.

Southward hereof, betwixt it and Luxemberg, lieth the Dukedom of Bouillon, ſubject unto the Biſhops of Liege; but a State diſtinct, and holden by a different Title. It taketh up a great part of that Country which more particularly and ſpecially is called the Foreſt of Ardenne, with the Woods thereof in many places over-ſhadowed; but not unfurniſhed of fair Towns and wealthy Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Loni, and 2. Muſſon-Court, deſtroyed by Charles the fifth in his War againſt Robert Earl of Mark and Duke of Bouillon, but on the Peace enſuing repaired again. 3. Sauſi, and 4. Floringe, Fiefs, as before is ſaid, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but poſſeſſed by the Soveraigns of Sedan, ſince the time that Robert Earl of Mark and Soveraign of Sedan had them in Marriage with Joan his Wiſe, the right Heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the firſt Duke of Bouillon of that Family. The laſt a pretty Town, till deſtroyed by the French, in the Wars betwixt Henry and Philip the ſeconds, Kings of France and Spain, ſince paſſing in account as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, in the Foreſt of Ardenne, the cauſe of the great War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert Duke of Bouillon, ſpoken of before; the Emperour having paſſed ſentence in behalf of the Embries, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretenſions of the Houſe of Chinay. 6. Bouillon, built on the ſide of a Hill near the River Senoy, a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Caſtle on the top of the ſaid Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, ſo ſtrong, as well by Art as Nature, that before the uſe of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; much ſpoiled in the War betwixt Charles the Fifth and Robert of Mark, and toſſed from one Maſter to another in a little time, for being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French Anno 1552, and finally reſtored to the Biſhop of Liege by the Treaty of Cambray An. 1559, but without prejudice to the Claim and Title of the Prince of Sedan. So that there are no fewer than three diſtinct Families which at this time enjoy the Title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to ſay, the Biſhop of Liege, who hath precedency of Title, and the poſſeſſion of the City, the Houſe of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sauſi, and ſome other pieces; and the Heirs-males of the collateral Line of the Houſe of Mark, who hold Lumaigne, Rochfort, and ſome other places, but of leſs importance.

This Dukedom, once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the diviſion of that Eſtate betwixt the Children of Ricuine, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the ſhare of Godfrey his eldeſt Son, (Sedan with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the Title of Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon. By Godfrey his Son it was united to the Dukedom of Lorrain, who ſucceeded into that Eſtate after Charles and Otho; and by another Godfrey the firſt Duke of Lorrain diſmembred from it, and given in Dower with his Siſter Ida, at her Marriage with Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of theſe was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, either becauſe he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof before he did attain to the Dukedom of Lorrain; who, to provide himſelf of neceſſaries for the Wars of the Holy Land, (ſo fortunately conveyed and conducted by him) ſold firſt this Dukedom unto Obert, as afterwards the whole Country of Luyckland to Speutus, Biſhops of Liege ſucceſſively, and their Succeſſors for ever; which though accounted by moſt Writers for a part of Luyckland, or of the Biſhoprick of Liege, call it which you will, was notwithſtanding held by thoſe great Prelates as a State diſtinct, and governed under them by the Eſtates of the Country, from whoſe Sentence there lay no Appeal. The maintenance of which Priviledges, on an Appeal made by the Embries unto Charles the fifth, coſt Robert Earl of Mark ſo dear, who had not long before purchaſed this Eſtate of his Brother Eberhard, Biſhop and Cardinal of Liege, as was ſaid before. The reſt of the Story we have had already in our deſcription of Sedan: we will now look upon the Princes which have born theſe Titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the Houſe of Ardenne.

1. Godfrey, the eldeſt Son of Ricuine, Prince or Earl of Ardenne, the firſt Earl of Bouillon, and Husband of Matilda, a Daughter of the Emperour Otho the 2.
2. Godfrey II. Son of Godfrey the 1. who in the year 1004, by adoption of Duke Otho his Couſin, and the power of Henry the 2. Emperour, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain.

1019 3. Gozelo, Brother of Godfrey the 2. Duke of Lorrein and Bouillon.

1044 4. Godfrey III. Son of Gozelo.

5. Euſtace, Earl of Boulogne, and Ida his Wiſe, Daughter of Godfrey the 3. by him endowed at her Marriage with the Dukedom of Bouillon.
6. Godfrey IV. ſurnamed of Bouillon, Son of Euſtace and Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Lorrain, Anno 1078, and died King of Jeruſalem. Going unto the Wars of the Holy Land, he ſold this Dukedom to Obert Biſhop of Liege and his Succeſſors, Anno 1096, who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1509 or thereabouts; when it was ſold by Eberhard of Mark to his Brother Robert, of whoſe deſcent and Succeſſors you may take this view in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Soveraigns of Sedan and Dukes of Bouillon of the Houſe of Mark.

1. Engelbert, the ninth Earl of Mark in Germany, by marrying with the Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Jamais, &c. to the Houſe of Mark.
2. Everhard, ſecond Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3. John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4. Everhard II. Brother of John, Earl of Mark, &c.
5. John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 2.
6. Robert of Mark, the 2. Son of John the 2. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard ſucceeding in the Eſtates of Aremberg. He added Florenge and Sauſi, Towns of the Dukedom of Bouillon, to his other pieces.
7. Robert II. Son of Robert the 1. Soveraign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedom he purchaſed of Everhard his Brother, Biſhop and Cardinal of Liege.

1535 8. Robert III. Son of Robert the 2. one of the Marſhals of France, Soveraign of Sedan, and Titulary Duke of Bouillon.

1556 9. Henry-Robert, Son of Robert the 3.

10. Robert-William, Son of Henry-Robert, zealous in the Reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Vendoſme King of Navarre, to whom, dying at Geneva An. 1588, he bequeathed the care of his Eſtates.
11. Charlotte, the Siſter of Robert-William, married by Hen. of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turenne.
12. Henry de la Tour, Viſcount of Turenne in France, deſcended from the Heirs-general of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by Marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the 4. of France, ſucceeded in the Soveraignty of Sedan and Title of Bouillon; a Proteſtant, and the Founder of the Schola Illuſtris in Sedan.

13. De la Tour, Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William Prince of Orange, ſucceeded his Father in his Eſtates, but not in his Religion alſo, which, to ingratiate himſelf with the French King, he exchanged for Papiſtry, made thereupon one of the Marſhals of France, and now living, Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE. and 11. MECHLIN.

THeſe I have joined jogether, though diſtinct Eſtates, becauſe they have a long time followed the ſame fortune, and that the two laſt do no otherwiſe differ from the firſt than the parts from the whole; the Marquiſate and Mechlin being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

1. BRABANT is bounded on the Eaſt with Luyckland, or the Biſhoprick of Liege, on the Weſt with the River Scheld and a part of Flanders, on the North with the Maes, which ſevereth it from Holland and Gelderland, and on the South with Hainault, Namur, and a part of Luyckland. So called quaſi Brackland, that is to ſay, a barren Land as at firſt it was; or from the old Bratuſpantium, which Cæſar placeth in this Tract; but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholſom and good, and the Soil naturally fruitful, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it ſelf, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattel, Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in moſt freedom, and are the beſt priviledged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholden to the Prince's goodneſs, than their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wiſeſt, eſpecially as they grow in age, when moſt men learn wiſdom. Brabanti, quò magis ſeneſcunt, eo magis ſtulteſcunt, as Eraſmus.

The length hereof, from S. Gertruydenberg to Gemblours, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helmont to Bergen op Zoome, Eaſt and Weſt, 20 of the ſame miles; the whole compaſs 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns, and Villages with Pariſh-Churches 718; of which the odd 18, called Francks or Market-Towns, enjoy the Priviledges of walled Towns or Cities, though unwalled themſelves.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Hertogen Boſch, or the Boſch, as the Dutch; Bois le Duc, or Bolduc, as the French; and Sylva Ducis, or Boſcum Ducis, as the Latines call it: each name derived according to their ſeveral Languages, from a pleaſant Wood, belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now ſtands, ſituate on a little River called Deeſe, ſome two Leagues from the Maes, near the borders of Gelderland. A large and well-built Town, very ſtrongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly in the time of Lewis Guicciardine 20000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper: Made an Epiſcopal See Anno 1559, the Cathedral, which is fixed in the Church of Saint John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodlieſt Dials in the Chriſtian world. This is the principal Town of Brabant, (properly and diſtinctly ſo called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Maesland, Peelland, and Oſterwick; and was taken by the Confederate States from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable Siege, Anno 1628. 2. Tilmont, on the little River Geet, once chief of Brabant, but long ſince decayed. 3. Aerſchot, on the little River Dennere, which gives the title of Duke to them of the noble Houſe of Croy, deſcended from the Kings of Hungary, (of which we ſpake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fifth) being men of greateſt Revenue and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen op Zoome, ſo called from the River Zoome upon which it is ſituate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reaſonable good Haven. A Town of great ſtrength by nature, but more ſtrongly fortified; famous for being made a Marquiſate by Charles the fifth An. 1553; more for the notable Reſiſtance which it made to the Marqueſs Spinola, An. 1622. 5 Breda, upon the River Merck, a Town pleaſantly ſeated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territory of Steenberg, the Franchiſe of Roſindale, and the Seigniory of Oſterhout; the Reſidence, Barony, and chief Town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of thoſe Wars, it was again recovered by ſome venturous Gentlemen, who, hiding themſelves in a Boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Caſtle, which they eaſily maſtered, and made the Prince Lord of it again; after re-taken by the Spaniard An. 1625. but now in the poſſeſſion of its natural Owners, to whom it came by the right of the Houſe of Naſſau, by the Marriage of Engelbert the 7. Earl of that Houſe, with Mary, Daughter and Heir of Philip the laſt Lord hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Dieſt, on the River Dennere, a good Town and inveſted with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orange, whoſe Anceſtors of the Houſe of Naſſau had it in exchange for ſome other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof he is Burgrave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grinbergen, an ancient Barony, with a large Juriſdiction, deſcendible on the youngeſt Son only, after the manner of Burg-Engliſh, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertruydenberg, ſtanding on the Douge, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the fartheſt town in the North of Brabant, where it joins to Holland; which makes it a matter of diſpute betwixt thoſe Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for Fiſhing, plenty of Salmons and Sturgeon being taken here, but of Shads eſpecially, whereof 18000 are ſometimes caught in a day, ſalted, and ſent abroad into Foreign parts. It acknowledgeth the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth alſo. 9. Grave, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by theſe Princes of the King of Spain without conſent of the States, without whoſe approbation no part of the Domain is to be diſmembred. 10. Maeſtricht, (in Latine Trajectum ad Moſam) ſo called of a Ferry over the Maes in former times; ſupplied now with a goodly Stone-bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly Town, beautified with two Collegiate-Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were always Canons; ſubject in part to the Biſhop of Liege, and partly to the Duke of Brabant. The Children are ſubject to that Prince to whom the Mother was ſubject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father; according to that Maxime of the Civil Law, Partus ſequitur ventrem. And if a Stranger come to live there, he muſt declare to which of the two he will be ſubject. Yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Soveraign of it, he only having the power of Coinage, and of granting Pardon to Offenders: and as a Town of this Dukedom it was beſieged and taken by the Confederate States Anno 1632.

Here is alſo within the limits of this Dukedom the Town and Seigniory of Raveſtein, ſituate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve of the Duke of Brabant, but no otherwiſe ſubject: and on the ſame River the Town and Country of Horn, a Fief Imperial, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle and a goodly Territory, in which is Wiert, the Reſidence of the Earls of Horn, deſcended of the ancient Houſe of Montmorency in France.

2. The MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE ſo called becauſe the fartheſt Bounds and Marches of the German Empire frontiering on Flanders, which appertained unto the Soveraignty of the Crown of France, comprehendeth four of the beſt Towns in Brabant, with very large and ſpacious Territories adjoining to them: viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dile, about four Engliſh miles in compaſs; but in that compaſs much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadows and pleaſant Fields, which make the ſituation far more delightful than if all built and peopled. It was the Mother-Town of Brabant, and ſometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes hereof: afterwards was made an Univerſity by Duke John the 4. An. 1426. wherein are contained about 20 Colledges, ſuch as they be, much priviledged, and enriched with Penſions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2ly, Bruxels, (Bruxella) the Seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundy alſo, after they came to be Lords of thoſe Countries; ſeated upon the Sinne, and other ſweet Springs and Riverets, which make it one of the ſweeteſt ſituations in all Europe, having withall a goodly Chanel made by Art from Bruſſels to the River Dile, and from thence to the Scheld, the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the ſame compaſs with Lovain, the Building ſumptuous, and the Town very rich, not only in regard that it is the ordinary Seat of the Prince or his Regent, and the Chancery for all Brabant and the Dutchy of Limbourg, but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silk, Gold and Silver, which are there induſtriouſly purſued. 3. Nivelle, on the borders of Hainault, in a very rich and fruitful Soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linen which is therein made, but moſt of all for a very rich Nunnery (or rather a Nurſery) of noble Ladies, of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mons and others before deſcribed. 4. Antwerp, ſituate on a goodly Plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furniſhed with eight Chanels cut out of the River for the tranſport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private Buildings are very handſom, but the publick ſumptuous; the chief whereof were reckoned the Church of Noſtre-Dame, the Burſe, the Town-houſe, and the Houſe of the Eaſterlings or Eaſtern Merchants. Well peopled it is, and of ſo great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richeſt Empory of the Chriſtian world; the Commodities here bought and ſold amounting to more in one month than thoſe of Venice in two years. The cauſes of which ſudden growth and increaſe of Trading are ſaid to be theſe. 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during ſix weeks, in which time no man's perſon could be arreſted, or his goods diſtrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503 diverted the courſe of Merchandiſe from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Liſbon, kept here his Factories, and ſent hither his Spices and other Indian Commodities: for which cauſe the Merchants in the year 1516 forſook Bruges in Flanders, and ſetled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody Wars betwixt France and Spain, forſook their Country-houſes, and repaired hither: by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time, grew bigger by 3000 houſes than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was ſudden, ſo the fall ſenſible; occaſioned through the yoaking it with a Citadel by the Duke of Alva which made Merchants afraid to reſort any longer thither, as a place of little freedom and leſs ſecurity; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven, and intercepting the Trade at Sea, by the more powerful Hollanders, which hath removed this great Traffick to Amſterdam and other Towns of their Country. So that now the chief ſupport of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receit for the Kings Revenues, and a Biſhops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither ſome reſort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Seigniory of MECHLIN conſiſteth only of that City and a ſmall Territory of 9 Villages adjoining to it. The City is ſeated on both ſides of the River Dile, which ebbeth and floweth to the Town and a league above it, and running through the very midſt, maketh in it a number of ſmall Iſlands, to the great ornament and commodity of it. A goodly Town, containing ſeven Pariſh-Churches, beſides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbiſhop, founded here in the year 1559. Strong, in regard it may be eaſily drowned on all ſides; and of great wealth, by reaſon of the many Manufactures of Linen, great Artillery of Braſs and Iron, Bells, Painted works, and others of like uſe and ornament. And being ſituate in a manner in the Centre of Brabant, diſtant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Lovain, and Bruxels, it was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary Seat of the great Council of State, to which Appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet it was more beautiful in former times than it is at the preſent; the City being much defaced by firing 200 Barrels of Powder Anno 1546, and by the Sackage of the Spaniard, by whom it was taken by force Anno 1572. Moſt memorable at this time for a famous Nunnery, like to that of Nivelle, wherein are ſometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they pleaſe may leave their Cloiſter and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State diſtinct: for which cauſe many Women at the time of their Child-birth uſe to lay down their Bellies in ſome Village of Brabant, that their Children may be capable of the Priviledges and Immunities of that Country. The principal of the Villages is named Leeſt or Heyſt, pleaſantly ſeated on an Hill, the reſidue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages were the Patrimony heretofore of the noble Family of the Bertholds; which failing in the perſon of Gaulter, ſlain in the Battel of Worancan by John Duke of Brabant, it fell the one half to the Biſhop of Liege, who ſold his moyety to John the 2. Duke of Brabant; the other to the Earl of Geldres, who in the year 1333 ſold his part unto Lewis of Malain, Earl of Flanders. But he ſold nothing but the Title, John the third Duke of Brabant having ſeized upon it, and added it to his Eſtate: the occaſion of ſome quarrel between thoſe Princes, compoſed by the Marriage of that Lewis with the Heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it ſelf, the ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aduatici and ſome part of the Tungri: it was accompted by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania Secunda, and by the French a Province of the Kingdom of Eaſt France or Auſtraſia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault under the Governance and Command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts lying towards the Sea, and terribly infeſted with the Depredations of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of ſome principal Officers, whom they called Lords Wardens of the Marches. Theodebert Son of Theodorick the firſt King of Auſtraſia, accompanied with Utilo a Boiarian Prince, having repulſed theſe common Robbers, obtained for Utilo, of his Father, the command of thoſe Countries, and poſſeſſion of a great part of them alſo, by the Title of Lord Marqueſs of Antwerp: the fourth from whom, called Arnulph, was the firſt Maior of the Palace (of this Houſe) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Succeſſors. By Dagobert the firſt, ſole King of the French, that part of this Country which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them, the whole Eſtate was conferred on Anſegiſus, the Son of Arnulph, with the Title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and atchievements of ſo many of them as were Maiors of the Palace we have already ſeen when we were in France. The whole Succeſſion follows here in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Marqueſſes of Antwerp and Dukes of BRABANT of the German or Boiarian Race.

1. Utilo, Son of Theodore, the firſt Duke, and Nephew of Aldiagerius, the laſt King of the Boiarians.

2. Hugopert, Son of Utilo.

563 3. Aſopert, the Son of Hugopert, and Husband of Plythilda, Daughter of Clotaire the firſt of France.

579 4. Arnoldus, the Son of Aſopert.

601 5. Arnulph, Son of Arnoldus, the firſt Maior of the Palace of this Family.

641 6. Anſegiſus, Son of Arnulphus, Marqueſs of Antwerp, and Maior of the Palace, by Dagobert the firſt made Duke of Brabant.

679 7. Pepin, ſurnamed the Fat, Son of Anſegiſus, Succeſſor to his Father in his Honours, Offices and Eſtates, and was herein ſucceeded by 714 8. Charles, the baſe Son of Pepin, for his valiant acts ſurnamed Martel, there being no lawful Iſſue of his Father living.

741 9. Pepin II. ſurnamed the Short, Son of Charles Martel, having managed the Affairs of France from the death of his Father for the ſpace of ten years, uſurped the Kingdom, and was ſolemnly crowned King at Soiſſons by Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz, on May-day, An. 751. The Dukedom of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the diviſion of the French Empire among the Sons and Nephews of Lewis the Godly; when it was made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorrain. Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Meuſe betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, (each taking to themſelves the Title of Kings of Lorrain) it was by Lotharius the 3. of France, in whoſe ſhare it lay, conferred on Charles his younger Brother, together with the Title of the Duke of Brabant. But indeed this Donation proved of little worth, the greateſt part hereof, together with the reſt of that part of the Kingdom of Lorrain which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperor Otho the 2. and by him added to the Empire. And yet this alſo fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Couſin-german to this Otho the 2. by the Lady Gerburg, (Siſter of Otho the 1. and Wife of Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine, K. of France, the Father of Charles) was by him inveſted into the great Dukedom of Lorrain, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedoms of Lorrain, Gulick and Brabant, with the Lands of Luyck, with parts of the Lands of Triers and Colen. Brabant at that time had the name of Baſs (or Low) Lorrain, and as in memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal and civil Cauſes held at Gennap (one of the Franks or Market-Towns of Brabant) called La Court de Lorrain to this day. An Eſtate firſt erected, as before is ſaid, by the Emperor Otho the 2. who giving it to the ſaid Charles of France, reſerved out of it, as a Dower for his ſaid Aunt Gerburg, the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Bruxels, Nivelle and Antwerp, lying on the Marches of his Dominions towards France, which (with reference perhaps to the old Marquiſate of Antwerp) he honoured with the title of Marquiſate of the holy Empire. An. 981. Gerburg, the Siſter and Heir of Otho, the Son of Charles above mentioned, being put beſides her hopes of that fair Inheritance by her Brother Otho, (who gave it to Geoffrey of Ardenne) ſucceeded her Grandmother, the firſt Gerburg, in the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Nivelle, and Bruxels, which ſhe conveyed in Marriage to Lambert, one of the Sons of Reyner of Hainault, with the Title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his Son, having made himſelf Maſter of Antwerp alſo, was by that means poſſeſſed of the whole Marquiſate, but ſtill retained the Title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having inlarged the bounds of his Dominions by the Conqueſt of the reſt of this Country, Godfrey & Baldwin. Dukes of Lorrain, being then abſent in the Wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperour Henry the fifth (whoſe Siſter he married) created the firſt Duke of Brabant. John, the firſt Duke of that name, added hereunto the Dutchie of Limbourg; and John the third, the Seignioury of Malines or Mechlin. How it became united to the Houſe of Burgundy is to be ſeen in the enſuing Catalogue of

1004 1. Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier Earl of Hainault, made the firſt Earl of Lovain, in right of Gerburg.

1015 2. Henry the Son of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquiſate of the holy Empire.

1046 3. Lambert II. Son of Henry.

1054 4. Henry II. Son of Lambert the ſecond.

1068 5. Henry III. Son of Henry the ſecond.

6. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third.

1096 7. Godfrey, ſurnamed Barbatus, Brother of Henry the fourth, in right of his deſcent from Charles Duke of Lorrain challenged the Country, and recovered it from the Houſe of Ardenne; and finally by the Emperour Henry the fifth was created the firſt Duke of Brabant, Anno 1108. Father of Adelize, the ſecond Wife of our Henry the firſt, and of Joſceline de Lovain, the Progenitor of the (now) Earl of Northumberland.

1140 8. Godfrey or Geofrey II. Son of Godfrey.

1143 9. Godfrey or Geofry III. Son of Godfrey the 2.

1183 10. Henry V. Son of Godfrey the third.

1230 11. Henry VI. ſurnamed the Good, Son of Henry the fifth.

1247 12. Henry VII. ſurnamed the Magnanimous, by whoſe Marriage with Sophia, Daughter of Lewis the ſixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, the Lantgravedom of Haſſia came into this Houſe, inveſted in it in the perſon of Henry his Son by the ſaid Sophia.

1260 13. John, Son of Henry the ſeventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and deſtroyed the potent Family of the Bertholds: his younger Brother Henry, by another Venter, ſucceeding in Haſſia.

14. John II. Son of John the firſt, bought of the Biſhop of Liege the moyety or one half of Mechlin.

1312 15. John III. Son of John the ſecond, added the whole Eſtate of Mechlin to the Dukedom of Brabant.

1355 16. Joan, the eldeſt Daughter of John the third, married to Wenceſlaus the firſt Duke of Luxemburg, but died without Iſſue.

1406 17. Anthony of Burgogne, Son of Philip the Hardy and the Lady Margaret his Wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders and of Margaret the Siſter and Heir of Joan, after the death of the ſaid Wenceſlaus and Joan his Wife, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder Brother John giving way unto it, at the requeſt of their great Aunt Joan, the Proprietary of it.

1415 18. John IV. Son of Anthony by his firſt Wife Joan, Daughter of Waleran Earl of Saint Paul.

1426 19. Philip, the ſecond Son of Anthony, and Brother of John the 4.

1430 20. Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son and Heir of John Duke of Burgundy, elder Brother of Anthony, on the death of his two Couſin-germans, John and Philip, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, as the direct Heir of the Lady Margaret, Wife to Lewis de Malain, and Daughter of John the third, the laſt Duke of Brabant of the Houſe of Lovain. Of whoſe Succeſſors more in another place.

The Arms hereof are Sable, a Lion Or.

12. HOLLAND. 13. ZELAND.
14. WEST-FRIESLAND.

HAving thus ſpoken of thoſe Provinces which ſtill continue in ſubjection to the K. of Spain, (except ſome few Towns in Flanders and Brabant before mentioned,) let us next look on thoſe which have withdrawn their Obedience from him; beginning firſt with Holland and its Appendices, as of more power and conſideration than all the reſt. Which though diſtinct Provinces, and acting in their ſeveral capacities at the preſent time: yet having been always under the Command of the ſame Princes, they muſt be joined together in the Story of them, but ſhall be ſeverally handled as to the Chorography.

HOLLAND hath on the Eaſt the Zuider-See, Vtrecht and ſome part of Gelderland, on the Weſt and North the German Ocean, on the South the Iſlands of Zeland and ſome part of Brabant. So called, as ſome think, but with little reaſon, quaſi Holt land, that is to ſay a woody Country; as others, quaſi Hollow-land, from the Bogs and Mariſhes and unſound footing on the ſame; and ſome will have it called ſo quaſi Hoy land, from the great quantity of Hay. But the learned Junius, not reliſhing any of the three, conceives that both this Country and the Iſles of Zeland, being planted by ſome Colonies of Danes and Normans, (at the time of the Irruption of thoſe Northern Nations) were called thus with reference to Seland and Oeland, two Iſlands of the Baltick Sea, out of which they came. The Reader hath good choice, and may pleaſe himſelf.

The Country for the moſt part lieth very low, inſomuch that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out the Sea, and to reſtrain the Rivers within their bounds; ſo that in many places one may ſee the Sea far above the Land, and yet repulſed with thoſe Banks: and it is withal ſo fenny and full of Mariſhes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable Dikes and Chanels, to make it firm Land, and fit for dwelling; yet not ſo firm to bear either Trees or much Grain. But ſuch is the Induſtry of the people and Trade they drive, that having little or no Corn of their own growth, they do provide themſelves elſewhere; not only ſufficient for their own ſpending, but wherewith to ſupply their neighbours: having no Timber of their own, they ſpend more Timber in building Ships and fencing their Water-courſes than any Country in the World: having no Wine, they drink more than the people of the Country where it groweth naturally: and finally, having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more Cloth of both ſorts than all the Countries in the world, except France and England.

The preſent Inhabitants are generally given to Seafaring lives, ſo that it is thought that in Holland, Zeland, and Weſt-Frieſeland, there are 2500 Ships of war and burthen. The Women are for the moſt part laborious in making Stuffs. Nay, you will hardly ſee a Child of four years of age that is not kept to work, and made to earn its own living; to the great commendation of their Government. The greateſt of their natural Commodities is Butter and Cheeſe; of which, beſides that infinite plenty which they ſpend in their own Houſes, and amongſt their Garriſons and Ships, they ſell as much unto other Countries as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatneſs of their Fiſh-trade, ſpoken of before, they are grown ſo wealthy on the Land, and ſo powerful at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands, ſo now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a League againſt the Spaniard.

The whole Compaſs of it is no more than 180 miles, no part thereof being diſtant from the Sea above three hours journey: and yet within that narrow Circuit there are contained no fewer than 23 walled Towns and 400 Villages; ſome ſituate in North and others in South-Holland, as it ſtands divided. In South-Holland (being that part hereof that lieth next to Zeland and the middle Chanel of the Rhene paſſing from Vtrecht unto Leyden) the principal Towns are, 1. Dort, (in Latine Dordrectum) formerly the Staple for Rheniſh Wines, a large, rich, and well-peopled Town, anciently joined to the firm Land, but in the year 1421 rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Iſland; of great command upon the Traffick of the Maes and the Wael, upon whoſe Confluence it ſtands, but of moſt note in theſe later times for an Aſſembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvin's Doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Univerſal Grace and Predeſtination, Anno 1618. 2. Gorchum, ſituate on the Wael, where it meeteth with the Linge: a Town of great Trade and Riches, by reaſon of a daily Market of Cheeſe and Butter, brought hither in very great quantity; beautified anciently with a ſtrong Caſtle and a fair Church, from the Steeple whereof one may behold 22 walled Towns, beſides an infinite number of Villages. The Country is round about it called by that people Van Arckel, or the Land of Hercules, from an opinion that Hercules the German did there appoint his Camp, or rather from ſome Temple dedicated to him, in the place whereof the Lords of this Tract, who from hence took the name of Arckel, (Arcueli they are called in our Latine Writers) founded a Church unto the honour of the Virgin Mary, in the time of Thierrie the 2. Earl of Holland, by whom they were firſt ſetled in this Country. And here they flouriſhed as Lords of Gorchum, Leerdam, and the parts adjoining, till the year 1416; when falling to John L. of Egmond, by Mary his Wife, Daughter of John of Arckellandt, the laſt Lord hereof, and Mother of Arnold of Egmond D. of Geldres, it was by him ſold to William the 6. Earl of Holland, and ſo again united unto that Eſtate. 3. Rotterdam, ſeated on a Dike or Chanel called the Rotter, not far from which at a place named Rempen, the Leck, one of the three main branches of the Rhene, falleth into the Maes: a ſtrong, fair, and well-traded Port: the birth-place of the learned Eraſmus. 4. Schoonhoven, ſituate on the Leck, a fair Town, having a commodious Haven. 5. Goude, one of the ſix principal Towns of Holland, rich and well fortified, ſeated on the River called Yſſel, which riſing about Yſſelſtein, ſpoken of anon, falleth into the Leck at a place called Yſſelmond, and therefore different from the branch of the Rhene ſo called, which giveth name to Over-Yſſel. On the ſame River alſo ſtand, 6. Oudwater, and 7. Yſſelſtein: this laſt belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the firſt of great Trade for making Cables and Cords for ſhipping. 8. Lyden, or Lugdunum Batavorum, an Univerſity, founded Anno 1564. The Town conſiſteth of 41 Iſlands, to which they paſs partly by Boats, partly by Bridges, whereof there are 144, and of them 104 builded with Stone. Here is in this Town a Caſtle, ſaid to have been built by Hengiſt the Saxon at his return out of England. And not far off ſtood the famous Nunnery of Rainsburg, of the ſame nature with thoſe of Monts and Nivelle before deſcribed; ſo liberally endowed, that 2000 perſons did there daily receive relief. 9. Vianen, on the Leck, a Seignioury diſtinct from Holland, pertaining anciently to the Lords of Brederode: And ſo was alſo 10. Hueſden, a good old Town, once beautified with a fair Caſtle, and a goodly Territory, but belonging to the Earls of Cleve, of which Houſe it had Lords of its own, as knowledging no ſubjection to the Earls of Holland, from the year 850, or thereabouts, to the year 1290, at which time Thedorick the 9. of Cleve at a merry meeting transferred the Soveraignty thereof to Florence Earl of Holland, of that name the fifth. Finally, having continued in the poſſeſſion of 20 Lords of that Family, on the expiration of that Line in the perſon of John the 9. dying without Iſſue, Anno 1334. it was made a member of this Earldom (after ſome ſharp diſputes with the Dukes of Brabant, claiming it by a Reſignation of the laſt Lord John) by William of Bavaria, Earl of Holland and Hainault, Anno 1361, or thereabouts. 11. Leerdam, upon the River Linge, which together with Yſſelſtein, before mentioned, fell unto Philip Prince of Orange in right of his deſcent from the Earls of Bueren. 12. Delf, a Town of great Trade for Cloathing, but more by reaſon of the Cloth of England, brought thither in great quantities by the Engliſh Merchants, than for any great ſtore of their own making; by reaſon of the concourſe which that Trade brings with it, rich, large, and well-built, beautified with ſpacious Streets and goodly Churches; the birth-place of that monſtrous Heretick David George, who called himſelf King, and Chriſt immortal, as is before ſaid.

In that part thereof which is called North-Holland, lying betwixt the middle Chanel of the Rhene and the Zuider-See, the Towns or Cities of moſt importance are, 1. Alkmaer, encompaſſed with deep Fens and Mariſhes; a rich Town, in regard of the great plenty of Butter and Cheeſe which is made about it, more than in any place of Holland, and famous for the defeat which the Duke of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-Country Troubles, having with the loſs of 20000 of his own men forced Harlem, laid his Siege round about this Town. Had he left any way for the Souldiers to have fled thence, the Town had been abandoned: but having invironed them round, he put them to ſuch a reſolution, or deſperation, (chuſe you whether) that manfully they reſiſted three of his Aſſaults, and in the end made him depart with great loſs, as well of his Souldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amſterdam, a very fair Haven-Town, where divers times at one tide 1000 Ships of all ſorts have been ſeen to go out and in. So truly ſaid a modern Poet,

> Quod Tagus atque Hermus vehit, & Pactolus, in unum
> Verè hunc congeſtum dixeris eſſe locum.

> What Tagus, Hermus, and Pactolus bear,
> One would conjecture to be heap'd up here.

The people thereby are ſo rich, that if a Fleet of 300 Sail ſhould come into the Port fraught with all kind of Commodities, in five or ſix days they would be ready to buy all the Lading. Situate it is on the Gulf called the Tie, and the Dike or Chanel called Amſtel, whence it hath the name of Amſteldam, in Latine Amſtelodamum; built upon Piles like Venice, and reſembling it in ſo many points, that it may juſtly be called the Northern Venice. It was firſt fortified with Towers and Ramperts by Giſelbert of Amſtel, about 300 years agone: But being burnt through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled Anno 1482. Grown to this wealth ſince the diverting of the Trade from Antwerp hither, and for that cauſe inhabited by men of all Nations and of all Religions, and thoſe not only tolerated and connived at in private, but openly and freely exerciſed without any diſlike. A greater Confuſion (in my mind) than that of Babel; this being of Religions, that of Languages only. 3. Harlem, on the Lake called Harlem-meer, the greateſt Town of all Holland, and the ſecond for dignity; well built, and very pleaſantly ſituated amongſt many goodly Meadows, near a delightful Foreſt, and round about environed with wealthy Villages; famous for the invention of Printing, invented here, but perfected at Mentz in Higher Germany; the firſt Book which was ever printed being Tully's Offices. 4. Naerden, on the Zuider-See, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, held of the Earls of Holland by the Dukes of Brunſwick, to whom it anciently belonged. 5. Enchuiſen, on the very point of the Gulf of Zuider-See, oppoſite to Frieſeland, from which not diſtant above two leagues. A Town of great conſequence to the Prince of Orange in the firſt revolting of theſe Countries from the King of Spain. For ſiding with him in that war, and ſtanding conveniently to obſtruct the paſſages by Sea unto Amſterdam, it compelled that City in ſhort time, by ſtopping all ſupply of Victuals and other neceſſaries, to yield it ſelf unto the Prince. 6. Horn, on the ſame Gulf alſo, a rich Town, with a very good Haven, and of ſo great ſtrength by reaſon of the multitude of Dikes and Chanels which are round about it, that it ſeems impregnable. 7. Edam, upon the ſame Gulf (of Zuider-See,) remarkable for the great number of ſhips which are built yearly in it, and an incredible number of the beſt Holland Cheeſes made in the Country round about it. 8. Medemblick, on the Ocean, ſeated in the beſt Country of Holland for the feeding of Cattel; unwalled, but enjoying all the Priviledges which a walled Town hath, and fortified with a right ſtrong Caſtle.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague, or 's Graven Hague, in Latine Haga Comitis, becauſe formerly the Court and Reſidence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautiful Palace founded by Earl William King of the Romans, and therein a choice and excellent Library gathered together by John Haire a Canon Regular of this place, and by him given to Charles the fifth. In former time the Reſidence of the Council for the Province of Holland; as it is now of the Commiſſioners or Delegates of the Confederate Provinces, called by the name of the States General. It is now much increaſed in Buildings of what it was; and yet ſo great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, that it then contained 2000 houſholds. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as deſiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Europe, than the ſecond City. The other Villages of note, 2. Egmond, 3. Brederode, 4. Waſſenaer, which anciently gave names to three noble Families; of which none ſo illuſtrious and renowned as that of Egmond, deſcended lineally from Radbold, Son of Adgillis the King of the Friſons, the firſt Lord of Egmond, who died Anno 791. Advanced by Marriages to the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Seigniouries of Yſſelſtein and Bueren. And finally they were made Earls of Egmond by Maximilian the Emperour, Anno 1592. But both this Houſe and that of Waſſenaer being now extinct, there is none left but that of Brederode, for ought I can learn. Near to the laſt ſtood the famous Fortreſs called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great Battel upon this Shore. For making ſhew of a Voyage into Britain, to ſubdue that Iſland, he borded his Galley, embattelled his Souldiers, cauſed his Trumpets to ſound, gave them the Signal, and then commanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortreſs was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea; the Ruines whereof at a dead low water are ſtill to be ſeen.

Beſides theſe places on the firm Land or Continent, there are ſome Iſlands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the general name of Voorn, becauſe ſituate directly againſt Holland, Voorn ſignifying as much as before, or in old Engliſh bevorne; but known by their diſtinct and more proper names of Somerſdike, 2 Gaurede, 3. Pierſcbille, ſo called of their principal Towns, and 4. Voorn ſpecially ſo named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitful Soil, and plentiful of moſt ſorts of Grain. The principal Towns whereof are 1. Briel, (which we call the Brill) a ſtrong Town, and the firſt that revolted againſt the Spaniard, Anno 1572. Cautionary to the Engliſh with the Town of Fluſhing; choſen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the paſſage to Gertruydenberg and the reſt of Brabant, as alſo to Delf, Dort, and Rotterdam, the greateſt Towns of Trade in the South of Holland. 2. Gervliet, a ſmall Town, but having a Juriſdiction over many Villages. There are alſo on the North ſide of Holland the Iſles of Wierengen and Texel; of which little memorable, but that the laſt is furniſhed with a ſafe and capacious Bay for receipt of Shipping.

One ſpecial accident concerning Holland I cannot over-paſs in ſilence, namely, how Margaret Counteſs of Hennenberg, and Siſter to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half Males, the other Females, the odd one an Hermaphrodite; all chriſtned at the Church of Loosduynen, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Baſins ſtill to be ſeen in the ſaid Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht; all which immediately after died, and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it ſelf, as a State diſtinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND conſiſteth of ſeven Iſlands, the remainder of 18, the reſt whereof the Sea hath ſwallowed, and in them 300 inhabited Towns. It is ſevered from Flanders with the left branch or arm of the Scheld, which they call Honte, and on the Eaſt from Brabant with the right branch of the ſaid River, which ſtill keeps his name; on the North from Holland with the Gulf called the Vlack, and on the Weſt with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England. So called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Sea and Land; but, as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Iſland of Denmark, as before was noted.

The Country is generally more fruitful than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent Corn, plenty of Coriander, and abundance of Madder, uſed in Dying: the Soil alſo is very rich in Paſture, but low and mariſhy, which makes the Air to be very unhealthy: and the whole deſtitute both of Freſh water and Wood; the want of which laſt is ſupplied with Coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongſt themſelves, but very ſparingly, for fear of weakning the Sea-banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns and 100 Villages. The Iſlands which remain are commonly divided into the Weſtern, and the Eaſtern, according as they lie with reference to the River Scheld. The Weſtern Iſlands are four in number: That is to ſay,

1. WALCHEREN, (Valachria in Latine) lying to the North of Sceluys in Flanders, the richeſt and moſt populous of all this Province, in compaſs 10 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Middleburg, ſeated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the Streets ſpacious, the Houſes and Churches well built, inhabited by wealthy Merchants and induſtrious Tradeſmen, and of late times (ſince the removing of the Engliſh Trade from Antwerp) a moſt flouriſhing Empory. So called becauſe built in the midſt of the Iſland; or becauſe built (as ſaith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum. 2. Fluſhing, of great note for its good Port and invincible ſtrength. One of the firſt Towns which the Low-Country men took from the Spaniards, by the diligence of Voorſt a Seaman, and Monſieur de Berland, then the Bayliff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the Engliſh as a Town of Caution; the firſt Governour of it being the renowned Sir Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whoſe licenſe no Ship can paſs either to or from the City of Antwerp; inſomuch that if the Duke of Alva in the beginning of his Government had beſtowed that pains in the fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns as he did in the ſtrengthning Antwerp and ſome Midland Cities, he had in all probability hindred the remedileſs Revolt of theſe flouriſhing Countries. Not far off ſtandeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once Cautionary to the Engliſh alſo, together with the Briel, the chief Town in the Iſle of Voorn, (an Iſle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniard Anno 1572, made Cautionary to Queen Elizabeth Anno 1585, and finally ſurrendred by King James to the States United Anno 1616, Robert Lord Liſle, (afterwards created Earl of Leiceſter) the Brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Fluſhing. 3. Ramne, or Armuyden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodlieſt and moſt frequented Havens in all the World; out of which one may ſometimes ſee 500 Sail of Ships of great burthen ſet forwards on their Voyages to ſeveral parts. 4. Vere or Camfere, ſeated in the North part of the Iſland, which once gave Title to a Marqueſs, and from the which the noble Family of the Veres (now, and of long time, Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that ſo many of that Family have ventured their Eſtates and lives in the Wars of this Country, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their primitive Parent, from whence they were tranſplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVERLAND, ſituate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greateſt of the Iſles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compaſs, but now much diminiſhed by the rage and fury of the Sea, by which the Town and Seignioury of Borſuele, with all the Countries round about it, was ſwallowed up Anno 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleaſant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beaſts for Hawking and Hunting. Chief Towns here are 1. Romerſwale, ſeated on the Eaſt toward Bergen op Zoome, ſevered at the ſame time from the reſt of the Iſland, and made an Iſland of it ſelf, defended with continual charge from following the ſad fate of the Town of Borſule. 2 Goes, or Tergoes, on the Northern Coaſt, a ſtrong Town, well priviledged, and the only walled Town in all the Iſland.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Iſle of Schowen, in former times eſteemed the Paradiſe of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town called Chort Cheen, but ſo deſtroyed by the Sea-breach ſpoken of before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFERSDIKE, lying between the two Beverlands, the ſmalleſt of the Weſtern Iſlands, as having in it no more than two Villages, but repleniſhed with good ſtore of Paſture.

And theſe are all which fall in the diviſion of the Weſtern Iſlands, ſo called becauſe they lie Weſtward of the River Scheld; as thoſe which they call the Eaſtern Iſlands, on the Eaſt thereof. Of which laſt there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the South-weſt of Holland, ſo near unto North Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one ſhore to the other: but now the Sea hath ſet them at a greater diſtance. It containeth in compaſs ſix Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Zirickzee, the ancienteſt Town of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with Beach, yet ſtill reputed for the ſecond Town of all the Province: the whole Trade thereof conſiſting in Salt and Madder, of which it yields good plenty. Moſt famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius, that renowned Philoſopher and Phyſician. 2. Brouwers-Haven, inhabited only by Fiſhermen, not elſe remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, ſo named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, ſituate between Schowen and Tolen, in compaſs about 4 Dutch miles. It hath no good Town in it, but only Country-Villages and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, Anno 1530, but by the induſtry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy and the Lord of Boſoreres in Flanders recovered again, and at the exceſſive charge of the people hitherto preſerved.

3. TOLEN, ſo called from the chief Town of the Iſland, where the Earls Toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name, is ſituate over againſt the North-weſt of Brabant, from thence disjoyned by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the ſecond Town of note being called S. Martins Dike, walled, but not otherwiſe conſiderable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland are the Arms thereof, being Or, a Lion Gules riſing out of a Sea wavie Argent and Azure.

WEST-FRIESLAND, hath on the Eaſt Groening-land and a part of Weſtphalen in High Germany, on the South Over-Yſſell and the Zuider-See, on the North and Weſt the main Ocean. The Country is generally mooriſh and full of Fens, unapt for Corn, but yielding great ſtore of Paſturage: which Mooriſhneſs of the ground makes the Air very foggy and unhealthy; nor have they any Fewel wherewith to rectifie it, (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Walden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which adds but little to the ſweetneſs of an unſound Air. Nor are they better ſtored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leewars, the want of which is ſupplied by great Chanels in moſt places, which do not only drain the Marſhes, but ſupply them with water. Which notwithſtanding, their Paſtures do afford them a good breed of Horſes fit for ſervice; plenty of Beeves both great and ſweet, the beſt in Europe, next theſe of England; and thoſe in ſuch a large increaſe, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three Lambs at a time.

The Country is divided into three parts. In the firſt part, called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are, 1. Harlingen, an Haven-Town upon the Ocean, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Hindelopen, on the ſame Coaſt alſo. 3. Staveren, an Hanſe-Town, oppoſite to Enchuiſen in Holland, the Town decayed, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which ſecures the Haven. 4. Franeker, a new Univerſity, or a Schola Illuſtris, as they call it. 5. Sneck, in a low and inconvenient ſituation; but both for largeneſs and beauty the beſt in this part of the Province, and the ſecond in eſteem of all the Country. In OSTERGOE, or the Eaſt part, lying towards Groening-land, the Towns of moſt note are, 6. Leewarden, ſituate on the hinder Leewars the prime Town of Weſt-Frieſland, and honoured with the Supreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lieth no Appeal: a rich Town, well built, and ſtrongly fortified. 7. Dockum, bordering upon Groening, the birth-place of Gemma Friſius. In SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of Seven Foreſts, ſo called from ſo many ſmall Foreſts joyning near together, is no Town of note, being long time a Wood land Country, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs, 345.

To this Province belongeth the Iſle of Schelink, the Shores whereof are plentifully ſtored with Dog-fiſh, took by the Inhabitants in this manner: The men of the Iſland attire themſelves with Beaſts Skins, and then fall to dancing; with which ſport the Fiſh being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; Nets being pitched preſently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their diſguiſes, and the frighted Fiſh haſtning towards the Sea are caught in the Toyls.

Touching the Friſons, heretofore poſſeſſed of this Country, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Eaſt-Frieſland, poſſeſſed alſo by them, and ſtill continuing in the quality of a Free Eſtate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Frieſland are Azure, ſemy of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces were the Batavi and Caninfates, inhabiting the Iſland of the Rhene ſituate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the Wael, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and ſome part of Geldres; the Friſii, dwelling in Weſt-Frieſland and the North of Holand; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Iſles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald theſe Countries, being almoſt unpeopled by the Norman Piracies, were given to Thierrie, Son of Sigebert, a Prince of Aquitain, with the Title of Earl: his Succeſſors acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulph the 4. Earl, who turned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the Houſe of Hainault, and in William the 3. to that of Bavaria; added to the Eſtates of the Dukes of Burgundy in the perſon of Duke Philip the good, as appeareth by this Succeſſion of

The Earls of HOLLAND, ZELAND, and Lords of WEST-FRIESLAND.

863	1.	Thierrie or Theodorie of Aquitain, the firſt Earl, &c.
903	2.	Thierrie II. Son of Thierrick the 1.
	3.	Thierrie III. the Son of Theodorick the 2.
938	4.	Arnulph who made firſt this Eſtate to be held of the Empire; ſlain in a War againſt the Friſons. From Sigefride the ſecond Son of this Arnulph came the Lords of Brederode, advanced by Marriages to the Seigniouries of Genep and Vianen, and many other fair Eſtates both in Brabant and Holland.
993	5.	Thierrie IV. Son of Arnulph.
1039	6	Thierrie V. Son of Theodorick the 4.
1048	7.	Florence, Brother of Thierrie the 5.
1062	8.	Thierrie VI. Son of Florence, in whoſe Minority the Eſtate of Holland was uſurped by Godfrey le Boſſu Duke of Lorrain, by ſome accompted of as an Earl hereof.
1092	9.	Florence II. ſurnamed the Fat, Son of Thierrie the 6.

1123 10. Thierrie VII. who tamed the ſtomachs of the Friſons.

1163 11. Florence III. a companion of Frederick Barbaroſſa in the Wars of the Holy Land.

1190 12. Thierrie VIII. Son to Florence the 3.

1223 14. Florence IV. Son of William.

1235 15. William II. Son of Florence the 4. elected and crowned King of the Romans; ſlain in a War againſt the Friſons.

1255 16. Florence the V. the firſt, as ſome write, who called himſelf Earl of Zeland: the Title to thoſe Iſlands, formerly queſtioned by the Flemings being relinquiſhed to him on his Marriage with Beatrix, the Daughter of Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders.

1296 17. John, the Son of Florence the 5. ſubdued the rebellious Friſons; the laſt of the male-iſſue of Thierrie of Aquitian.

Earls of HAINAULT, HOLLAND, &c.

1300 18. John of Aveſnes, Earl of Hainault, Son of John of Aveſnes Earl of Hainault, and of the Lady Aleide, Siſter of William the 2. and Daughter of Florence the 4. ſucceeded as next Heir in the Earldom of Holland, &c.

1305 19. William III. ſirnamed the Good, Father of the Lady Philippa, Wife of our Edward the 3.

1337 20. William IV. of Holland, and the II. of Hainault, ſlain in a War againſt the Friſons.

1351 22. William V. ſecond Son of Lewis and Margaret, (his elder Brother Steven ſucceeding in Bavaria) in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Coheir of Henry Duke of Lancaſter, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Leiceſter.

1377 23. Albert, the younger Brother of William the fifth, fortunate in his Wars againſt the Friſons, Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c.

1404 24. William VI. Earl of Oſternand, and by that name admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2. eldeſt Son of Albert.

1417 25. Jaqueline, only Daughter of Earl William the ſixth, firſt married to John the 4. Duke of Brabant, the Son of Anthony of Bourgogne; from whom divorced under colour of Conſanguinity, ſhe was married after to Humfrey Duke of Glouceſter, and then to Frank of Borſelles, a private Gentleman: being unworthily handled by Duke John of Burgundy, ſhe ſurrendred her Eſtates to Duke Philip the Good.

26. Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son of John Duke of Burgundy and of the Lady Margaret Siſter of Earl William the ſixth, and Daughter of Albert, Earls of Hainault, Holland, &c. ſucceeded on the Reſignation of the Lady Jaqueline, his Couſin-german, tranſporting theſe Eſtates to the Houſe of Burgundy. His Succeſſours we ſhall meet with ſhortly in another place.

15. UTRECHT. 16. OVER-YSSELL.

THE Biſhoprick of UTRECHT, I mean the temporal Juriſdiction and Eſtate thereof, contained once all that Tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Utrecht, Over-Yſſel, and Groening. But Groening was long ſince diſmembred. Utrecht and Over-Yſſel remaining parts thereof till the year 1528, then added to the reſt of the Belgick Provinces by Charles the 5.

UTRECHT hath on the Eaſt Gelderland, on the Weſt, North and South, environed with Holland. The Country is very fruitful, much drier than Holland, and ſo fitter for all ſorts of Grain. It containeth 70 Villages, and 5 walled Towns: that is to ſay, 1. Wyck at Duerſtede, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene, where it diverteth into the Leck; well built, and fortified anciently with a good Caſtle; ſuppoſed to be the Batavodurum ſpoken of by Tacitus, the Manſion at that time of the Second Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the ſame branch or Chanel, whence it hath the name: about which is digged abundance of Turf for fewel. 3. Amersfort, on the River Ems, (called in Latine Amiſus) a fair Town, and well peopled. 4. Montfort, upon the Yſſell, pleaſantly ſeated, and of great ſtrength, as being anciently a Frontier-town againſt the Hollanders. 5. Utrecht, ſituate on the middle Chanel of the Rhene: firſt called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome; but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum, (or Ultrajectum, we now call it Utrecht) becauſe there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The Town is large, beautiful, and very ſumptuouſly built, having in it many goodly Churches, of which 5 were anciently Collegiate; beſides two famous Monaſteries of noble Women, ſuch as thoſe ſpoken of elſewhere: the private houſes well contrived, moſt of them having goodly Cellers, vaulted with wonderful art and skill, to which the people may reſort in all times of danger. Sometimes the Seat-Royal of Radbold, King of the Friſons, then of the Biſhops; honoured of old with a Juridical reſort for the parts adjoyning, and now the principal of this Province. A City ſo miraculouſly ſeated amongſt walled Towns, that a man may go from hence in one day to any one of 50 walled Towns or Cities, thence equally diſtant; or to any one of 26 Towns to Dinner, and come home to bed.

OVER-YSSELL, in Latine Tranſiſalana, ſo named from its ſituation beyond the Yſſell, is bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, on the Weſt with the Zuider-See, on the North with Weſt-Frieſland, on the South with Gelderland. The Country is very plain and without Hills, but wet and mooriſh, affording excellent good Paſturage, and not defective in Corn. It is divided into three parts, that is to ſay, Twent, confining upon Weſtphalen; Yſſelland, on the River Yſſell; and Drent, beyond the River Vecht: in all which are contained 11 Towns, and 100 Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Deventer, on the River Yſſell, ſtrong and well fortified, and withal beautiful and well peopled; an Hanſe-Town, and the chief of all this Province; firſt taken for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter, then Governour of thoſe Countries for Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1586, treacherouſly re-yielded to the Spaniard by by Sir William Stanley, but in the year 1590 again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, ſtanding on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double Ditch and very ſtrong Ramparts, an Hanſe-Town; as is alſo 3. Campen, ſituate on the left Shore and fall of the Yſſell into the Zuider-See, a fair and large Town, and of very great ſtrength by reaſon of thoſe inacceſſible Mariſhes among which it is ſituate. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Yſſel-land, and by ſome Saland, by whom (erroneouſly) it is ſuppoſed to be the Country of the ancient Salii. In that part hereof which is called Twent we have the Towns of 4. Oldenzeel, 5. Enſchede, 6. Delden, 7. Almeloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drent, the Town and Caſtle of Vallenhoven, ſtanding upon the Zuider-See, well ſerved with all ſorts of Victuals, and for that cauſe made the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour and ſupream Council for the whole Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe two Provinces were ſome parts of the Batavi and Friſii minores, for that of Vtrecht; the Bructeri and (as ſome ſay) the Salii in Over-Yſſel. Both Provinces belonging anciently to the Epiſcopal See of Vtrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great Lands and Territories; the firſt Biſhop being Willibald an Engliſh-man, who converted theſe parts to Chriſtianity. His Succeſſors grew to ſo great power that they were able to bring 40000 men into the Field, and with great courage did maintain their Eſtate and Patrimony againſt the encroaching Earls of Holland. But at the laſt, having continued for the ſpace of 900 years, Henry of Bavaria Biſhop hereof, being extreamly diſtreſſed with War by the Duke of Geldres, and driven out of the City of Vtrecht by his own Subjects, (perhaps upon ſome humour of Reformation) alienated all the Temporalities of his Biſhoprick to Charles the fifth, Anno 1527, and the next year the Imperialiſts by one of the Factions were let into Vtrecht; at what time both the Eſtates of the Country and Pope Clement the 7. confirmed the Alienation made by the Biſhop. After which ſolemn Acts of theirs, the Emperour cauſed himſelf to be inveſted in this Eſtate by the States of the Empire, (for Vtrecht was of old an Imperial Fief,) and, for the better Government and Adminiſtration of it, divided it into two Provinces, as it ſtill continueth. But what this Biſhop loſt in Power, his Succeſſors not long after gained in Title; the Biſhop of Vtrecht being made an Archbiſhop or Metropolitan Anno 1561. But by reaſon of the change of Religion, which was then working, and the falling off of theſe Countries, which ſoon after followed, he had but little joy in his new Preferment.

17. GELDERLAND. 18. ZVTPHEN, and 19. GROENING.

THE Dukedom of Gelderland, at ſuch time as it was firſt taken in by Charles the fifth, contained under it the Dutchie of Geldres properly & ſpecially ſo called, the Earldom of Zutphen, & the Town & Seigniory of Groening; held by diſtinct Titles, and governed ever ſince their union with the Belgick Provinces as diſtinct Eſtates.

GELDERLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Cleveland and the Earldom of Zutphen, on the Weſt with Holland and Vtrecht, on the North with Over-Yſſel and the Zuider-See, and on the South with Brabant and the Land of Gulick. The Country is flat, having few Hills in it, but may pleaſant and commodious Woods, eſpecially that called Echterwaldt, of Corn and Cattel very fruitful.

The whole Country is generally divided into two parts. 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-See, the middle Chanel of the Rhene, and the Yſſel; the barrener of the two, and the worſe inhabited; the people hereof preferring Health before Wealth, as in other places; but affording a more pure Air, and a pleaſanter dwelling than the other; the Woods and Foreſts well repleniſhed with moſt kinds of Game. The Betuwe (ſo called of the Batavi, who poſſeſſed theſe parts) intercepted betwixt the ſaid middle Chanel of the Rhene and the Wael, exceedingly fruitfull in Corn, and of ſo excellent a Paſturage for the feeding of Cattel, that in the year 1570 there was a Gelderland Bull ſold in Antwerp which weighed 3200 pounds.

In both diviſions (not reckoning in the County of Zutphen) are contained 300 Villages, and 16 walled Towns, beſides ſome fortified of late ſince the Wars began. The chief whereof are, 1. Nimmegen, (in Latine Noviomagus) an Imperial City, ordained by Charles the Great to be one of the three Seiges of the Empire for theſe outer parts; the other two being Theonville in Luxemburg, and Aix or Aken in the Land of Gulick. And as a Town Imperial it had anciently the privilege of Coyning money: for which and other Freedoms or immunities indulged unto it, the people did no other Service to the Emperours than once a year to ſend a man to Aix or Aquiſgrave with a Glove full of Pepper. But the Town being ſold to the Gelderois by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans for 21000 Marks of Silver Anno 1248, the power of Coinage fell to thoſe Princes; and yet the Town was brought to do better ſervice than formerly it had done at Aken. The Town is high-mounted on the top of an Hill, the Wael, which is there large and deep, running at the foot of it; rich, great, and populous, having beſides the modern Fortifications an ancient Caſtle, with ſo goodly a Proſpect, that from thence one may behold the beſt part of the Country; built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Cæſar, to command thoſe parts. Under the Juriſdiction of it are, 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns, both ſituated on the Wael, both ſtrong, and having many rich Villages under their command; and 4. Ghent, on the Wael alſo, an unwalled Town, but having all the Privileges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the firſt meeting of the Wael and the Maes, ſtands the ſtrong Fort of S. Andrews, raiſed by the Archduke Albert to command the paſſage of thoſe Rivers; but in the year 1600 taken in by Maurice Count of Naſſau, (after Prince of Orange) and ever ſince garriſoned by the States to ſecure that paſſage. 5. Ruermond, ſeated on the mouth of the Ruer, where it falleth into the Maes; a beautiful and well-peopled City, ſtrong by Art and Nature, and ſeated in a fruitful Country, heretofore of the Dioceſs of Liege, (as Nimmegen anciently of Colen) but made a See Epiſcopal by King Philip the 2. Anno 1559. This is the ſecond capital City of Gelderland, and hath under the Juriſdiction of it 6. Venlo, a ſtrong Town on the Maes, in which the Duke of Cleve yielded himſelf to Charles the fifth, Anno 1543. 7. Geldres, heretofore of ſuch reputaion, that it gave name to all the Country; and well it doth deſerve to do ſo ſtill, being the only Town in all this Dukedom which neither firſt nor laſt hath been wone by the Holanders, but ſtill preſerved themſelves in their Obedience to their natural Princes. 8. Strael, or Straelen, a well-fortified piece; but which, according to the chances of War, hath often changed its Maſters. 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in thoſe times the Manſion of the tenth Legion, ſituate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Chanel, which Druſus to keep his Souldiers from idleneſs cauſed them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into thoſe of the Yſſel; called therefore by the Ancients Foſſa Druſiana, by the Moderns Yſſel-Dort. The Town is large and well built; the ordinary Reſidence heretofore of the Dukes of Gelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other ſupreme Courts of Juſtice. This is the third Capital City of Gelderland, (anciently of the Dioceſs of Vtrecht) and hath under the Juriſdiction of it, beſides divers Villages, 10. Wageninghen on the Rhene, the ſame which Tacitus calls Vada. 11. Harderwick on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground Anno 1503, but ſince re-edified, and now more ſtrong and beautiful than ever formerly. 12. Hatem, upon the Yſſell, a good Town of War, but not elſe obſervable.

Within the limits of this Dukedom ſtands the Town and County of Culemberg, erected into a County by King Philip the 2. by reaſon of the fair Territory which belonged unto it; formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Gelderland, but otherwiſe not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldom of Bueren, ſituate on the River Linge, having a ſtrong Caſtle anciently, and a goodly Territory, holden immediatly of the Empire, as a Fief Imperial. It was firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of Frederick Lord of Egmond, Brother's Son to Arnold of Egmond, the ſixth Duke of Geldres, created Earl of Bueren by Maximilian the firſt Anno 1492. which Frederick was Grandfather of the valiant Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Bueren, who died Anno 1549. after whoſe death it fell at laſt to Philip of Naſſau, eldeſt Son of William Prince of Orange, and of Anne the Daughter and Heir of the ſaid Maximilian upon the death of the ſaid Anne Anno 1551.

ZVTPHEN, accompted formerly for the fourth capital City of Gelderland, now a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, is bounded on the Eaſt with Weſtphalen, on the Weſt with that part of Gelderland which is called the Veluwe, on the North with Over-Yſſel, on the South with Cleveland. It containeth 8 walled Towns, beſides many Villages; that is to ſay. 1. Dotecum, ſtanding on the old Yſſell, riſing out of Weſtphalen. 2. Doesburg, where the old Yſſell falleth into the new Yſſell, or the Trench called Foſſa Druſiana, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Broncborſt, a County of it ſelf, which anciently had its particular Governour. 4. Lochem, upon the River Berckel. 5. Tſheerenberg, a Town and County. 6. Groll, taken by the Prince of Orange for the States Confederate Anno 1627. 7. Bredervord, a Town of War, and ſubject to the change of Maſters, as ſuch places are. 8. Zutphen, or Zuidſen, ſo called of the Southern ſituation of it amongſt the Fens, on the right Shore of the Yſſel, where it receiveth into it the River Berckel, which runs through the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick Edifices; a diſtinct State in Civil matters, but in Spiritual ſubject (in former times) to the Biſhop of Munſter. A thing obſervable and not to be parallel'd elſewhere, that the four chief Towns and Quarters of one Province only ſhould appertain (as here in Gelderland) to four ſeveral Dioceſes. Of which there may ſome reaſon be aſſigned for Zutphen, in regard it is a State more ancient than that of Gelderland it ſelf, and not depending anciently on the fortunes of it; united to it by the Marriage of Otho of Naſſau, the firſt Earl of Gelderland, with Sophia Daughter and Heir of Wickman the laſt Earl of Zutphen. So as this Earldom ended when that firſt began. After this it continued ſubject to the Earls and Dukes of Geldres, till the Revolt of Holland and the other Provinces from the King of Spain; at what time it was beſieged for the States by the Earl of Leiceſter: at the Siege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our Britiſh Epigrammatiſt thus verſifieth;

Digna legi ſcribis, facis & digniſſima ſcribi;
Scripta probant doctum te tua, facta probum.
Thou writ'ſt things worthy reading, and diſt do Things worthy writing too:
Thy Acts thy Valour ſhow,
And by thy Works we do thy Learning know.

And though upon the loſs of that gallant man (Nephew and Heir unto that Earl) the Siege was raiſed at the preſent; yet was it re-inforced again Anno 1590, and the Town then taken, continuing ever ſince in the Confederacy of the States United.

GROENING-LAND hath on the Eaſt Eaſt-Frieſland, on the Weſt Weſt-Frieſland, on the North the main Ocean, on the South Over-Yſſel; ſo wedged in as it were betwixt both Frieſlands, that ſome hold it to be but a part of the Weſt. It containeth under it the Country called the Ommelands, (corruptly for the Emmelands, as I conjecture, becauſe lying along the River Ems) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages. The chief thereof are. 1. Dam, near the Ems, bordering on Eaſt Frieſland. 2. Keykirk. 3. Old-Haven ſtanding on the Sea. 4. As for the Town of Groening it ſelf, it is rich, great, and very well built, ſituate amongſt divers ſmall Streams which run through it, and having alſo divers Chanels for conveiance of waters, which adds much to the ſafety and ſtrength thereof. A Town of great Juriſdiction both within and without, judging abſolutely without Appeals in cauſes both Civil and Criminal; in Spirituals ſubject heretofore to the Biſhop of Munſter, till made one of the new Biſhopricks by King Philip the ſecond Anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civil Cauſes had his Officer or Lieutenant there; yet in Criminal the Town was Sovereign, and granted Pardons as Sovereign of the whole Eſtate, paying to the Prince for all Duties yearly but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country anciently belonging to the Biſhops of Utrecht, for whoſe negligence in defending them they ſubmitted their Eſtate to the Duke of Gelderland. But the Dukes of Saxony laying ſome claim to it, diſturbed this agreement for a time; during which Ezardus the Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland poſſeſſed himſelf of it; but not able to make good his unjuſt poſſeſſion, ſold his eſtate therein to the Duke of Geldres Anno 1514, to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the year 1536 they put themſelves under the command of Charles the fifth, but with the reſervation of all their Priviledges and ancient Liberties; for preſervation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniard, they confederated with the reſt of the United States Anno 1594, and ſo ſtill continue.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe Countries were the Menapii and Sicambri, very valiant people, poſſeſſing Gelderland; and the majores Friſii, which were planted in Groening and the reſt of Frieſland. Of theſe the Sicambri were accompted the moſt valiant people, uniting with other Nations in the name of French, and by that name poſſeſſing with the reſt of thoſe Nations the mighty Empire of the Weſt. In the diviſion whereof by the poſterity of Charles the Great, theſe Countries were firſt part of the Kingdom of Auſtraſia or Eaſt-France, afterwards of the German Empire; governed at the firſt by Guardians or Protectors created by the people in the Reign of Charles the Bald, the two firſt being Wickard and Lupold (or Leopold,) two Brethren, who fixing their chief Seat in the Caſtle of Geldres, occaſioned the whole Country to be called Gelderland. But they and their Succeſſors, by what name or title ſoever called, were in effect but Provincial Officers, accomptable to the Emperours for their Adminiſtration; the firſt free prince hereof being Otho of Naſſau, who having to his firſt Wife the Lady Aleide, Daughter of Wickard, the laſt Guardian, was by the Emperour Henry the third made firſt Earl of Gelderland adding thereto the State of Zutphen by a ſecond Marriage, as is ſaid before. In Rainold the ninth Earl it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1339. Sold by Duke Arnold (juſtly incenſed at his ungracious Son Adolph) to Charles Duke of Burgundy for 92000 Florens of ready money and an annual Penſion, Anno 1472. But notwithſtanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charles) poſſeſſed himſelf of it, and left it unto Charles his Son, who finally ſurrendred it unto Charles the fifth Anno 1547.

Earls

Earls and Dukes of GELDERLAND.

1079 1. Otho of Naſſau, the firſt Earl.

2. Gerard the Son of Otho by his firſt Wife Alcide.

1131 3. Henry, the Son of Gerard.

1162 4. Gerard II. Son of Henry.

1180 5. Otho II. Brother of Gerard.

1202 6. Gerard III. Son of Otho 2.

1229 7. Otho III. Son of Gerard, who walled the Towns of Ruermond, Arnhem, Bomel, Goch, Wageningen, and Harderwick.

1271 8. Rainold, Son of Otho 3. taken and impriſoned till his death by 1326 9. Rainold II. his own Son, created the firſt Duke of Geldres by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria at Francfort, Anno 1339, liberal to the Poor, and a great Patron of the Muſes.

1343 10. Rainold III. Son of Rainold 2. moleſted with continual Wars with his Brother Edward, by whom he was taken and impriſoned till his dying day.

1371 11. Edward, the Son of Rainold the 2. by Eleanor the Daughter of Edward the 3d. of England, his ſecond Wife, died the ſame year with his Brother; the laſt of the male iſſue of Otho of Naſſau.

1371 12. Mary (by ſome called Joan) Siſter of Edward, by the ſame venter, and Wife of William Earl of Gulick.

13. William, Son of William Duke of Gulick and Mary of Geldres, admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2.

14. Rainold IV. the Brother of William.

15. Arnold of Egmond, Son of John Lord of Egmond and Mary his Wife, Daughter of Joan, the Siſter of Rainold and William, the two laſt Dukes, ſucceeded in the Eſtate of Geldres; the Dukedom of Gulick being ſeized on by Adolph, Son of William the firſt Duke of Berg, as the next Heir-male to the two laſt Dukes. Being afterwards taken, impriſoned, and moſt barbarouſly handled by his own Son Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundy, he ſold to him his Eſtates of Geldres and Zutphen, to be enjoyed by him after his deceaſe, Anno 1472.

1477 17. Charles, Son of Arnold, after long Wars with the Princes of the Houſes of Burgundy and Auſtria, pretending the Sale and Legacy of Duke Arnold to Charles the Warlike, ſurrendred his Eſtates unto Charles the 5. to be enjoyed by him after his deceaſe, if he left no Iſſue. According to which Contract the Emperour Charles ſucceeded him in Geldres and Zutphen, Anno 1538, being the year of his deceaſe, after which time they were accompted in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Arms hereof were Quarterly, 1 Azure, a Lion Or, crowned Gules, for the Dukedom of Gelderland; 2 Azure, a Lion Gules, for the Earldom of Zutphen.

Thus have we ſeen a Country which at the firſt erecting of theſe Eſtates was nothing in a manner but Bogs and Mariſhes, and at the beſt but a continual Wilderneſs of Woods and Foreſts, by the great Providence of the Princes, and extreme induſtry of the people, made the moſt populous, beſt planted, and the wealthieſt Eſtate (for the bigneſs of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have ſeen thoſe ſeveral Eſtates and Principalities, by Marriages and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the Houſe of Burgundy: under the Princes of which great and illuſtrious Family, inferiour to no Kings of Chriſtendom for Power and Riches,) eſpecially under Duke Philip the Good) the Subjects hereof did ſo abound in wealth and plenty, that Philip de Comines, who then lived, affirmeth, that this Country ſeemed like the Land of Promiſe. Some thought there was a purpoſe in this Duke Philip of erecting theſe States into a Kingdom, from which he was diverted by the difference and variety of Laws and Privileges which thoſe people ſeverally lived under, not to be brought without great difficulty and diſtaſte to one form of Government: yet might he have done it, if he would, as himſelf openly affirmed to the Embaſſadours of King Lewis 11. But Charles his Son, being more bent on the Deſign, negotiated to that end with the Emperour Frederick, whom he met at Triers, An. 1473: and doubtleſs had obtained his purpoſe, upon the Marriage of his Daughter with Maximilian Frederick's Son, (which was then propounded) had not his raſh Engagement againſt the Swiſſers, and his untimely death therein, broke the courſe of theſe Projects: which Projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had but for that Engagement, he had extended his Dominions all along the Rhene, and on both ſides of it, from the Alpes unto the German Ocean, and been the moſt conſiderable Prince at that time in Chriſtendom; all Elſaſs in High Germany being ſold or morgaged to him by the Duke of Auſtria, the Dukedom of Lorrain at his mercy; beſides the hopes he had of the Earldom of Provence, intended to him by King Reny, which would have opened him a way to the Mediterranean. He being dead, the Government continued as before it was; each Province having its diſtinct Laws, and living according to their ancient Privileges, till the attempt of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, moſt reſolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancel all their Privileges, and new mould the Eſtate according to his own will & pleaſure; occaſioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country, and the ſetting up of a new Eſtate oppoſite unto him, and deſtructive of his Intereſt in it. but before we come unto this Change, we will firſt look upon the Prince's Power, Revenue, and other things conſiderable touching this Eſtate, whilſt it ſtood intire under the Princes of the Houſe of Burgundy and Lords of BELGIUM.

1369 1. Philip the Hardy, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Earl of Flanders and Artois, the firſt great raiſer of this Houſe.

1404 2. John the Proud, Duke of Burgundy, &c.

1419 3. Philip the Good added to his Eſtates the Dukedom of Brabant and Limburg, the Marquiſate and Mechlin, by the death of his Couſin Philip; the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, Zeland, and the Lordſhip of Weſt-Frieſland, by the Reſignation and death of the Counteſs Jaqueline, whoſe next Heir he was; the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and the Earldom of Namur, which he bought for money.

1467 4. Charles the Warlike, who bought the Eſtates of Geldres and Zutphen, and held them peaceably all his life.

1476 5. Mary, the Daughter and Heir of Charles, married to Maximilian, Son of the Emperour Frederick, from whom King Lewis the eleventh of France took the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the greateſt parts of the Counties of Burgundy and Artois, unfortunately killed with a fall from her horſe, and an unſeaſonable Modeſty in not ſuffering the Chirurgion to dreſs her wound, the hurt which ſhe had taken being on her thigh.

1482 6. Philip III. Son of Mary and Maximilian, to whom Charles the 8th. of France reſtored all the places in Artois and the County of Burgundy taken by his Father, married Joan, Daughter of Ferdinand and Iſabel King and Queen of Spain.

1506 7. Charles II. Archduke of Auſtria, King of Spain, and Emperour of that name the fifth, added to his Eſtate in theſe Countries the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Earldom of Zutphen, the Lordſhips of Utrecht, Over-Yſſel and Groening.

1558 8. Philip IV. of Belgium, and the II. of Spain, invading theſe Countries againſt their Privileges, was by a great part of them rejected from being their Prince, Anno 1581, which made him, after a long and bloody War to ſurrender all his Intereſt in them to 1599 9. Iſabella Clara Eugenia, his Daughter, and Albert, Archduke of Auſtria, whom he married to her; during whoſe Government a Truce for 12 years was made, and in the Preface to that Truce, the Confederate Eſtates declared to be treated with as a Free State, to whom the Kings of Spain could pretend no Title.

10. Philip V. of Belgium, and the IV. of Spain, on the deceaſe of the Archdutcheſs Iſabella his Aunt, ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion of ſome, and the Title unto all the Belgick Provinces.

The ordinary Revenue of theſe Countries to the Dukes of Burgundy, and after to the Kings of Spain, before the Breach, were eſtimated at three millions of Crowns yearly; which was more than any King in Chriſtendom at thoſe times received, the French only excepted; the very meaſuring of Corn in the City of Antwerp being farmed yearly for 100000 Crowns in ready money: but the extraordinary was far greater; the Eſtates of theſe Countries in the year 1550 granting to Charles the fifth an Aid which they call the Noventale, amounting to 150000 Crowns a month; and yet the Provinces of Luxemburg, Limbourg, Geldres and Groening, were not rated to it. And it is ſaid that Philip the 2d, at his firſt coming to the Eſtate, was preſented with a Grant of 40 millions of Florens, to be paid in few years. So that theſe Countries were the true Correlative of both his Indies: the loſs of which, before the making of the Truce, Anno 1609, coſt him above 100 millions of Crowns, and the loſs of 400000 men.

The Forces of theſe Princes by Land may beſt be ſeen in the expedition of Charles (then Earl of Charolois) againſt Lewis the eleventh, whom Duke Philip the Good his Father furniſhed to that enterpriſe with 9000 Archers and 14000 men at Arms, every one of which had five or ſix great horſes attending on him; and at his ſetting forward he was told by his Father, (never accompted for a Braggart) that if he fell into any danger, he ſhould not be abandoned for the want of 100000 fighting men. The ſaid Duke having thus ſent away his Son, and being provoked by the indignities of thoſe of Liege and Dinant, who revolted from him, ſuddenly raiſed an Army of 28000 Horſe, and a proportionable number of Foot, for the chaſtiſement of that proud and rebellious people. And Charles himſelf, ſucceeding on the death of his Father, in his unproſperous attempt upon the Switzers had no leſs than 80000 men at the Battel of Morat. As for their power at Sea, I find not that they kept any ſtanding Navy, nor needed they ſo to do, as the caſe ſtood with them; conſidering that when they had occaſion of any ſuch ſervice, they uſed to take up all the Ships which they found in their Harbours, (of which there never wanted good ſtore) employing as many as they pleaſed, and diſmiſſing the reſt.

The principal order of Knighthood ordained by theſe Princes was that of the Golden Fleece, firſt inſtituted by Duke Philip the Good (in imitation of the order of Saint George in England) Anno 1430. The name and fancie was borrowed, as ſome conceive, from Gideons's Fleece; from Jaſon's Fleece, as others think; but more probably from the Golden Fleeces of England, which brought him in ſo much gold and treaſure in the way of Cuſtom. Their Habit is a Collar of Gold interlaced with Irons, ſeeming to ſtrike fire out of a Flint, (Ex ferro flammam being the Word:) at the end whereof hung the Toiſon d'Or, or Fleece of Gold. Their number at the firſt was but 25, (which is the number of Knights of the Engliſh Garter) increaſed afterwards by the ſame Duke Philip unto thirty one. Charles the firſt raiſed them to fifty one; and now the King of Spain hath aſſumed a liberty of making as many as he pleaſeth: this being the only Military or Civil Order of which thoſe Kings have the beſtowing; the Orders of Alcantara, Calatrava, and the reſt of Spaniſh inſtitution, being rather Religious & Monaſtical, at the beſt but mixt. St. Andrew's day is the day of Inſtallation.

In this great Pomp and Glory did theſe Princes live as long as they continued in good terms with the ſubject Provinces, being maſters of more goodly Jewels, magnificent Furniture for their Houſes and coſtly Moveables, than any three of the greateſt Princes in all Europe. And on the other ſide, the Subjects, whileſt they lived in Duty under ſo great Princes, attained unto the height of all worldly happineſs; in their Apparel exceſſively gorgeous, in their Feaſts and Banquets over-ſumptuous, in their Manners diſſolute; Vices which uſually accompany that kind of Felicity. An happineſs too great to continue long. By the Ambition and Violence of Charles the Warlike they were firſt plunged into a War againſt Lewis the eleventh, of which they did not only feel the preſent miſeries, but loſt all the Towns and Holds which they had in Picardy, with the whole Dutchy of Burgundy. And by a like, but better-grounded, Ambition of Charles the fifth, they were exerciſed in continual Wars againſt the French, who miſerably harraſſed and ranſacked the Countries of Luxemburg, Hainault and Artois, bordering next unto them. Charles at his death commended them to the ſpecial care of Philip his Son, adviſing him to uſe them kindly, as thoſe that were the chief Supporters of his State and Glory; adding, that if he ſhould deal otherwiſe with them, it would prove the ruin of his Fortunes. And on the other ſide, the people, to obtain his favour, preſented him at his firſt entrance on the Government with a Grant of 40 Millions of Florens, as before was ſaid. But he, tranſported with Ambition and a Catholick zeal, not only forgot their Love, but his Father's counſel, & had no ſooner concluded a Peace with France, effected by the Treaty of Cambray, Anno 1559, but preſently he caſt his thoughts on the ſubjection of this P ple to his will and pleaſure. For they were ſo fortified with Priviledges, which their former Princes had granted, and the latter had been ſworn to obſerve, that he wanted much of that abſolute & uncontrollable command which he ſtrongly aimed at. Some of which Priviledges were, 1. That the Prince could place no Stranger amongſt them with Juriſdiction over their Eſtates and Perſons, in Offices of War or Juſtice. 2. The Prince could give nothing to the Clergy; nor 3. Levy any Subſidies without the States of the Country. 4. But the main Prerogative was that of the Brabanters, (viz.) That if the Prince by violence or wrong did infringe any of the ſaid Charters and Franchiſes, the people, after declaration thereof made, might go to election of a new Prince. This not a little grieved the Spaniards, that ſuch baſe and unworthy people (for ſo they eſteemed them) ſhould in ſuch liberty poſſeſs ſo brave and rich a Country; their King bearing no title of Majeſty or abſolute command over them. Beſides, the Reformation of Religion, which then began to grow to ſome ſtrength, moved the King to reduce them back to the Church of Rome by the power and terror of the Inquiſition, and by the erecting of ſome new Epiſcopal Sees amongſt them, (for before there were but three in all) to ſettle ſome more conſtant courſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. Againſt both which when the people violently oppoſed, he then reſolved of bringing them by Spaniſh Rhetorick (that is, by the Sword and the Cannon) to their old Obedience. To theſe ends he ſends the Duke of Alva, an old and expert Captain, (as having 60 years been a Souldier) with a puiſſant Army, to be his Vice-Roy among them. He alſo gave him a Commiſſion of that large extent, that he might place and diſplace whom he would, and execute all ſuch as he could find oppoſite to his Deſigns. At that time the two chief men among them where the Prince of Orange and Count Egmont; the firſt more potent with the People, the latter with the Souldiers. Had theſe two joyned together, they might eaſily have prevented D. Alva's entrance; but Egmont was ſo ſoothed up with Letters from Spain, that he believed not the intelligence which the Prince had concerning the Duke's Commiſſion. The Earl exhorted the Prince to ſubmit himſelf to the pleaſure of the King, and ſo to prevent the ruine of his Houſe. The Prince deſired the Earl to maintain the Liberty of the Country; as for himſelf, He had rather be a Prince without a Houſe, than a Count without an Head. Being thus reſolved, the Prince retires to his County of Naſſau in High Germany; the Earl ſtayeth to congratulate the entrance of the new Governour: who had no ſooner ſetled himſelf, but he entrapped the Counts of Horn and Egmont, and beheaded them An. 1567. Being thus rid of theſe two, with divers others of good quality, who living would have much hindred his proceedings, he quartered his Spaniards in the Towns and Provinces, ſpoiled the people not of their Priviledges only, but their Liberty. Amongſt the Reformed he brought in the bloody Inquiſition; and indeed ſo tyrannically did he behave himſelf, that the people were forced to a Defenſive War, as well for their Lives as Subſtance. This was a War of State, not Religion, the moſt part of the Hollanders being Papiſts at the time of their taking Arms. During theſe Troubles the Prince of Orange was not idle, but but he in one place, and Count Lodowick his Brother in another, kept Duke Alva imployed; though divers times not with ſuch fortunate ſucceſs as they did expect. In the year 1572. Fluſhing was ſurpriſed by Voorſt and Berland, as we have before ſaid: ſo alſo was the Briel in Voorn, an Iſland of Holland, by the Count de la March. And not long after all Holland, except Amſterdam, followed the fortune and ſide of the Prince; together with all the Towns of Zeland, Middleburg excepted. Anno 1573, Duke Alva being recalled, Don Lewis de Requiſens was appointed Governour; during whoſe rule many of the Belgians abandoned their Country, ſome flying into Germany, others into France, moſt into England. After his death, and before the arrival of Don John, the Prince and his Party recovered ſtrength and courage again, till the coming of the Prince of Parma, who brought them into worſe caſe than ever. Yet Anno 1581. they declare by their Writings directed to all people, that Philip of Spain was fallen from the Government; and take a new Oath of the People, which bound them never to return to the Spaniſh Obedience. This done, they elect Francis Duke of Anjou, Heir apparent to the French King, and then in no ſmall hopes of marrying Queen Elizabeth of England, to be their Lord. But he intending rather to ſettle a tyranny in himſelf, than to drive it from the Spaniard, attempted Antwerp, put his men into the Town, but was by the valour of the Burgers ſhamefully repulſed. Shame of this ignoble enterpriſe, eſpecially grief for its ill ſucceſs, took him out of the world. About which time the Eſtates of theſe Countries were thus by this Hieroglyphick expreſſed. A Cow repreſented the Body of Belgium: there ſtood the King of Spain ſpurring her, the Queen of England feeding her, the Prince of Orange milking her, and Duke Francis plucking her back by the tail, but ſhe foul'd his fingers. During his unfortunate Government, Parma prevailed in all places, eſpecially after the death of William Prince of Orange, treacherouſly ſlain with a Piſtol, Anno 1584. Now were the poor Hollanders truly miſerable, deſperate of Pardon from their Prince, and having none to lead them, none to protect them, but ſuch as were likely to regard their own profit more than theirs. England was the only Sanctuary they had now left; to which they ſue, offering the Queen thereof the Soveraignty of their Provinces, who had, if not a Right, yet a plauſible Title to them, as being lineally deſcended from Edward the third and Philip his Wife, who was Siſter and (as ſome ſay) Heir to William Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. If Margaret, from whom the Right of Spain is derived, were Daughter to Earl William, then was our Queen to ſucceed after Philip, who was rejected: if that Margaret were (as many write) his younger Siſter, then was our Queen the undoubted Heir, her Predeceſſor Philippa being Earl William's eldeſt Siſter. But that Heroick Queen not diſputing the right of the Title, nor intending to her ſelf any thing ſave the honour of relieving her diſtreſſed Neighbours, and providing for her own Eſtate by this diverſion, took them into her Protection. Under which the Belgian Affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly (I will not now ſtand upon the particulars) that before they would hearken to any Treaty of Peace, they forced the King of Spain to this Concluſion, that he treated with them as with a Free Eſtate, abſtracted from all Right and title which he might pretend unto the places which they were poſſeſſed of. This Peace was concluded Anno 1609. ſince which time they have kept Garriſons well diſciplined, and as well paid: ſo that theſe Countries have in theſe late days been the Campus Martius, or School of defence, for all Chriſtendom, to which the youth of all Nations repair to ſee the manner of Fortifications, and learn the Art of War, and the uſe of their Weapons. Thus did they for 40 years hold the ſtaff againſt a moſt puiſſant Monarch, and in the end capitulated with great advantage, that it is obſerved, that whereas all other Nations grow poor by War, theſe only grow rich. Whereupon it is remarkable to conſider into what follies and extremities Princes run by uſing their people to the War. The Kings of France place moſt of their hopes in their Cavalry, becauſe in policy they would not that the vulgar ſhould be exerciſed in Arms. Lycurgus gave a Law to the Lacedæmonians, that they ſhould never fight often with one enemy: the breaking whereof made the Thebans, a ſmall Commonwealth, to be their equals in power: whereupon it was tartly ſaid by Antalcidas to Ageſilaus King of Sparta, that by his frequent warring on them and fighting with them he had made the Thebans good Souldiers againſt their wills. The Turks won the vaſt Empire they now poſſeſs by making many and ſpeedy Wars. But now that Policy being worn out of faſhion, we ſee that (to omit Perſia) the little and diſtracted Kingdom of Hungary hath for 200 years reſiſted their Forces. So was it between the Dukes of Auſtria and the Switzers, & ſo it is betwixt the Spaniard and Low-country-men; who formerly being accounted a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the Wars, by their continual combating with the Spaniard, are become ingenious, full of action, and great managers of cauſes appertaining to Fights, either by Sea or Land. We may hereby alſo perceive what advantage a ſmall State gaineth by fortifying places and paſſages: there being nothing which ſooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince than to beleaguer a well-fortified Town; for that herein he conſumeth his time, and commonly loſeth his men, credit and money; as the Romans before Numantia, the great Turk in Malta, and Charles of Burgundy before Nancie. For where War is drawn out of the Field unto the Walls, the Mattock and Spade being more neceſſary than the Sword and Spear, there the valour of the Aſſailant is little available, becauſe it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought theſe ſeveral Eſtates and Provinces into one hand, ſo now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in Obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themſelves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, Limbourg and Brabant, (ſome few Towns excepted) the Marquiſate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainault, Namur, Artois and Flanders, (except only Scluys) and the Lordſhip or Seignioury of Mechlin, with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Geldres, to countervail the Towns are held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitful in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing, but as much inferiour to the other in power and riches, by reaſon of their ſtrength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole Trade of Chriſtendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amſterdam, and other Towns of their Confederacy.

For the general Government of theſe Provinces, there is a Regent ſent from the Court of Spain, whoſe Authority is generally as great as that of the King; ſave that all matters of moment paſs under the King's name, and that all Officers of any great truſt and concernment are appointed by him, and that all Laws, Decrees, Sentences and Negotiations are diſpatched in his name alſo. For the aſſiſtance of the Regent there is a Privy Council, a Council of State, and a Council of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the Publick, the Regent's Authority co-operating and concurring with them, without which, though they may conſult, they can execute nothing. And for the Governance and well-ordering of the ſeveral Provinces, there is in every one of them a Lieutenant or Provincial Government, ſubordinate to the Regent, and accomptable to him; and in each Province a particular Council held in the King's name, conſiſting of more or leſs Counſellours, (as the bigneſs of the Province is) for the moſt part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civil Laws, with a Preſident as the Head thereof; which in ſome places they call the Parliament, after the manner of the French, and in ſome the Chancery. To theſe Courts all the Subjects do reſort for Juſtice, in Cauſes both Criminal and Civil: to theſe are brought Appeals from inferiour Judicatures, ſuch as the Courts of great Towns and particular Franchiſes: and from theſe lieth an Appeal to the great Council at Mechlin ſupreme and ſuperintendent unto all the reſt.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwiſe is of publick moment, the Regent ſendeth out Letters in the King's name, to command the Eſtates, that is to ſay, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the principal Towns of every Province, (except thoſe of Luxemburg, Geldres, Weſt-Frieſland and Over-Yſſel, who by ſpecial Priviledge cannot be called out of their own Countries) to come before him. The place of their Aſſembly is for the moſt part at Bruxels, the Court and Reſidence of the Regent; becauſe the Brabanters are alſo priviledged not to be ſummoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States aſſemble not altogether, but thoſe of one Province at a time, ſo one after another: to whom the Preſident, or ſome one of the Council of State propoſeth in the Prince's name that which he demandeth. To which if any Town oppoſe, then all which the reſt have done is of no effect; nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the reſt of the Eſtates do agree unto it. Without this punctual conſent of all parties intereſſed, the Prince can impoſe nothing, by their Laws, upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick Government.

And as the people are thus priviledged in regard of the Prince, ſo are the Princes and Prelates priviledged in regard of the Pope, it being agreed upon between them.

1. That the Prince is to give Clergy-Benefices, and the Pope to confirm them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-perſon may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to ſend his Delegates or Commiſſioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice, nor grant a Pardon, nor ſend a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy-man can buy Lands or other immoveables, without the Prince's conſent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to viſit the Clergy, to ſee if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the Abuſes.

Great Priviledges, if conſidered rightly; greater than which few Proteſtant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raiſed by the Spaniard out of his part of this Eſtate, it is not eaſie to be gueſſed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there is as great as ever under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Souldiers for his Towns and Garriſons greater than before. Nor doth it now ſtand with reaſon of State to lay any arbitrary Taxes upon the people, leſt he exaſperate them to a ſecond Rebellion, or ſtartle them to ſome new Confederacies againſt his Quiet.

Under the Government of the Confederate Eſtates are the Dukedom of Gelderland, excepting ſome few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland and Zutphen, the Seigniouries of Weſt-Frieſland, Vtrecht, Over-Yſſel, Groening, the Town of Scluys, with the Iſle of Caſſandt in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchy of Brabant. This is the leſſer part by far, and far inferiour to the other in regard of the Soil, but the more populous of the two, and by the Induſtry and great Trading of the people the more rich and powerful. They are governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Eſtates of every Province, not yet united into one entire Body of a Commonwealth; ſaving that, for the better preſervation of their Confederacy, the Commiſſioners of the ſeveral Provinces do conſult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Eſtates of the particular Provinces, elected out of the principal Towns and places of moſt importance, do order the Affairs thereof according to their ancient Priviledges, Rights, and Cuſtoms, as well by themſelves as by their Collegues and Officers whom they do appoint; and that as well for matters of State, as in point of Juſtice. For Adminiſtration of the which, the Governours, Preſidents, and Counſellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all Caſes, both civil and criminal, and in all Cauſes of Appeal from inferiour Courts; in each of which they proceed without Appeal, making their Acts and Commiſſions in the name of the ſaid Governours, Preſidents, and Council, but pronouncing Sentence and executing Judgment in right of the Soveraignty of the ſaid Province. And theſe Provincial States are choſen generally out of the Plebeians or common People, and the Burgers (at the beſt) of the greater Townſhips: the Nobility and Gentry being ſo worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above three Families of Gentlemen, and thoſe compelled to live after the Plebeian faſhion for fear of Envy, and to avoid the Inſolency of the ſaucy Clowns, who, out of rudeneſs and the deſire of Equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of theſe Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleaſure of the Community for which they ſerve, are choſen one or more for each ſeveral Province, according to the condition and capacity of thoſe which are choſen, to reſide at the Hague, there to conſult of the Affairs which concern the publick: but ſo, that be they more or leſs out of every Province, they make amongſt them but one Suffrage, when any thing is put unto the Voice. And theſe they call the States General, firſt, becauſe a collected Body out of all the Provinces; and, ſecondly, becauſe they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable abſolutely by the States Provincial, but only in ſuch things as concern the general good of the whole Eſtate, as treating with Ambaſſadours, making War and Peace, &c. For their aſſiſtance in the which, there is a Council of State, made up of the Governours and ſome eminent men of every Province, (in which the Ambaſſadour of England, as long as we held Fluſhing and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or ſuffrage) by whoſe advice they diſpoſe of all things which concern the publick: but ſo, that if any difficulty do appear in the buſineſſes, they conclude nothing, till they have the approbation and conſent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are choſen, to whom they are accomptable for their Adminiſtration, and by whom revocable whenſoever they pleaſe.

The Revenue of this Eſtate doubtleſs is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment conſiſting of no leſs than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided, yet ſo well paid, that we never read of any Mutiny amongſt them for want thereof. The whole Charge, with the entertainment of Captains and ſuperiour Officers, is ſaid to amount to 500000 l. per annum, raiſed on the people by Exciſe laid upon all Commodities, and many Taxes of like nature, ſo inſupportable in themſelves, and amongſt men which would be thought to live in a Free State, that ſhould the Spaniard or any Prince in Chriſtendom lay but half ſo much on their Subjects, it would occaſion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the firſt cauſes of their falling off from the King of Spain was to free themſelves from Taxes and Impoſitions, illegally (as they ſaid) enforced upon them; they have drawn upon themſelves more arbitrary and illegal Payments than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of Government. Touching their power at Sea, we have ſpoke already. All I ſhall now add to it is by way of inſtance, which is, That in the year 1587 the King of Denmark, on pretence of ſome diſpleaſure, arreſted 608 Ships of theirs of all ſorts at one time in the Sound; and that the next year after they ſet out, upon very ſhort warning, an hundred good men of War, to join with England againſt the invincible Armada, which then threatned both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to theſe Countries wherewith the God of all bleſſings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unity of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleaſed the Almighty to confer upon them, they would ſurpaſs all neighbouring States in Treaſure, Potency, Content, and all worldly Happineſs.

There are in theſe Countries.

And thus much for BELGIUM.

OF GERMANY.

GERMANY is bounded on the Eaſt with Pruſſia, Poland, and Hungary; on the Weſt with France, Switzerland and Belgium, on the North with the Baltick Seas, the Ocean, and ſome part of Denmark: on the South with the Alpes, which part it from Italy. By which accompt the modern Germany much differeth from that deſcribed by Tacitus and others of the Roman Writers: That comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with ſo much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this ſide of the River Viſtula; but bounded on the Eaſt with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow: the modern Germany containing on the farther banks of thoſe Rivers five whole Roman Provinces, that is to ſay, Noricum Ripenſe, and Mediterraneum, Rhætia ſecunda, Belgica and Germania prima, with ſome parts of Rhætia prima and Germania ſecunda; but terminated with the Danes and the Baltick Sea.

It was firſt called thus by the Romans. (as ſome conceive) who ſeeing the people both in Cuſtoms, Speech and courſe of life ſo like thoſe of Gallia, called them the Germans to the Gauls; the word Germanus in the Latine ſignifying a Brother of the whole blood, (as our Lawyers phraſe it) that is to ſay, a Brother both by Father and Mother; thoſe which have the ſame Mother, but divers Fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who ſpeaking of the great reſemblance which was betwixt theſe Nations in Manners, Speech, Cuſtoms, and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reaſon call them Germans, cùm fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent oſtendere; intending to ſignifie by that name, that they were the Brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be underſtood of thoſe people only which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vaſt Continent according to the ancient extent thereof; it being very well obſerved by Tacitus, that Germany was at firſt Nationis, non Gentis, nomen, the name of ſome of the Nations only, not of all the Country; the name in proceſs of time ſpreading over all that large Tract of ground and thoſe ſcattered Nations which were either conquered by them or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be meerly Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which ſignifieth All, and the word Man, ſignifying in that Language as in ours; whence alſo they derive the name of Almans; by which they would imply that the Almans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil niſi virile, nothing not worthy of a man. Bochartus, ſomewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the ancient Gallick did ſignifie as much as Guerre in the modern French, would have them at their firſt coming over the Rhene to be called Germans by the Gauls, that is to ſay, men of War, (or Gens de Armes in the preſent French) by reaſon of the great and many Victories obtained by them.

The like diverſity I find for the name of Almans. For though ſome gave them the name of Almans from the ſame originals from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was ſaid before, yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name becauſe they conſiſted of ſo many ſeveral Nations coming out of the North and North-eaſt hither, that they ſeemed to be a Hotch-potch of all ſorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation; which is the conceit of Aſinius Quadratus. But for my part, I do conceive (ſuppoſing the name of Almans to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain till ſuch time as the Princes of the Dukedom of Almain (ſince called Suevia, or Schwaben) did poſſeſs the Empire; which continuing in that potent Family near 100 years, might very well occaſion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain Race, and ſo impart that name to the Empire alſo. And for the Almans naturally and properly ſo called, (of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Suevia) I ſee no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus, the Son of Tuiſco, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tuiſconem Deum & filium Mannum, originem gentis conditoréſque,) as is ſaid by Tacitus: the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all ancient Writers, as men that did derive themſelves from this Mannus, the Son of Tuiſco. In like ſort as (I think) the Marcomanni, inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were ſo called, as being the Manni of the Marches or out-borders of Germany; and not the Markmans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all thoſe Nations; which might as well be preſſed from the Dutch original as that of All-man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am ſwayed the rather, becauſe I find the Dutch Nation generally ſo much inclined to derive their Original from Tuiſco, (from whom the Teutones, inhabiting about Brandenburg, may well fetch their Pedegree;) the name of Dutchland or Dutchmen coming near in ſound to Tuiſc-land and Tuiſc-men. In which I ſhall ſubſcribe to Verſtegan's opinion, though for the moſt part I look upon him but as the ſecond part of Goropius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of moſt ancient Nations are very uncertain, and for the moſt part founded on Conjectures only; let us leave the Name a while, and ſurvey the Country: the length whereof (according to the trueſt and exacteſt meaſurement) from Eaſt to Weſt, that is to ſay, from the Viſtula or Weiſſell to the Rhene, is eſtimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to ſay, from the Ocean to the Town of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the ſame miles. So that the Figure of it being near a Square, it may take up 3160 miles in compaſs, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the ſixth and tenth Climates, the longeſt day in the moſt Southern parts being 15 hours and an half, and in the moſt Northern 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compaſs and extent of ground are ſuppoſed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer ſort are laborious, painful, and of a ſincere and honeſt carriage; the Nobles for the moſt part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of Honour; though Tacitus hath otherwiſe reſolved it, affirming that the Gauls fight for Liberty, the Belgians for Honour, and the Germans for Gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who, if they fail of Pay, fail in Courage preſently. Of both ſorts they are generally tall and big, of great Bones, much Fleſh, and large Sinews, but commonly of ſuch a phlegmatick conſtitution, that they have not ſpirit enough to manage ſuch a maſs of fleſh as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humor makes them for the moſt part to be men of a bright or light brown Hair, & fair Complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Vivere Germanorum eſt bibere, and the old Verſes,

Germani poſſunt cunctos tolerare labores.
O utinam poſſent tam bene ferre ſitim.
The Dutch themſelves to labour well inure.
O would they Thirſt could half ſo well endure.

This love unto their liquor, together with their natural Temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julius the ſecond, ſtyling the Spaniards Birds of the Air, becauſe of their Ambition, the Venetians and Genoeſes Fiſhes of the Sea, becauſe ſo much accuſtomed to Navigation, called the Germans by the name of the Beaſts of the Field. And when Auguſtus was reſolved to take unto himſelf the ſupreme Government of Rome, he was adviſed by Agrippa to chuſe a Guard of Germans to attend upon him. The reaſon was, (as Dion giveth it) Becauſe in thoſe great Bodies there was little Malice hidden, and leſs Subtilty; and that they were a people that took more pleaſure to be commanded than to command. In matters of War this people have been formerly in a meaſure famous; yet not ſo much by the valour or conduct of their Captains, (for they have had but few ſuch) as by their own hardineſs. They withſtood the Romans 210 years, afflicting and troubling them more in that ſpace than either the Charthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Parthians; and even at the laſt (ſaith Tacitus) Triumphati magis ſunt quam victi. In our times the Rutters and Lansknights of Germany (for ſo they call their Horſe and Foot) have been much employed: but more by reaſon of their numbers, eaſily rais'd out of ſo large a Country, than any opinion of their Valour; being ſlow of motion, dull of apprehenſion, fearful of putting any thing to the chance of War. By reaſon of which fearfulneſs, as they are very cruel upon all advantages, not ſparing either age or ſex when they get the Victory; ſo are they apt to run upon any Alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any perſwaſions. Inſomuch as Charles Count of Mansfield, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but moſt of this Nation, was forced to ſuffer a ſmall Army of 10000 Turks to paſs by his Trenches, being then ſtrongly encamped before Strigonium, (now Gran) a Town of Hungary, and to victual the Town before his face; not daring to ſet upon them or diſturb their purpoſe, for fear leſt, being luſtily charged, his Germans would give back and indanger all. And yet beſides theſe weakneſſes, they have ſome great faults. One of which is a cuſtom, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midſt of a Battel) to cry Guelt, Guelt, throw down their weapons, and ſuffer themſelves to be cut in pieces by the Enemy. And ſo they ſerved Frederick the Electour Palatine at the Battel of Prague. The other is an extreme humour of Spoil and Plunder: on which they are ſo bent whereſoever they come, that ſuch as entertain them have juſt cauſe to ſay, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their enemies. Two undeceivable notes of mercenary Valour.

The Women are of a good Complexion, but by reaſon of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to Corpulency; women of a good carriage, (as the ſaying is) good Bearers, and as fruitful Breeders; ſervilely obſequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank ſerve at the Table with Trenchers and other neceſſaries, and take away when he hath done, eating the reſidue apart with and amongſt their Maids, ſcarce ſitting down with him once a week, and then too at the lower end, or at ſome ſuch diſtance. And though the Women by their Laws have a property in the Goods which they bring with them at their Marriage, or are given them after, (ſo as the Husband hath but the uſe of them only) and may diſpoſe of them by their laſt Will at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better, the Husband being no leſs churliſh and imperious than he would be otherwiſe. Which made Caracalla to ſay often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the Feminine Article to the Sun, and the Maſculine to the Moon, as the Germans do. Moſt of them, as well Wives as Virgins, (except perſons of Honour) uſe to go bare-footed within doors, and ſeldom put on Shoes or Stockings, but when they are to go abroad on their occaſions. A thing that ſeems the more ſtrange, in regard of the extreme coldneſs of the Country, which is ſo fierce, that generally they lodge between two Feather-beds both in Summer and Winter; and in the moſt houſes have their Stoves, of which the doors and windows are kept very cloſe, as well to retain the heat, as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be uſeful and inoffenſive in Gentlemens houſes; yet in the Common Inns, where all ſorts of people are neceſſitated to throng together, the ill Smells, never purged by admitting any freſh air, are ready to ſtifle and choak up the ſpirits of raw Travellers, not accuſtomed to them.

The Diet of Germany, France, and Italy, is by a Traveller thus cenſured: The Germans have much meat, but ſluttiſhly dreſt; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other. And to ſay truth, the Germans have meat enough; the people being generally of good ſtomachs, and either by nature or ill cuſtom exceſſive both in eating and drinking, ſeldom riſing from the Table till they have conſumed all which was ſet before them. Inſomuch as in ſome places it is provided by Law, that in their Feaſts they ſhall not ſit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by Intemperance either in eating or drinking a man diſgorge his foul ſtomach in his fellow's Lap, or piſs under the Table, it is no diſgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and exceſſive drinking is not only cheriſhed among the Vulgar, but even amongſt their greateſt Princes; who, beſide what they do in this kind themſelves, have their drinking Champions, as well to anſwer all Challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whoſe Cellar ſhall afford the greateſt and moſt capable Veſſels.

The Title of the Father deſcends to all the Children; every Son of a Duke being a Duke, and every Daughter a Dutcheſs: a thing which the Italians hold ſo ridiculous that they put it in the fore-front of this facetious Satyre, The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Monſieurs of France, the Biſhops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lairds of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the Younger Brethren of England, make a poor Company. For by this common aſſuming of the Father's Honour, and the parting his Lands among all the Brethren, the Nobility is beyond reaſon multiplied, and no leſs impoveriſhed; there being not long ſince ſeventeen Princes of Anhalt, and twenty ſeven Counts of Mansfield; to moſt of which their Arms have been the beſt part of their Riches, & nihil niſi arma & manus, & in his omnia, as Tacitus once ſaid of the ancient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchſafe to marry with the Daughter of the wealthieſt Merchant, or ſuffer any of their Siſters to be married to any under the degree of a Nobleman; nor any juſter cauſe of a Diſheriting their Children than ignoble Marriages: they never permitting the Iſſue of ſuch a Bed to ſucceed in any of their Fees, Eſtates, or Titles: by means whereof, though they debar themſelves of ſuch acceſſions of wealth as Matches of that kind might bring them, yet, to the great honour of their generoſity in this particular, they preſerve the pure Stream of their Blood from running into muddy Chanels, and keep the Spirits of brave men, though they want the Fortunes.

The Languages here ſpoken are, the French in Lorrain, and in ſome Towns of the Biſhop of Triers; the Italian in the higheſt part of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealth of Venice; the Sclavonian ſpoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and ſome part of Luſatia; and the high Dutch the general Language of the Country. A Language very ancient doubtleſs, (though I am not ſo much a Goropian as to think it ſpoke in Paradiſe, or before the Flood) and ſuch as, by reaſon of the little or no impreſſion which the Roman Armies made upon this Country, hath leſs commixture with the Latine than any which is uſed in theſe Weſtern parts, (the Welſh excepted) and is very harſh by reaſon of its many Conſonants.

This Country was eſteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Foreſts, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthful Pools. Germaniam informem terris, aſperam cœlo, triſtem cultu aſpectúque, as he farther addeth. And ſuch no doubt it was in thoſe times wherein Tacitus lived; the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectifie the ſharpneſs of that Northern Air. But he who doth obſerve it now, cannot but confeſs that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or repleniſhed with more goodly and gallant Cities; being alſo in moſt parts both pleaſant, healthy and profitable; abounding with Mines of Silver and inferior Metals, plentiful in Corn and Wines, with which they ſupply the defect of other Nations, as alſo with Fleſh, Fiſh, Linen, Quickſilver, Alume, Saffron, Armour, and other Iron-works. The Arable lands are ſo ſpacious in the Eaſtern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turneth not back again till noon; ſo making but two Furrows for his whole days work. For this Verſtegan is my Authour; and if it be not credible, let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of moſt eminency in the elder times were 1. Arminius, the Prince of the Cheruſci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus and the Roman Legions. 2. Witikind, the laſt King of the Saxons. For the middle Ages, 3. Otho the firſt, 4. Frederick Barbaroſſa, 5. Rodulph of Habſpurg, Emperours and Kings of Germany; 6. Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. And in the laſt Century of years, 7. Frederick the ſecond, Elector Palatine, who made good Vienna againſt the Turks; 8. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter; 9. Erneſt Earl of Mansfield, 10. John George of Jagerndorf, 11. Albert Wallenſtein Duke of Fridland, and divers others of late days.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; Learning being here ſo rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Biſhop of Saltzburg was condemned of Hereſie for holding that there were Antipodes. In the next Age there flouriſhed Rabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberſtadt, Walafridus Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam, a ſtout defender of the Rights of the Empire againſt the Encroachments of the Pope, Otho Friſingenſis the Hiſtorian, Albertus Magnus the Philoſopher; of which laſt it is ſaid, that he made the Statua of a Man, which with the help of artificial Engines could ſpeak articulately, and was the work of 50 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers we have 1. Martin Luther, that great inſtrument of the Reformation. 2. Philip Melanchthon, his Coadjutor in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; thence called the Phœnix of that Age. 3. Joachim Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Chemnitius, a ſolid and laborious Writer. 5. Flacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburgian Centuries, and Father of the Rigid Lutherans. 6. Sebaſtian Munſter, an induſtrious Coſmographer, and a learned Linguiſt. 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxtorfius, as great Linguiſts as he. Not to deſcend to farther inſtances in thoſe who have ſo filled the Marts of Francfort in theſe latter times.

But the greateſt excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of Learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical Experiments, ſtrange Water-works, Medicinal Extractions, Chymiſtry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no leſs benefit than admiration of the World. Amongſt which I cannot chuſe but inſtance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, ſpoken of by Keckerman; who, at the coming of the Emperour Maximilian to the City of Nurenberg, made a wooden Eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and ſo accompanied him to his Lodging. A thing, if true, (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuſe the World with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is ſo famed amongſt the Ancients. Exceeded only by himſelf in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Art, becauſe leſs in quantity) which at a Feaſt, to which he had invited ſome of his ſpecial Friends, flew from his hand about the Room and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus; expreſſed thus by Divine Du Bartas.

> Once as this Artiſt, more with mirth than meat,
> Feaſted ſome Friends, whom he eſteemed great,
> From his learn'd hand an Iron Flie flew out,
> And, having flown a perfect Round about,
> With wearied wings return'd unto her Maſter,
> And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
> O divine Wit, that in the narrow Womb
> Of a ſmall Flie could find ſufficient room
> For all thoſe Springs, Wheels, Counterpoiſe and Chains,
> Which ſtood inſtead of life, and ſpur, and reins!

And amongſt theſe I reckon Bertholdus Swart, a Franciſcan Frier, the Inventer (though by accident) of that fatal Inſtrument, the Gun. Studious in Chymiſtry, he mingled dried Earth, Sulphur, and ſome other Ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar covered with a ſtone; and ſtriking fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a ſpark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other Minerals, with great violence blew up the ſtone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial ſeverally of theſe Ingredients, to find out which of them it was which produced that effect: which having diſcovered, he cauſed an Iron Pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpeter and Stones; and putting fire to it, ſaw with what violent noiſe and fury it diſcharged it ſelf. This Invention he is ſaid to have firſt communicated to the Venetians, Anno 1330, or thereabouts, who having been often vanquiſhed by the Genoeſes, and driven almoſt to a neceſſity of yielding to them, by the help of their Guns (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable diſcomfiture. And this was the firſt Battel that ever thoſe warlike Pieces had a part in; which not long after put to ſilence all the Engines and Devices wherewith the Ancients were wont to make their Batteries. The next that made uſe of this inſtrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea; and not long after them the Engliſh, at the Siege of Calice, Anno 1347; about which time they began alſo to be uſed in France. The French, it ſeemeth, learned the uſe of them from the Engliſh: and the firſt benefit received by them was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Saliſbury, who at the Siege of Orleans was ſlain with a great ſhot Anno 1425. Twenty years after this, Anno 1446, they were firſt uſed in Spain, at the Siege of Setteville, a Town of the Kingdom of Granada, by the Caſtilians, and after by degrees made common to the reſt of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jews and Moors as unto the Chriſtians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turks. For the Jews, being forced to abandon Spain Anno 1492, betook themſelves to Greece and other parts of the Turks Dominions, to whom they ſhewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Harquebuſſes, ſufficiently ſince uſed by that people to the hurt of Chriſtendom. But ſomewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholden for them to the Wars they had with the Venetians; beholden, I ſay, for notwithſtanding the harm received by them at firſt, yet afterwards, growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Uſſan Caſſanes and Hiſmael, two of the moſt mighty Emperours of Perſia, two memorable Overthrows by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Perſians: for, as Solyman the Turkiſh Emperour objected againſt them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Harquebuſſiers, but alſo ſent him workmen to ſhew him the uſe and making of Artillery. Theſe great Pieces at the firſt invention were rude, unwieldy, and charged with Stone-bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I ſtand not here to determine; only this I am ſure of, that Victories have been of late purchaſed with leſs expence of blood and life than ever formerly. But of this Theam more perhaps hereafter, when we ſhall come to take the Parthian Archery into conſideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not eaſie to name, conſidering ſo many are here allowed; Jews being intermixt with Chriſtians, and theſe divided into Papiſts and Proteſtants; the latter alſo divided into Lutherans, Calveniſts, &c. The Chriſtian Faith was firſt planted here, if Dorotheus Biſhop of Tyre be of any credit, by S. Thomas ſurnamed Didymus, one of the Twelve. But being there is little truſt unto his Relations, the beſt were to ſay with the Magdeburgians and the Martyrologies, that the Germans had not all the ſame Apoſtle; that the Goſpel was firſt preached amongſt the Rhætians and Vindelici by S. Lucius of Cyrene, amongſt thoſe of Noricum by S. Mark, by S. Creſcens at Mentz, S. Clement at Metz in Lorrain, all of them Apoſtolical men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the Faith was planted very early in theſe Countries, Irenæus, the renowned Biſhop of Lions, Anno 170, is ſufficient evidence, who takes notice of it; and that it proſpered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Biſhops of Mentz, Triers, Worms, Spires, Baſil, and Straesburg, ſubſcribing to the Council of Colen in the Reign of Conſtantius the Son of Conſtantine the Great, Anno 347. But the light hereof, being extinguiſhed for a time by thoſe barbarous Nations who fell upon theſe out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to ſhine again on the Converſion of the French in all parts of this Country; the Conqueſts and example of this puiſſant Nation giving great incouragement thereunto. In which as thoſe of other Countries do not want their honour, ſo the greateſt part thereof belongs to the Engliſh-Saxons; Willibrode the firſt Biſhop of Utrecht, Willibald of Aichſtat, Swibert of Verden, Willibald of Breme, and ſpecially Boniface the Archbiſhop of Mentz, being moſt glorioſly fortunate in that ſacred ſervice. The Moravians, Bohemians, and others farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the Faith, they began to ſuck in the Corruptions of the Church of Rome; diſcerned and oppoſed by John Huſſe and Hierom of Prague Bohemian Divines, who, by reaſon of the Marriage of King Richard the ſecond of England with the Daughter of Wenceſlaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the Preachings of Wicleff, the Points of whoſe Doctrine they approved and propagated. But theſe two being burnt at Conſtance by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not ſo give over; but after many ſufferings and much bloodſhed, obtained at laſt a Toleration of the Emperour Sigiſmond their King, more able to make good his word in his own Dominions, than he had been to ſave the two Martyrs from the fire at Conſtance, to whom he had granted his ſafe Conduct for their coming and going. In this condition they remained under the name of thoſe of the Sub utraque or Caliſtini, becauſe of their adminiſtring the Sacraments in both kinds, till the riſing of Luther; who juſtly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Aſſertions of Frier Tokel, and others of the Pope's Pardon mongers, firſt oppoſed their doings, and after queſtioned that Authority by which they acted, falling from one Point to another, till he had ſhaken the Foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the ſucceſs of his undertaking we ſhall ſpeak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to ſay, that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally imbraced in the great Kingdoms of Denmark and Swethland, with the Provinces and Iſlands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Tranſylvania, as far almoſt as to the banks of the Euxine Sea; but for the progreſs of it here, (which we are more eſpecially at this time to enquire into) it was ſo well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brunſwick, Lunenburg, Wirtenberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania, the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, the Lantgraves of Haſſia, and moſt of the Free and Imperial Cities, did adhere unto it, who from their Proteſtation made at Spires (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect Anno 1529 had the name of Proteſtants. The next year following they delivered in the Confeſſion of their Faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confeſſio Auguſtana; authorized, or tolerated at leaſt, after a long War, with variable ſucceſs on both ſides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Paſſaw, Anno 1552, and afterwards more fully at Ausburg, (where their Confeſſion had firſt been tendred) Anno 1555.

But not to paſs over this matter in theſe generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530 the Proteſtant Princes having tendred their Confeſſion at Ausburg, (as before is ſaid) and finding it not ſo well received as they did expect, entred into a Confederation at the Town of Smalcald (belonging to the Duke of Saxony) for defence thereof, and for the defence of one another in purſuance of it. Into this Confederacy firſt entred John Frederick the Duke of Saxony and his Son, Erneſt and Francis Dukes of Lunenburg, Philip the Lantgrave of Haſſia, George Marqueſs of Brandenhug, the Cities of Straesburg, Nurenberg, Heilbrun, Ruteling, Ulme, Lindaw, Conſtance, Memming, and Campedune. Afterwards, Anno 1535, there entred into it Barnimus and Philip Princes of Pomeren; Ulrick Duke of Wirtenberg; Robert bert Duke of Zweibrucken, (or Bipont, as ſome Writers call him) William Earl of Naſſau, George, and Joachim Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Francford, Hamborough, Ausburg, Hanover; and not long after the Palſgrave and King of Denmark. But this Confederacy was like to have daſhed the buſineſs. For Charles the fifth looking upon it as a matter of dangerous conſequence to the power and ſafety of the Empire, and withall inſtigated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whoſe intereſt was no leſs concerned in it, conſidering that he could not otherwiſe untie this Gordian knot, reſolved to cut it with the Sword. At firſt the War ſucceeded luckily with the Proteſtant Princes, who armed themſelves upon the noiſe of his Preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John-Frederick and Philip the Lantgrave, the one ſometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the others projects, the end proved not anſwerable. Beſides, the politick Emperour, knowing full well that the Forces of confederate States are oftner broken by Delays than Battel, avoided all occaſions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army, which without performing any notable exploit disbanded it ſelf, every man haſting home to defend his own. But none had more reaſon ſo to do than the Duke Electour: For in his abſence his Couſin Maurice (forgetting the Education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him and eſtated him in thoſe parts of Miſnia (maugre all oppoſition of the Popiſh party) which formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle) combined himſelf with the Emperour, and invaded the Electour's Country; who notwithſtanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part alſo of thoſe Lands and Territories in which he had before eſtated his ungrateful Kinſman. But while he was in this Career, the Emperour ſuddenly falls upon him not far from Mulberg, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the ſuddenneſs of his coming routed his timorous unprovided Army; the Duke himſelf with ſome few reſolute Gentlemen making head againſt him, till the moſt of them were ſlain, and the Duke taken Priſoner. The next morning he was condemned to loſe his head, but pardoned at the laſt upon ſome Conditions: amongſt which it was none of the leaſt, that he ſhould ſurrender his Eſtates, and reſign the Electoral dignity to be diſpoſed of by the Victor, as alſo that he ſhould without ranſom releaſe Marqueſs Albert of Brandenburg, (a buſie and unquiet man) who was then his Priſoner. This done, the Emperour fraudulently intrappeth the Lantgrave, as we ſhall ſhew more at large hereafter in another place; and carrying on the War from one Free City to another, compelled them to receive the Maſs, and to ſubmit to ſuch Compoſition as he pleaſed to grant them; inſomuch as it was thought that the Emperour gained in this journey a Million and 600000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But theſe Succeſſes were too great and too unjuſtly grounded to continue long. For Maurice, the new Duke Elector, who had married the Lantgrave's Daughter, and engaged himſelf unto his Children both by Word and Bond and that too at the Emperour's inſtance) for his ſafe returning, conceived himſelf unworthily dealt with ſo to be made the inſtrument of his Father's thraldom, and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untryed which might gain his liberty. And withall, finding cauſe to fear that the courſe of the Emperou's great Succeſſes might end at laſt in the ſubverſion of the common Liberty, he ſecretly by an under-hand practice called in the French, and raiſing Forces under colour of the Emperour's ſervice, gained Marqueſs Albert before mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field) to aſſociate with him, and fell ſo ſuddenly on the Emperour lying then at Inſpruck, that he compelled him to run away in poſt-haſt by torch-light, and the Prelates to break off the Council of Trent, where at that time they were aſſembled. Upon which turning of the balance a Peace ſoon enſued, which brought forth the Edicts of Paſſaw and Ausburg, ſpoken of before, the beſt and ſureſt Pledges of the Peace of Germany.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there ſtarted up another party, begun at firſt by Zuinglius amongſt the Switzers, of whoſe both Doctrine and Succeſs we have ſpoken there. Theſe not communicating Counſels went two ſeveral ways, eſpecially in the Points of Conſubſtantiation and the Real Preſence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongſt their followers. For Calvin, riſing into the eſteem and place of Zuinglius, added ſome Tenets of his own to the former Doctrines touching Predeſtination, Free-will, Univerſal Grace, Final Perſeverance, (Points fitter for the Schools than a popular Auditory;) by which the Differences were widened, and the Breach made irreparable: the Cauſe being followed on both ſides with great impatience, as if they did not ſtrive ſo much for Truth, as Victory. And, of the two, thoſe of the Lutheran party ſeemed more violent, (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuſe but ſtomach it, to ſee themſelves undermined and blown up by a new form of Doctrine not tolerated in the Empire, but under colour of Conformity to the Confeſſion of Ausburg. For Zuinglianiſm being entertained amongſt the French, a buſie and active people, ſpred it ſelf farther in few years than it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the ſame temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Inſomuch as it did not only prevail in France, but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his Followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Poland, and even in Germany it ſelf, in which it got footing in all the Territories of the Counts Palatines of the Rhene, in ſome of the Lantgraves of Haſſia, in the Imperial City of Straesburg, many of the Hanſe-Towns, and amongſt other Princes and free Cities of inferiour note. The reſt of Germany, containing the Patrimonial Eſtates of the Houſe of Auſtria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorrain, the Territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Biſhopricks in the hands of the Clergy, ſome of the Marqueſſes of Baden, part of the Subjects of Cleve, and but three of the Imperial Cities, (and thoſe ſmall ones too) that is to ſay, Gemund, Uberlingen, and Dinckell-Spyell, (unleſs ſome more be added by the great late Succeſſes of the Houſe of Anſtria) remain in their Obedience to the See of Rome; all which together will hardly make up one fifth part of this ſpacious Country, the other four being in the power and poſſeſſion of the Proteſtant party: yet ſo that there be many Proteſtants in Bohemia, Auſtria, and in other the Eſtates of the Popiſh Princes; as there be Papiſts in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nurenberg, Ulm, Aken, and ſome other places, beſides the late increaſe of them in both the Palatinates. Of ſuch a ſpeedy growth was the Reformation, that within the ſpace of 40 years it was not only received in all thoſe Countries which do now profeſs it, but had alſo got ſome footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly uſed for the Promoting of this Work, by which it came to ſpread ſo far in ſo little time, and next upon the Stops and Hinderances which were given unto it, by which it was reſtrained from ſpreading farther. 1. For the means uſed in the Advancement of this Work, (next under the Almighty power of the moſt wiſe God) they were theſe eſpecially. 1. The tranſlating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which eaſily diſcovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome both in Doctrinals and Forms of Worſhip. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Miniſtry, both in Towns and Villages, for the expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the capacities of the meaneſt Auditors; which gained exceedingly both on the judgment and affections of the common people; the courſe of Preaching having been formerly neglected by the Pariſh Curate, and turned off wholly in a manner to the Begging-Friars. 3. The publiſhing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which mightily inflamed the hearts of all ſorts of men; accuſtomed before to no other Duties than to tell over their Credo's and Pater-noſters, and to keep a juſt account of their Ave-Maries, and that moſt commonly in a tongue which they underſtand not. 4. The Education of youth, eſpecially in Catechiſms containing the whole body of Chriſtian Religion; which once well planted in their minds, could not ſo eaſily be pulled up and removed thence by any contrary perſwaſions. 5. Their continual offers of diſputation with the adverſe party in a publick audience; which being denied (as generally at the firſt it was) gave great aſſurance of the truth and ſoundneſs of the one ſide, as of the falſhood and weakneſs of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies and Hiſtories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Conſtancy both in the Readers and the Hearers, animated thereunto by thoſe brave Examples which therein were preſented to them. One point of Prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Proteſtant and Reformed Churches, for the compoſing of the Differences which have grown between them. And this I look on as the firſt and greateſt Stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther; many men (not improbably) thinking there muſt be ſome want of truth in the Foundation of that Building, which had ſuch wide and open breaches in the Superſtructures. The Tyranny and terrour of the Inquiſition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italy, and all other parts of the Pope's Obedience, together with thoſe other Policies both to diſcountenance and ſuppreſs it, (which we have ſpoken of in our deſcription of the Papacy) may come next to this. Then add to theſe the care and diligence of the Jeſuites and Seminary Prieſts, in applying themſelves to all thoſe means which they found ſo effectual on the other ſide, thereby not only countermining their endeavours, but fighting them upon even ground with the ſelf-ſame weapons. And laſt of all, the Plots and Practices of the Papal Miniſters in working on the humours of the oppoſite parties, thereby inraging them not only into Tongue-combats and velitations of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open War, once I am ſure. By theſe means they have not only ſtopped the Progreſs of the Reformation but would fain give themſelves ſome hopes to deſtroy it utterly, and thereby to reſtore the Pope to that power and ſplendour which formerly he had attained unto in theſe parts of Europe. But of theſe and ſuch like ſelf-flatteries I ſhall ſay with Seneca, or rather in his words applied to my own Intention,

——Hæ manus Trojam erigent?
Parvas habet ſpes Troja, ſi tales habet.
That is to ſay,
Shall theſe ſmall Jars reſtore the ruin'd Pope?
Small hopes he hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, thoſe that continue in Obedience to the See of Rome are under the old form of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, coæval in all Germany (as in moſt places elſe) with the Faith it ſelf. The Calviniſts (by which name the Zuinglianiſt now alſo paſſeth, if not eaten out) ſubmit themſelves for Doctrine, Diſcipline and Forms of Worſhip, to Calvin's Model; whereof we have ſpoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Epiſcopal Function from the Revenues; giving theſe laſt to ſome of their younger Princes, with the Title of Adminiſtrators of ſuch a Biſhoprick; the Function or Juriſdiction to ſome of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, aſſigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Miniſters, which they enjoy for term of life, together with ſome liberal maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as Order, Habit, and Title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Miniſters. And over them, in the place of Archbiſhops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each ſort accomptable to the ſupreme Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtory, (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counſellors of State and the Heads of the Clergy. So that the Form ſeems to be much the ſame as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it ſeems to be; a great part of the Alteration being in the Names, and that no other in a manner than by changing the old Greek word Epiſcopus into the new Latine word Superintendents, both ſignifying an Overſeer, though in different languages. And ſo ex Græcis bonis Latinas fecere non bonas, in the Poet's words. Which brings into my mind the ſtory of a people of Africk, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth ſhould call them Tigers, but give them a more harmleſs or leſs hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of Government, ſo do they alſo come up to them in their forms of Worſhip; retaining ſtill a ſetled and preſcribed Liturgie for all their Churches, moſt of the Holy-days obſerved in the former Ages, the Croſs in Baptiſm, Kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and ſignificant Ceremonies commended to the Church by moſt pure Antiquity. In point of Maintenance they are as defective as the Calviniſts are; few of their Miniſters having Tithes, moſt of them Penſions or Stipends, and thoſe ſmall ones alſo, ſeldom exceeding two or 300 Guldens, beſides Wood for fewel, Corn, and ſome other neceſſaries.

Now becauſe mention hath been made of the Hanſe-Towns and Imperial Cities, we are to underſtand that the Cities of this Country are of three ſorts. 1. Such as are holden in poſſeſſion by ſome of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their Patrimony and Eſtates; as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munchen, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it ſelf: which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of Coyning money, and Governing themſelves by their local Ordinances; Imperial, in regard they know no Lord or Protector but the Emperour only, to whom they pay two third parts of ſuch Contributions as are aſſeſſed in the Aſſemblies or general Diets, and 1500 Florens yearly for themſelves and their Territories. They are in number about 60, many of which are of a fair and large Eſtate; ſuch as are Nurenberg, Ausburg, Ingolſtad, Spires, Wormes, &c. Of which thus Guicciardine: Thoſe (ſaith he) are called Free Cities, which, acknowledging by a certain determinate Tribute the Authority of the Empire, do notwithſtanding in all other things govern themſelves after their own Laws, not ſeeking to amplifie their Territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third ſort is of thoſe which are called Hanſe-Towns, or Hanſteden, that is, (ſay ſome) An zeeſteden, Towns upon the Sea; ſuch as thoſe were who firſt entred into this Confederacy: but at this time the name extends to many in-land Cities, and of no great Trading, joined with them in a League for their common defence and preſervation. A League made firſt againſt the Danes and the Earls of Holſtein by ſome of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them; that is to ſay, Lubeck, Hamburg, Roſtock, Wiſmar, Straelſund, and Lunenburg: but afterwards many other of the Imperial Cities and Towns of Trade aſſociated with them in an offenſive and defenſive League againſt all enemies whatſoever. In number about 72, thoſe of Livonia and Pruſſia being taken into the reckoning: many of which are able to put to Sea 150 good ſail of Ships; ſuch as lie more within the Land contributing in money or otherwiſe to the common charge. Firſt handſelled by Waldomar the 3. of Denmark, whom they vanquiſhed in a Naval Battel. After that growing into credit, and driving a great Trade in moſt parts of Chriſtendom, they enjoyed many large and ample Priviledges whereſoever they came: called amongſt us ſometimes by the name of Eaſterlings, from their Eaſterly dwellings; and Merchants of the Steel-yard, from the place where they ſtowed their Commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum, in regard of their Nation, for the moſt part Dutch. But the Engliſh learning ſo much wit at the laſt as to make uſe of their own Shipping, they began here by little and little to decay, and are now almoſt worn out of memory with us, though ſtill of good eſteem and credit in other Countries.

The principal Rivers hereof are 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which riſing out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwartzenwald, as the Germans call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Den Eſchingen, about two Dutch miles from the ſhores of the Rhene, paſſeth through Schwaben, Bavaria, Auſtria, &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regensburg, Paſſaw, Vienna, Rab, Buda, and Belgrade, beyond which it beginneth to be called Iſter, by that name moſt generally known amongſt the Græcians: and receiving into its Chanel, from the long tracts of the Alps, the Sarmatian and Carpathian Mountains, about 60 navigable Rivers, beſides leſſer Brooks, diſgorgeth his full ſtomach by ſeveral mouths (the names whereof we ſhall find in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine Sea; the whole length of his courſe 1500 miles. Inſomuch as we may ſay with a modern Poet,

Cedere Danubius ſe tibi, Nile, negat.
O ſeven-mouth'd Nile, I plainly ſee,
Danow will ſcarce give way to thee.

2. Rhene, (of whoſe original and courſe we have ſpoke more fully when we were in Belgium) which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a courſe of 800 miles, emptieth it ſelf into the German Ocean. All which ſhall here be added is, that it gives the Title of the Rhine-grave to ſome Princes of as good Blood as the beſt in Germany, whoſe Poſſeſſions and Eſtates bodering near unto it, they were from thence ſo called; but of late times decayed (almoſt to nothing) in their Eſtates, and living for the moſt part on the entertainment of other Princes, whom they ſerve in their Wars; the Palſgraves of the Rhene, and two at the leaſt of the three Biſhops Electors, raiſing themſelves upon the ruine of this Houſe. 3. Elb. (Albis) which ſpringing out of the Mountain of Riſenberg in the skirts of Bohemia, runneth a courſe of 400 miles, and paſſeth by the Cities of Dreſden, Meiſen, Torgaw, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Lawenburg, Cities of the Electoral and ancient Saxony, and ſo betwixt the Dukedom of Holſtein (now part of Denmark) and the reſt of Germany. 4. Oder, which hath its Fountain in the hithermoſt parts of Moravia; and after it hath run its courſe through Brandenburg and Pomerania, of ſome 300 miles in length, falleth at laſt into the Baltick Sea. 5. Viſurgis, or the Weſer, which iſſuing out of the Hills of Thuringia, runneth through Haſſia and Weſtphalen, to the City of Breme, not far from which it falls into the German Ocean. 6. Viſtula, or the Weyſſel, which riſing out of the Carpathian Mountains betwixt Poland and Hungary, firſt paſſeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Pole, then betwixt Pomeren and Pruſſia, and ſo into the Baltick Sea; the ancient Boundary of this Country, dividing it from Sarmatia Europæa. 7. Moſelle, which riſing out of the Mountain Vauge, in the Confines of Lorrain and the County of Burgundy, paſſeth directly through Lorrain, and the Diſtrict of Triers, by the Cities of Toul, Metz, and Triers it ſelf, beyond which laſt it falleth into the Rhene, at the Town called Confluentz. 8. Sala, or Salza, which riſing in the Mountains of Fitchelberg in the Borders of the Upper Palatinate, and paſſing by the skirts of Miſnia and Saxony ſpecially ſo called, falleth into the Elb beyond Wittenberg, having firſt watered the Cities of Naumburg, Merſburg, and Jene, very obſervable for being the moſt Eaſtern bounds of the Saxon Conqueſts, by this River parted from the Sclaves. 9. Mænus, or the Maine, which hath its ſpring in the Mountains of Bohemia, and paſſing by the Cities of Bamberg and Wurtzburg, is received into the Rhene beneath Frankford. 10. Amiſus, or the Ems, which hath its Fountain near Paderborn in Weſtphalia, and paſſing between the two Frieſlands, falleth into the German Ocean not far from Emden.

Chief Mountains of this mighty Country, beſides the Alps ſpoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Abnoba, now called Schwartzenwald, (the preſent name both of this Mountain and the Foreſt of Martiana, which doth overſhadow it) out of which riſe the Springs of Danow and the Neccar, two principal Rivers of this Country. 2. The Sudetæ, incircling Bohemia, covered with the Woods called anciently Gabreta and Luna, now called the Wolds of Paſſaw and Behaimer, from the places adjoining. 3. Cetius in Auſtria, now called Culemberg, the ancient Bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogeſus, commonly called Vauge, and by ſome French Writers le Monte de Faucities, which incircling Lorrain, divideth it on the Eaſt and South from Elſaſs & the County of Burgundy. As for the Foreſts of this Country, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, that of moſt note was the Foreſt of Hercynia, (of which all the reſt were but limbs or branches,) the beginning whereof was about the Borders of Switzerland and Alſatia, from thence running Eaſtward along the courſe of the Danow unto Tranſilvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vaſt Countries of the Lituanians, Moſcovites, and Ruſſes, in which laſt there are ſtill many vaſt Deſerts of it; the greateſt part thereof in Germany being long ſince conſumed, in place whereof are many goodly Corn-fields and well-built Cities. A Wood ſo formidable to the Romans, that they durſt never venture to ſearch the end of it; the length thereof, after the end of 60 days journey, being undiſcoverable, and the farther ſearch into it quite laid aſide.

Theſe Boundaries and Land-marks being thus deſcribed we ſhall the better follow the Chorography of this great Continent, according to the ſeveral Principalities and Eſtates therein; having firſt taken a ſurvey of the ancient condition of it, with ſo much of the Story as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into ſo many hands. The Country was firſt planted by the poſterity of Gomer, who, deſcending from the Mountains of Albania, their firſt Seat, in memory thereof firſt called Gomerini, after Cimmerini, by that name known to Pliny, Ptolomy, and others of the ancient Writers, removed into the more fruitful Plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris, which Pliny ſpeaks of. But that ſmall Province proving of too narrow a compaſs to contain his Offſpring, and the adjoining Countries being taken up in the former Plantations, they removed unto the North-weſt of the Euxine Sea, where we find a City of their building called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo, and the adjoyning Streight or Fretum called by the name of Boſporus Cimmerius by the Greeks and Latines. Driven from theſe Dwellings by the more powerful Scythians, they ſpred themſelves into the Weſt, where they began to be called Cimbri, and by that name, and under thoſe of the Ambrones and Teutones, ſeveral Branches of them, intended an Invaſion and Conqueſt both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, niſi iſti ſeculo Marius contigiſſet, had not Marius happened to have lived in that Age, by whom they were diſcomfited and deſtroyed. That theſe Gomerians or Cimbri were the firſt Inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the Nations of the North and Weſt of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the Learned. Divided they were into ſeveral Nations, and thoſe alſo ſubdivided into leſſer Tribes, and more obſcure Families; amongſt which thoſe of Teutones or Tuiſcones, from which the Dutch do ſo affect to derive themſelves, might be ſome of the principal. There ſetled, and not pleaſed with that deſert dwelling, ſuch of them as dwelt neareſt to the Rhene paſſed over that River, and beating the Gauls farther up into the Country, poſſeſſed themſelves of their Dwellings, enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Cæſar) without any Rival. But Cæſar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the inſolencies of Arioviſtus a King of the Germans, (for by that name for the reaſons aforeſaid the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legionaries being ſo afraid of this dreadful Enemy, ut teſtamenta paſſim in principiis ſcriberentur, (ſaith the Hiſtorian) that many of them made their Teſtaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquiſhed by Cæſar, and Arioviſtus being fled over the Rhene, the Romans by command of their General made a Bridge over the River, and rather terrified than conquered the neighbouring Germans; who were more fully brought into ſubjection by Druſus, the adopted Son of Auguſtns Cæſar, from thence called Germanicus, by whom not only the Rhæti and Norici, then lying out of the bounds of Germany, now included in it, were ſubdued in fine, and brought into the form of Roman Provinces; but the whole Country in a manner to the very Ocean was forced to yield obedience to the Roman Empire. But this was for ſo ſhort a time, that it was both won and loſt during the Reign and Government of Auguſtus Cæſar. So that the whole eſtabliſhed Conqueſts of the Romans upon this Country, as it is now bounded, contained no more than the Provinces of Germania and Belgica Prima, with part of Germania Secunda, belonging unto the Dioceſs of Gaul; the greateſt part of the two Rhætia's being under the Dioceſs of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripenſe, with ſome parts of Pannonia, parts of the Dioceſs of Illyricum. But none of theſe (as lying on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene, and the South of the Danow) did ever paſs in the accompt of the ancient Germany, the Germans not enduring the yoke ſo long as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the Luſt and Inſolencies of Quintilius Varus, who ſucceeded Druſus in that charge, they ſet upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongſt them, kill him, and utterly cut off three Legions; as we ſhall ſee more particularly when we come to Brunſwick, the ancient Seat of the Cheruſci, by whom the Forces of that Emperour were driven over the Rhene. After which defeat Auguſtus laid aſide the Affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Druſus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hâc clade factum, ut Imperium quod in littore Oceani non ſteterat, in ripa Rheni fluminis ſtaret, ſaith the Hiſtorian. Nor did the Romans only forbear to revenge this Loſs by making a new War upon them, but ſeemed more careful to defend themſelves againſt their Invaſions, than to incur the hazard of a new Defeat; quartering eight Legions with their ſeveral Wings and Aids on the ſhores of the Rhene, and four upon the banks of the Danow, to keep theſe people from incroaching on the Roman Provinces. But the fatal period of that Empire drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans and other Dutch Nations break through thoſe Guards, diſpoſſeſs the Romans of all Gaul, Rhætia and Noricum, which they ſhare amongſt them: till in the end the French, prevailing over the reſt, extend their Empire over all the modern Germany; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperour of the Weſt by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperial Crown by Pope Leo the 4. on Chriſtmaſs day, Anno 801. So that now the old Propheſie of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the Weſt, came to be accompliſhed; though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle Prediction. For when Civilis raiſed a Rebellion amongſt the Batavi (the Hollanders and parts adjoyning) againſt Veſpaſian then newly made Emperour, poſſeſſionem rerum humanarum Tranſalpinis gentibus portendi Druidæ canebant, the Druides propheſied of the tranſlation of the Empire to the Tranſalpine Nations: accompliſhed, as before is ſaid, in the perſon of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany. By whom it was divided (for the better ordering or Governance of it) into Weſt-France, or Weſt-reick, in the barbarous Latine of thoſe times called Weſtraſia, containing the modern France, and ſo much of the Netherlands as lieth on the French ſide of the River Maes; and Oſten-reick, (i. e. the Eaſtern Kingdom) in the Latine of thoſe times Auſtraſia, containing ſo much of the modern Germany and Pannonia as was poſſeſſed by the French, with the reſt of the Netherlands. This was afterwards ſubdivided into the Kingdoms of Lorrain and Germany: whereof the firſt contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before deſcribed, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdom of Germany taking up the reſt. For in the time of Ludovicus Pius, the Son of Charles, the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italy, France, Burgundy, Lorrain, and Germany, diſtributed amongſt his Sons and Nephews with the title of Kings: by means whereof the Kingdoms of Germany and Lorrain, united in the perſon of Lewis the Ancient, in little time were alien'd from the Houſe of Charles, and left off to be French, poſſeſſed by the great Princes of Lorrain, Saxony, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by them diſmembred into many Principalities and inferiour States, all paſſing under the accompt and name of the Dutch or Germans. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

The Kings and Emperours of GERMANY.

A. Ch.

801 1. Charles the Great, Emperour, King of France and Germany.

815 2. Ludovicus Pius, King of France, Germany, and the Emperour of the Romans.

841 3. Lewis, ſurnamed the Ancient, ſecond Son of Ludovicus Pius, King of Germany, to which Anno 876. he united that of Lorrain alſo.

4. Charles the Groſs, Son of Lewis the Ancient, reigned at firſt joyntly with Carloman and Lewis his elder Brethren, after their deaths ſole King of Germany. Anno 880. he ſucceeded Ludovicus Balbus in the title of Emperour, continued unto his Succeſſors; and during the minority of Charles the Simple by a Faction of the French Nobility was choſen King of France: the whole Eſtate of Charles the Great becoming once again united in the perſon of one Soveraign Prince.

891 5. Arnulph, the natural Son of Carloman, the Brother of Charles, King of Germany and Emperour.

903 6. Lewis or Ludovicus IV. (Lewis the Brother of Charles and Carloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany and Emperour, the lawfully begotten Son of Arnulph.

913 7. Conrade, the Son of Conrade, the Brother of Lewis the 4. the laſt Prince of the maſculine iſſue of Charles the Great. After whoſe death the Francones and Saxons, ſeeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroyled by the Princes of the Houſe of Anjou, took that advantage to transfer the Empire to themſelves: and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperour. A worthy Prince, by whom ſome Nations of the Sclaves, the Hungarians and part of Lorrain were ſubdued or added to the Empire.

929 8. Henricus, ſurnamed Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but deſigned by Conrade, as being eldeſt Son of Otho Duke of Saxony by Luitgardis Daughter to the Emperour Arnulph, and conſequently a branch of the Caroline Stock.

938 9. Otho, ſurnamed the Great, the Son of Henry, Emperour and King of Italy. 36 years.

974 10. Otho II. Son of Otho the firſt, Emperour and King of Italy. 10.

984 11. Otho III. Son of Otho II. Duke of Saxony, and the laſt of that Houſe which had the title of Emperour and King of Italy. After whoſe death, all right of Succeſſion being diſclaimed, the Emperours became elective; but for the moſt part the Election was ingroſſed or monopolized (ſince the Faileur of the Houſe of Saxony) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria and Auſtria, notwithſtanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The buſineſs was firſt projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours leſs powerful, and diſtract the Germans, whom they feared, into Sides and Factions: confirmed by a Decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.

1002 12. Henry II. ſurnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the firſt Emperour elected according to the Conſtitution of Gregory the fifth, but ſo elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of Bloud, as being the Grandchild of Henry ſurnamed Rixoſus, the firſt Duke of Bavaria of the Saxon race) the ſecond Son of Henry the firſt, and conſequently the next Heir-male of that Houſe after Otho the 3. compelling ſome of the Electors, who oppoſed his Title, by the force of Arms to yield unto it. So that the firſt Emperour who came in by a clear Election, but not without pretenſion of a Title alſo, was 1025 13. Conrade II. Duke of Franconia, ſurnamed Salicus, Husband to Luitgardis, one of the Daughters of Otho the firſt, and conſequently not a Stranger to the former Family.

1040 14. Henry III. ſurnamed Niger, the Son of Conrade.

1056 15. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in whoſe days the Popes began to uſurp Authority over the Emperours; inſomuch as Leo the ninth, having received the Popedom at the Emperour's hands, repented himſelf of it, put off his Papal Veſtments, went to Rome as a private perſon, and was there new choſen by the Clergy. This was done by the perſwaſion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the firſt Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual Wars and Thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours, ſome of them being excommunicated, ſome forced to put their Necks under the Feet of the Pope, others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themſelves unto the Wars of the Holy Land, leaving the Pope to do what he liſt in Germany.

1106 16. Henry V. Son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope againſt his Father; whom he had no ſooner ſucceeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too ſtiff in the buſineſs of Inveſtitures, and raiſed up the Saxons againſt him; by whom being vanquiſhed, and otherwiſe afflicted by the Pope's Practices, he was forced to ſubmit unto his commands, and was the laſt Emperour of the Houſe of Franconia.

1125 17. Lotharius, Duke of Bavaria, ſeizing on the Empire without any Election, was reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of St. Bernard. He ſetled the Affairs of Italy in two Journies thither. 13.

1139 18. Conrade III. Son of Frederick, the firſt hereditary Duke of Sueve or Schwaben, and Siſter's Son unto Henry the fifth, vanquiſhed Henry ſirnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria; and going to the holy Wars with Lewis King of France, diſcomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander. 15.

1153 19. Frederick, ſirnamed Barbaroſſa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was fain at laſt to ſubmit himſelf, the Pope inſolently treading on his Neck. He went after to the Holy Land, where he died, having diſcomfited the Turks in three great Battels. 37.

1190 20. Henry VI. Son of Frederick, and King of Sicily, in right of Conſtance his Wife, crowned by Pope Celeſtine, who imployed him in the Wars of the Holy Land; in his Journey towards which he died at Meſſina. 8.

1198 21. Philip, Duke of Sueve, Brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope, (who loved not this Family) by whoſe means Otho, the Son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, was ſet up againſt him. The occaſion of great Wars among the Germans, reconciled by Marriage of Otho with a Daughter of Philip. 9.

1207 22. Otho IV. Son of Henry ſirnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long after he was excommunicated, for taking into his hands ſome Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquiſhed in Brabant by the Faction raiſed up againſt him, he relinquiſhed the Empire to his Competitor.

1212 23. Frederick II. King of Sicily and Naples, Son of Henry the 6. having ſettled Germany, diſpoſed himſelf for the Wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the poſſeſſion of the Realm of Jeruſalem. He was excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy, and not long after poiſoned.

1250 24. Conrade IV. Son of Frederick, the laſt Emperour of the Houſe of Schwaben. After whoſe death the Empire being diſtracted by the Pope's practices into many Factions, each Faction choſe an Emperour or King of the Romans: ſo that at one time there were elected Henry Earl of Thuringia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonſo King of Caſtile, the renowned Authour of the Alfonſine Tables, and

1254 25. Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother of Henry the third of England, the beſt monied man of all his time, ſuppoſed therewith to buy the Suffrages of the Archbiſhop of Colen and Elector Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254: and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whoſe death, or an Interregnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at laſt accepted by 1273 26. Rodolph, Earl of Habſpurg, a petit Prince, (others of greater Eſtates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raiſer of the preſent Auſtrian Family.

1292 27. Adolph, Earl of Naſſau, who ſerved in perſon under King Edward the 1. of England againſt the French; for which being diſreliſhed by the Germans, he was encountred and ſlain near the City of Spires.

1308 29. Henry, Earl of Luxemburg, who made a Journey into Italy to recover the Rights of the Empire, (where an Emperour had not been ſeen in 60 years:) ſuppoſed to be poiſoned in the Chalice by a Frier at Benevent, a Town of the Pope's. 6.

1314 30. Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner; oppoſed by Frederick Duke of Auſtria, choſe by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a Town of the Archbiſhop of Colen: but he being defeated, Lewis remained ſole Emperour, and was excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.

1346 31. Charles IV. Son of John King of Bohemia, and Grand-ſon of Henry the 7. crowned with the Iron Crown at Millain 1354; the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.

1378 32. Wenceſlaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, deformed and vicious; depoſed by the German Princes. 22.

1400 33. Rupertus, Elector Palatine, paſſed into Italy for the recovery of the Dukedom of Millain, ſold by Wenceſlaus; but was well beat by John Galeazzo, and ſo returned. 10.

1410 34. Jodocus Barbatus, Marqueſs of Moravia, Uncle to Wenceſlaus.

1411 35. Sigiſmund, Brother of Wenceſlaus, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, crowned at Rome on Whitſunday 1432. He travelled exceedingly for eſtabliſhing the Peace of Chriſtendom, diſtracted at that time with three Popes at once; and was a great promoter of the Council at Conſtance.

1439 36. Albert II. Duke of Auſtria, Son-in-law of Sigiſmund, whom he ſucceeded in all his Eſtates and Titles, excepting Luxemburg. 1.

1440 37. Frederick III. Duke of Auſtria, the Son of Erneſt of Auſtria, and next Heir of Albert the 2. He procured the calling of the Council of Baſil for the Peace of Chriſtendom, travelling for that cauſe to Rome, where he was declared Emperour, Anno 1442. 54.

1494 38. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, Duke of Auſtria, who firſt united the Eſtates of Burgundy to the Houſe of Auſtria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went through with none. 25.

1519 39. Charles V. King of Spain, Son of Philip King of Spain and Archduke of Auſtria, Son of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puiſſant Prince, who had Priſoners at the ſame time the French King and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Proteſtants at Smalcald, took Priſoners the Electour of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Haſſia, drave the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end reſigned all his Eſtates, and died in a Monaſtery. 39.

1558 40. Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, the Brother of Charles, King of Hungary and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charles, Anno 1531. Upon whoſe Reſignation he was choſen Emperour, Anno 1558. 7.

1565 41. Maximilian, the Son of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562, ſucceeding the Empire after his deceaſe.

1577 42. Rodolphus, the eldeſt Son of Maximilian, had great Wars againſt the Turk, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a Peace; but being undermined by his Brother Matthias, was forced to ſurrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, and to content himſelf with Auſtria and the Empire only. Theſe eight laſt Emperors were all of the Order of the Garter.

1612 43. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Archduke of Auſtria; in whoſe time were ſown the ſeeds of that terrible War which had almoſt deſtroyed the Empire. Having no Children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gretz to be declared Succeſſour into his Eſtates. 7.

1637 45. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the 2. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the ſupport of the German Liberty, and againſt the violent reſolutions of his Father at the Battel of Norlingen; the twelfth Emperour of the Houſe of Habſpurg, and the ninth of the Houſe of Auſtria without intermiſſion. The cauſe of which is to be attributed to Charles the 5. who procured in his life-time that his Brother might be choſen Rex Romanorum, as his Succeſſor in the Empire: a policy which hath been ever ſince continued by his Succeſſors. And the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, becauſe the Auſtrian Princes are not only Natives of this Country, but better able to back out the Empire in its complete Majeſty than any of the reſt of that Nation are.

And to ſay truth, it is but need that ſome great Prince or other be elected to it, who by the power and reputation of his own Eſtate may preſerve the Honour of the Empire, confined in a manner within Germany, and there ſo weakned by the alienating of whole Countries from it, (ſome Titulary acknowledgment excepted only) that it is nothing in effect but magni nominis umbra, the ſhadow of a mighty body, a meer empty Title. For if we look upon the preſent ſtate and condition of it, we ſhall find it otherwiſe too weak to ſupport the great and ſwelling Title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire it ſelf, it hath ſome Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledg no Subjection; as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some do acknowledge a kind of Subjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperial Diets; as the Dukes of Savoy & Lorrain, and ſome of the Italian Potentates: Finally, ſome both confeſs the Emperour to be their Sovereign, and that they owe Service to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany only; but thoſe ſo priviledged, ſo exempted from his commands, ſo abſolute & incontrollable in their own Eſtates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his perſon; of which we ſhall ſpeak more herafter, when we come unto the form of the publick Government. In the mean time, if we would know by what occaſions the Empire became ſo infeebled, it may be ſaid, that the reaſons and occaſions of it have been very many. As firſt, The weakneſs and improvidence of the Caroline Race, diſmembring from it many powerful and wealthy Provinces, reſerving only a bare Homage and ſome ſlight acknowledgment. 2. The Cunning of the Popes, who from the time of Henry the 4. to Rodolph of Habspurg had by their Excommunications and other practices ſo exerciſed the Emperors with inteſtine troubles, that they forced them in a manner to abandon Italy: inſomuch that the ſaid Rodolph, finding the inconvenience of it, ſold moſt of his Eſtates there to the faireſt Chapmen. 3. This done, and the Popes knowing well enough that they could not wax ſtrong in Italy if they did not weaken the Emperor's eſtate in Germany, they firſt wreſted out of their hands the Inveſtiture of the Biſhops, Abbats, and other Eccleſiaſtical Preferments; who being now made their own creatures, were ſo encreaſed both in Revenue and Power by little and little, and fortified with ſo many Immunities, that ſome of them grew in time to be Free Eſtates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 4. But fearing that this might not bring the Emperors low enough, they bated them with continual Factions and perpetual Broils: which put them to a neceſſity of making what Friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them; and taking up what monies they could of the wealthier Cities, paying them in Exemptions and Royal Priviledges, when they could not otherwiſe cancel or diſcharge the Debt. 5. And unto this, the making the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire but as Tenants for term of life, and therefore were more likely to diſcharge ſuch Debts by impairing the publick Patrimony, which they had no hold in, than to diminiſh any thing of their own Eſtates. 6. But being the Title of Emperor was the greateſt Honour which any of that Nation could be capable of, and ſuch as by good husbandry might be made beneficial unto their poſterity, (as we ſee what good uſes have been made of it by the Auſtrian Family, ever ſince the time of Rodolph of Habſpurg;) who would not part with ſome of the Imperial Rights, to advance his own Houſe to an equal greatneſs? And herein many of the Emperors were exceeding faulty, who, to get the Empire to themſelves, or leave it after them unto their poſterity, diſmembred from the ſame many Towns and fair Poſſeſſions, given by them to the Electors for their Votes and Suffrages. 7. A thing which the Electors underſtood ſufficiently, and therefore were reſolved to make the beſt of the market, knowing that the Commodity could be bought of none but themſelves: as in the Election of Wenceſlaus Son of Charles the 4th. of whom it was but Ask and have what they have a mind to. By means whereof the Princes grew in time ſo ſtrong, that there were few of them who durſt not undertake a War againſt their Emperours. And this appeareth by the Story of Charles the fifth, who, though the moſt puiſſant Emperor which had reigned in Germany ſince Charles the Great, yet found himſelf ſo over-matched by theſe ruſfling Princes, that he was willing to reſign the Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

But to proceed: By theſe and every of theſe means the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Eſtates, and thoſe Eſtates to be made abſolute and independent, as before is ſaid. The principal whereof, which being deſcribed will make up the Chorography of this great Continent, are thoſe of 1. Cleveland, 2. the Eſtates of the three Spiritual Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhene, 4. Alſatia, 5. Lorrain, 6. Suevia or Schwaben, 7. Bavaria, 8. Auſtria and its Appendixes, 9. the Confederation of Wederaw, 10. Franconia, 11. Wirtenberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgoia, or the Vpper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia and the incoporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenburg, 17. the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, 18. Saxony and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedoms of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, 20. the Lantgravedom of Haſſia, 21. Weſtphalen, 22. Eaſt-Frieſland. Such leſſer States as, being abſolute and free, are of leſſer moment, ſhall be reduced (together with the Imperial Cities) to thoſe ſeveral Provinces in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Holſtein or Holſatia, though it be Imperial, and in this reſpect by ſome accounted as a Province of Germany; yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, I ſhall there ſpeak of it. Some of theſe are thus cenſured by Aubanus, a late Writer. They of Suevia (ſaith he) are Whores, they of Franconia Raviſhers and Buggers, they of Bohemiah Hereticks, thoſe of Bavaria Thieves, they of Saxony Drunkards, they of Frieſland and Weſtphalia Swearers, and they of the Palatinate Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all than ſo. I know there is another diviſion of this Country, made by the Emperor Maximi- Maximillian at the Diet of Colen, Anno 1522. who, for the better raiſing both of men and money for all publick ſervices, cauſed it to be divided into the ten Circles of 1. Lower Saxony. 2. Upper Saxony. 3. Weſtphalia. 4. Of the Rhene. 5. Of the four Electors of that part. 6. Franconia. 7. Suevia. 8. Bavaria. 9. Auſtria, and 10. Burgundy. But that before propoſed being the more particular, I ſhall follow that, according to the order before laid down; beginning firſt with thoſe which, together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedom of Lorrain, contained anciently the Provinces of Belgica and Germania Prima, and ſome part of Germania Secunda, and made up the Kingdom of Auſtraſia ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called.

1. CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, or the Eſtates of the Duke of Cleve, before diſmembred and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedom on the death of the laſt Duke hereof, Anno 1609, contained the Dukedoms of Cleve, Guilick and Berg, and the Earldom of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together. And though theſe two laſt lie on the other ſide of the Rhene, and ſo not properly within the old Precincts of the Kingdom of Lorrain, or any of the Roman Provinces before named; yet being they belonged all to the ſame Prince, not parted by the interpoſition of other Countries, they ſhall be handled here together as the ſame Eſtate.

1. The Dukedom of CLEVE, properly and diſtinctly ſo called, hath on the Eaſt the Countries of Mark and Berg with ſome part of Weſtphalen, on the Weſt Gelderland and ſome part of Limbourg, on the North the Earldom of Zutphen and the Land of Over-Yſſel, and on the South Gulick and the Land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief Town of it.

The Country is very Fruitful both for Corn and Paſturage, well ſtocked with Cattel of all ſorts for neceſſary uſe and pleaſure; hath good ſtore of Fowl, both tame and wilde; is bleſſed alſo with an healthy Air, and, in a word, with all things needful for the life of man, well watered with the Rhene, the Roer, the Duſſel, the Ezfat, and the Nirſi, common to this and the reſt of the incorporate Provinces.

The places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Cleve, (in Latine Clivia) ſo called, becauſe built on the ſides of three little Hills (which the Latines call Clivi) gently deſcending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it ſelf into ſeveral Chanels. An ancient Town, and of great note in former time, as appears by many old Foundations and other monuments of Antiquity continually digged up in the Fields adjoining; but chiefly by an old four-ſquare Tower built on the higheſt of the three Hills, of great height and ſtate, Founded by Julius Cæſar as a Bulwark againſt the Germans inhabiting the farther ſide of the River. For proof of which, beſides the old Tradition conſtantly maintained, there is an Inſcription on the Gates of the Duke's Palace, near adjoyning to it, which ſaith, Anno ab Urbe DCXCIIX. C. Julius Dictator, his partibus ſubactis, hanc Arcem fundavit; i.e. that in the year 698, from the building of Rome, Julius Cæſar the Dictator, having ſubdued thoſe parts of the Country, cauſed this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a Town of great Antiquity, as the Ruines of it do declare; ſuppoſed by Pighius to be the Trajana Colonia of the Ancients. 3. Weſel, (in Latine Veſalia) a fair and rich Town, ſeated on the Confluence of the Rhene with the River of Lippe, which, riſing in Weſtphalia, doth here loſe it ſelf: of great note for a Colledge of Secular Canons built here by Ebrard the 9th Earl, Anno 840, or thereabouts; and an Hoſpital liberally endowed for old impotent perſons, Founded by Henry de Baers, the Duke's Chancellour. A Town not ſubject to theſe Dukes, though within the Dukedom, being reckoned an Imperial City, and one of the Hanſe-Towns; now neither ſo Imperial nor ſo free as formerly: poſſeſſed firſt with the Spaniard with a Garriſon of 3000 men (at the beginning of the War of Cleve) by D. Lewis Velaſco, and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, Anno 1628. 4. Burick, on the French ſide of the Rhene, over againſt Weſel, amongſt goodly Corn-fields and pleaſant Paſtures. 5. Duysburg, or Tuitchburg, in Latine called Teutoburgum, a Town of the ancient Germans, (as the name importeth) ſituate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Roer, two noted Rivers. A Town formerly of great Trading, and notably well built; Imperial, and one of the Hanſe: but ceaſed to be Imperial when ſold by Rodolph of Habſpurg to Theodorick the ninth of that name, Earl of Cleve; together with 6. Cranenburg, another Town of this Dukedom, but of leſſer note. 7. Emmerick, on the Rhene, a well-frequented Town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8. Rees. 9. Griet, and 10. Grietbuiſen, all upon the Rhene. 11. Calcar, a Town more within the Land, but not far from the River; grown wealthy by the trade of Cloathing, and the beſt Beer or Ale in all theſe parts, ſold thence abundantly into the Country round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auff de Baern, it is ſuppoſed that Cæſar Germanicus built his Bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Vetera Caſtra againſt the Marſi, a Nation of Germany. 12. Gennep, upon the Niers or Nirſi, not far from its influx into the Maes: which together with Duiffele and Riexwald were bought of Sigiſmund, the Emperour, by Adolph the firſt Duke of Cleve, for a great ſum of money.

South of the Land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lieth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the banks of the Rhene; a diſtinct State, the Earl of which is ſubject to no other Prince but the Emperour only; ſo called from Muers, the chief Town of it, ſituate on the French ſide of the Rhene, over againſt Duysburg. Next Towns to which are, 2. Orſey. 3. Augur; of which little memorable. A ſmall Territory, but in a very fruitful Soil. The neighbourhood whereof to the Land of Colen (to which it ſerveth as an Outwork upon that ſide) preſerved it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve, who otherwiſe, no doubt, either by Arms or Marriage had been maſters of it, as they were of the adjoining Provinces on both ſides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedom of Gulick, hath on the Eaſt the County of Muers and the Land of Colen, on the Weſt Gelderland and Limbourg, on the North Cleve, and on the South the reſt of the Land of Colen. The Air and Soil are much of the ſame nature as in Cleve; ſave that here is a greater plenty of Woad for dying, and a better breed of Horſes than in the other. The Seat of the Menapii in the times of old.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Guilick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Juliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Antoninus, ſufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof, but not otherwiſe famous; ſeated upon the River Roer; the chief Seat heretofore of the Dukes of Guilick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve; and, ſince the diſſolution of that Eſtate, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and ſometimes by the Spaniards, called in by the Competitors to aſſert their Titles. 2. Dueren, on the ſame River, the Marcodurum of the old Writers; and of late memorable for the long Siege which it held againſt Charles the fifth, in his Wars againſt William Duke of Cleve and Guilick for the Dukedom of Geldres. 3. Munſter Eyſel, (in Latine Monaſterium Eyſaliæ) ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Munſter of Weſtphalen, pleaſantly ſeated in a Valley begirt with Mountains, not far from the ſpring or fountain of the River Erp. 4. Caſter, ſo called of a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle built for defence of this part of the Country. 5. Berken, on the River Erp. 6. Meroden, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which gives name to an honourable and ancient Family. 7. Enskirck. 8. Berklen, &c.

There is alſo within the limits of this Dukedom the famous Town of Aix, as the French, or Aken, as the Germans call it; famous of old time for the hot Baths both within and without the Town, whence it had the name of Aix, or Aquen, (in Latine Aquiſgranum;) ſituate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitful Soil, but the Buildings nothing anſwerable to the fame of the place; inhabited for the moſt part by Smiths and Braſiers, who drive the greateſt Trade herein, working continually on Iron and other metals, with which they are ſupplyed abundantly out of Liege and Limbourg. The Town is Imperial, but under the Protection of the Dukes of Cleve: at the expiration of which Family, under colour of ſome quarrels about Religion, it was ſeiſed on and garriſoned by Marqueſs Spinola for the King of Spain. It was of great fame formerly for the death and ſepulture of Charls the Great, by him made one of the three Seats of the Weſtern Empire, and deſigned by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans ſhould receive his Crown for the Kingdom of Germany at the hands of the Archbiſhop of Colen. The Town is ſuppoſed to be formerly the wintering Camp of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Civilis in the beginning of his Rebellion againſt Veſpaſian; during which Wars it is often mentioned by the Writers of thoſe times. They were built and ſtrengthened by Auguſtus, the better to keep under the Germans; quippe illis hybernis obſideri premique Germanias Auguſtus crediderat, as Tacitus. At this day this Town and Triers, are reputed famous for holy Reliques; here being ſaid to be amongſt others the Bearing-cloth wherewith our Saviour was wrapt when he was in his Swadling-clouts, which the Emperour ſolemnly worſhippeth at his Inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papiſts have to be thought poſſeſſors of theſe Reliques, ſee I beſeech you, how pitifully they have mangled the Head of S. John Baptiſt. They of Amiens brag that they have his Face, and ſo do they of S. John d' Angelie. The reſt of his Head is at Malta; yet is the hinder part of his Scull at Namur, and his Brain at Novum Roſtovienſe: another part of it is at Maurienne, another piece at Paris; his Jaw at Weſel, his Ear at S. Flowres, his Forehead and Hair at S. Salvadore's in Venice: another part of his Head is at Noyon, and another at Luca: Yet is his whole head entire and unmaimed in S. Sylveſter's Church at Rome. And ſo no doubt is this Bearing-cloth at more places than one.

But to return again to Gulick. It was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Dukes of Lorrain; whether laid to it at the firſt erection of that Dukedom, as ſome Writers ſay, or added to it by the Princes of the Houſe of Ardenne, when they ſucceeded in the ſame, I dare not poſſibly determine; although the lying of this Country within the ancient Verge or Perambulation of the great Foreſt of Ardenne makes the laſt in my opinion not to be improbable. It was firſt made an Earldom of it ſelf in the perſon of Euſtace, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, who ſeiſed upon it as his part of the Eſtate on the death of Godfrey, his elder Brother Baldwin being abſent in the Holy Hand. In the perſon of William the fourth of that name it was made a Marquiſate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1329, created not long after Duke of Guilick by Charles the fourth, Anno 1356. His Eſtate was much augmented about that time, or but ſhortly after, by his Marriage with Mary, Siſter and Heir of Rainold and Edward Dukes of Geldres, adding thereby that Dukedom unto this of Gulick. His two Sons, William and Rainold, both Dukes ſucceſſively, dying without iſſue, the Eſtate fell to Adolphus, Duke of Berg or Monts, as the next Heir-male, Anno 1425; and finally, together with that of Berg, was added to the Dukedom of Cleve, by the Marriage of Mary Heir hereof with John the 3. Duke of Cleve, and with it conjoyned till the expiration of that noble Family; whereof more anon.

As for the Eſtates of Berg and Mark, they had one original, begun by two Brothers, the Sons of Theodorick Lord of Teiſterbant, of the Houſe of Cleve: out of which Houſe as they deſcended, ſo into that they finally were again reſolved, as their firſt materials. Of theſe two Brothers, Adolphus, being the elder, was by the Emperour Henry, ſurnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena Anno 930, or thereabouts; and Eberard, the younger, by the ſame Emperour made Earl of Berg. But Eberard, entering a Monaſtery of his own Foundation, left his Eſtate and Earldom of Berg to the Elder Brother. United thus into one Eſtate, they became again divided betwixt the Sons of Adolph, the 3. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg; Engelbert the younger Son enjoying the Eſtate of Berg, and Eberard the elder ſucceeding his Father in that of Altena. How they became united to the Houſe of Cleve, we ſhall ſee hereafter, having firſt looked over the Chorography or Deſcription of them.

3. The Dukedom of BERG is bounded or the Eaſt with Weſtphalen and the Country of Mark, on the Weſt with the Rhene from Weſel up as high as Colen, by which 'tis parted from the Dukedom of Cleve, on the North with the River Lippe, which ſeparates it from the reſt of Cleve, and on the South with the Land of Colen. So called from the Hillineſs of the Country, Berg in Dutch ſignifying an Hill, (as Burg doth a Town or Burrough;) from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Montenſes in Latine, and les Contes and Ducs de Mont in French. The Country for the moſt part, in the Vales eſpecially, yields a great ſtore of the beſt Wheat, and conſequently of the pureſt Bread; and in the Hill-countries rich Mines of Coal, wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1. Duſſeldorp, ſo called of the River Duſſel, upon which it is ſituate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2. Adenburg, built by Eberhard the firſt Earl of Berg, the Seat of him and his Succeſſours, till removed to Duſſeldorp. 3. Keiſerſwerd, ſituate on the Rhene, belonging anciently to the Empire, but bought for a great ſum of money of Charles the 4. by John Earl of Cleve. 4. Mulheim, on the Rhene alſo, juſt againſt Colen on the other ſide of the water; fortified in the year 1614, and made the Receptacle of the Proteſtants of that Biſhoprick, prohibited the free exerciſe of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marqueſs Spinola, on complaint made by thoſe of Colen to the Emperour Matthias. 5. Stelt, or Steltium, on the Roer, amongſt the Coal-mines. 6. Angermond, on the mouth of the River Angra, as the name imports. 7. Eſſen, or Eſſendia, on the borders of the County of Mark, once an Imperial, but under the Protection of the Earls of Berg; of moſt note for a Monaſtery here built by Alfride the 4. Biſhop of Hildeſheim, for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoyning.

How Berg at firſt was made an Earldom, how joyned unto Altena, and disjoyned again, hath been ſhewed before. No ſooner made a State diſtinct, but it was added to the Patrimony of the Earls of Gulick, by the Marriage of Earl William with the Daughter and Heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William and Adolphus, Sons of Gerrard the 2. An. 1247. the firſt ſucceeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the laſt in Berg. During this Partage it was made a Dukedom in the perſon of William the firſt of that name by Wenceſlaus, the Emperour, Anno. 1389. whoſe Son Adolphus, as next Heir, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, An. 1423. How both were added unto Cleve hath been ſaid already.

The Dukes and Earls of

	1. Engelbert, the firſt Earl of Berg diſtinct from Mark.	1129	1. Euſtace, the firſt Earl of Gulick diſtinct from Lorrain.
	2. Adolphus, Son of Engelbert.		2. Un, Son of Euſtace.
	3. N. the Siſter of Adolphus.		3. William Earl of Gulick.

4. Gerrard, Earl of Gulick and Berg.
5. William, II. Son of Gerrard.
6. Gerrard, II. Son of William the 2.

1247	7. Adolphus II. younger Son of Gerrard the 2. took priſoner by the Archbiſhop of Colen, (whom not long before he had held in cuſtody) ſhut up in an Iron Veſſel daubed with Honey, and moſt miſerably ſtung to death by Bees.	1247	7. William III. eldeſt Son of Gerrard the ſecond.
1296.	8. William III. Son of Adolphus.		8. Gerrard, III. Son of William.
1337	9. Gerrard III. Son of William the 3.		9. Gerrard IV. Son of Gerrard the 2.
	10. William IV. created the firſt Duke of Berg, Anno 1389, outed of the greateſt part of his Eſtate by his Son Adolphus.	1325	10. William IV. created firſt Marqueſs, after Duke of Gulick.
		1366	11. William V. Duke of Gulick and Geldres, this laſt accruing to him in the right of his Mother Mary, Heir of that Eſtate.
		1404	12. Rainold, Duke of Gulick and Geldres who died in the year 1423.

11. Adolphus III. the Son of William the fourth Duke of Berg, ſucceeded alſo unto Rainold the laſt Duke of Gulick, dying without Iſſue, as the next Heir-male, the Dukedom of Gelderland falling by the Heirs general to the Houſe of Egmund.

1434 12. Gerrard IV. of Berg, and V. of Gulick, Son of William, and Brother of Adolphus.

1475 13. William V. of Berg, and VI. of Gulick, Son of Gerrard.

1511 14. Mary, Daughter and Heir of William, Dutcheſs of Gulick and Berg, conveyed the whole Eſtate in Marriage to John the 3. Duke of Cleve and Earl of Mark, continuing in that Family till the expiration of it in the perſon of John-William, the laſt Prince hereof, Anno 1610.

4. The Earldom of MARCH, or MARK, hath on the Eaſt and North Weſtphalia, on the Weſt the Dukedom of Cleve, on the South that of Berg or Monts. So called, as being ſeated in the Marches of Weſtphalen, out of which it was taken. The Country for the moſt part, like the reſt of Weſtphalen, is more fit for Paſturage than Corn, woody, and yielding ſtore of Pawnage to thoſe herds of Swine with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1. Werden, upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Weſtphalia, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattel. 2. Soeſt, (in Latine Suſatum) for wealth and greatneſs not inferiour to any in Weſtphalen, (except Munſter only) conſiſting of ten Pariſhes, and lording it over many rich and pleaſant Villages. Anciently it belonged to the Biſhops of Colen; but in the year 1454. did voluntarily yield it ſelf to the Duke of Cleve (being then Earl of March alſo) and was by Duke John the 4. couragiouſly defended againſt thoſe Prelates. . Arusberg, a fine and pleaſant ſite, uſed for a retiring-place by the Electors of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4. Dortmund, (in Latine Tremonia) a County anciently of it ſelf; and held immediately of the Empire, poſſeſſed by the Trotmanni, a Tribe of the Suevians, from whence firſt called Trotmania, and at laſt Tremonia. 5. Blancoſtein, built commodiouſly by Adolphus the fifth of that name, and firſt Earl of March; as was alſo 6. Ham, or Hammone. 7. Unna, of which nothing memorable. 8. Altena, the firſt Title of the Earls of this Houſe, before they aſſumed that of the Earls of March, aſſumed firſt by Adolphus the 4. on the Conqueſt of ſome Lands in the Marches of Weſtphalen, continuing in that Family till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, and to which the reſt of thoſe Eſtates did in time accrue; it was one of the moſt ancient Eſtates or Principalities in theſe parts of the world, continuing in a direct line for the ſpace of 900 years, held by them of the Kings of France, and afterwards of the Kings of Lorrain, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun firſt by Elias Grallius, Companion to Charles Martel in his Wars againſt the Friſons, Saxons and Bavarians; whoſe Son Theodorick added hereto by Marriage the County of Teiſterbant, containing the Towns and Seigniouries of Altena in Weſtphalen, as alſo of Bornel, Heudſon, Bueron, Culemburg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the ſixth Earl was added the Territory of Twentzen, (in Latine Regio Tuentana) given him by Ludovicus Pius; by Theodorick the fifth, the Town and Seigniory of Dinſlack, ſetled upon him on his Marriage with Matilda the Heir thereof; by Theodorick the 9. the County of Hulkenrade, near Nuys in the Land of Colen, together with the Towns of Duysburg and Culemburg, bought of Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis; by John his Son the Town & Territory of Keiſerſwerd, bought of Charles the 4. By Adolph the 29. Earl the Earldom of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united. By Adolph his Succeſſor (made the firſt Duke hereof by the Emperour Sigiſmund, Anno 1417.) were added the Lordſhips of Gennep, Duiffele, and Riexwald bought of the ſaid Emperour; together with the County of Ravenſtein, the Towns of Leoburg, Limers, and Hatteren, for the ranſom of William Duke of Berg, and other noble perſons taken priſoners by him, An. 1397; by John, the firſt Duke of that name, the Town and Territory of Soeſt; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedoms of Berg and Gulick, as Heir thereof by his Mother Mary, ſole Daughter and Heir of William the fifth and ſixth, the laſt Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble Family had not long attained, and thereby made themſelves and their Sons and Daughters fit Matches for the greateſt Princes, but it pleaſed God to bring to its fatal end, and by that means to diſſipate this brave Eſtate in the hands of Strangers, as ſhall be ſhewed in the concluſion of this Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of CLEVE.

Earls of ALTENA and MARCH.

A. Ch.

834 1. Robert, Son of Baldwin, to whom the Country of Teiſterbant was given by Eberhard.

2. Theodorick, Son of Robert, the firſt Lord of Altena.

3. Adolphus I. Earl of Altena.

4. Adolphus II. Earl of Altena and Berg.

5. Conrade, Earl of Altena and Berg.

6. Adolph III. Earl of Altena and Berg.

7. Eberhard, Earl of Altena; his younger brother Engelbert ſucceeding in Berg.

8. Frederick, Earl of Altena.

9. Adolphus IV. created the firſt Earl of March.

1249 10. Engelbert, Earl of March and Altena.

11. Adolphus V. Son of Engelbert.

12. Engelbert II. from whom by a ſecond Wife, the Elias Grallius. Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, deſcended that branch of the Houſe of March which till of late were Soveraigns of Sedan and Dukes of Bouillon.

13. Adolph VI. Husband of Mary (or Margaret) Daughter and Heir of Theodorick the 9. Earl of Cleve.

1389 30. Adolph II. of Cleve, and VIII. of March, created the firſt Duke of Cleve by the Emperour Sigiſmund at the Council of Conſtance, Anno 1417.

1443 31. John III. Son of Adolph, Duke of Cleve, Earl of March, and Lord of Ravenſtein.

1481 32. John II. of the rank of Dukes, and the IV. of the Earls.

1521 33. John III. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by deſcent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of William the laſt Duke thereof.

1539 34. William, Son of John the 3. and Mary his Wife, Daughter and ſole Heir of William the laſt Duke of Gulick and Berg, Father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the Wives of Henry the 8 of England. He contended very ſtrongly againſt Charles the fifth for the Dukedom of Geldres; but, being two weak for ſo great an Adverſary, made his Submiſſion to him at Venlo and ſo ſaved his Eſtates.

1584 35. John-William, Son of the former William, during the life of Charles-Frederick, his elder Brother, was Biſhop of Munſter; on whoſe death, Anno 1575. he reſigned that dignity, and in the end ſucceeded his Father in his whole eſtates; which he managed with great piety and prudence till the year 1610. and then died iſſueleſs; the laſt of that ancient and noble Family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whoſe death much quarrel and contention grew about the Succeſſion betwixt the ſeveral Competitors and Pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold, Archduke of Auſtria, pretending an Inveſtiture from the Emperour Rodolphus in the Dukedom of Juliers, to whom for want of Heirs-males the Eſtate was ſaid to be eſcheated. 2. John-George, Duke of Saxony, deſcended from Sibyll, Daughter of Duke John the third; at whoſe Marriage with John-Frederick the Elector of Saxony, Anno 1535, it was ſaid to have been ſolemnly agreed upon, that on the failing of the Heirs-males of Cleve, the Iſſue of that Marriage ſhould ſucceed therein. 3. George-William, Duke of Pruſſia, Son of John Sigiſmund the Elector of Brandenburg by the Lady Anne his Wife, eldeſt Daughter of Albert of Brandenburg, Duke of Pruſſia, and of Maria Eleonora, the eldeſt Siſter and next Heir of the Duke deceaſed. 4. Wolfgangus-Gulielmus, Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen, the younger Siſter of that Mary, who claimed the Eſtate as neareſt Kinſman by one degree to the ſaid laſt Duke. And though the right ſeemed moſt apparently on the ſide of Brandenburg, the Eſtate in tail, pretended by the Duke of Saxony, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority, and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg not of force in Germany:

yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a poſſeſſion of Juliers and of moſt parts of that Country, the two Princes of Brandenburg and Newburg ſoon agreed the controverſie, and by the help of the Proteſtant Princes their Confederates recovered the greateſt part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg, not content with his Partage, firſt married with a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, and called in the Spaniſh Arms, under the command of Marqueſs Spinola, to abett his Quarrel: which made George-William, Son of the Elector of Brandenburg and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Naſſau, after Prince of Orange. The iſſue of which War was this, that Spinola poſſeſſed himſelf of Weſel, Aken, Mulheim, Duſſeldorp, and moſt other places of importance in Berg and Gulick; and the States got into their power ſome Towns of Gulick, with Rees and Emerick in the Dukedom of Cleve, and almoſt the whole County of Marck. And though moſt parts of theſe Eſtates have been delivered ſince to the rightful Owners, yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which notwithſtanding that they both pretend to keep for the uſe of thoſe Princes in whoſe cauſe they ſtood: yet when ſuch ſtrong parties keep the Stakes, it is moſt eaſie to determine who will win the Game: ſuch Alterations as have happened in the chance of War, by the reciprocal winning and loſing of ſome Towns on both ſides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of theſe Princes were, 1. Gules, over an Eſcocheon in Feſſe Argent, a Carbuncle pierced, pometted and flowred Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve. 2. Or, a Lion Azure, armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Arms of Berg and Marck I have no-where found.

2. The Eſtates of the Three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

ADjoyning to the Eſtates of Cleve are thoſe of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen Mentz, and Triers; not ſo contiguous and conterminous as thoſe of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out ſeverally by their Metes and Boundaries. And firſt for COLEN-Land, or the Eſtate of the Archbiſhop and Elector of Colen. It is bounded on the Eaſt with the Dukedom of Berg, divided from it by the Rhene, on the Weſt with Gulick on the North with Cleve it ſelf and the County of Muers, and on the South extending to the Land of Triers. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Ubii, in former times poſſeſſed of the Countries of Berg and Marck; but being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French ſide of the Rhene, as well for defence of the Borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own ſecurity againſt that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the Reign and under the conduct of Childerick, An. 412, or thereabout; and from the French by the Emperour Otho the firſt, An. 949. By Otho the 2. made a part of the Dukedom of Lorrain, or at the leaſt given by him unto Charles of France, the firſt Duke thereof. After whoſe death, deceaſing without Iſſue-male, the Town of Colen and many other pieces upon the Rhene were ſeized on by Otho the 3. and by him reſtored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and of late times incorporated amongſt the Hanſe-Towns; but the Territory near unto it, and a great part of Weſtphalen, ſubject immediately to the Biſhop. The Biſhop's See was firſt founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Diſciples of S. Peter, as hath been conſtantly affirmed by old Tradition: but howſoever it was an Epiſcopal See, without all queſtion, in the time of Conſtantine, Maternus, Biſhop hereof, ſubſcribing amongſt others to the Council of Arles, Anno 326. And being Colen was in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda, the Biſhop had the power of a Metropolitan; according to the rule and obſervation ſo often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, theſe Biſhops, with their brethren of Mentz and Triers, were made three of the ſeven which were to nominate and elect the ſucceeding Emperour: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in Power and Patrimony.

Places of moſt importance within this Electorate are, 1. Bonn, ſituate on the banks of the Rhene, in the moſt pleaſant and fruitful place of all the Country; the ordinary Reſidence of the Archbiſhop, whoſe Houſe or Palace here is ſaid to be one of the faireſt in all Germany. By Tacitus it is called Bonna, and ſometimes Caſtra Bonnenſia, the Wintering-camp in his time of the Sixth Legion. 2. Nuys, by the ſame Writer called Noveſium, (Niveſia by Antoninus) ſeated on the Erp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundy, who being reſolved to get this Town into his hands, as a convenient paſs into Germany, lay ſo long before it, that he loſt the opportunity of joyning with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purpoſely invited to the War of France, and yet was fain to go without it. By means whereof he grew ſo low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Lorrainer, forſook by the Engliſh, baffled by the Switzers, and at laſt overthrown and ſlain by that beggerly Nation. 3. Ernace, or Andernach, by Marcellinus called Antenacum, one of the ten Garriſons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to ſecure their Province from the Germans; the other nine being Confluentz, Boppart, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Seltz, Straeſburg, and Waſſenburg. 4. Lintz, ſeated on the ſame River alſo. 5. Sontina, a Town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a Village of no eſteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tolliacum, moſt memorable for the great Victory which Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French (upon a Vow made in the heat of the Fight to embrace the Goſpel) obtained againſt the whole power of the Almans, never preſuming after that to invade his Territories. 7. Rhineberg, commonly called Berck, the moſt Northern Town of all the Biſhoprick, ſituate on the Rhene, (as the name imports) there where the Lands of this Biſhop as alſo of the Dukes of Cleve and the Earls of Muers meet upon a point. A Town which for theſe 60 years hath been of little uſe or profit to the right Owner, poſſeſſed ſometimes by the Spaniards, ſometimes by the Confederate States; for each commodiouſly ſeated, as opening a paſſage up the River, and receiving great Cuſtoms on all kind of Merchandiſe paſſing to and fro. But having finally been poſſeſſed by the Spaniard from the year 1606 till 1633, it was then regained for the States by Henry of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, with the loſs of no more then 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 braſs pieces of Ordnance, 70 barrels of Powder, with Victuals and Ammunition of all ſorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, ſituate on the Rhene, firſt built by the Ubii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum; afterwards, in honour of Agrippina, (Daughter of Germanicus, and Wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colony, and called Colonia Agrippina, and ſometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compaſs, in which are numbered 19 Hoſpitals, 37 Monaſteries of both Sexes, 30 Chappels of our Lady, 9 Pariſhes, and 10 Collegiat Churches, beſides the Cathedral, being a Church of vaſt greatneſs, but of little beauty, and not yet finiſhed: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellour of Italy, the ſecond of the three Electors, and writes himſelf Duke of Weſtphalen and Angrivaria. Nigh to this Town did Cæſar with incredible expedition make a Bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy than the reports of his valour. So powerful is laborious induſtry, that it overcometh all diſaſters, and maketh the moſt unpaſſable waters yield to heroick reſolutions.

In this Town alſo is ſaid to lie the bodies of the Three wiſe men which came from the Eaſt to worſhip our Saviour, vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole Story is at large written in Tables which are faſtned unto their Tombs; the pith whereof is this: The firſt of them, called Melchior, an old man with a large Beard, offered Gold, as unto a King, the ſecond, called Gaſper, a beardleſs young man, offered Frankincenſe, as unto God, the third, called Balthaſar, a Blackmore with a ſpreading Beard, offered Myrrhe, as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the Table ſaith is probable; 1. becauſe they came from the Eaſt, and ſo is Arabia in reſpect of Hieruſalem; and 2. becauſe it is ſaid in the 72. Pſalm, The Kings of Arabia ſhall bring gifts. As for their bodies, they are there ſaid to have been tranſlated by Helena, the Mother of Conſtantine, unto Conſtantinople; from thence by Euſtorſius, Biſhop of Millain, removed unto Millain, and finally brought hither by Rainoldus Biſhop hereof, Anno 1164. This is the ſubſtance of the Hiſtory; which for my part I reckon amongſt the Apocrypha, (except it be their coming from ſome part of Arabia) but have not leiſure in this place to refel the Fable.

As for the temporal Eſtate of the Biſhops of Colen, it came unto them ſpecially by the munificence of the Emperours of the Houſe of Saxony; the Dukedom of Engern, containing a good part of Weſtphalen, being acquired unto this See by Bruno, once Archbiſhop hereof, one of the younger Sons of the Emperour Henry the firſt, ſurnamed the Fowler, with the conſent of Otho the firſt, his elder Brother. To which was added not long after the whole Land of Colen (as we have formerly deſcribed it) by Otho the 2. which being formerly a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain, was taken out of it, and ſettled on the Biſhops hereof, at ſuch time as the Dukedom of Lorrain was erected by him; ſuch pieces only as are found on the other ſide of the Rhene (neither great nor many) being added by the wit and induſtry of the following Biſhops: exceedingly increaſed both in Power and patrimony by the addition of Liege to this Electorate; it being of late the conſtant cuſtom of the Canons of Liege to chuſe the Archbiſhop of Colen for their Prince and Paſtor.

Next to the Biſhoprick of Colen lieth the Land of TRIERS, extended all along the courſe of the Moſelle, from the Dukedom of Lorrain on the South, beyond the Influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the Land of Colen. It is bounded on the Eaſt with Luxenburg, as on the Weſt with that part of Franconia which lieth below the confluence of the ſaid two Rivers, and is now called Rhinegow; more Southward on that ſide with the Country of Weſt-reich and the Dukedom of Zweibruck, parts of the Palatinate of the Rhene. The Country towards Lorrain and Luxenburg is ſomewhat wilde and barren, more fruitful about Triers it ſelf and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleaſant than profitable, the greateſt Riches of it lying in Woods and Minerals. The Biſhop's See was here firſt erected by Eucherius, a Diſciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof is not only teſtified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius, a Writer of approved credit, who adds Valerius and Maternus for his next Succeſſors; the line Epiſcopal continuing till the Council of Arlees, Anno 326, Agritius Biſhop of Triers ſubſcribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards, and before, the Biſhop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being anciently the Metropolis of Belgica Prima, within which it ſtands. It increaſed exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spiritualty, though the laſt in order, and Chancellour to the Emperour for the Realm of France: the Fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wreſted from it, with the reſt of the Kingdom of Lorrain, by the German Emperours.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Confluentz, or Coblentz, the Confluentes of Antoninus, ſo called becauſe ſeated on the Confluence or Meeting of the Rhene and the Moſelle; the Station anciently of the Firſt Legion. A populous and well-built Town, and ſeated in a pleaſant and fertile Country. 2. Eerenbretſtein, over againſt Coblentz, on the other ſide of the Rhene, beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle of the Biſhop's, mounted upon a lofty Hill, which not only gives a gallant proſpect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppart, ſeated on the Rhene, and called ſo quaſi Bonport, from the commodiouſneſs of the Creek (upon which it ſtandeth) for the uſe of Shipping: one of the Forts (as Confluentz before mentioned alſo was erected by the Romans on the Rhene for defence of Gaul againſt the Germans; occaſioning in time both Towns. It was once miſerably waſted by Richard Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans, becauſe the Biſhop of Triers agreed not unto his Election; but ſoon recovered of thoſe hurts. The ancient name hereof in the Itinerary of Antoninus is ſuppoſed to be Bodobrica. It was pawned to the Biſhops of Triers by Henry the 7. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorrain, (by Antoninus called Pons Sarnix) ſeated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it had the name) at the fall thereof into the Moſelle: poſſeſſed at the preſent by a Branch of the Houſe of Naſſau, (but Homagers of this Electour) entituled hence, according to the Dutch faſhion, Counts of Naſſau in Sarbruck. 5. Veldentz, and 6. Beilſtein, on the Moſelle, of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Auguſta Trevirorum, the principal City of the Treviri, who poſſeſſed this Tract; ſeated upon the Moſelle alſo; the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the Reſidence of the Vicar or Lieutenant-General for the whole Dioceſs of Gaul; by conſequence the Seat of a Metropolitan when it ſubmitted to the Goſpel. Of ſuch antiquity it is, that it is ſaid to have been founded 150 years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it ſelf, and as little Trading; the River not being capable of Ships of burthen, and the Air generally ſo cloudy and incined to rain, that it is by ſome called merrily Cloaca Planetarum. It paſſed ſometimes among the number of Imperial Cities, but now acknowledgeth the Electour for the Lord thereof; by whom it was made an Univerſity, one of the ancienteſt in all Germany, and of as much reſort for the ſtudy of good Arts and Sciences as the beſt amongſt them. 8. Ober-Weſel, or Veſalia ſuperior, (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Weſel in the Dukedom of Cleve, which is Veſalia inferior, or the Under-Weſel) the fartheſt place of this Diſtrict, ſeated on the Rhene, not far from Baccharach a Town of the Palatinate; of no great note, but that it is accompted for a Town Imperial.

This Country anciently was part of the great and famous Earldom of Moſelle, denominated from the River Moſelle, along the Courſe whereof it was firſt erected; an Eſtate founded by the diſherited Sons of Clodian, ſecond King of the French, at the ſame time (and on the ſame occaſion alſo) in which the Earldom of Ardenne was erected by them, of which we have already ſpoken when we were in Belgium: this of the two the more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Metz, as lying nearer to the Court, and ſo more in ſight; the other being farther off, in Countries far leſs cultivate, but more defenſible. This Earldom comprehending, beſides this of Triers, the Countries of Zweibrucken and Weſt-reich, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the French ſide of the Rhene, occaſioned the Princes of it to be much looked after; and they maintained their Port to the very laſt: inſomuch that Giſlebert or Gilbert Earl of Moſelle, in the time of the Emperour Henry the firſt, ſurnamed the Fowler, was thought by him a fit Husband for his Daughter Gerberg, married after his deceaſe to Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine, King of France: and Gertrude, Daughter of Theodorick, who came after Gilbert, was married to Henry ſirnamed Gozelo, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and by him made the Mother of another Henry, Succeſſour unto Otho the 3. in the Roman Empire. Impoveriſhed not a little both in Power and Patrimony by the erection of the Dukedom of Lorrain, there grew ſome Feuds between thoſe Houſes, occaſioning the death of Albert another of theſe Earls, ſlain (as it is ſaid by Lazius) by Godfrey, Son of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain: more probably by ſome other Prince of the Houſe of Ardenne, it not being founded in any other approved Authour, that Godfrey of Bouillon was the Father of any Children. But this Difference being reconciled by the Marriage of Bertha, Daughter of Simon Earl hereof, with Thierrie the 9. Duke of Lorrain, and the Family of theſe Earls expiring in a ſhort time after, this part of the Eſtate was ſeized on by the Biſhops of Triers; that part of the Palatinate which lieth on the Gallick ſide of the Rhene, by the Biſhops of Mentz, Spires, Wormes, and the Princes Palatine; the reſt being taken in by the Dukes of Lorrain, who do ſtill enjoy it; the Emperours of thoſe times being either willing to it, or not able to help it.

3. The Biſhoprick of MENTZ is not laid out by Bounds and Limits, as the other, becauſe the Patrimony & Eſtate thereof doth not lie together, diſperſed for the moſt part about Franconia, intermixed with the Lands & Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Biſhops of Wormes, Spires, and others. So that the temporal Eſtate of this Electour is every way inferiour unto thoſe of Triers and Colen; ſuperiour unto both in place and dignity, he being the firſt in rank of the whole Electoral College, Chancellour for the Empire, and in all Meetings ſitteth at the right hand of the Emperour. The Biſhop's See was firſt placed here, as ſome report, by S. Creſcens, one of the Diſciples of S. Paul, of whoſe being ſent by him into Gallia (for ſo the ancient Writers underſtand Galatia) the Apoſtle ſpeaketh 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability ſeat him at Vienna in Daulphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is, that anciently this City was a See Epiſcopal, Martine the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. And if a Biſhop, certainly a Metropolitan Biſhop, this City being in thoſe times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Chriſtianity being worn out of theſe parts of Germany by the conqueſts of the French, Almans, and other Infidels, was again reſtored in this Tract by Boniface, an Engliſh-man, the firſt Archbiſhop of Mentz of this new Plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin ſurnamed the Groſs, Major of the Palace to the French Kings, and Father of C. Martel) who, for the Orthodoxy of his Doctrine, and the number of Churches planted by him, hath been deſervedly honoured with the title of the Apoſtle of Germany.

Towns of moſt note belonging to the Biſhops hereof are, 1. Mentz it ſelf, the Moguntiacum of the Ancients, ſo called from the River of Maine, formerly Mogus and Mogonus in the Latine, (now better known by the name of Mœnus) oppoſite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old, ſo having the command of both Rivers; and for that cauſe made the Seat of a Roman Officer, commonly called the Duke of Mentz, who had a charge of the Frontiers, and eſpecially of thoſe ten Garriſons planted on the banks of the Rhene, ſpoken of before. It is ſtretched out in great length on the River's ſide, but not of anſwerable breadth; well built, and populous towards the water, in other parts not ſo well inhabited. The publick Buildings generally are very large and beautiful, the Houſes built according to the old Roman Model; the moſt magnificent whereof is the Biſhop's Palace, who is the immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both ſides of the Rhene, fruitful in all natural Commodities, and abounding with moſt excellent Wines. Of good note alſo for an Univerſity here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electors; but eſpecially for the Art of Printing, which was here invented, or perfected at the leaſt, and made fit for uſe. 2. Bing, ſeated on the Rhene, another of the Garriſon-Towns erected by the Romans on the banks of that River. In a ſmall Iſland of which, not far from this Town, is a Tower or Caſtelet called the Mouſe-turn, i. e. the Tower of Mice, built by one Hatto (or Hanno) Archbiſhop of Mentz, Anno 900, or thereabouts, who in a year of great Scarcity pretending to relieve the poor people oppreſſed with Famine, cauſed them to be gathered together into an old Barn, where he burnt them all, ſaying, they were the Rats and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was ſo perſecuted by theſe Vermin, that, to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midſt of the Rhene, whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at laſt devoured him. 3. Lauſtein. 4. Haſford, 5. Oxenford, 6. Alderburg, 7. Middleburg, 8. Carloſtadt, the Birth-place of Caroloſtadius, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Biſchoffſtein. 10. Koningsberg, (Mons regius in Latine) the Birth-place of Joannes de Monte regio, a famous Mathematician, as appeareth by his Comment upon Ptolemie's Almageſt. Moſt of which Towns being in Frankenland, though of his Electorate, were not gained in groſs by theſe Electours, as were the Land of Colen and Diſtrict of Triers, but piecemeal in a manner, and by retail; partly upon the faileur of the Houſe of Schwaben, Dukes of Franconia alſo; partly by the munificence of the German Emperours; but ſpecially by making the beſt uſe of their Votes and Suffrages in the Choice of Emperours, which they did not part withal for nothing. Such Towns hereof as lie on the French ſide of the Rhene were gained by like means upon the expiration of the Houſe of Moſelle.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

THE PALATINATE of the RHENE is bounded upon the Eaſt with the Dukedom of Wirtenberg and ſome part of Franconia, with the reſidue thereof and the River Maine on the North, on the South with Elſaſs or Alſatia, and on the Weſt with the Land of Triers: extended in length from Coub to Gemerſheim, North and South, 72 miles; and in breadth from Zweibruken to Lauden, Eaſt and Weſt, 90 miles.

It is called alſo the Lower Palatinate to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper; the Palatinate of the Rhene, becauſe lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is ſaid to be the moſt pleaſant part of all Germany, ſtored with all ſorts of Fruits and Metalls, abounding with thoſe cool Wines which, growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rheniſh; adorned with many goodly Towns, both for ſtrength, populouſneſs, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate, which depends upon it, hath much varied ſince the firſt Reformation eſtabliſhed by Frederick the ſecond according to the Form and Doctrine of the Confeſſion of Augsburg; the Doctrine and Diſcipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third, the Lutheran Form reſtored again by Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin, as more conducing to the ends of ſome needy Statiſts, who could not otherwiſe raiſe their Fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Churche's Patrimony; of which the Clergy being univerſally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miſerable ſhort Stipends, by the name of a Competency, became ſo contemptible, and neglected by all ſorts of men, that at the laſt the Church of the Palatinate was in the ſame condition with the Church of Iſrael under the reign of Jeroboam, when Prieſts were made out of the meaneſt of the people. And for the Government of the Churches, though moulded to the Geneva Plat-form as near as it might be, yet were thoſe Princes loth to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderſhips, and therefore did appoint ſome ſuperiour Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inſpectores & Præpoſitos, their Power being much the ſame with that of the particular Superintendent amongſt the Lutherans; and over them a ſtanding Conſiſtory conſiſting of three Miniſters and as many Counſellers of State, of the Prince's nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A Temperament for which they were beholden to Eraſtus, a Doctor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Heidelberg, who made this Pill, to purge Presbytery of ſome Popiſh humours which ſecretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole Model and Religion of the Country is much changed of late, and the Religion of the Church of Rome reſtored in moſt parts thereof, ſince the Conqueſt of them by the Spaniards and Bavarians, which before we ſpake of.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Moſpach, a pretty neat Town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Præfecture, not far from the borders of Wirtenberg. 2. Ladenberg, near the influx of the ſame River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was bought by Rupertus, the Emperour and Palatine, of the Earls of Hohenloe, An. 1571, the other moiety belonging to the Biſhop of Wormes. 3. Weinheim, a ſmall Town not far from Ladenberg, belonging once to the Archbiſhop of Mentz, but, on ſome controverſie ariſing about the Title, adjudged unto the ſaid Rupertus and his Heirs for ever. 4. Scrieſſen, in the ſame Tract, well ſeated, but not very large, ſold with the Caſtle of Straluberg to the ſaid Rupertus by Sifride (or Sigefride) of Straluberg, the right Heir hereof, Anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right ſhore of the Neccar, (going down the water) compaſſed on three ſides with Mountains, and lying open only towards the Weſt, which makes the Air hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief Beauty of it lieth in one long Street, extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt: on the South-eaſt ſide whereof is a fair and pleaſant Market-place and not far off a very high Mountain called Koningſtall, (that is to ſay, the Kingly Seat) upon the middle aſcent whereof is the Caſtle, where the Princes Electours uſe to keep their Courts; and on the very Summit or top thereof, the ruines of an old Tower blown up with Gunpowder. A Town of no great bigneſs, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was uſed in the time of my Authour for Prayer and Preaching: the reſt being either ruined, or employed unto other uſes, if not repaired again, ſince the Spaniards became maſters of it, for more frequent Maſſes. Howſoever, it hath the reputation of being the chief City of this Palatinate; not long ſince furniſhed with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (eſpecially Manuſcripts) was thought not to be fellowed in all Europe, till matched, if not over-matched, by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford. Moſt of them, to the great prejudice of the proteſtant Cauſe were carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by the Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it ſelf, it was once part of the poſſeſſions of the Biſhop of Wormes, from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous for being the Seat of the Palſgraves, the Sepulchre of Rodolphus Agricola, and for an Univerſity founded by the Emperour and Palatine Rupertus, An. 1346. 6. Baccharach, on the Banks of Rhene, ſo called quaſi Bacchi ara, for the excellent Wines. 7. Coub, on the other ſide of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Caſtle called Pfalts, from whence the name Pfalts-grave, or Palſgrave, ſeemeth to ſome to have been derived. 8. Openheim, a ſtrong Town, which together with Keiſers-Lantern and Ingelheim were given to the Palatines by Wenceſlaus, and after ſettled on them by Rupertus the Emperour and Palatine for 100000 Florens, Anno 1402. 9. Creutznach, called anciently Stauroneſus. 10. Frankendale, lately a Monaſtery only, but being well peopled by ſuch of the Netherlands who to avoid the fury of the Duke of Alva fled hither, is now a Town of principal ſtrength. 11. Gemerſheim; and 12. Manheim, a well-fortified Town, ſeated on the Confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On the Eaſtern part of the Country ſtandeth 13. Laden, ſituate on the little River Tauber, the fartheſt bound of the Palatinate towards the North-eaſt, there adjoyning to the reſt of Frankenland. And on the Weſt ſide the Towns of 14. Newſtat, 15. Keiſers-Lautern, in Latine called Cæſarea Lutra, once a Town Imperial, from which, and from its ſituation on the River Lauter, it received this name. 16. Zweibrucken, inveſted with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Zweibruck, the Patrimony and Title of a younger Houſe of the Pfaltsgraves, whom the Latine Writers call Principes Bipontani, the French the Princes of Deuxponts. 17. Simmeren, on the North-weſt point of it, where it meets with the Diſtrict of Triers; the Title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Dukes of Simmeren, ſituate in that part of the Country which is called Weſtreich, of which Zweibrucken is alſo part. In all there are contained within the Palatinate 24 walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: moſt of which they have added to their eſtate within little more then 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own Eſtates, ſo potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in War and Peace, and ſo ingraffed themſelves into the moſt notable Families of Germany, that I may well ſay with Irenicus, Non eſt alia Germaniæ Familia cui plus debeat Nobilitas.

Within the Limits of this Country, and intermingled with the Lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Biſhopricks of Spires and Wormes; both ancient, and of great Revenue, but Feudataries for a great part of their Eſtates to theſe Electors. Of theſe, more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallick ſide thereof, ſtands the City of Spires, by Ptolemy called Neomagus, from the newneſs of the building when that name was given; by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetum, from the Nemetes, who poſſeſſed this Tract; and ſometimes Spira, by which name it doth ſtill continue. A Town Imperial, and anciently a Biſhop's See; Teſſis the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably ſeated; of great reſort, by reaſon of the Imperial Chamber, the ſovereign Court of Judicature of all the Empire, capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all the Princes and free States thereof. A Court which firſt followed the Emperour in all his Removes, (as anciently the King's Bench in England) but by Maximilian the Emperour firſt made ſedentary, and fixed at Francford; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fifth. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Proteſtants was here taken up, given to the Princes and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legal Proteſtation here exhibited. More down the water, and on the ſame Shore thereof, ſtands the City of Wormes, one of thoſe built upon the Rhene for defence of Gaul againſt the Germans; by Ptolemy called Borbetomagus, by Antonine Civitas Wormenſis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Vangionum, from the Vangiones, the old Inhabitants of thoſe parts, whoſe chief City it was. A Town Imperial as the former, and a See Epiſcopal as that is, and as ancient too, Victor the Biſhop hereof ſubſcribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen before mentioned. A Town to be obſerved for the firſt appearance which Luther made before Charles the 5. (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City,) who, being diſſuaded from that journey by ſome of his Friends, returned this reſolute Anſwer, That go he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town as there were Tiles on the Houſes. Chief Towns belonging to theſe Biſhops are, 1 Udenheim, a Town belonging to the Biſhop of Spires, whoſe Reſidence it ſometimes is; conveniently ſeated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon ſome deſign which was then in hand fortified ſtrongly by the Biſhop. But this new Fortification, being begun in a time of Peace, gave great occaſion of diſtruſt to the neighbouring Princes, who interpoſed with Frederick the fifth, then Prince Elector, (of whom it was held in chief) to cauſe the Biſhop to deſiſt from the finiſhing of it. Which when he had refuſed to do, pleading a Placart from the Emperour Matthias to compleat the work, the Prince Elector with the reſt of the Confederates beat it down by force. For this contempt they were cited to Spires, the Imperial Chamber, in which it was alſo reſolved to proceed ſuddenly and ſeverely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occaſioned that unfortunate Prince to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia, and conſequently a chief cauſe of the German Wars. In managing whereof this Town was thought ſo commodious, that Marqueſs Spinola cauſed the works to be raiſed again, made it the ſtrongeſt Hold in all thoſe Countries, and cauſed it to be called it by the name of Philipsburg. 2 Rottenberg, originally belonging to the Biſhops of Spires, but of late times poſſeſſed by the Princes Palatine. Others of leſſer note I forbear to mention.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country on the French ſide of the Rhene were the Nemetes and Vangiones ſpoken of before; on the other ſide, the Intuergi. That on the Weſt ſide of the River was firſt conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French, of whoſe Empire it remained a part, but ſo that it was ſubject more immediately to the Earls of Moſelle, firſt under the Sovereignty and Vaſſalage of the Kings of Metz, and after of the Kings of Lorrain. In the dividing of which Kingdom between the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, it became ſubject to the Empire, but ſtill poſſeſſed by thoſe of Moſelle as it was before. Eſcheating to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of Arms, partly by paying down ready Money, and partly too by ſelling of their Voices, as they ſaw occaſion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and ſo was alſo that part of it which lies on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene, which being anciently and properly a part of Frankenland, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the faileur of the Houſe of Schwaben, and then devolved unto the Empire, as the other did. By little and little it got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperor's Houſhold, (ſuch as the Maiors of the Palace to the French Kings at the firſt inſtitution) had firſt the honour of Counts Palatine beſtowed upon them, and afterwards the place of an Elector in the choice of the Emperor. But where their Eſtates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what Provinces or people they had ſubject to them, à nullo inveni ſcriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, ſaith the learned Munſter; their habitation and poſſeſſion in and of theſe parts (acquired for the moſt part by Arms and Money) not being above 450 years ſtanding at the utmoſt. Likely it is, they had their reſidence for the moſt part in the Emperor's Palace, living upon their Rents, (as other great Officers of Court in theſe later times) the Dignity and Authority of ſo great a place ſeeming ſufficient to content them: but were called Count-Palatines of the Rhene, becauſe their Juriſdiction and Authority lay moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts of the Empire which were towards that River. Afterwards, on the Marriage of Otho, the ſecond of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gertrude, the Daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine, this Office with the Electoral Dignity fell into that Houſe, poſſeſſed at that time of thoſe parts of Franconia and the Earldom of Moſelle, who not long after, on the dividing of that Eſtate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the Sons of Ludovick the 2. Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which ſuddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care and good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperor and Elector Palatine; partly by the weakneſs and ambition of Wenceſlaus, Emperor and King of Bohemia; and partly by the valour of Frederick the Prince Elector. Of theſe the firſt bought in the Towns of Weinheim, Ladenberg, Scrieſſen, and the Caſtle of Straluberg, with their Lands and Territories. The ſecond gave unto the Palatines, for their voices in his Election, three ſtrong Towns of the Empire, viz. Keiſers-Lautern, Ingelheim, and Openheim. And the laſt took in Battel, Anno 1452, the Earl of Wirtenberg, the Marqueſs of Baden, the Biſhop of Spires, and the Archbiſhop of Mentz, and ranſomed them on what condition he pleaſed. More particularly the Earl of Wirtenberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) payed for his ranſom 100000 Florens. The Biſhop of Mentz redeemed himſelf for 450000 Florens. The Biſhop of Spires gave for his liberty the Towns of Rottenberg and Werſaw. And the Marqueſs of Baden yielded up in lieu of his freedom the Country of Spanheim, of which Creutznach is a part, the Towns of Beſiken and Binheim, the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a Town over argainſt Gemerſheim, and his Royalties between this Gemerſheim and Seltz, a Town of Alſatia, in Fiſhing and Hunting. So having brought theſe Princes unto their Eſtates, let us next take a view of thoſe who have ſucceſſively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story.

Electors Palatine of the RHENE.

A.C.

1. Henry, Count Palatine in the time of Otho the third, by him ordained to be one of the ſix Electors.
2. Sigefride, the Son of Adelheid, Wife of this Henry the Elector, by a former Husband.

3. Ezeline and Conrade, Sons of Sigefride.

4. Ludolphus, Son to Ezeline.

5. Conrade, Elector Palatine in the time of Henry the fifth.

6. Frederick, Son to Frederick Duke of Schwaben, Nephew to the Emperour Conrade the third.

7. Henry II. ſirnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria.

1195 8. Henry III. Son of Henry the Lion, and Husband of Clementia, Daughter of Conrade D. of Schwaben and Elector Palatine.

9. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in the life of his Father, the laſt Elector Palatine of the nomination and appointment of the Emperor, the Dignity from hence-forwards becoming hereditary.

10. Otho, Duke of Bavaria, of that name the ſecond, Elector Palatine of the Rhene in right of Gertrude his Wife, Siſter and next Heir of Henry the fourth, whom he ſucceeded in the Electoral Dignity, confirmed therein by the Emperor Frederick the ſecond.

1269 11. Ludovicus, Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, the Son of Otho.

1294 12. Rodolphus, the eldeſt Son of Lewis or Ludovicus, ſucceeded his Father in the Palatinate and Electoral Dignity; Northgoia, or the Palatinate of Bavaria, being added to his part, to make even the ſcale; his younger Brother Ludovicus ſucceeding in Bavaria.

1315 13. Adolphus, ſirnamed the Simple, reſigned the Electoral Dignity to his Brother Rodolphus, as the fitter man to undertake it.

1327 14. Rodolphus II. on the Reſignation of Adolphus.

1337 15. Rupertus, the Brother of Rodolphus the ſecond, Founder of the Univerſity of Heidelberg, Anno 1346.

1385 16. Rupertus II. Son of Adolphus the Simple.

1398 17. Rupertus III. elected Emperour in the place of Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.

1410 18. Ludovicus II. ſirnamed Cæcus and Barbatus, the eldeſt Son of Rupertus the Emperor, married Blanch, Daughter to K. Henry the fourth of England.

1439 19. Ludovicus III. Son of Lewis the ſecond.

1451 20. Frederick, Brother of Ludovicus, during the Minority of Philip his ſaid Brother's Son, ſucceeded in the Electoral Dignity, and added much to that Eſtate by his perſonal Vertue.

1478 21. Philip, the Son of Lewis the third, pretended to the Dukedom of Bavaria in right of Margaret his Wife; but, after a long and bloody War, was forced to go without it.

1508 22. Ludovicus IV. Son of Philip.

1544 23. Frederick II. Brother of Lewis the fourth, who firſt introduced the Reformed Religion into the Palatinate.

1556 24. Otho-Henry, Son of Rupertus, the Brother of Frederick and Lewis, the laſt of the direct Line of this Houſe of Bavaria.

1559 25. Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, deſcended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibruck or Bipont, younger Son of the Emperor Rupert, ſucceeded on the deceaſe of Otho-Henry without Iſſue.

1576 26. Ludovicus V. Son of Frederick the third, a munificent Benefactor to the Univerſity of Heidelberg.

1583 27. Frederick IV. Son of Lewis the fifth, married Ludovica, or Louiſa, Daughter of William, and Siſter of Maurice, Princes of Orange.

1610 28. Frederick V. Son of Frederick the 4th, married the Princeſs Elizabeth, Daughter of James King of Great Britain. In danger of being proſcribed for demoliſhing the Works of Udenheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But worſted at the Battel of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he loſt both that and his own native Eſtates and Dignities; of which he was deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperour: the Lower Palatinate being aſſigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain; the Upper Palatinate, with the Electoral Dignity, beſtowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Reſtored to the poſſeſſion of the moſt part of his Country by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz, November 29. 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the Power and Government of the former Conquerours.

1631 29. Charles-Ludowick; the Heir both of his Father's Eſtates and Misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his Honours, (contrary to the Fundamental Conſtitutions of the Empire, by which the Sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be reſtored thereto in part, by the Pacification made at Munſter this preſent year 1648: which I pray God to proſper, for the peace of afflicted Chriſtendom.

Now to proceed to the Civil State, and the Concernment of theſe Princes. The Palſgrave hath many Prerogatives above the Electors of either ſort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxony and Marqueſs of Brandenburg, becauſe Henry the Palatine was deſcended of Charles the Great: for which cauſe he is alſo, in the Vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Weſtern parts of Germany. In which Office he had power to alienate or give Offices, to take Fealty and Homage of the Subjects, and, which is moſt, to ſit in the Imperial Courts, and give Judgment of the Emperor himſelf. And look whatſoever ſhall in the Vacancy of the Empire be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperors are bound by Oath to confirm and ratifie.

The Revenues of theſe Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum, nor could they be ſuppoſed at leſs: the Silver Mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatinate yielding 60000 Crowns a year, and the paſſage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more; beſides the Demeſne Lands and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (ſince the Reformation) into their Eſtate.

ALSATIA (or ELSASZ, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the Eaſt with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquiſate of Baden and ſome parts of Schwaben; on the Weſt with the Mountain Vauge or Vogeſus, which ſeparateth it from Lorrain; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South (where it groweth very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the Pleaſantneſs and Fertility of it inferiour to none in Germany : called therefore Elſaſz, (as ſome think) quaſi Edelſaſz, that is to ſay, a noble Seat ; derived more probably by others from the River Ill, the only River of note in all this Tract, and called ſo, quaſi Illſaſz, the Seat or ſituation on the River Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower, and Higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, ſo called becauſe farther off from the Mountains, and down the water in reſpect of the courſe of the Rhene. A Country ſo abundantly fruitful in Wine and Corn (with which it furniſheth ſome parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour-Countries) that it is generally called Germaniæ Nutrix, or the Nurſe of Germany ; by Winphelegius, the Epitome or Abſtract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1. Straesburg, ſo called from the multitude of Streets, (the Dutch call them Straets) anciently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer or Receipt, here kept in the time of their Greatneſs ; or from ſome Mines of Silver which were found about it. A ſtately, rich and populous City, well ſtored with publick Garners and Cellars of Wine againſt times of Dearth ; ſituate on the two Rivers Ill and Bruſch, where they both fall into the Rhene, by which, and by the helps of Art, it is very ſtrongly fortified : deſigned from the firſt Foundation for a Town of War, this being another of the Towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene againſt the Germans ; now an Imperial City; and a See Epiſcopal, the Biſhop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alſatia. The Church Cathedral is one of the faireſt in all Germany, much famed for a clock of moſt admirable workmanſhip, and a Steeple of as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the higheſt of any in Chriſtendom, higher (if the meaſure of it be not miſtaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of St. Paul's in London before the firing of it. Of this thus ſaith the Poet in Adrianus,

Urbs præclara ſitu, ripis contermina Rheni,
Maxima cui celſæ metiuntur mœnia turris.
Straesburg on Rhene's inamell'd Banks doth lie,
Whoſe Tower even bids defiance to the Skie.

2. Zabern, or Elſaſz Zavern, the Tabernæ of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garriſons, deſtroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apoſtate, then Emperour ; now the chief place of Reſidence for the Biſhops of Straesburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Juſtice kept by his Officers in this City for the Lower Alſatia. 3. Altrip, ſo called from Alta ripa, from the high Banks of the River on which it is ſeated ; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans, like politick Conquerours, built on the Weſtſide of the Rhene, to prohibit the Incurſions of the barbarous Nations. And ſo was 4. Seltz, ſeated on the Rhene, betwixt Straesburg and Zabern. And 5. Weiſſenburg, more towards the Palatinate, now a Town Imperial, but ſeated on the River Lutra, not far from its fall into the Rhene ; encompaſſed with little Hills and delightful Groves, the River gently waſhing the Walks thereof, and adding much to it both of ſtrength and beauty. 6. Hagenaw, between Seltz and Straesbrug, but not ſo near unto the Rhene as either of them; firſt walled by Frederick Barbaroſſa, Anno 1164, and ſince that time of great importance for command of the Country, but ſeated in a ſandy and unfruitful Soil; frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elſaſs for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7. Stechfelt, corruptly ſo called for Steffansfelt, from the Monaſtery of S. Stephen there founded. 8. Haſle, on the Bruſch, &c.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA are, 1. Ruffach, on the River Ombach, belonging to the Biſhops of Straesburg, of old called Rubeacum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, invironed with a double Suburb ; in ancient times of great reſort by the Roman Nobility, much taken with the fruitfulneſs and pleaſures of it, and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it, by reaſon of their vigorous proceedings againſt Thieves ; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old Gallows at Ruffach is made of Oak. 2. Enſheim, or Enſiſheim, on the River Ill, anciently the Station of the Tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis ; now of moſt note for the Supreme Court of Juſtice there held for Briſgow, Sungow, and this part of Alſatia, by the Archdukes of Auſtria, the chief Lords thereof. 3. Colmar, an Imperial City, raiſed out of the Ruines of old Argentaria deſtroyed by Attila and the Huns ; well built, and ſituate almoſt in the very Navel of Alſatia, not above an hour's journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitful and rich Soil both for Corn and Paſturage, the Country hereabouts being very well watered with the Lauch, Duro, Fech, and Ill. 4. Schleſtad, in the modern Latine Seleſtadium, but by the Ancients called Elcebus, the Station at that time of the 19. Legion ; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutcheſs of Schwaben, Anno 1044. according to the pattern of the Temple of Jeruſalem, which in tract of time became the richeſt Monaſtery in all theſe parts. It is ſituate in a very fertile and delightful Soil, having the Rhene on the one ſide, and ſome ſpurs of the Mountain Vauge, ſhadowed with Groves of Cheſnuts, upon the other ; walled in the time of Frederick the ſecond, about the year 1216, and on the Eaſt defended with impaſſible Fens. 5. Gebwiler, and 6 Watweil, both ſeated near the aforeſaid Mountains, and both ſubject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7. Keiſersberg. 8. Turcheim, two Imperial Towns, but not otherwiſe memorable ; as neither are many of the reſt, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this ſmall Province of Elſaſs, (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns begirt with Walls, beſides Caſtles, Forts and Villages, almoſt innumerable ; and amongſt them more Free and Imperial Cities than in any one Province of the Empire, except Schwaben only.

The Southern part of Elſaſs, bordering on the Canton of Baſil, is commonly called by the name of SUNGOW, in Latine Sungovia and Sungoia ; but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirt, from Pfirt the chief Town of it, and the Dukes's Seat. The Country is very plentiful in Corn and Wine, (as the reſt of Elſaſs) affording good ſtore of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mulhauſen, on the River Ill, heretofore under the command of the Biſhops of Straesburg, as were alſo Keiſersberg and Colmar; but being taken in by Rodolph of Habſpurg, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Befort, remarkable for a Collegiate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 13 Earls and as many Counteſſes. 3. Maſz-munſter, ſo called from a Monaſtery of Nuns there Founded by Maſo, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a neat Town, beautified with the fair Caſtle of Engelburg, mounted upon the top of a lofty Hill. 5. Morſ-munſter, ſo named of an ancient Monaſtery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, moſt of them great Builders of Religious Houſes. 6. Altkirk, not far from the head of the River Ill. 7. Pfirt, it ſelf, ſeated on the Ill, not far from Altkirk, in a Country heretofore overgrown with Woods and Foreſts, whence it had the name, called by the French le Pais de Ferrette, (corruptly for le Pais de Forreſt) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt : by which name (of the County of Ferrette) it is called by Philip de Comines and other French Writers; and by that name pawned by Sigiſmund the Archduke to Charles Duke of Burgundy, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Weſtward hereof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundy, lyeth the Town and Earldom of MONTBELGARD, (Montis Belgardium in the Latine) united by the Marriage of Henrica, Daughter and Heir of Henry the firſt Earl hereof, Anno 1396, to the Houſe of Wirtenberg. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Clarewang, 2. Paſſewang. 3. Grans, all anciently beautified with Caſtles; and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great ſtrength, proud of a Caſtle-Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name: once the Seat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the Houſe of Wirtenberg; but now both Town and Caſtle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorrain, cauſed a good Garriſon of their own to be put into them, Anno 1633, under pretence of keeping them for the Children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtenberg, to whom the Inheritance belonged.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract were the Tribochi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; firſt conquered by the Romans, then ſubdued by the Almans, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain; in the fall of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperours by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Lantgraves: at firſt officiary only, and accomptable to the Emperours under whom they ſerved; in the end made hereditary, and ſucceſſional unto their poſterities. The firſt hereditary Lantgrave is ſaid to be Theodorick in the Reign of Otho the third: after whoſe death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governours ſome opportunities to provide for themſelves. In his Male-Iſſue it continued till the reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire, An. 1212, and died An. 1250; during which interval this Eſtate was conveyed by Daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habſpurg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Oetingen. Rodolph of Habſpurg, Son of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the Germans, marrying with Anne the Daughter of the Earl of Hohenloe, became poſſeſſed alſo of his part of the Country; which added to his own, made up the whole Upper Elſaſs; continued ſince that time in poſſeſſion of the Houſe of Auſtria, deſcended from him. The third part, comprehending all the Lower Alſatia, was not long after ſold by the Earl of Oetingen to the Biſhop of Straesburg, whoſe Succeſſors hold it to this day, aſſuming to themſelves the Title of the Lantgraves of Elſaſs. But as for Sungow, or the County of Pfirt, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the Houſe of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illuſtrious Family, by the death of Conradine the laſt Duke, Anno 1268. that great Eſtate being ſcattered into many hands, it was made a diſtinct Earldom of it ſelf. And ſo it continued till the year 1324, when Vlrick the laſt Earl dying without Iſſue-male, left his Eſtate betwixt two Daughters: whereof the one, named Anne, conveyed her part in Marriage to Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſurnamed the Short, Granchild of Rodolphus the Emperour before mentioned; the other, named Vrſula, ſold her moiety to the ſaid Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Auſtria, (ſave only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alſatia, to the Duke of Burgundy) governed in Civil matters and points of Judicature by the Parliament or Court of Enſheim in the Upper Elſaſs.

THE Dukedom of LORRAIN is bounded no the Eaſt with Elſaſs, and that part of the Lower Palatinate which paſſeth by the name of Weſt-reich; on the Weſt with the River Meuſe or Maes, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Duke hereof) and part of Champagne; on the North with Luxemburg and the Land of Triers; and on the South with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elſals, it is parted by the Vogeſus or Vauge, wherewith it is encompaſſed on thoſe ſides. Aſſigned unto Lotharius, ſecond Son of Lotharius the Emperour, (who was eldeſt Son of Lewis the Godly) with the ſtyle of a Kingdom; from thence called Lot-reich by the Dutch, Lot-reigne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorrain and the Latine Lotharingia are to fetch their Pedigree.

The Country is in length about four days journey, almoſt three in breadth, much over-grown with Foreſts and ſwelled with Mountains, the ſpurs and branches of Vogeſus, and the once vaſt Wilderneſs of Ardenne; yet ſo ſufficiently ſtored with all manner of neceſſaries, that it needeth no ſupply out of other places. Some Lakes it hath which yield great quantity of Fiſh; one more eſpecially 14 miles in compaſs, the Fiſh whereof yields to the Duke's Coffers 20000 l. yearly. It affordeth alſo divers Metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in ſome places Pearls: Chalcedonians alſo of ſuch bigneſs, that whole Drinking-cups are made of them, and a matter of which they make the pureſt Glaſſes, not to be parallel'd in Europe. They have alſo a goodly breed of Horſes, equal to thoſe of Barbary, or the Courſer of Naples.

The people, by reaſon of their neighbourhood to and commerce with France, ſtrive much to imitate the French in garb and faſhion; but one may eaſily ſee that it is not natural: they have much in them alſo of the Dutch humour of Drinking, but far more moderately than the Dutch themſelves. Generally they are a politick and an hardy Nation; not otherwiſe able to have held their Eſtate ſo long againſt the French Kings and the Princes of the Houſe of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppreſſed with Taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and uſeful unto one another. Their Language is for the moſt part French, as in Artois, Luxemburg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not ſo refined and elegant as is ſpoke in France, nor ſo corrupt and coorſe as that of Montbelgard and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in reſpect of the French language ſpoken here among them, account this Country among the Provinces of France, and uſually deſcribe it ſo in their Charts and Writings: but I have placed it with more reaſon (as I conceive) amongſt thoſe of Germany; firſt, in regard that a Duke hereof is a Prince of the Empire; but eſpecially becauſe that, in the diviſion of the Kingdom of Lorrain betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, whatſoever lay on the Eaſt-ſide of the River Meuſe (as this Dukedom of Lorrain for the moſt part doth) was reckoned in the ſhare or portion of the German Emperours.

The Rivers of chief note are, 1. Murta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and paſſing with a ſwift ſtream by the walls of Nancie, glides along fairly for a good ſpace within ſight of the Moſelle, into which at laſt it falls near Conde. 2. Moſa, the Meuſe, or Maes, whoſe ſpring and courſe hath been already deſcribed in Belgium. 3. Moſelle, famous for the deſign which Lucius Verus, Governour for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariſeth in the Mountain Vauge, not far from the head of the River Soaſne, and diſburtheneth it ſelf into the Rhene at Confluentz; he intended to have cut a deep Chanel from the head of this unto the other, ſo to have made a paſſage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean, the Soaſne emptying it ſelf into the Rhoſne, a chief River of France, as the Moſelle doth into the Rhene. 4. Selle, which mingleth waters with the Moſelle not far from Metz. 5. Sar, 6. Martane, 7. Voloy, with others of leſs note: all of them plentiful of Salmons, Perches, Tenches, and the beſt ſorts of fiſh, as in their Lakes are great ſtore of Carps, ſome of them three foot long, and of excellent taſt.

Principal Cities in it are, 1. Metz, by Ptolomy called Divodurum, Metis and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrices, who poſſeſſed this Tract. It is ſeated in a pleaſant Plain at the confluence of the Selle and Moſelle; the Royal See, in former times, of the French Kings of Auſtraſia, hence called Kings of Metz; long before that a Biſhop's See, as it ſtill continueth. 2. Toul, the Tullum of Ptolomy, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, ſo called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it and the Tract about it; pleaſantly ſeated on the Moſelle, and anciently honoured with a See Epiſcopal. 3. Verdun, an ancient Epiſcopal See alſo, the Civitas Verodunenſium of Antoninus, ſeated on the Meuſe or Maes. The Town and Territory adjoining in preceding times belonged to the great Princes of the Houſe of Ardenne, at and before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorrain: but whether they had it in right of their Patrimonial Eſtate, as lying in the North part of this Country towards Luxemburg, as it well might be, or that it came to them in the right of Marriage with ſome Daughter of the Houſe of Moſelle, or other Heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howſoever it came to them, it gave unto this Houſe the Title of Earls of Verdun, uſed in their Style, till ſwallowed with the reſt in that of Lorrain. The Biſhop whereof, as alſo thoſe of Metz and Toul, (being the only ones of this Country of Lorrain) acknowledge the Archbiſhop of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them were in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, poſſeſſed of large and goodly Territories and of great Revenue; but taken by the French King Henry the 2. Anno 1552, during the Wars between Charles the fifth and the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them againſt the Emperour. And though Charles tryed all ways to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and deſperate Siege againſt the City of Metz: yet was the Town ſo gallantly defended by the Duke of Guiſe, that he was fain to raiſe his Siege, and go off with diſhonour. Since that, they have been always under the ſubjection of France; a Parliament being erected at Metz for the eaſe of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of ſuch Towns as immediately belong to the Duke of Lorrain, the principal are Nancie, not great, but of a pleaſant and commodious ſite, well watered by the River Meurte or Marta, and fortified better than before, in the year 1587, on occaſion of a great Army of the Germans paſſing into France to aid the Proteſtants: moſt commonly the Duke's Seat, and famous for the Diſcomfiture which Charles Duke of Burgundy here ſuffered, with the loſs of his life. 2. S. Nicolas, a Town ſo populous, well ſeated, and neatly built, that were it walled, it would hardly yield precedency unto Nancie it ſelf; ſo called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicolas, Biſhop of Myra in the leſſer Aſia, whoſe Body they pretend to be buried here, or at leaſt ſome part or Relick of it to be here inſhrined, occaſioning a great reſort of Pilgrims and other People. 3. Pont a Mouſon, about 4 leagues from Nancie, ſo called from a Bridge on the River Mouſon upon which it ſtandeth, of eſpecial note for a ſmall Univerſity lately founded in it, and for giving the Title of a Marqueſs to the eldeſt Son of the Dukes of Lorrain, called commonly and contractedly Marqueſs du Pont, Marchio Muſo-Pontanus by our modern Latiniſts. 4. Vaucoleur, the Birthplace of Joan the Virgin, to whoſe Miracles and Valour the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the Engliſh. But being at laſt taken Priſoner, ſhe was by the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, condemned and burned for a Witch. Of which crime I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwiſe conceive of her and her brave exploits, than as of a luſty Laſs of Lorrain, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Baſtard of Orleans, and ſo preſented to Charles the ſeventh, French King, as if ſent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpoſe, (as the moſt intelligent of the French Writers ſay) pour fairer evenir la courage aux Francois, to revive the drooping ſpirits of the beaten French, not to be raiſed again but by help of a Miracle. Upon the ſight of her Statua on the Bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a Copy of Verſes in her commendation, too long to be inſerted here, but they ended thus;

She dy'd a Virgin: 'Twas becauſe the earth
Bred not a man whoſe valour and whoſe birth
Might merit ſuch a Bleſſing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denys. She with him
Protects the Lillies and their Diadem.
You then about whoſe Armies ſhe doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her Match:
And when in field your Standards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denys and Saint Joan for France.

Next theſe we have, 5. Vaudemont, which gave the Title of an Earl to a younger Branch of the Houſe of Ardenne, ſucceeding at the laſt in the Dukedom of Lorrain in perſon of Duke Rene 2. and ſince a Title of the younger Son of the Dukes hereof, 6. Neuf-Chatteau, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amante, ſeven leagues on the South of Metz, ſometimes the Chancery of Lorrain. 8. Riche-Court, near the Lake called Garde lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, ſeated on a River which falls preſently into the Moſelle. 10. Charmes, ſeated on the Moſelle, the place of Treaty between the Duke of Lorrain and the Cardinal Richelieu; the reſult whereof was the ſurrender of the Town of Nancie, and by conſequence of all the Dukedom, into the hands of the French, September 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extream North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great conſequence and importance to the Dukes hereof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedom of Lorrain, or wreſted from the Soveraignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth, (as Jamais near unto it was) I have no where found. Of leſs note there are, 1. Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolite, 3. Bouquenon, and 4. Saverden, the firſt Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633, in the War againſt Lorrain, 5. Saint Miel, 6. Oden Chaſteau, 7. Mirecour; all taken the ſame year by the French, in the proſecution of that War, before the Treaty at Charmes. 8. Romberville, 9. Eſpinul, 10. Gerbevillier, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Mediomatrices and the Leuci ſpoken of before, together with the Viridonenſes; all of them conquered by the Romans, under whom this Country and the Diſtrict of Triers made up the whole Province of Belgica prima. From them being taken by the French, with the reſt of Gaul, it was made a Kingdom; the Provinces of Germania prima and ſecunda (containing all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, and ſo much of the Netherlands as lie on the Weſt ſide of the Rhene) being added to it: called firſt, from the Eaſtern ſituation, by the name of Oſtenreich, or Auſtraſia; the portion of Theodorick, the fourth Son of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, from the chief City of his Kingdom called the King of Metz, whoſe Succeſſors follow in this order.

The Kings of AUSTRASIA, or METZ.

514 1. Theodorick, the baſe Son of Clovis the Great, vanquiſhed the Thuringians, and extended his Kingdom as far as Hiſſia and Thuringia, as we call them now.

537 2. Theodebert, the Son of Theodorick, repulſed the Danes infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower Germany, and added Provence (taken from the Gothes of Italy) unto his Eſtates.

548 3. Theobaldus, the Son of Theodebert, ſubdued the Almans, and added much of their Country to his own Dominions.

555 4. Clotaire, King of Soiſſons, the youngeſt Son of Clovis the Great, ſucceeded Theobald in this Kingdom, as afterwards his Brother Childebert in the Realm of France, Anno 560, uniting in his perſon the whole French Dominion.

565 5. Sigebert, the Son of Clotaire, vanquiſhed the Hunns, then falling into his Eſtates: killed in his Tent by the practices of Fredegond, the Wife of Chilperick King of France.

577 6. Childebert, the Son of Sigebert, Succeſſour to his Uncle Guntram in the Realm of Orleans.

598 7. Theodebert the II. the Son of Childebert, vanquiſhed and outed of his Kingdom by Clotaire the ſecond of France, from whoſe eldeſt Son Sigebert deſcended the illuſtrious Family of the Earls of Habſpurg.

617 8. Clotaire II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Auſtraſia, and his Brother Theodorick King of Orleans, the ſole King of the French.

9. Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Metz or Auſtraſia, whom he ſucceeded at his death in the Realm of France.

645 10. Sigebert II. the eldeſt Son of Dagobert, made choice of this Kingdom for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to Weſt-France, or France it ſelf, which he left to Clovis the 2. his younger Brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience, and ſubdued the Sclaves.

656 11. Childebert II. Son of Grimoaldus, Maior of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Metz; Dagobert the Son of Sigebert being ſhorn a Monk, and ſent into Scotland.

12. Clovis the 2. King of the French, having vanquiſhed and beheaded Grimoald, diſpoſſeſſed Childebert of the Kingdom, which he took to himſelf.

662 13. Childerick, the 2. Son of Clovis, after the death of Clotaire his elder Brother, ſucceeding in the Kingdom of France, united all the French Dominions into one Eſtate. In which condition it remained (but with ſome inlargement of the Bounds) till the Partition made by and amongſt the Children of Lewis the Godly; the name of Auſtraſia, or Eaſt-France, being extended by Charles the Great over all Pannonia, and ſo much of Germany as was under the command of the French. In which diviſion, Lewis the ſecond Son, ſurnamed the Ancient, being inveſted in the Kingdom of Germany, or ſo much of Eaſt France or Auſtraſia as lay on the Eaſt-ſide of the Rhene; Lotharius, the eldeſt Son, had for his ſhare the Title of Emperour, and therewith Italy, Provence, Burgundy, and ſo much of Auſtraſia or Eaſt-France as lay on the French ſide of the River. Afterwards being ſubdivided into three Eſtates, Italy, with the Title of Roman Emperour, was given to Lewis the eldeſt Son; to Charles, the youngeſt, Provence, with the Kingdom of Burgundy; and to Lothaire, the ſecond Son, Auſtraſia on this ſide of the Rhene, from hence called Lot-reich, Lot-reigne, and Lotharingia, as before was ſaid. But Lothaire dying without iſſue, the Kingdom of Lorrain, containing all the Netherlands, (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germany before deſcribed, became divided betwixt Charles the Bald, Emperour and King of France, and Lewis ſurnamed the Ancient, King of Germany; the one calling himſelf King of Lorrain on that ſide, the other King of Lorrain on this ſide of the Maes; the River Maes or Meuſe parting their Poſſeſſions. But this Partition held not long amongſt their Succeſſors: For Lewis and Carloman King of France (the Sons of Ludovicus Balbus) reſigning their part hereof to Charles the Groſs, Emperor of the Romans and King of Germany, the ſaid Charles, Arnulph, Lewis and Conrade, ſucceſſively Emperors of the Romans and Kings of Germany, (together with Zwentobald the Baſtard-Son of Arnulph interloping in the very middle of them) enjoyed it wholly to themſelves. And ſo did alſo Charles the Simple, King of France, on the death of Conrade, till, forced thereto by Henry the firſt, (who ſucceeded Conrade in the Empire and Kingdom of Germany) he gave way to the old Partition ſpoken of before: the Germans after that encroaching more and more on that part hereof which of right belonged unto the French, till in the end (after much viciſſitude and interchangeableneſs of affairs) both Princes laid aſide the Title of Kings of Lorrain, incorporating ſo much as they held hereof into the reſt of their Eſtates; Otho the third of Germany and Lewis the fifth of France being the laſt that pleaſed themſelves with that broken Title. In the mean time this Country of Lorrain it ſelf, as it is now bounded, together with the Country of Luyck-land, a great part of Brabant, ſome parts of the Land of Triers, Colen, and, as ſome ſay, the Country of Gulick alſo, (but in this of Gulick I demur, as before was ſaid) being taken out of it, were by Otho the ſecond made a Dukedom, Anno 981, and by him given with the Title of Duke of Lorrain to Charles of France, Son of Gerberge his Aunt by Lewis the 4. of France ſurnamed Tranſmarine, Son of Charles the Simple. Charles thus advanced by his Couſin, and forgetting that he had been made Duke of Brabant not long before by Lothaire the French King, his Brother, ſhewed himſelf ſo alienated from the French, and wedded to the Germans, that the French, after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fifth, (whoſe next Heir he was) rejected him, and accepted Hugh Capet for their King. Otho, the Son of this Charles, dying without iſſue, left his Eſtate to Geofry Earl of Ardenne, Bouillon, and Verdun, his near Kinſman by the Mothers ſide; from whom the preſent Dukes of Lorrain do derive themſelves. From Hermingrade, one of the Daughters of this Charles, married to Albert (ſome call him Charles, and others Godfrey) Earl of Namur, by Alice their Daughter, married Baldwin the 5. of Hainault, deſcended Baldwin Earl of Flanders and Hainault, the Father of the Lady Iſabel of Hainault, Wife of Philip the 2. King of France, thereby uniting the Blood of Pepin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9. her Nephew: of whom it is ſaid, that being a man of a tender Conſcience, he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was lineally deſcended by his Grandmother from Charles of Lorrain, whom Hugh Capet had ſo unjuſtly diſpoſſeſſed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorrain, I find not any great improvement made of the Eſtate by any of them, more than the acceſſion of the remaining Patrimony of the Ears of Ardenne in the perſon of Godfrey or Geofrey the third Duke hereof, and the adding of the Dutchy of Bar in France by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples; but on the contray; a great weakning and diſtraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luyck-land and the Dukedom of Bouillon being ſold unto the Biſhops of Liege by Godfrey ſirnamed of Bouillon, after King of Hieruſalem; Brabant torn from it by Geofrey Earl of Lovain, in the time of Baldwin Brother of Godfrey; and Gulick-land by Euſtace the Brother of Baldwin; the Biſhops of Triers not being negligent all this while of the opportunity. Beſides which, ſomewhat had been done by the Emperour Otho the 3. to the diminution of this Eſtate, ſeeing that Otho the Second Duke, Son of Charles of France, had no Iſſue-male, and thinking this Eſtate, to be great enough without thoſe Additions, and ſome other pieces on the Rhene, by him reſtored unto the Empire. The reſt of this Eſtate was conferr'd on Godfrey of Ardenne, and not without good reaſon neither: it being probable enough that as it was firſt given by Otho the 2. unto Charles of France with reference to his Mother Gerberge that great Emprour's Aunt; ſo Otho of Lorrain Son of Charles might look on Godfrey of Ardenne as moſt capable of it, with reference to his Mother Matilda, the ſame Emperour's Daughter. And unto this he might be moved not only in a noble gratitude to the bloud of Otho, from whom his Father had receiv'd ſo great a benefit, but on the ſolicitation of the Emperour Henry 2. (a Prince of the ſame Houſe of Saxony) to whom the Alienation of it from the Daughters of Charles is aſcribed by ſome. Which ſaid, we have no more to do, but to preſent the Reader with the Catalogue of

The Dukes of LORRAIN.

A.Ch.
981	1. Charles of France, took priſoner by Hugh Capet, in which ſtate he died. He married Bona, Daughter of Ricuine, and Siſter of Godfrey the elder, Earls of Ardenne.
1001	2. Otho, Son of Charles and Bona.
1004	3. Godfrey, Earl of Ardenne, Son of Godfrey the elder, and Couſin of Otho by his Mother, confirmed herein by the power of the Emperour Henry the 2.
1019	4. Gozelo of Bouillon, the Brother of Godfrey.
1044	5. Godfrey II. Son of Gozelo.
1070	6. Godfrey III.
1078	7. Godfrey IV. of Bouillon, Son of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardie, and of Ida his Wife, the Daughter of Godfrey the 2. created King of Hieruſalem Anno 1099.
1100	8. Baldwin, Brother of Godfrey, Duke of Lorrain, and King of Hieruſalem.
1119	9. Thierrie, Son of William the Brother of Baldwin.
1128	10. Simon, Son of Thierrie.
1141	11. Matthew, Son of Simon.
1176	12. Simon II. Son of Matthew.
1207	13. Frederick, Brother of Simon.
1213	14. Theobald, Son of Frederick.
1219	15. Matthew II. Son of Theobald, no great friend of the Popes.
1259	16. Frederick II. Son of Matthew.
1303	17. Theobald II. Son of Frederick.
1311	18. Frederick III. Son of Theobald.
1429	19. Rodolph, Son of Frederick.
1346	20. John, Son of Rodolph.
1382	21. Charles, Son of John.
1430	22. Rhene, Duke of Anjou and King of Naples, &c. in right of Iſabel his Wife, the Daughter of Charles.
1452	23. John II. Son of Rene and Iſabel, ſucceeded on the death of his Mother.
1470	24. Nicolas, Son of John.
1473	25. Rene II. Son of Frederick Earl of Vaudemont, and of Violant or Yoland, Daughter of Iſabel and Rene the firſt; the Vanquiſher of Charles of Burgundy at the Battel of Nancy.
1508	26. Anthony, Son of Rene the 2.
1544	27. Francis, Son of Anthony.
1545	28. Charles II. Son of Francis.
	29. Henry, Son of Charles, married Katharine, Siſter to Henry the 4. of France.
1624	30. Francis, Brother of Henry.
1630	31. Charles. Nephew to Francis by his Brother the Earl of Vaudemont, and Son-in-Law to him by the Marriage of his Daughter and Heir, ſucceeded by a mixt Title of Deſcent and Marriage. Being reſolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his Wife, the Daughter of Francis, and took another to his Bed, which he better fanſied. Puniſhed not long after by the loſs of his whole Eſtate: For immediately he engaged himſelf in the Wars of Germany in behalf of Ferdinand the 2. but being beaten by the Swedes at the Battel of Pſaffenhoſen in the County of Hanaw, he loſt a great part of his Country to the Victors, who purſued him home. And on the other ſide, Lewis the 13. of France, picking a quarrel with him for receiving the Monſieur his Brother, and the Marriage of the Monſieur with the Lady Margaret the Duke's Siſter, deprived him of the Dutchy of Bar, and falling into Lorrain with a puiſſant Army at ſuch time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancy, and by conſequence all the reſt of his Eſtates, Septemb. 1633. Since which time the Duke hath never been reſtored thereto, nor hath any thing left him in it, for ought I can hear, but the Town of La Mothe, (if that) together with a good Cauſe, many hearts, and an invincible courage.

The Revenues of this Prince are ſaid to be 700000 Crowns; whereof 200000 ariſe from the Cuſtoms of the Salt made in his Country, and the other 500000 from his Coronet-lands. He is an abſolute Prince, and giveth for his Device an armed Hand coming as it were from Heaven, and graſping a naked Sword; to ſhew that he holdeth his Eſtate by no other Tenure than God and his Sword; the only hope, at this time, of the preſent Duke. For though he be accompted a Prince of the Empire, and his Dukedom reckoned for a part of the fifth Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene; yet he neither comes unto the Diets, nor holdeth himſelf bound by any of the Orders and Decrees which are made therein, as do the reſt of the great Princes of Germany; his neighbourhood to the French formerly ſecuring his Eſtate againſt any force which the Empire durſt bring againſt him for thoſe neglects.

The Arms of Lorrain are O, a Bend Gules charged with

3 Larks Argent. But herein I find Bara, an old French Herald, to differ from Paradine, the moſt exact Genealogiſt of the French Nation. For Bara chargeth the Bend not with 3 Allovettes, Larks, as Paradine doth, but with 3 Allerions, which are in Blazon ſmall Birds wanting beaks, feet, and legs. Of this laſt opinion is the moſt worthy Antiquary Cambden Clarencieux; who withal telleth us, that when Godfrey of Bouillon was at the Siege of Hieruſalem, ſhooting at S. David's Tower there, he broached three feetleſs Birds called Allerions upon his Arrow, and thereupon aſſumed this Arms.

6. SUEVIA, or SCHWABEN.

THE Dukedom of SUEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the ancient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankenland and the Lower Palatinate, on the South with Switzerland and the Alps of Tyrol, on the Eaſt with the River Leck, parting it from Bavaria, and on the Weſt with the Rhene, dividing it from Sungow and both Alſatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, the Marquiſate of Baden, and other leſſer Eſtates being taken out of it, it is contracted and reſtrained within narrower Bounds, having on the Eaſt Bavaria, on the Weſt the Dukedom of Wirtenberg, and ſo much of the Rhene as ſerveth to divide it from Sungow and the Upper Elſaſs, on the North Franconia or Frankenland, and on the South a little of the Rhene, with ſome part of the Switzers.

The Country for the moſt part is mountainous and hilly, overſpread with ſome ſpurs of the Alps, and the Woods of Nigra Sylva or Swartzenwald: recompenſed notwithſtanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers (and amongſt them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do iſſue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitful, ſufficiently ſtored with all neceſſary proviſions. Nor are the Woods and Mountains ſo unprofitable, but that beſides the great plenty of Fewel and the pleaſures of Hunting, they do afford ſome Mines of Iron and other Metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous ſituation, are more fierce and warlike than the reſt of the Germans, and ſo accompted of by Plutarch in former times; induſtrious in ſeveral Trades and Manufactures, eſpecially in the weaving of Linen-cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and by reaſon they have ſo much in them of the South, they are ſupra modum in Venerem proni, as Aubanus tells me, at leaſt more given to Venus than the other of the Germans are; the women alſo being ſaid to be very forwards in this kind, as tractable and eaſie as the men could wiſh them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow, lying next to the Lake of Conſtance; the Algow, extending to Bavaria; Briſgow, upon the Weſt of the River Rhene; and North-Schwaben, on the Northern ſide of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW are, 1. Lindaw, ſituate like an Iſland in the Lake of Conſtance, encompaſſed almoſt with the waters thereof, but joined to it with a Cauſey of 290 paces long: one of the Free or Imperial Cities, made ſo, for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, Anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Uberlingen, on the ſame Lake; both Imperial alſo. 4. Scaffhauſſen, ſeated on both ſides of the Rhene, not far from the efflux thereof out of the Lake Cell, (ſo called from a Town of that name belonging to the Archdukes of Auſtria, but anciently known by the name of Lacus *Venetus) and near thoſe dreadful falls or Cataracts of that River no leſs than 50 Cubits downwards, with great noiſe and violence. For which cauſe all Veſſels that go down the Rhene are fain to unlade themſelves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they imbark them again. Which as it yieldeth great benefit unto the Town by Tolls and Impoſts, ſo doth it always keep it ſtored with abundance of Barks and other Veſſels; whence it hath the name of Scaff-hauſſen, that is to ſay, the houſe of Skiffs, or the Town of Skip-boats. The Town is conveniently ſeated amongſt rich Paſtures and ſweet Groves on both ſides of the River; not without ſome pleaſant Hills, and thoſe well planted with Vines, near adjoining to it: Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been ſhewn. 5. Arbon, upon the Lake it ſelf, (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Biſhop of Conſtance. 6. Merſpurg, the ordinary Seat and Reſidence of the Biſhop of Conſtance, Lord of the moſt part of this Tract, on the ſame Lake alſo. 7. Conſtance it ſelf, ſituate on both ſides of the Rhene, where it iſſueth out of the Lake, called from hence the Lake of Conſtance, but by the Dutch Boden-zee, from the Caſtle of Bodmen; by Pliny and other Ancients Lacus Acronius, and Brigantinus; made by the Confluence of the Rhene, & ſome other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town is Imperial, an Epiſcopal See, and a flouriſhing Emporie: famous for the Council here holden Anno 1414, of great renown as well for the multitude and quality of the people which were there aſſembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled. The people of moſt note there aſſembled were, Sigiſmund the Emperour, 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbiſhops and Biſhops, 564 Abbats and Doctors, 10000 ſecular Princes and Noblemen, 450 common Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minſtrels and Jeſters. The Buſineſs there handled was, firſt the pacifying of a Schiſm in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) viz. Gregory the 12. reſident at Rome, John the 23. at Bononia, and Bennet the 13. in Spain; all three depoſed by the Council, and Martin the 5. made ſole Pope by the unanimous conſent of the Council, declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publick Conſtitution here made and ratified, that a Council is above the Pope. The other main buſineſs was the proceeding againſt John Hus and Hierome of Prague, (ſpoken of before) both which, notwithſtanding the Emperour's ſafe conduct, were here condemned of Hereſie, degraded, and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Prieſt is this: (I hope to be excuſed for this Digreſſion) The party to be degraded is attired in his Prieſtly Veſtments, holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine & water, and in the other a gilt Plate (or Paten, as they call it) with a Wafer. Then kneeling down, the Biſhop's Deputy, 1. taking from him all thoſe things commands him to ſay no more Maſſes for the quick and dead. 2. Scraping his Fingers ends with a piece of Glaſs, he commandeth him from that time forwards not to hallow any thing. And 3. ſtripping him of his Prieſtly Habit, he is clothed in a Lay attire, and ſo delivered over to the ſecular Magiſtrate. But to return again to the City of Conſtance: being proſcribed by Charles the 5. for refuſing the Interim, and not able to withſtand ſuch Forces as were raiſed againſt them, they put themſelves under the Protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and Brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying-pan into the Fire, as the ſaying is: For Ferdinand being poſſeſſed of the Town, ſeiſed on the common Treaſury, and upon all Records and Writings which belonged unto them; ſet out an Edict, that all the Miniſters within eight days ſhould depart the City; and that no Citizen from thenceforth ſhould wear any Weapon. And ſo, inſtead of a Protector, he became their Maſter.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria, which is called the ALGOW, are, 1. Buchau, on the Lake called Feder-zee; a Town Imperial. 2. Ravenſpurg, a Free City, ſeated amongſt Mountains, whereof one hangeth over it, the River Ach running by it in a bed ſo narrow that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the Hills, it much endamageth all the Country by frequent Land-flouds. 3. Wangen, (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial alſo. 4. Kempten, the Campodunum of Strabo, and 5. Memmingen, the Druſomagus of Ptolomy; both Imperial Cities; the laſt about three miles in circuit, populous, rich, and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf, 7. Zeukirk, 8. Bibrach; all three Imperial; the laſt ſuppoſed to be the Bragodurum of the Ancients. 9. Augsburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, firſt made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by him called Auguſta Vindelicorum; the principal City in thoſe times of the Vindelici, a potent People of this Tract. A City of great wealth and ſtate, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very ſtrongly fortified; by Nature on the Eaſt and North, where the ground lies low and under water, and on the Weſt and South by Art. The Buildings for three parts of it are of Clay and Timber; but on the Weſt part, ſeated on an Hill, built of Free-ſtone, ſix or ſeven Stories high; in which are many fair Houſes of the principal Citizens, and many ſtately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggers, a Family of very great (almoſt Princely) Revenues, poſſeſſed of many goodly Dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoining Territories; who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their Wealth, ſtill keep themſelves (contrary to the cuſtom of Germany, where Traffick is counted a diſgrace to a Noble-man) to the trade of Merchandiſe. The publick Edifices of it are very decent, eſpecially the Cathedral-Church, a majeſtick Building; the other Churches, being ten in number, and the Religious Houſes, correſpondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worſhipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil) the City gives a Sheaf of Corn for the Arms thereof. Since their Converſion unto Chriſtianity it was made a Biſhops See. Deſtroyed by Attila and his Hunns, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly; at laſt made Imperial, and the Miſtreſs of as large a Territory as moſt Cities of Germany. Famous for the Confeſſion of Faith exhibited in this place to Charles the 5. by the Proteſtant Princes, hence called Confeſſio Auguſtana, An. 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing ſome Points of Proteſtaniſm, but moſt of Popery, here tendred to both parties by the ſaid Emperor, (but received by neither) to be ſubſcribed to and obſerved till the Differences could be ſetled by a General Council. And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Proteſtant party, to profeſs openly their Religion without any impeachment, An. 1555. a Limitation only laid on the Eccleſiaſticks, that if they changed their Religion, they ſhould loſe their preferments; which were to be beſtowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof, called BRISGOW, lying on the Eaſt of the River Rhene, and the Weſt of Wirtenberg, and on the South cloſed in with the Canton of Baſil, Places of moſt importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Trieſſe and other Streams deſcending from the Mountains of Swartzen-wald, under which it lieth: founded by Berchthold the third, Earl or Duke of Zeringen, (the Caſtle of Zeringen, founded by Berthold the firſt, Son of Gebizo, the youngeſt Son of Guntram the ſecond Earl of Habſpurg, once the chief Seat of thoſe Princes, being then near adjoining to it) in the reign of Henry the Fifth Emperour, Anno 1112, or thereabouts. Famous in thoſe days for Silver mines, now for an Univerſity here eſtabliſhed Anno 1459, and being in preſent eſtimation the chief of the Country, of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Kintrich, and both Towns Imperial: the firſt ſo named from Offa an Engliſh Saxon, the Apoſtle of theſe parts of Germany. 4. Hochberg, which gives the Title of a Marqueſs to the Marqueſſes of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zel, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth alſo 6. Badenwiller, to the Marqueſs of Baden; this laſt accruing to them by the Marriage of Rodolphus the ſixth of that name, Marqueſs of Hochberg, with a Siſter of John Earl of Friburg, the then Lord thereof. 7. Waldſhut, upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold and mountainous Country, but well ſtored with Woods. 8. Briſac, by Antonine called Mons Briſacus, a Garriſon in his time againſt the encroaching Almans, and ſituate at that time on the French ſide of the Rhene, the courſe of the River being ſince turned on the other ſide, where now it runneth. It is built Caſtle-wiſe on the top of a round Hill, in which there is alſo a ſtrong Tower or Fortreſs, raiſed by Berchthold the third for defence of the place; otherwiſe ſtrong enough by its own natural ſituation, and might be made impregnable, but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep Well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene which runs underneath it. The Town is fair, populous, and well built, once of moſt note in all the Country, from hence called Briſac-gow, or Briſe-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchthold the 4. it grew by little and little to be leſs frequented, the other being ſeated more conveniently for Trade and buſineſs. Here alſo, not far off from the Caſtle of Zeringen, ſtood that of Kiburg, ſomewhat the ancienter of the two; of ſuch authority and repute in thoſe elder times, that the Emperours do ſtill retain the Title of Earls of Kiburg in the Style Imperial: deſcended on the Houſe of Habſpurg by the Marriage of Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of Hartman the laſt Earl hereof, to Eberhard of Habſpurg, Couſin-german to the Emperour Rodolph; on the expiring of which Line, Anno 1356, it fell, together with many fair Eſtates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Auſtria, ſurnamed the Short.

Finally, in the fourth and laſt part hereof, called NORTH-SCHWABEN, becauſe on the North-ſide of the Danow, the places moſt obſervable are, 1. Gemund, on the Rheems. 2. Dinckel-Spyel, on the Warnitz, two Imperial Towns; which with Uberlingen or Werlingen, (all three but mean in Building, Territory, or eſtimation) ſpoken of before, are the only three Imperial Cities in all Germany which totally adhere unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Bopſingen, on the Egra, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen, on the ſame River, but in a low and mooriſh ground, yet of great reſort, populous, and well traded; moſt memorable for the Defeat here given the Sweeds by Ferdinand the third, now Emperour, at his firſt entrance on the Government; in which Bannier, one of the principal Commanders of that Nation, was ſlain on the place, Guſtavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Priſoner, their whole Forces routed, and thereupon ſo ſtrange an alteration of the Affairs of Germany, which they had almoſt wholly conquered, (though not for themſelves;) that the Palatinate, not long before reſtored to its proper Owner, was again poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, Frankendale by the Imperialiſts, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their Holds on the Baltick Seas, Anno 1637. 5. Rotweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperial City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 6. Donawert, ſeated on the Confluence of the Donaw and the Werdt, whence it had the name, moſt commonly called only Werdt; an Imperial Town, the habitation of John de Werdt, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a chief Commander of the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German Wars. 7. Villengen, on the Bregentz, a ſmall River falling into the Danow, a Town belonging to the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria. Not far from which ſtands 8. Furſtenburg, an ancient Caſtle. The Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Country, deſcended lineally from Eginon, or Eggon, the youngeſt Son of the Lady Judith, Siſter and Heir of Berthold the fifth, the laſt Duke of Zeringen, and conſequently a Branch of the illuſtrious Houſe of Habſpurg; exceedingly increaſed both in power and Patrimony, by the Marriage of Frederick Earl hereof (in the time of Charles the fifth, under whom he ſerved in his Wars againſt the Proteſtants) with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Chriſtopher the laſt Earl of Werdenberg, poſſeſſed of many fair Eſtates amongſt the Switzers and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl, called Den Eſchingen, is the Head of Danubius. 9 Vlm, an Imperial City, ſituate on the meeting of the Blave, the Iler, and the Danow, the principal City of North Schwaben; about ſix miles in compaſs, rich, populous, well fortified, and ſtored with an Armory for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition not inferiour to any in Germany. The Town is but new taking its firſt riſe from a Monaſtery here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Vlm from the Elms about it. At firſt it belonged unto the Monks; of whom having bought their Freedom in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having ſo violent a Stream, that the Boats which go down the water uſe to be ſold at the place where they land, it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alps, and amongſt them the old Caſtle of Hohenberg; the Lord whereof, on the Ruine of the Houſe of Schwaben, became poſſeſſed of a great Eſtate here and in Upper Elſaſs; ſold afterwards to Rodolph of Habſpurg, the Founder of the now Auſtrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Brixentes, Suanetes, Rugusci, and Calucones, who, together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other Tribes of the Rhæti, (of whom ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in the Alpine Provinces) poſſeſſed themſelves of that Country which lieth betwixt the River Inn and the head of the Rhene, Eaſt and Weſt, Danubius and the Alps of Italy, North and South. Within which compaſs are the greateſt part of the Griſons, the Dukedoms of Schwaben and Bavaria on this ſide the Danow, and part of the County of Tyrol, and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Druſus and Tiberius Nero, Sons-in-law of Auguſtus, they were made a Province of the Romans: divided into Rhætia prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck, or Lycus; and Rhætia ſecunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Inn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which accompt all Schwaben on the South ſide of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhætia prima, continuing ſo till vanquiſhed and ſubdued by the Almans in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperour of the Weſtern parts. As for the Almans who ſucceeded in poſſeſſion hereof, they were originally ſome Tribes and Families of the Suevi, the moſt warlike Nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the Riber of Albis: who, jealous of Cæſar's great Succeſſes, brought againſt him 430000 fighting men, of which 80000 were ſlain, and many drowned. They uſed to ſtay at home and go to the War by turns: they which ſtayed at home tilling the Land, to whom the reſt returning brought the Spoil of the Enemies. But after this blow we hear little of them, till the time of Caracalla the Son of Severus; during whoſe Reign, deſcending towards the Banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other Nations as they paſſed along, they aſſumed firſt the name of Almans; either from that promiſcuous mixture of all ſorts of men, or (as I rather think) from Mannus the Son of Tuiſco, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though they were well beaten by him at their firſt coming down, near the River Mœnus, and afterwards more broken by Diocleſian, who ſlew at leaſt 60000 of them at one time in Gaul; yet never left they to infeſt the Provinces of the Empire which lay neareſt to them, till in the end, following the tract of the Hunns who had gon before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garriſons which were in their way, they made themſelves Maſters of Rhætia prima, Germania prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing, beſides the Countries ſpoken of before, Alſatia, and ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lies on the French ſide of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French, their next neighbours, (of whoſe growth and greatneſs they began to be very ſenſible) they were firſt vanquiſhed by Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French in that great and memorable Fight at Zulp near Colen, and afterwards made wholly ſubject to the Conquerour, who oppreſſed them with an heavy and laſting Servitude. About this time they returned again to their old name of Suevians, their Eſtate being erected into a Dukedom, called many times the Dukedom of Almain; and, when ſo called, divided into the Upper Almain, comprehending the Country of the Griſons, with ſome parts of Switzerland and Tyrol, and the Lower or the proper Almain, which contained the reſt of the Eſtates of the ancient Almans, called for the moſt part by the name of the Dukedom of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally tranſmitting that name to this Province only, the beſt part thereof. Theſe Dukes were at firſt officiary only, removeable at the will of the Emperour, and accomptable to him; not ſeldom many at one time, eſpecially whileſt under the command of the French, ſome of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is no great certainty of their Succeſſion, nor much care to be taken in ſearching after it; though otherwiſe men of great Authority and command in their ſeveral Times. The moſt remarkable amongſt them was Rodolph, Earl of Reinfelden and Duke of Schwaben, (deſcended from the Earls of Habſpurg) in the reign of Henry the fourth, againſt whom he was choſen Emperour by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand, but overcome and wounded at the Battel of Eyſter, he died not long after of his wounds, with great Repentance for rebelling againſt his Soveraign. After his death, ſome Provinces being diſmembred from it, and other leſſer Eſtates firſt erected out of it, it was made hereditary in the perſon of Frederick Baron of Hohenſtauffen, ſurnamed the Ancient, by the munificence and bounty of the ſaid Henry the fourth, whoſe Daughter Agnes he had married. His Succeſſors follow in this order.

The Dukes of SCHWABEN.

1. Frederick the Ancient, the firſt hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2. Frederick with one eye, Son of Frederick the Ancient.
3. Frederick III. ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, Son of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperour: he ſucceeded the Emperour Henry the fifth in the Dukedom of Franconia, and left the ſame unto his Succeſſors.
4. 1190 Frederick IV. ſecond Son of Barbaroſſa; his elder Brother Henry ſucceeding in the Empire by the name of Henry the ſixth.

5. Conrade, Brother of Frederick the fourth.

6. Philip, Brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the 6. elected Emperour.

1207 7. Frederick V. Son of Henry the ſixth, elected Emperour by the name of Frederick the ſecond; King of Naples and Sicily alſo in the right of his Mother.

1250 8. Conrade II. Son of Frederick the fifth, King of both Sicilies, and Emperour of Germany after the death of his Father; poiſoned, as was ſuppoſed, by his baſe Brother Manfred, who ſucceeded in his Kingdom of Sicily.

1254 9. Conradine, the Son of Conrade, purſuing his Right unto the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, was overcome and taken priſoner by Charles of Anjou, Succeſſour unto Manfred in thoſe Eſtates, and by his command beheaded at Naples Anno 1268. After whoſe death (being the laſt of that powerful and Imperial Family) this vaſt Eſtate was brought unto a ſecond diſmembring, and divided amongſt the Biſhops, Princes and Free Cities hereof: of which laſt there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedom than in all Germany beſides. So that beholding it in the firſt and ſecond Dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Eſtates (beſides what belongeth to the Cities and Epiſcopal Sees) to have been raiſed out of the Ruines of this great Dukedom: that is to ſay, the Dukedoms of Zeringen and Wirtenberg, with the Marquiſate of Baden, diſmembred from it when conferred on Frederick of Hohenſtauffen; the Earldoms of Pfirt, Hohenberg and Friburg, (beſides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habſpurg) advanced out of the ſecond Ruine. How Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the Houſe of Auſtria hath been ſhewn already; and what becomes of Wirtenberg and Baden ſhall be ſhewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zeringen, poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow and a great part of Switzerland, owe their Original to Berthold, the Son of Gebizo, a younger Son of Guntram the 2. Earl of Habſpurg. Which being extinguiſhed after a Succeſſion of ſeven Princes only in the perſon of Berthold the fifth, (who died the ſame day in which the Emperour Rodolph of Habſpurg was born) Anno 1218, the Rights hereof deſcended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country: Cuno, the firſt that bare the Title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldeſt Son of Judith, Siſter and Heir of Berthold the laſt Duke of Zeringen. Eggon, the laſt Earl of which Houſe, being overlaid by his undutiful and rebellious Subjects, ſold his Eſtate therein for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold Dukes of Auſtria, Sons of Albert the Short, whoſe Succeſſors enjoy all Briſgow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is ſaid by Bara: But Paradine will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Auſtria, on the Weſt with the River Leck or Lycus, which parts it from Schwaben, on the North with Norgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, and on the South with the Earldom of Tyrol and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhætia ſecunda, and ſo much of Noricum mediterraneum as now maketh up the Biſhoprick of Saltzburg, and by a diſtinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici; ſo named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lycus, (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verſified by a German Poet:

Reſpicit & latè fluvios Vindimque Licumque
Miſcentes Undas, & nomina Littoris, unde
Antiquam Gentem, populumque, Urbemque vocârunt
Vindelicam.———

In Engliſh thus,
Vindis and Lycus, Floods of noted fame,
He next beholds, mingling their Streams and Name;
To which the old Vindelici do own
The name of both their Nation and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Auguſta Vindelicorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after ſuch time as the Boii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got poſſeſſion of this Country, the name of Vindelicia and Rhætia ſecunda grew into diſuſe, that of Boiaria ſucceeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the preſent name of the Country amongſt the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayeren, by the French Bavier.

The whole is divided into three parts: the Higher, lying towards the Alps of Tyrol; the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the Diſtrict of Saltzburg, ſituate betwixt the Inn and the Dukedom of Auſtria: all three much over-ſpread with Woods and Foreſts, remainders of the Hercynian Foreſt deſcribed before. But more particularly the Higher, lying towards the Alps, is cold and barren, affording no Wines, and but little Corn: the Lower being more fruitful, and better planted, for ſome parts (eſpecially about Regenſpurg and Landſhut) inferior unto none in Germany for Richneſs and pleaſantneſs of the ſituation. Of the Diſtrict of Saltzburg we ſhall ſpeak by it ſelf, becauſe by ſome not reckoned as a part hereof. In all there is great quantity of Fewel for the fire, and of Timber for Building; no leſs of Swine fatted in the Woods, and ſent away by numerous Herds into other Countries.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached here amongſt the Boiarians by Rupertus Biſhop of Wormes, driven from his See by Childebert King of the French, Anno 540, or thereabouts, and here made the firſt Biſhop of Saltzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (ſetting aſide the Imperial Cities) is more entirely devoted than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the HIGHER are 1. Munchen, (in Latine Monachium) the Duke's Seat, ſeated on the Iſar, or Iſara, in a very ſweet and delightful Soil, among Ponds and Groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Riverets, and enriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be parallel'd in all this Continent: firſt founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Otho the firſt, Anno 972, now grown a large and populous City; the publick Buildings, as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate-houſe, or Guild hall, and common Market-place, of ſuch excellent Structure, that they ſerve not only for Uſe and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongſt them none is more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein are conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the moſt part of them Manuſcripts. A Town made choice of by Maximilian, the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the Spoils got by him in the Wars of Germany: here being found (at ſuch time as the Town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 Braſs Pieces (beſides other great Guns) hidden under the ground, one of the which was charged, inſtead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landſperg, upon the Leck or Lycus, near the Alps of Tyrol: once of great ſtrength, becauſe a Frontier towards Schwaben; but proving a dangerous neighbor to the Swediſh Garriſons planted in theſe parts, during that War againſt the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and diſmantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Martenwald, now a place of no note or beauty, heretofore the Inutrium of Ptolomy, ſeated near the Alps. 4. Fridberg, well fortified by Duke Ludowick or Lewis the ſecond for a Bulwark againſt thoſe of Augsburg. 5. Here ſtood alſo the old Caſtle of Schyre, built by Arnulph 2. Son of Arnulph the firſt, Duke of Bavaria; the Seat and honorary Title of his poſterity, (Dynaſtæ Schyrenſes in the Latine) till Otho of Wittlesback, by the favour of Frederick Barbaroſſa and his own good fortune, did attain that Dukedom.

In the LOWER Bavaria there firſt offers it ſelf to conſideration the Town of Rain, ſeated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow; memorable for the Skirmiſh near to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians at the firſt paſſing of the Swediſh Forces over that River, in which John Earl of Tilly, ſo famous for his long and fortunate Conduct of the Imperial Armies, received his death's wound, of which he died at Ingolſtad within few weeks after. 2. Newburg, upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the firſt Town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes after the ſaid Defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolſtad, ſaid to be built by a Tribe or Nation of the Sueves called Angeli, and thence called Angeloſtadium, or Angleſtade; firſt made a City by Ludowick of Bavaria Duke and Emperour, and in the year 1410 made an Univerſity, much priviledged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fifth and Pope Pius the ſecond. A Town ſo ſtrongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it ſeems impregnable; and indeed proved ſo to Guſtavus the late King of Sweden, who here found the firſt check to his proſperous Fortunes, being forced to raiſe his Siege without endangering it, and find work elſewhere. 4. Regenſpurg, (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow alſo, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberina, or Auguſta Tiberii, ſo called of a Colony brought hither by Tiberius Cæſar about the time of our Saviour's Paſſion; afterwards called Rhætopolis, or the City of the Rhætians, the chief of Rhætia ſecunda. At this time it is a fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houſes: anciently an Epiſcopal See, and of late made the ordinary place for the general Diets of the Empire. In former times it was the Seat of the Kings and firſt Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial, and now mixt, or both: for being ſtill Imperial, at the leaſt in name, it was ſeized on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes firſt got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very ſtrong Garriſon, after the loſs of Munchen his chief place of Reſidence, till at laſt won from him by the Swedes, Anno 1633. 5. Paſſaw, by the modern Latiniſts Patavia; but by ſome thought to be the Boiodurum of Ptolomy, then a Roman Garriſon: ſeated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn and the Iltz; by which it is divided into three Towns, Paſſaw, Inſtadt, and Ilſtadt, the whole Compoſitum being a rich, fair, and well traded City: a See Epiſcopal, and ſubject immediately to the Biſhop as chief Lord hereof, who hath his dwelling in the Caſtle of Oberhauſen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilſtadt. A place remarkable for many Meetings and Conſultations of the German Princes, eſpecially for that of the year 1552, in which, all former Quarrels being laid aſide, the Proteſtants were firſt permitted the free Exerciſe of their Religion, by the conſent and Edict of Charles the fifth, who had moſt laboured to ſuppreſs it. More in the Land is 6 Friſing, on the ſwelling of a fine round Hill near the River Ambra, which runs beneath it, called anciently Fraxinum, conceived to be built by ſome of the Preſidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperours; honoured with an Epiſcopal See about the year 710. One of the Biſhops whereof, commonly called Otho Friſingenſis, was the beſt Hiſtorian of his time. 7. Landſhut, upon the River of Iſer, in the richeſt and moſt pleaſant Country of all Bavaria; a beautiful and well built City, the work of Lewis Duke hereof, in the year 1208, adorned with a Church of moſt curious building for the ſervice of God, and a magnificent Palace for the uſe of the Duke. 8. Freiſtat, the only Imperial Town, (except Regenſpurg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great Towns in both Bavaria's is ſuppoſed to be 80; that is to ſay, 34 Cities, and 46 great Towns, of which theſe are the principal.

The Biſhoprick or Diſtrict of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria, (according to our former diviſion of it) extendeth from the Inn or Oenus towards the Confines of Auſtria. The Soil hereof is rocky, dry, and barren, excepting ſome few Vallies only, as ſeated in the midſt of the Julian Alps, the habitation heretofore of the Norici mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, ſeated upon the River Saltzach, whence it had the name; raiſed out of the Ruines of Juvavia, placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the Station of a Cohort of Roman Souldiers belonging to the Firſt Legion. An Alpine City, ſtrongly ſituate among the Mountains; but no leſs beautiful than many of the lower grounds. The Royal Seat of ſome of the Bavarian Kings, after of the Archbiſhops hereof, the moſt powerful Prelates for Revenue or Juriſdiction of any in Germany. The See was firſt fixed here by Rupertus or Rutbertus, the firſt Apoſtle of theſe parts, ſpoken of before; whoſe Image or Impreſs is ſtamped to this day on the Coins of this Biſhoprick. At the time when Luther firſt endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Biſhop here, who did ingenuouſly confeſs, that the Maſs did not want its faults; that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lives of Prieſts and Friers fit to be reformed: ſed quòd miſellus Monachus omnia reformet, id non eſſe tolerabile; but that ſuch a ſorry fellow as Luther ſhould attempt the work, was by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the ſame River, near the head thereof. 3. Rotenburg, on the Eaſt-ſide of the Inn, bordering on Bavaria. 4. Traunſheim, upon the Traun, riſing out of the Lakes. 5. Wildeſhut, one of the fartheſt Northwards, and 6. Biſhopsſtoffe, one of the moſt Southern in all this Tract.

The firſt Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the Diſtrict of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforeſaid: a people ſo reſolvedly bent to maintain their Freedom againſt the incroachment of the Romans, that when Druſus, the Son-in-law of Auguſtus, and Father of Germanicus Cæſar, made War upon them, the very Women thereof took the Alarm; & deficientibus telis, Infantes in ora militum adverſa miſerunt, and when their Darts were ſpent, threw their young Infants (ſaith the Hiſtorian) at the heads of the Romans. After them, in the declining of the Empire, ſucceeded the Boiarians, ſome of the many Tribes of the Boii, the moſt diffuſed and multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germany. Originally they were of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedom of Bourbon, from whence ſome of them paſſed with the Senones and others of the Gauls to the farther ſide of the Alps (in reſpect of them) where they took up the Country between the Appennine and the Po. Wearied with many Bickerings, at laſt with ſharp and bitter Wars againſt the Romans, and by them depriv'd of half their Country, ſome of them paſſed into Germany, and mingled themſelves with the Taeriſci, then dwelling in thoſe parts which we now call Stiermark: others advancing farther, thruſt themſelves into the Norici, (of whom more anon;) and ſome retired themſelves into the ſhelters and faſt places of the Hercynian

Foreſt. Driven from this laſt by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Hermanduri and Norici, (now the Upper Palatinate) who, mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarians, and were by that name firſt known in the time of Clovis the 5. King of the French; by whoſe perſwaſion, in the 17 year of Anaſtaſius Emperour of the Eaſt, they paſſed over the Danow, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Vindelicia, or the ſecond Rhætia, with ſome part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was ſignifyed. They were governed firſt by Kings, (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius, (and he the laſt of that Race) ſlain fighting on the ſide of the Almans againſt the French, at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen. After which they were made ſubject to the Conquerors, as their neighbours and Confederates the Almans were, but ſuffered to live under the command and Government of their own Princes, by the name of Dukes. Of theſe, from Theodo the Son of Aldigerius, to Taſſilo the laſt Duke, outed of his Eſtate and Honours by Charles the Great, for conſpiring with the Lombards againſt him, are reckoned 15 Dukes in all; whoſe names (for there remaineth little of them but the empty names) we ſhall ſubjoyn in the enſuing Catalogue of the

Dukes of the BOIARIANS.

511 2. Theodo II. ſirnamed the Great.
537 3. Theodebert.
4. Theodo III. the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Boiarians.
565 5. Taſſilo Son of Theodebert.
598 6. Garibaldus.
612 7. Theodo IV.
630 8. Taſſilo II.
650 9. Theodo. V.
10. Theodebert II.
11. Theodo VI. Son of Grimoldus, the Brother of Theodebert the ſecond.
708 12. Grimold.
13. Hugobert, Brother of Grimold.
735 14. Utilo.
765 15. Taſſilo III. the laſt Duke of the Boiarians, of whom more anon.

Amongſt theſe, few were of any note but 1. Theodo the firſt, Son of Aldigerius, who abandoning the name of King becauſe leſs pleaſing to the French, who had newly conquered them, aſſumed that of Duke, and paſſing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhætia ſecunda, with part of Noricum, from the Romans, Anno 508. or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the ſecond, named the Great, for his great and many Victories againſt the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindelicia, and whatſoever they held on the Dutch ſide of the Alps. 3. Theodo the third of that name, and the fourth in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Chriſtian Faith by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, An. 580. 4. Taſſilo the third of that name, and the laſt of their Dukes of the Race of Aldigerius, or of the old Boiarian bloud; who being depoſed by Charles the Great, the whole Country became immediately ſubject to the French, governed at firſt by their Lieutenants. Diſmembred from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom, (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom it was conferred on Lotharius his eldeſt Son, who was afterwards Emperour of the Romans: after his death poſſeſſed by the Kings of Germany, but as a diſtinct Kingdom both in name and Title, till the deceaſe of Lewis the Son of Arnulph, the laſt of the direct Line of Charles the Great. He being dead, and the Bavarians loth to be made a ſubject Province to the Kingdom of Germany, one Arnulph of the Iſſue of the ſaid Charles, with the general liking of the Boiarians, took upon himſelf the Title of King; but being oppoſed therein by Conrade the Brother of Lewis, Emperour and King of Germany, and alſo by Henry the firſt who ſucceeded, he changed the Title of King into that of Duke: the Founder of the preſent Houſe of

The Dukes of BAVARIA.

1. Arnulph, of the Houſe of Charles the Great, firſt Duke of Bavaria.
2. Eberhard, Son of Arnulph, depoſed by Otho the firſt.
3. Berchthold, the Brother of Arnulph, confirmed in the Eſtate by the ſaid Emperour Otho. After whoſe death it was conferred on Henry, the Brother of Otho the 1. who had married Judith, Daughter of Arnulph the firſt Duke, and Siſter to Eberhard.
4. Henry, Brother of Otho the firſt, ſirnamed Rixoſus, or the Quarrelſom.
5. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, ſirnamed Hezelo.
6. Henry III. ſirnamed the Saint, Son of Henry the 2. the firſt Emperour who came in by Election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5. After whoſe coming to the Empire this Dukedom was transferred for 14 Succeſſions from one great Family to another, according to the power and pleaſure of the preſent Emperour, in manner following.
7. Henry IV. ſirnamed Hezzel, Brother to Cunegund, the renowned Wife of Henry the Saint; by whom he was preferred to this Dukedom, and by him depoſed.
8. Henry Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorff in Schwaben, (of the ſtrange Original of which Family we ſhall ſpeak in Brunſwick,) made Duke by the Emperour Conrade the 2.
9. Guelpho, Son of Henry Guelph, or Henry the 5.
10. Erneſt, created Duke hereof by the ſame Conrade the 2. and by him depoſed again for conſpiring againſt him.
11. Henry VI.
12. Cuno, accuſed of conſpiracy, and diſplaced by Henry the 3. to make room for
13. Henry VII. Son of the ſaid Emperour Henry the 3. whom he ſucceeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4.
14. Agnes, the Mother of the ſaid Henry the 4. by the gift of her Son.
15. Otho, by the gift of the Empreſs Agnes, depoſed not long after by Henry the 4.
16. Welpho III. Son of Coniza, the Daughter of Guelph the 2. by Azon an Italian Marqueſs, made Duke hereof by the ſaid Emperour Henry the 4.
17. Welpho, IV. Son to Welpho the 3.
18. Henry VIII. ſirnamed the Proud, Brother of Guelpho the 4. by the Marriage of Gertrude Daughter of Lotharius the ſecond, Duke of Saxony alſo. Deprived of both by the Emperour Conrade the 3.
19. Leopold, Son to Leopold the 4. Marqueſs of Auſtria, made Duke by the ſaid Conrade the 3.

20. Henry IX. Brother of Leopold, after Marqueſs, at laſt Duke of Auſtria.

21. Henry X. ſirnamed the Lion, Son of Henry the Proud, reſtored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbaroſſa, (the Duke of Auſtria being otherwiſe ſatisfied) by whom he was not long after proſcribed, and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this Eſtate became fixed and ſetled in the perſon and poſterity of 1180 22. Otho of Wittlesbach, ſo called from the place of his birth or dwelling, deſcended lineally from Arnulph the Lord of Schyre in the Upper Bavaria, and 2. Son of Arnulph the firſt Duke hereof; advanced unto this honour by Frederick Barbaroſſa, ſenſible of the too-great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this Eſtate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northgoia.

1183 23 Ludovick, or Lewis Son of Otho.

1231 24. Otho II. Son of Lewis, who, by marrying Gertrude, the ſole Daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electoral Dignity into the Houſe of Bavaria.

1290 25. Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the Son of Otho the 2.

1294 26. Ludovick or Lewis II. Brother of Henry Duke of Bavaria and Elector Palatine of the Rhene.

1312 27. Ludovick or Lewis III. ſecond Son of Lewis the 2. ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria; Rodolph, the eldeſt Son, ſucceeding in both Palatinates and the Electoral Dignity. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperour, known commonly by the name of Ludovicus Bavarus.

1375 29. Stephen, II Son of Stephen the firſt; his Brothers, Frederick and John, ſharing with him parts of the Eſtate.

1413 30. Ludovick II. ſirnamed Barbatus, depoſed and impriſoned by his own Son Ludovick, who yet died before him without Iſſue.

1447 31. Henry II. Son of Frederick, the ſecond Brother of Stephen the 2. ſucceeded on the death of Ludovicus Barbatus.

1450 32. Ludovick V. ſirnamed the Rich, the Son of Henry the 2. baniſhed the Jews out of his Eſtates, and ſeiſed their goods.

1503 34. Albert III. Son of a former Albert, Nephew of John Munchen by his Son Erneſtus: which John was youngeſt Brother to Stephen the 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperour ſucceeded unto George the Rich: the cauſe of a long and unhappy War betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria; the worſt whereof, beſides the loſs of this Eſtate, fell upon the Palatines, proſcribed and outed of their Country upon this quarrel; but, upon their Submiſſion, reſtored again.

1508 35. William, the Son of Albert the 3.

1577 36. Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and ſo extremely affected unto the Jeſuites, that he built Colledges for them at Landsberg, Ingolſtad and Munchen, his three principal Towns.

1579 37. William II. Son of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cauſe of the Church of Rome; therein exceeded very much by

38. Maximilian, eldeſt Son of William the 2. who chiefly out of the ſame zeal ſided with Ferdinand the 2. in the Wars of Germany, An. 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the ſaid Emperour againſt Frederick Count and Elector-Palatine, choſen King of Bohemia: in which having done great ſervice to the Imperial and Romiſh Intereſt, he was by the ſaid Ferdinand inveſted in the Upper Palatinate, called anciently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinate of Bavaria, together with the Electoral Dignity. This laſt was conferred at firſt upon him but for term of life in the Diet at Regenſpurg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Saxony and Brandenburg then proteſting againſt it; but afterwards, in the Diet at Prague, Anno 1628. conferred upon him and his Heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who, by reaſon of their ſimultaneous Inveſtiture with the firſt of their Houſe, are not to be deprived of their Eſtates and Dignities for the offence of their Fathers; the puniſhment not being to extend beyond the perſon of the offender. But notwithſtanding their Pretenſions and Allegations, the Duke is ſtill poſſeſſed of the Title and Dignity, and confirmed therein by the Concluſions of the Treaty of Munſter, a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.

The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 pieces in Bend, Argent and Azure.

8. The Archdukedom of AVSTRIA.

THe Archdukedom of AVSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporate Provinces and the Members of it, is bounded on the Eaſt with Hungary and part of Sclavonia on the Weſt with Bavaria, and ſome parts of the Switzers and the Griſons, on the North with Bohemia and Moravia, and on the South with Iſtria and ſome part of Friuli in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the ſeveral Provinces of Auſtria properly ſo called, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tyrol. The quality of the whole will be beſt diſcerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the leſſer Tribes of the Sevaces, Alauni, Ambiſontii, Ambilici, and Ambidrauni; ſubdued by Druſus, Son-in-law to Auguſtus Cæſar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Conſtantine the Great divided into Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and ſome parts of Tyrol, with the Biſhoprick or Diſtrict of Saltzburg; of which Solva was the Metropolis or capital City: and Noricum Ripenſe, containing only Auſtria, and thoſe parts of Bavaria which lie Eaſtward of the River Inn, extended all along on the banks of the Danow. It was known by no other names while poſſeſſed by the Romans; from whom being conquered by the Avares and other Nations, it gained thoſe ſeveral names and appellations ſpecified before.

1. AVSTRIA properly ſo called hath on the Eaſt the Kingdom of Hungary, on the Weſt Bavaria, on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the Weſt, and on the other ſide the Teye, which ſeparates it from Moravia, on the South Stiria, or Stiermark. It is called by the Dutch Oſtenreich, and contractedly Oſtrich, that is to ſay, the Eaſtern Kingdom, (a part aſſuming to itſelf the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of Eaſt-France, or the Eaſtern Kingdom of the French, in the barbarous Latine of thoſe times called by the name of Auſtraſia, whence the modern Auſtria.

The Air is generally very healthy, and the Earth as fruitful, yielding a plentiful increaſe without help of Compoſt or other Soiling, and of ſo eaſie a Tillage to the Husbandman, that on the North ſide of the Danow it is ploughed and managed by one Horſe only. Exceeding plentiful it is of Grain, and abundant in Wine; with which laſt it ſupplieth the defects of Bavaria: it hath great ſtore of Saffron, ſome proviſion of Salt; and at the foot of the Mountains, not far from Haimburg, ſome Ginger alſo. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. It is divided by the River Danow into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North ſide of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia; this on the South ſide, towards Stiermark.

Places of moſt importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA are, 1. Gmund, ſeated on a Lake called Gmunder-See, bordering on Bavaria, at the Efflux of the River Draun, which ariſeth out of it. 2. Lintz, ſeated on the Confluence of the ſaid Draun with the famous Danow; the Aredate of Ptolemy: a Town before the late Wars almoſt wholly Proteſtant; but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other ſide. 3. Walkenſtein, on the Ens or Aniſus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4. Ens, on the fall of that River into the Danow; raiſed out of the Ruines of Laureacum, ſometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripenſe, the Station at that time of the 2. Legion; afterwards an Archbiſhop's See, made ſuch in the firſt planting of Chriſtianity amongſt this people by S. Severine, An. 464. On the Reviver whereof (ſuppreſſed by the Hunns, Boiarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitan dignity was fixt at Saltzburg. 5. Weidhoven, near the head of the River Ips. 6. Ips, ſeated at the Influx of that River, and from thence denominated; the Geſodunum of Ptolemy and other Ancients. 7. Newſidle, on a great Lake ſo named. 8. Wels, on the main ſtream of the Danubius. 9. Haimburg, on the Confluence thereof and the River Markh. Near to which, at the foot of the Mountains now called Haimburgerberg, (from the Town adjoyning) but anciently named Mons Cognamus, is ſome ſtore of Ginger: a wonderful great rarity for theſe colder Countries. 10. Newſtat, firſt called ſo from the newneſs of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principal of all theſe parts, by Ptolomy called Juliobona, Vindebona, by Antonine; the Station in their times of the Tenth Roman Legion; of whoſe being ſetled here there are many Monuments both within the City & without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and publick Edefices; each private houſe having ſuch ſtore of Cellarage for all occaſions, that as much of the City ſeems to be under the ground as is above it. The Streets for the moſt part are ſpacious, and all paved with Stone, which makes them very clean and ſweet in the midſt of Winter. It is fenced with a mighty Wall, deep and precipicious Ditches on all parts of it, and many Bulwarks, Towers and Ramparts in all needful places. The Walls hereof were firſt raiſed with ſome part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Auſtria, for the ranſom of K. Richard the firſt of England, taken Priſoner by him as he paſſed homewards through this Country from the Holy Land. Eſteemed to this day the ſtrongeſt hold of Chriſtendom againſt the Turks; and proved experimentally ſo to be in that moſt notable and famous Repulſe here given them An. 1526. at what time 200000 of them, under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent, beſieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the ſecond, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, were gallantly reſiſted, and compelled to retire, with the loſs of 80000 Souldiers. Nor doth the Strength hereof ſo diminiſh the Beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodlieſt Towns in all the Empire; the Reſidence for theſe laſt Ages of the Emperours: made an Univerſity by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond; revived and much advanced by Albert Duke of Auſtria, An. 1356: adorned with an Epiſcopal See, many magnificent Temples, and ſtately Monaſteries: but above all, with a moſt ſumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Archdukes and Emperours uſe to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia, during the little time he was Duke of Auſtria. In the middle Ages, as appears by Otho Friſingenſis, it was called Fabiana: but being ruined by the Hunns, and again re-edified, was firſt called Biana, (the firſt ſyllable omitted by miſtake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We ſhould now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA, if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great Antiquity, nor many new ones built or beautified by the Auſtrian Princes, ſince it came into their poſſeſſion: the only one of note being Crems, or Cremia, on the left-hand ſhoar of Danubius, going down the water. 2. Recz, on the River Teye, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Freiſtat, at the foot of the Mountains on the skirts of Bohemia.

2. STIRIA, or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North with Auſtria, on the South with Carniola, on the Eaſt with Hungary, and on the Weſt with Carinthia; extended in length 110 miles, but in breadth not above 60, or thereabout. For the moſt part mountainous and barren, as being over-ſpread with the Spurs and branches of the Alps, and rich only in Minerals. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

Towns of moſt conſequence are, 1. Gratz, ſeated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third Branch of the Houſe of Auſtria (ſince the time of Ferdinand the firſt) was called de Gratz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimony. A Town once full of Proteſtants, and thoſe ſo ſtrong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindred from the free exerciſe of their Religion, till the year 1598, in which Margaret, the late Queen of Spain, Siſter to the Archduke Ferdinand de Gratz, was by the Citizens ſolemnly entertained; with whom entred ſo many Souldiers, that the City was taken, and 14 Miniſters of the Reformed Religion preſently baniſhed. 2. Rackelſpurg, and 3. Pruck both ſituate alſo on the Mur. 4. Stechaw, an Epiſcopal See, ſeated on the Dra, or Dravus, a well-known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5. Petaw, the Pœtovia of Antonius, ſeated ſomewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6. Lambach, the Ovilabis of Antoninus, on the Dravus alſo. 7. Voitſperg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Celey, the Celeia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appeareth by many Roman Inſcriptions and other evident ſigns of Age which are upon it; for this cauſe thought by ſome to be that Celia, or built at leaſt out of the Ruines of it, which Ptolomy placeth in this Tract. It is ſituate on the River Savus, and hath a large juriſdiction over the adjoyning Countries. 9. Caniſia, ſeated in a Mariſh on the edge of this Country: a place of great ſtrength both by art and nature; once one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks againſt the Turks in all theſe parts, and a great eye-ſore to them for many years; but taken by them at laſt. An. 1600, and never ſince regained by the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, though many times in vain attempted.

The whole Country, being mountainous and hilly, generally over-ſpread with the ſpurs and branches of the neighbouring Alps, and rich only in Minerals, as before was ſaid, was anciently the Inhabitation of the Tauriſci, (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Stiermark, the Germans calling that a Stier which the Latins call Tauriſcus, or a little Bullock. By which account Stiermack is nothing but the Borders or Marches of the Tauriſci, the utmoſt Bounds of their poſſeſſions; as indeed it was. Laid to Pannonia in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honour of Valeria the Daughter of Diocletian. But once diſmembred from the Empire, it fell unto the name of Stiermark, with reference to the Tauriſci ſpoken of before. Firſt made an Earldom in the perſon of one Ottacarus advanced unto that Honour by the Emperour Conrade the 2. Leopold the 4. from this Ottacarus (two other Ottacars intervening) was made Marqueſs of Stiermark; and his Son, Ottacar the 4. was made Duke hereof by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa. But being without hope of iſſue, and infected with the incurable diſeaſe of the Leproſie, he ſold his Country to Leopold the fifth of Auſtria; who bought it with ſome part of that vaſt ſum of money which he extorted for the Ranſom of King Richard the firſt. It hath continued ever ſince in the poſſeſſion of this potent Family, but ſo, that it hath many times been aſſigned over for the Portion of the younger Brethren: as, namely, to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger Sons of Albert the Short; Erneſt, the youngeſt Son of that Leopold: and, laſtly, to Charles the youngeſt Son of Ferdinand the firſt, called Charles of Gratz, Father of Ferdinand the ſecond, Succeſſour to Matthias in Auſtria it ſelf and all the reſt of the Eſtates incorporate with it: not like hereafter to be ſo impolitickly diſmembred from the chief of the Houſe, as in former times.

3. CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the Eaſt with Stiermark and the River Lavand, on the Weſt with the Diſtrict of Saltzburg and the River Saltzach, on the North with Auſtria it ſelf, and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravus, which, having its original in the ſkirts hereof, paſſeth through theſe Auſtrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at laſt into the Danow. The Country, being ſituate in the worſt part of the Alps, is generally poor and barren, except only in Minerals; extending all along the Dravus for the length of 100 Engliſh miles, and 47 in breadth, betwixt that River and the Mur; by the which it is bounded.

Places of principal note in it are, 1. S. Veit, or Sancti Viti, the chief Town of the Country, ſituate at the meeting of the Glan & the Wunics, two ſmall Rivers, adorned with a ſpacious Market-place and a beautiful Conduit. 2. Villach, ſeated on the Dravus, in a pleaſant Valley encompaſſed about with Rocks; the Houſes thereof adorned on the out-ſide with painted Stories, very delightful to behold. 3. Gurck, a ſmall Town, but an Epiſcopal See. 4. Clagenfurt, on the Lake called Wera-See, a well-fenced place, called anciently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolfſperg, upon the Lavand, ſo near to Stiermark, that it is by ſome reckoned for a Town thereof. 6. Lavamundt, on the ſame Border, an Epiſcopal See, ſituate at the Influx of that River into the Dravus. 7. Freiſach, a Town of much antiquity, ſeated on the Oleza. 8. Spittal, &c. The Story and Succeſſion of the Dukes hereof, before the uniting of it to the Houſe of Auſtria (this Province and Carniola making but one Eſtate between them) we ſhall ſee anon.

4. CARNIOLA, by the Dutch called Krain, is environed with Sclavonia Eaſt, Friuli Weſt, Carinthia and part of Stiermark North, and Iſtria South. It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt, (extended along the River Savus) 120 Italian miles, and about 76 in breadth. The Alps here being lower and leſs cold and rocky than more towards the Weſt, maketh it to be the more rich both in Corn and Wine, and other the productions of nature, than it would be otherwiſe.

The chief Towns are, 1. Newmarkt. 2. Eſling. 3. Marſpurg. 4. Pogoneck, and 5. Saxenfelt, all upon the Savus, which, ariſing in this Country, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falleth into the Danow. 6. Laibach, ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name; by Ptolomy called Pamportus, but by Pliny Nauportus, famous in old Mythology for the tranſport of the Ship called Argo, wherein Jaſon and his Comrades brought the Golden Fleece: who coming out of Pontus, or the Euxine Sea, took their courſe up the Danow, ſo into the Savus, then into this Town; hence carried their Ship over land into the Adriatick, and from thence ſailed into Greece, where they firſt began the undertaking. 7. Goritz, called anciently Noreia, or ſeated in the place where Noreia ſtood, is ſituate on the River Liſonzo, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A Town of ſo much note, that anciently it was an Earldom, and in the diviſion of the Eſtate of Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (to whom it formerly belonged) was given to Albert his ſecond Son, with the ſtyle and Title of Earl of Goritz; continuing in his Houſe till the year 1500. when, on the death of Leonard the laſt Earl hereof, it deſcended upon Maximilian the firſt, as next Heir unto it; whoſe Succeſſors, not only in the Eſtates of Auſtria, but the Empire alſo, do ſtill retain the Title of Earls of Goritz in their uſual Style.

The firſt Inhabitants of both theſe Provinces of Krain and Karnten, were the Garni of Pliny and other Ancients, who made them part of Venetia, the Tenth Region of Italy; but afterwards, in the diſtribution of the Roman Provinces, they were caſt into Noricum, and made a Member of the Dioceſe of the Weſtern Illyricum, but ſubject, or ſubordinate rather, to the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy. From them not only the Alps adjoyning had the name of Carnice, but theſe two Countries had the names by which now they go. They were united a long time in the perſons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the firſt mentioned upon good record was Henry, Son to Berchthold, a Nobleman of Bavaria, in the time of the Emperour Otho the third, by him advanced unto this Honour and Eſtate; diſpoſed of in ſucceeding times at the will of the Emperours, and given from one Family unto another, as their fancies ſerved them; not fixed in any Houſe, till it came to Henry the Son of Engelbert, Preſident or Præfect of Iſtria: in which Family it continued under this Henry, and his Brother Engelbert, Vlric the firſt, Henry the ſecond, Herman, and Vlric the ſecond, the laſt Prince hereof, who, by his Marriage with Agnes, Siſter and Heir of Otho the ſecond, Duke of Meran, added that Eſtate to his former Patrimony. But being old, and without Children, he ſold his whole Eſtate to Ottacar, King of Bohemia and Duke of Auſtria; by whom theſe Countries were ſurrendred unto Rodolphus of Habſpurg, on the concluſion of the Peace which was made between them. And although Rodolphus gave Carinthia to Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (in right of whoſe Daughter Elizabeth Albert of Son of Rodolph was poſſeſſed of Auſtria;) yet on the death of Henry the Son of Mainard without Iſſue-male, it fell (according to the Contract) unto Albert the Short, younger Son of Albert, and Grandchild of Rodolphus; continuing ever ſince in that Family, though not always in the chief Houſe of the Dukes of Auſtria.

The ſtrange and obſervable Ceremonies with which the Archdukes of Auſtria are acknowledged Dukes of Carin- Carinthia take here out of Munſter. In the Meadows adjoining to the Town of S. Veit, a certain Country-man, to whom that office by inheritance belongeth, ſitteth on a Marble-ſtone there being, holding in his right hand a Cow with a black Calf, and in his left hand a Mare as lean as a Rake. Then cometh the new Duke attired in a plain ruſtick Habit, his Courtiers attending him in their richeſt Apparel: at whoſe approach the Country-man above mentioned demandeth, What is he that ſo majeſtically cometh hitherward? And the people anſwer, that it is the future Duke. He again asketh, whether he be a juſt Judge, and one that will maintain the liberty of the Country, and ſincerity of the Religion. The people anſwer, He will. Then he asketh, by what right he will diſplace him of his Marble-ſeat. To whom the Steward of the new Duke's Houſe replieth, He ſhall give thee 60 pence in Silver, the Cattel now ſtanding by thee, the Clothes which he hath at this time on, and thy Houſe ſhall ever be free from Tax and Tribute. The fellow upon this taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuff on the ear, ſetteth him on the Marble-ſtone, and taking away the Cattel departeth. This done, the new Duke goeth to S. Veit's Church, and having done his Devotions, putteth off his ruſtick weeds, and dreſſeth himſelf in Clothes befitting a Prince: for ſuch after their Ceremonies he is acknowledged.

The Arms of theſe Dukes were Argent, 3 Lions Leopards Sable.

5. TYROL is bounded on the Eaſt with Friuli and Marca Trevigiana, by the interpoſing of which, or ſome parts thereof, disjoined from Carniola; on the Weſt with the Griſons and ſome part of Switzerland, on the North with Bavaria, and on the South with Lombardy. It is extended over the greateſt part of the Alpes Rhaticæ, and ſome part of the Juliæ; yet intermixt with many rich and fruitful Vallies, thoſe eſpecially which lie on the banks of the Inn and the River of Adiſe. Nor are the Hills ſo void of profit unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good ſtore of Metalls digged out of them, eſpecially of Braſs and Silver; which laſt have yielded to the Archduke 230000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of moſt note are, 1 Oenipons, or Inſpruck, ſo called from a Bridg on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the ſecond Branch of Auſtria, deſcended from Ferdinand the ſecond Son of the Emperour Ferdinand; the Houſe of Gratz iſſuing from Charles the third Son of that Emperour. Moſt memorable for the haſty Flight of Charles the 5. upon the news that D. Maurice, whom he had lately made Elector of Saxony, was coming againſt him with his Forces, which ſo terrified him, that he fled away by Torch-light with ſome of his followers; the reſidue of his Court, (moſt of which were perſons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the black Guard and the Skullery. The Town hath been many times the Reſidence of the Dukes of Auſtria; who have here a very Royal and magnificent Palace. And, to ſay truth, the Town deſerveth to be ſo honoured; amongſt pleaſant Meadows, ſpacious Corn-fields and ſhady Mountains ſweetly ſeated: the Houſes fairly built of ſtone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here ſettled for all the Country, and provided of a gallant Armory. 2 Trent, (Tridentum it is called in Latine) ſituate in the Confines of Germany and Italy; for which cauſe the Inhabitants ſpeak both Languages: built on the banks of the River Atheſis, or Adiſe; honoured with an Epiſcopal See; but made more famous by the Council which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, An. 1545, againſt the Lutherans. It was for 22 years together before their meeting daſhed by one Pope, and animated by another; advanced by Charles the fifth upon worldly Policies, and for as wordly Policies retarded by the Court of Rome: for 18 years after this firſt Convention of it, at ſundry times aſſembled, ſuſpended, and diſſolved: and finally, when fixed here ſeriouſly by Pope Pius the fourth, Anno 1562, managed with ſo much art & cunning by the Papal party, that nothing was determin'd among the Prelates but what had been formerly reſolved on in the Roman Conclave, and certified accordingly by eſpecial Poſts; occaſioning that moſt bitter Jeſt of one of the Hungarian Biſhops who was preſent at it, that the Holy Ghoſt was ſent unto them in a Cloak bag from Rome. The effects of which Council, ſo artificially carried on by the ſtrength of wit, I cannot better deſcribe than in the words of the Hiſtory of it, which are as followeth. "This Council, deſired and procured "by godly men, to re-unite the Church which began to be "divided, hath ſo eſtabliſhed the Schiſm, and made the "parties ſo obſtinate, that the Diſcords are irreconcilable; "and being managed by Princes for Reformation of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, hath cauſed the greateſt Deformation that ever was ſince Chriſtianity did begin; and "hoped for by the Biſhops themſelves to regain the Epiſcopal Authority, for the moſt part uſurped by the Pope, "hath made them loſe it altogether, bringing them into "greater ſervitude: on the contrary, feared and avoided "by the See of Rome, as a potent means to moderate the "exorbitant power thereof, mounted from ſmall beginnings, by divers degrees, to an unlimited exceſs; it hath "ſo eſtabliſhed and confirmed the ſame over that part "which remained ſubject unto it, that it was never ſo "great nor ſoundly rooted. So far the words of the Hiſtory. The next of note is, 3 Falkenſtein, remarkable for Mines of Braſs; as 4 Hall upon the Inn for Saltwiches, and 5 Schwas, for the richer Mines of Silver. 6 Malk, near the head of the River Atheſis. 7 Pollen, upon the borders of Italy, by the people thereof called Bolgiano, and Bolſano. 8 Tyrol, an ancient Caſtle, the firſt Seat of the Earls or Governours hereof, and giving name for that reaſon to the Country adjoining. 9 Meran, neighbouring the old Caſtle of Tyrol, which gave the Title of Dukes to a Branch of the Caroline Race, deſcended from Rathboldus, a baſe Son of the Emperour Arnulph, poſſeſſed of many large Eſtates in theſe Alpine Countries, now appertaining to the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria. From one of which Dukes, called Otho of Meran, married to Beatrix, Heir of the County of Burgundy, the Earls of Burgundy (ſince that time) do derive themſelves.

The Earls hereof were at the firſt no other than Provincial Officers: when made Proprietaries, I am yet to ſeek. The firſt of whom we have any certainty was Mainard, Earl of Tyrol and Goritz, who died in the year 1258, leaving his Earldoms to that Mainard who by Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis was infeoffed with the Dukedom of Karnten. But Henry the ſecond Son of this laſt Mainard dying without Iſſue-male, his Daughter Margaret by the conſent of all her people, ſettled her Eſtate therein on the Sons of Albert called the Short; which continues ever ſince in the Houſe of Auſtria, though ſometimes made the Portion and inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the firſt it was given in Apennage to his ſecond Son Ferdinand, ſirnamed of Inſpruck for that reaſon, who, by marrying with Philippina, a Burger's Daughter of Augsburg, ſo diſpleaſed his Brethren, that, to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her, it was finally agreed upon amongſt them all, that Tyrol ſhould not deſcend upon his Children of that Venter. In purſuance whereof, after his deceaſe, Tyrol fell to the Houſe of Gratz; his eldeſt Son Charles being made Marqueſs of Burgh, and Andrew his youngeſt Cardinal of Brixia. Who were the old Inhabitants of the Roman Auſtria we have ſeen already. The old Inhabitants of the other part are ſuppoſed to be the Quadi, in that part which lieth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni, in thoſe parts which are next Moravia: who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Boiarians, won from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhætia, and ſo much of Noricum as lieth betwixt the Inn and the Ens, leaving the reſt to the Avares, who poſſeſſed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted alſo from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire, as we ſhall ſhew more fully when we come to our deſcription of Hungary.

But theſe Boiarians being conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avares driven out of Pannonia by Charlemaigne, both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the ſubduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppoſe whom, and keep in peace and ſafety theſe remoter parts, ſome Guardians, or Lords-Marchers, were appointed by the Kings and Emperors of Germany, with the Title of Marqueſſes of Oſtreich; at firſt officiary only, but at laſt hereditary; made ſo by the Emperour Henry the firſt, who gave this Province to one Leopold, ſirnamed the Illuſtrious, the Son of Henry Earl of Bamberg, of the Houſe of Schwaben, and therewithall the Title of Marqueſs, Anno 980. This Marquiſate was by Frederick Barbaroſſa raiſed to a Dukedom 1158; Henry being the firſt Duke, whoſe Nephew Leopold took Richard the firſt of England priſoner, in his return from Paleſtine; for whoſe Ranſom he had ſo much money, that with it he bought Stiermark, together with the Counties of Neoburg and Lintz, and walled Vienna. His Son Fredericus, ſirnamed the Warlike, was made King of Auſtria by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1225. Eleven years he continued in this Dignity; at the end of which he was ſpoiled of his Royal Ornaments by the ſame hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperour's Summons, unto whom for ſome Outrages he had been complain'd of. Finally, he died in the year 1246, diſcomfited and ſlain in Battel by the King of Hungary. Leaving no Iſſue of his body, this Eſtate of right ſhould have deſcended on Frederick, Son of Hermannus, Marqueſs of Baden, and of Gertude his Wife, the Niece of this Frederick the Warlike by his Brother Henry, who was afterwards beheaded at Naples by Charles of Valois, Anno 1268. But Ottacar, Son of Primiſlaus King of Bohemia, pretending to it in the right of Margaret his Wife, one of the Siſters of the ſaid Frederick the Warlike, by a ſtrong hand poſſeſſed himſelf of the Dukedom of Auſtria, which he increaſed by the addition of Carinthia & Trevigiana; all which he held, together with the Kingdom of Bohemia, till the year 1278, in which he was vanquiſhed and ſlain by Rodolphus of Habſpurg, not long before advanced to the German Empire. Rodolphus thus poſſeſſed of theſe great Eſtates, conferred them on Albertus his eldeſt Son, who had then married Elizabeth, Daughter of Mainard Earl of Tyrol by Elizabeth (or Agnes) his Wife, the Daughter of Gertrude, and Siſter and ſole Heir at laſt of Frederick, ſo cruelly murthered at Naples, as before was ſaid. By means of which Marriage and Inveſtiture Albert was quietly poſſeſſed of the Dukedoms of Auſtria, Stiermark, Carinthia, Carniola, together with Marca Trevigiana; to which the Earldom of Tyrol and many other fair Eſtates in Schwaben and Alſatia were after added. By whom it was firſt raiſed to the Title of Archduke is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habſpurg, at the Inveſtiture of his Son Albert into theſe Eſtates, Anno 1298. Other to Charles the fourth, advancing to that Honour Rodolph the Ingenuous, Anno 1360. Some make it to be firſt given to Albert Duke hereof, in the year 1430: and others poſt it lower to the Marriage of Philip, Son of Maximilian of Auſtria and of the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princeſs of Spain. But by whomſoever given at firſt, it is now the conſtant and hereditary Title of all this Family: the ſucceſſive Princes whereof from the firſt Inveſtiture follow in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Marqueſſes, Dukes, Kings, and Arch-dukes of AUSTRIA.

926	1. Leopold of Bamberg, the firſt Marqueſs.
988	2. Henry, Son of Leopold.
1014	3. Albert, Son of Henry, ſirnamed the Victorious.
1056	4. Erneſtus, Son of Albert.
1075	5. Leopold II. Son of Erneſt, a Companion of Godfrey of Bouillon.
1096	6. Leopold III. Son of the ſecond, Founder of the Abby of Neuburg.
1116	7. Leopold IV. Son of the third, by his Half-brother Conrade the third, then Emperor of the Germans, made Duke of Bavaria.
1141	8. Henry II. Brother of Leopold, Marqueſs of Auſtria and Duke of Bavaria, made the firſt Duke of Auſtria by Frederick Barbaroſſa, Anno 1158, the whole Country betwixt the Inn and the Ens being added by the ſaid Emperor unto his Eſtate, on his relinquiſhing of Bavaria to the Duke of Saxony.
1177	9. Ludovick, Son of Henry, built Ens and Newſtat; of great note in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1193	10. Leopold V. Son of Ludovick, the irreconcilable enemy of our Richard the firſt, taken priſoner by him in his paſſage homewards, and put unto a grievous Ranſom, the Dukedom of Stiermark being purchaſed with a part thereof.
1230	11. Frederick the Warlike, Son of Leopold the 5. made King of Auſtria by the Emperor Frederick the ſecond; the laſt of the Male-iſſue of the Houſe of Bamberg.
1246	12. Ottacar, Son of Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, pretending the right of Margaret his Wife, Siſter of Frederick, poſſeſſed himſelf of this Eſtate, adding thereto the Countries of Carinthia and Carniola, which he bought of Ulrick the laſt Prince thereof; but was diſpoſſeſſed of all by Rodolph of Habſpurg.
1283	13. Albert II. Son of Rodolph of Habſpurg, by his Father made Duke of Auſtria, married Elizabeth, the lineal and direct Heir of Gertrude, one of the Nieces and (on the death of that Frederick who was ſlain at Naples) the next Heir of Frederick King and Duke of Auſtria; after his Father's death choſen Emperor alſo.
1308	14. Rodolph the Ingenuous, his other Brother ſharing with him in the Eſtate.
1315	15. Albert, ſirnamed the Short, the youngeſt and ſurviving Brother of Rodolph, ſucceeded in the whole Eſtate; a great advancer of this Houſe.
1358	16. Albert IV. Son of Albert the Short.
1365	17. Albert V. Son of Albert the fourth.
1404	18. Albert VI. Son of Albert the fifth, King of Hungary and Bohemia in right of Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Sigiſmund the King thereof.
1439	19. Ladiſlaus, Son of Albert & Elizabeth, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Duke of Auſtria.

1493 21. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, enriched his Houſe with the Marriage of the Heir of Burgundy.

1565 23. Maximilian II. Son of Ferdinand.

1577 24. Rodolphus III. Son of Maximilian the 2.

1612 25. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus.

1619 26. Ferdinand II. ſirnamed of Gratz, Son of Charles Duke of Auſtria, of the Houſe of Gratz, the youngeſt Son of Ferdinand the 1. (the numerous Off-ſpring of Maximilian the ſecond being all dead without Iſſue) ſucceeded in the Eſtates of Auſtria, choſen Emperour alſo, King of Hungary, and Bohemia, &c.

27. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the ſecond, now living, Anno 1648, Archduke of Auſtria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Emperor of the Germans.

The Arms of theſe Earls when diſtinct from the Houſe of Auſtria were Argent, an Eagle Sable, membred Or.

Thus have wee ſeen by what means and under what Princes all theſe Provinces, belonging unto ſeveral Lords, became united and incorporated into one Eſtate. Beſides which, there was added to it by Rodolph of Habſpurg all the Upper Elſaſs, the Caſtle and Territory of Habſpurg it ſelf, with many fair Eſtates amongſt the Switzers; by Albert the Short, the Country of Sungow; and by his Sons, the Advocateſhip of Friburg, or the Country of Briſgow. So that theſe Princes are undoubtedly the greateſt for Power & Patrimony of any in Germany; and would be of a great Revenue, if the ill neighbourhood of the Turks did not put them to continual Charges, and make the Borders of the Country to be thinly planted, and not very throughly manured. Howſoever, it is thought that they may yield yearly two millions of Crowns and upwards to the Archduke's Coffers.

The Arms of theſe Princes are Gules, a Feſs Argent; aſſumed by Marqueſs Leopold at the Siege of Acon or Ptolomais in the Holy Land, becauſe his whole Armour being covered with blood, his Belt only remained white. The Arms thereof in former times having been ſix Larks Or, in a Field Azure; ſuppoſed to have been taken by the firſt Marqueſſes, becauſe they poſſeſſed thoſe ſix Provinces, for defence of which the Tenth Legion, called Alauda, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we ſhall meet withal no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the North-ſide of Danubus and the Eaſt-ſide of the Rhene being almoſt as ſoon abandoned as conquered by them. So that in our ſurvey of theſe Northern Countries we are not like to find ſuch matter of Antiquity as we have before; but muſt content our ſelves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a leſſer continuance. In which we ſhall begin with thoſe Countries which lie on the other ſide of the Rhene, bordering on the Eſtates of Cleveland and the Biſhops-Electors; and ſo proceed on Eaſtward till we come to the fartheſt parts of Germany, and the Confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North, till we meet with Denmark, which is next of all to be conſidered.

VETERAVIA, or WETERAW, is bounded on the Weſt with the Biſhoprick of Colen, on the Eaſt with Frankenland, on the North with Haſſia and Weſtphalen, and on the South with the Lower Palatinate. It containeth a Combination of many ſmall Eſtates, which being joined in a common League for defence of each other in the preſervation of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, are called the Confederation of the Weteraw. The principal of the States which are thus confederated are the Earls of 1 Naſſau, 2 Hanaw, and 3 Solms, 4 the Lord of Lichteberg, and the Imperial Cities of 5 Friberg, and 6 Wetzelaer.

The County of NASSAU (for Fruitfulneſs of Soil and Delightſomneſs of ſituation not inferiour to moſt parts of France) lieth at the foot of the Mountains which divide Haſſia from Engern and Weſtphalen, anciently called Melibocus; a branch of the long ridge of Mountains which were called Abnobi. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Naſſau, ſituate on the South-ſide of the River Lon, not far from the fall of it into the Rhene; the firſt Seat and honourary Title of this famous Family, and ſtill in the poſſeſſion of the Princes of Orange, the firſt branch hereof. 2 Dillenburg, the uſual Seat of the Earls of Naſſau before their ſettling in the Low Countries; whence they are named the Earls of Naſſau of the Houſe of Dillenburg, to difference them from others of the ſame Family. 2 Catzenelbogen, which gives the Title of an Earl to the owners of it; in Latine Catti Meliboci, which ſhews the name to be compounded of the Catti, anciently poſſeſſed of theſe parts of Germany, and the mountainous parts of Melibocus, then inhabited by them. The poſſeſſion of this Town is much controverted between the Earls of Naſſau and the Lantgraves of Haſſia. Concerning which we are to know, that Henry, the ſecond Son of Lewis Lantgrave of Haſſia ſirnamed the Mild, married with Anne, Daughter and Heir of Philip the laſt Lord hereof, and by her had a Son called William, who died without Iſſue, and a Daughter named Elizabeth, married to John the third of Naſſau, to whom ſhe brought Henry and William Earls of Naſſau. Elizabeth, on the death of her Brother William laid claim to the Eſtate, as the next Heir to him; followed in the purſuit thereof by William Count of Naſſau, her ſurviving Son. Againſt which, William the 2. of Haſſia did alledge a grant or donation of it from his Couſin William, the Brother of Elizabeth, as before is ſaid, and having poſſeſſion of the Town, and the members of it, was made thereby the better able to defend his Title. But at the laſt it was ſurrendred by Count William of Naſſau, (Father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Lantgrave, in the time of Charles the fifth, for the ſum of 600000 Crowns: the Houſe of Naſſau notwithſtanding retaining it amongſt their Titles. 3 Herborn, a ſmall Univerſity, or Schola illuſtris, founded of late by the Earls of Naſſau; in which Piſcator was Divinity-Reader, and Alſtedius (both famous in their times) Profeſſor for the Arts and Sciences. 4 Idſtein, lying South to Catzenelbogen; and 5 Wisbad, directly South of Idſtein, betwixt that and the Maine: theſe being the Title and Poſſeſſions of the ſecond Branch of this Family. 6 Weilburg, on the Lon, not far from Wetzelaer; which gives Title to the third Branch of this Houſe, called the Earls of Naſſau in Sarbruck and Weilbrug.

As for the Princes of the Houſe of Naſſau, they are very ancient; Otho of Naſſau being made Earl of Gelderland in the year 1079. Another Otho of this Houſe, but proceeding from a different Branch of it, died An. 1190, the Founder of the preſent Family of the Princes of Orange, and of the Houſe Wisbad and Idſtein; out of which deſcended Adolphus Earl of Naſſau, choſen Emperor in the year 1292. By the Marriage of Engelbert, the ſeventh Earl of this Houſe of Dillenburg, with Mary Daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came firſt to be poſſeſſed of Eſtates in the Netherlands: and by the Marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A Family as much honoured for the perſonal Merit of the Princes of it as any other in Europe, of ſome of which although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the deſcription and ſtory of Provence) as Princes of Orange, yet take here the whole Succeſſion of them as

The Counts of NASSAU.

1. Otho, the Son of Henry, and Nephew of Walleran, the firſt Earl of Naſſau of this Line.

1190 2. Henry, the Son of Otho, who added Dillenburg, Wisbad and Idſtein, unto his Eſtate; Grandfather, by Waldradus his 2. Son, to Adolphus the Emperour.

3. Otho II. Son of Henry.

4. Henry II. Son of Otho the 2.

5. Otho III. Son of Henry the 2.

6. John, Son of Otho the 3.

1362 7. Engelbert, the Son of John by Mary his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair Eſtates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.

8. John II. Son of Engelbert, Earl of Naſſau, and Lord of Breda, &c.

1475 9. John III. Son of John the 2.

1516 10. Henry III. Son of John the 3. Knight of the Golden Fleece, married Claude of Chalons, Siſter of Philibert Prince of Orange.

1536. 11. Rene, Son of Henry the 3. and of Claude of Chalons, Succeſſour to his Uncle Philibert in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530, and to his Father in the Earldom of Naſſau, Anno 1536.

1544 12. William, the Son of John the 3. by Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter of Henry Lantgrave of Haſſia, and of Anne Daughter and Heir of Philip Earl of Catzenelbogen, reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran Doctrines.

1559 13. William II. Son of William the firſt, ſucceeded Prince of Orange by the Will of Rene his Couſin-german, An. 1544, and Earl of Naſſau by the death of his Father, Anno 1559. What elſe concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the firſt, beſides this William, had three other Sons: that is to ſay, Count John, the Father of William of Naſſau Governour of Weſt Frieſland; Count Ludowick, of great renown in the firſt Wars of the Netherlands, in the courſe whereof he loſt his life, Anno 1574; and Count Adolphus, ſlain in the ſame Wars alſo, Anno 1568.

1584 14. Philip, eldeſt Son of William the ſecond and of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Euren, ſucceeded Earl of Buren on the death of his Mother, An. 1551, Prince of Orange and Count of Naſſau by the death of his Father.

15. Maurice, Son of William the 2. and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Maurice Duke-Elector of Saxony, Prince of Orange and Count of Naſſau: at the age of 10 years made General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the ſpace of 37 years with great both courage and ſucceſs.

1625 16. Henry IV. Brother of Maurice, (but by another Venter, the Daughter of Gaſper Coligny, Admiral of France) Count of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, and General of the Forces of the States United.

1648 17. William III. Son of Henry the 4. Succeſſor to his Father in all his Honours and Commands. A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Naſſau are quarterly, 1 Azure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2 Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, Armed and Crowned Azure; 3 Gules, a Feſs Argent; and 4 Gules, two Leopards Or, Armed and Membred of the firſt.

Bordering on Franconia or Frankenland lieth the County of HANAW, ſo called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of moſt note are, 1 Hanaw it ſelf, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illuſtris alſo, and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they uſe to furniſh annually the Marts of Francford, diſtant from hence about ten Dutch miles. 2 Pfaffenhofen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembred in the Stories of ſucceeding times, for the great Defeat there given to the Duke of Lorrain, July 31. 1633. who loſt his whole Forces, all his Ordnance, Ammunition and Baggage, and, which was worſt of all, his Country; taken in part from him by the conquering Swedes, who followed him cloſe unto his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3 Lichteberg, which gives Title to a ſecond Branch of the Houſe of Hanaw, called the Lord of Lichteberg. A Family of good eſteem, ſince the time that Otho of Hanaw was ennobled with the Title of Earl thereof, which was about the year 1392. Before that, Princes of the Empire; and after that advanced unto great Fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Mintzeburg in the perſon of Philip the firſt Earl; of the County of Rheinick, in the perſon of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and, finally, of the Lordſhip and Eſtate of Lichteberg, accrewing to this Houſe by the Marriage of a third Philip, the youngeſt Son of Reinard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Ludovick Lord of Lichteberg; the Title and poſſeſſion of the ſecond Branch of the Houſe of Hanaw, called Lords of Lichteberg and Hoſchenſtein, and Earls of Bitſch: this laſt being an Eſtate in Lorrain accrewing to them by the Marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the Houſe of Lichteberg) with Margaret ſole Daughter and Heir of Ludovick the laſt Earl thereof.

Betwixt the Counties of Naſſau and Hanaw, on both ſides of the River Lon, lies the Earldom of SOLMS; the firſt Earl whereof (of whom there is any good Conſtat) was Henry, honoured with this Title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial, made before that time, I muſt conclude them to be ancienter than the date aforeſaid; though that be ſufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the Marriage of Conrade, the ninth from Henry, firſt with Elizabeth, one of the Daughters of William of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, and after with the Widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of ſuch authority amongſt the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and Suffrage in the Council of the States General: there ſettled at the preſent in their greateſt honour, eſpecially ſince the Marriage age of Henry of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, with a Daughter of Earl Conrade by his ſecond Wife, the Mother of William of Naſſau, now Prince of Orange, and Husband to the Princeſs Mary, the eldeſt Daughter of Great Britain. But beſides their Eſtates there, they are poſſeſſed in this Tract of 1. Braunfeltz, which gives Title to the firſt Branch of the Houſe of Solms; 2. Croneberg, the poſſeſſion of the ſecond Branch of this Family; and 3. Solms, on the North-ſide of the Lon, the Root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation, the firſt is Friburg, called for diſtinction ſake Friburg in Weteraw, to difference it from another Town of that name in Briſgow; ſituate in the middle of delicious and moſt fruitful fields, and memorable for the ſtout reſiſtance which it made to Adolphus of Naſſau, at that time Emperour; who, when he could not get it by force or Famine, obtained it by Fraud, and put to death no leſs than 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Caſtle. So hated he was for that bloudy fact, that he was ſhortly after deprived of the Empire, and ſlain in fight by Albert of Auſtria, his Competitor. The ſecond of the two is Wetzelaer, ſeated on the Lon, where it meets with the Dille, which riſing near Dillenburg, a Town of the Earl of Naſſau's, doth here loſe its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friburg and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common Liberties, and the Religion publickly profeſſed amongſt them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvin's Platform.

FRANCONIA, or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Upper Palatinate and part of Voitland, on the Weſt with the Confederates of Weteraw and part of the Rhene, on the North with Haſſia and Thuringia, on the South with the Palatinate of the Rhene and ſome part of Schwaben. So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whoſe poſſeſſion it was when they were firſt known unto the Romans; the Reſidence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province appropriating the name unto it. Called alſo Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France, which lay more towards the Weſt. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the preſent, comprehending ſo much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the ſame ſide of the Rhene; ſince ſubdued from it, and made a Province of it ſelf in theſe later Ages.

The Country, on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Foreſts, and environed almoſt with Mountains, part of the old Hercynian Wolds, is within pleaſant, plain and fruitful, ſufficiently plentifull both of Corn and Wines, but abundantly well ſtored with Rape and Lycoras, and yielding good Paſture for Cattel. So that we compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coorſe Liſt; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a Canvaſs Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it are, 1. The Maine, or Mœnus, which, running through the midſt of it, is received into the Rhene below Francfort. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoyning French had the name of Salii, and Conrade, Emperour of the Germans, the ſirname of Salicus. 3. Radiantia. 4. Sinna. 5. Tubero. 6. Altus, &c.

The people of it are ingenious, patient of labour, ſtrong of body, and very induſtrious, not ſuffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what ſort ſoever. The offſpring of the ancient French, who, having over-maſtered Gaul and the parts adjoining, left here the ſeminary of their ſtrength, and a ſtock of their ancient Princes; Marcomir, Brother of Pharamond the firſt King of the French, governing in theſe parts as Duke, and leaving the Eſtate and Title unto his Poſterity. The Catalogue of which Princes take in order thus.

The Princes of the FRANKS, and Dukes of FRANCONIA, of the old French Race.

A. Ch.
326	1. Genebaldus, the Son of Dagobert, deſcended from the old Regal ſtock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch Nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Franks, having ſubdued thoſe parts which lay towards the River Mœnus, became the firſt Prince of the Eaſtern Franks, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.
356	2. Dagobert, the Son of Genebaldus, who added the Diſtrict of Triers unto his Eſtates.
377	3. Clodovæus, or Ludovicus, the Son of Dagobert.
398	4. Marcomir, the Son of Clodovæus, who extended his Dominion Eaſtwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.
402	5. Pharamond, or Waramond, the Son of Marcomir, the firſt of this Line which took upon himſelf the Title of King of the French: on the aſſuming whereof (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Franconia, or Eaſt-France, with the Title of Duke, to his Brother Marcomir.
419	6. Marcomir, the Brother of Pharamond.
423	7. Prunmeſſer, by ſome called Priamus, the Son of Marcomir.
435	8. Genebaldus II. the Son of Prunmeſſer.
455	9. Sunno, the Son of Genebald the ſecond.
478	10. Clodomirus, or Luitomarus, the Son of Sunno.
515	11. Hygobaldus, the Son of Clodomir, who became a Chriſtian, and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Eſtates.
541	12. Helenus, by ſome called Hermericus, a Chriſtian alſo, who, paſſing over the Rhene, ſubdued that Tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorrain, which the Dutch call Weſt-reich.
571	13. Gotofridus, the Son of Helenus, a Chriſtian alſo, but not able to perſwade his people to the ſame belief.
595	14. Genebaldus III. the Son of Gotofride.
615	15. Clodomir II. the Son of Genebald the third.
638	16. Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the ſecond.
668	17. Clodovæus, or Clovis II. the Couſin-german of Heribert.
680	18. Gosbertus II. the Son of Clovis the ſecond.
706	19. Gosbertus II. the Son of Gosbert the firſt.
720	20. Hetavus, the Son of Gosbert the ſecond, the laſt Duke of Franconia of this Line. He dying without Iſſue-male, Anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the Great, according to a former Contract made between thoſe Princes.

And Charles no ſooner had it in his poſſeſſion, but he beſtowed the greateſt part of it on Burchard, the firſt Biſhop of Wurtzburg, Anno 752, made Biſhop of that City by Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, (the firſt Apoſtle of this People) but a year before. The Biſhops of Wurtzburg by this Grant were poſſeſſed hereof as long as any of the Houſe of Charles the Great did poſſeſs the Empire. But his poſterity failing in the perſon of Conrade, Anno 910. Otho the firſt (who next but one ſucceeded Conrade) inveſted Conrade, Husband to Luitgardis his Daughter, with this Country, giving him withal the Title of Duke of Franconia. Four Princes of this Houſe poſſeſſed it; that is to ſay, this Conrade, ſirnamed Salicus; and after him three Henries, Father, Son, and Nephew, ſucceſſively enjoying the Imperial Dignity, by the names of Henry the third, fourth, and fifth. This Henry, the laſt Prince of the male Line of Conrade, dying without Iſſue, Franconia fell to Frederick Barbaroſſa, Duke of Schwaben, as next Heir to Henry, by the Lady Agnes his Siſter, married to Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Schwaben, the Grandfather of Barbaroſſa. But that Houſe being alſo extinct in the perſon of Conradine, Anno 1268. and no one Heir pretending to the Rights thereof, the Biſhop of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former Grant; content to let ſome great ones have a part of the ſpoil, that he and his Succeſſors might enjoy the reſt. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Biſhops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Mentz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhene, (for anciently ſo much of the Palatinate and the Biſhoprick of Mentz as lay on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene were but parts of Frankenland) the Marqueſs of Onoldsbach, the Earls of Swartzenburg, Henneberg, and Hohenloe, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are ſeated in it. Thus every one did gather ſticks when the great Oak fell: the Title of the Duke of Franconia remaining notwithſtanding to the Biſhops of Wurtzburg,

1. WURTZBURG, the Metropolis of Franconia, the Seat and Reſidence of the Biſhop, who is Titular Duke hereof, is ſituate on the Maine or Mœnus, in a pleaſant Plain environed with Meadows, Gardens, and fruitful Mountains; and very well fenced with Walls, Trenches, Bulwarks, and other Arts of modern Fortification; well peopled, and for the moſt part handſomely and neatly built. Paſſing over the Bridge built of Free-ſtone on many large and ſpacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though ancient) Caſtle the ordinary dwelling of the Biſhop; and yet ſo ſtrong, that the many vain attempts of the Boors and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable, to which the ſituation of it on the top of an Hill added ſome advantage: but it proved otherwiſe when beſieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631. who after a ſhort, but ſtout, reſiſtence took it by aſſault. Other Towns of moſt note which belong to the Biſhops of Wurtzburg are, 2. Forcheim, where it is ſaid that Pontius Pilate was born. 3. Gemund at the meeting of the Maine and the Saltza, or Sala. 4. Bretta, upon the Saltza or Sala, not far from Gemund; remarkable enough, if for nothing elſe, for being the Birth-place of Melanchthon that renowned Scholar, the Phœnix of Germany, as ſome call him, and that not unfitly. 5. Cronach. 6. Staffelſtein. 7. Hockſtadt; of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Biſhop as chief Lord of all. He is called in the refined Latine of theſe times Herbipolitanus, but commonly Wurtziburgenſis; differing in ſound, but not in ſenſe: for Wurtzburg is no other than a Town of Worts, ſituate among Plants and Gardens, as before is ſaid; and Herbipolis, made up out of ſeveral languages, doth ſignifie no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Epiſcopal See was here firſt erected, and how the Biſhops hereof came to be entituled unto their Eſtates, hath been ſhewn already. The manner how the new Biſhop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the deceaſe of the former Biſhop, the Lord Elect, attended with a great train of horſe, is to make his entrance. As ſoon as he comes within the Gates, he alights off his horſe, and putteth off his Robes, and being attired in a poor and deſpicable Habit, begirt about with a Rope, bare-headed alſo and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Caſtel, Werthaim, and Rheineck, to S. Saviour's Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modeſtly replyeth, that, though unworthily, he is come to diſcharge the Office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviour's, and the Dukedom thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Which done, he putteth on his Epiſcopal Habit, ſayeth Maſs, and from thence paſſeth to the Caſtle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Biſhop thus inveſted, proceed we next unto the Burial of the dead: whoſe Body being imbowelled, is kept in the Chappel of his Caſtle, his Heart preſerved in a veſſel of Glaſs. The next day he is carried to the Monaſtery of Saint James, holding a Croſier-Staffe in his right hand, and a Sword in his left; buried with them the next day after in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenues of the Biſhop, they muſt needs be great; the Biſhop hereof in the time of Charles the fifth compounding for his peace with Albert, Marqueſs of Brandenburg, at the price of 220000 Crowns in ready money, and entring into a Bond to pay all his Debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly gueſs at the richneſs of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatneſs of his Intrado.

2. The ſecond great Lord of Franconie is the Biſhop of BAMBERG, a City ſeated on the Maine, not far from Wurtzburg, the little River Rednitz falling there into it: ſuppoſed by Mercator to be the Branionarium of Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the Hill Baba (ſo called from Baba, Daughter of Otho Duke of Saxony, and Wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is ſituate, the right name being B*abemberg*, (remember that B*erg* in Dutch ſignifieth an Hill) and contractedly B*amberg*. A City delectably ſeated amongſt Mountains and pleaſant Gardens, and in a ſoil exceeding fruitful of all neceſſaries, and yielding Lycoras in great plenty: the Birth-place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great Lights of Germany; and a See Epiſcopal, the Biſhop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, ſubject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair Towns and Territories in this Country; but much diminiſhed ſince the time of Charles the fifth: the Biſhop thereof then being given to Marqueſs Albert, above mentioned, for a Ceſſation from Arms, An. 1530. no leſs than 60 of his Lordſhips, (moſt of which fall unto the ſhare of the Marqueſs of Onoldsbach) beſides the Tutelage or Guardianſhip of his Wards and Clients. Of thoſe which are remaining in the hands of the Biſhops the principal are, 1. Bragingliac. 2. Schleiſtat.

3. The third great Lord to be conſidered is the Marqueſs of ONOLDSBACH, or Onsbach, who is Maſter of no ſmall part of this Country; but his Eſtate (as thoſe of the other German Princes) confuſed and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns. 1. Onoldsbach, or Onsbach, the uſual Reſidence of theſe Marqueſſes, and the Birth-place of moſt of their Children. 2. Hailbrun, on the edge of Wirtenberg, walled in about the year 1085, and honoured with ſome publick Schools there founded by Marqueſs George-Frederick, Anno 1482. 3. Pleinfelt, not far from Nurenberg. Such places as they hold in Voitland, we ſhall meet with there.

Theſe Marqueſſes are of the puiſſant Family of Brandenburg, by whom this fair Eſtate was wreſted from the female Heirs of Wolframius, the laſt Lord hereof. The firſt who did enjoy this Eſtate and Title was Marqueſs George-Frederick, the Son of Albert Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, called the Achilles of Germany, the Father of Albert the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, and of George the firſt Marqueſs of Jagerndorff, and the Grandfather of that Marqueſs Albert who in the days of Charles the fifth ſo haraſſed this Country. But his Male-iſſue by Caſimir his eldeſt Son failing in that Albert, Anno 1557 it returned to the Electoral Houſe; and by Sigiſmund, a late Elector, was given to Joachim-Erneſtus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatine was made chief Commander of their Forces Anno 1620. A charge in which it was ſuppoſed that he carried himſelf neither ſo faithfully nor ſo valiantly as he ſhould have done; being much condemned for ſuffering Spinola with his Army to paſs by unfought with, when he had all advantages that could be wiſhed for to impede his march: the greateſt part of the Palatinate being loſt immediately upon that Neglect, and by degrees the reſt of the United Princes either taken off from their Engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a conſtancy. To him ſucceeded his Son Chriſtian, now poſſeſſed hereof.

As for the other ſecular Princes which have any conſiderable Eſtates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenloe, Rheineck, Caſtel, Werthaim, Horpach, and Swartzenburg, together with the Lords of Limburg and Rheichinberg; all of them named ſo from the chief Town of their Eſtates, and all thoſe Towns enriched with ſome ſuitable Territory. Of theſe the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Caſtel, and Werthaim, are Homagers to the Biſhop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him ſervice at his Inthronization: the Earldom of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanaw, as was ſhewn before; and that of Henneberg moſt famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increaſe of Children (as many as there be days in the year) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his Wife, Siſter of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as moſt in Germany, fetching their Pedigree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greateſt power and Parentage amongſt them are the Earls of Swartzenburg, deriving themſelves from one Wittikindus, of the Houſe of Saxony, who fighting for his Country againſt the French, Anno 779, was taken Priſoner, carried into France, and there baptized, at the perſwaſion of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. Wittikindus, his Son and Succeſſor, being baptized, at the ſame time alſo by the name of Charles, was the firſt Earl of Swartzenburg, a Caſtle of his own building on the edge of Thuringia, An. 796, whoſe poſterity do ſtill hold the ſame, but much improved in their Eſtates by Marriages and other accruments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongſt them Gunther Earl of Swartzenburg, elected Emperour of the Romans againſt Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovick Marqueſs of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbiſhop of Mentz. By which laſt he was ſolemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquiſgrane) Anno 1349. But being unworthily poiſoned by his Competitor, though he died not of it, yet he was made ſo weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to ſurrender his pretenſions to his mortal enemy; receiving in compenſation for his charges 22000 marks in Silver, and ſome Towns in Thuringia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which ſhare amongſt them the remainders of Frankenland, the principal are, 1. Francford on the Maine, ſo called from its ſituation on the River Maine, to difference it from Francford in the Country of Brandenburg. It is divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridge of Stone: the leſſer part, ſituate on the right-hand ſhore of the River, being called Saxen-hauſen; the greater part, properly called Francford, ſeated on the other. Both are under one Magiſtrate, and both together make up a fair, rich, populous, and well-traded Town; of great both riches and repute by reaſon of the famous Marts here held in the midſt of Lent and September yearly, and the Election of the Emperour or King of the Romans, as occaſion is. The City is of a round form, compaſſed with a double Wall, beautified with ſome Walks wtihout the Town on the banks of the River, amongſt Vineyards, Meadows, and ſweet Groves: called thus as ſome ſay, from Francus the Son of Marcomir, ſuppoſed to be the Founder of it; or à Francorum vado, as the Foord of the Franks, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinfurt, on the Maine alſo, in a fruitful ſoil. 3. Rotenburg, on the River Tauber. 4. Winsheim. Here is alſo the Town of 5. Coburg, which belongeth to the Houſe of Saxony, and gives Title to ſome of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxon Coburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nurenberg, conceived by moſt to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperour Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Franconia, in regard moſt of the Eſtates and Poſſeſſions of it lie within this Country. Of which indeed they have ſo plentiful a ſhare, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony and his Confederates had driven Charles the fifth out of Germany, Marqueſs Albert, before mentioned, (whoſe Sword was his beſt Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no leſs than an hundred Villages belonging to it, ſeventy Mannors and Farmhouſes appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Woods; and after all this havock made of their Eſtate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crowns in Money, and ſix pieces of Ordnance. But being the City it ſelf ſeems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we ſhall there meet with it.

Amongſt theſe Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedom of Franconia at this time divided; the Title ſtill remaining in the Biſhop of Wurtzburg, and ſome part of the Country: but both the Country and the Title of Duke of Franconia not long ſince otherwiſe diſpoſed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg Anno 1631, as before is ſaid, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weymer, with the ſtyle and Title of Duke of Franconia. He was inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1633, the Nobility and Gentry of the Country doing Homage to him, and all the Magiſtrates and Officers of the ſeveral Cities taking the Oaths of Allegiance; the new Duke alſo making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their Rights and Privileges. In the Solemnities of which day, the firſt great Gun diſcharged in the way of triumph broke in the going off, without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Souldier only. An Omen that all this ſolemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the firſt giving fire unto it. And ſo accordingly it did: the Victory at Norlingen, which followed not long after this, putting the Biſhops once more into their poſſeſſions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry Title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here add the Catalogue of thoſe who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full Poſſeſſion of the Country.

Dukes of FRANCONIA of the Dutch or German Race.

974 1. Conradus, ſirnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the firſt, whoſe Daughter Luitgardis he had married: after the death of Henry the ſecond elected Emperour, by the name of Conrade the ſecond, Anno 1025.

1040 2. Henry, the Son of Conrade, Duke of Franconia and Emperour, by the name of Henry the third.

1056 3. Henry II. of Franconia, and IV. of the Empire.

1106 4. Henry III. of Franconia, and V. of the Empire.

1125 5. Frederick II. (ſirnamed Barbaroſſa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his Wife, the Siſter and next Heir of Henry, ſucceeded in the Empire after the death of Conrade the 3. his Uncle, Anno 1153.

1190 6. Frederick II. the ſecond Son of Barbaroſſa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.

7. Conrade II. Brother of Frederick the ſecond, ſucceeded in both Eſtates.

8. Philip, the younger Brother of Conrade, ſucceeded in both Dukedoms after his deceaſe; and on the death of Henry the ſixth his eldeſt Brother was elected Emperour, Anno 1198.

1207 9. Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, Son of the Emperour Henry the ſixth, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Naples and Scicily, An. 1202, and on the death of Otho the fourth, Anno 1212, was elected Emperour, of that name the ſecond.

1250 10. Conrade III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the Son of Frederick the third, whom he ſucceeded in all his Titles and Eſtates.

1254 11. Conradine, Son of Conrade the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben, diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by Manfred the baſe Brother of his Father, and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who ſucceeded Manfred in thoſe Kingdoms, Anno 1268. After whoſe death this Royal Houſe being quite extinguiſhed, the Biſhop of Wurtzburg did again reſume the Title of Duke of Franconia; content to let ſome of the greater Lords and Prelates, which lived near unto him, to ſhare in the poſſeſſion of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the Houſe of Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces Argent and Gules, crowned Or: which why it is now born by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, we ſhall tell you there.

11. WIRTENBERG, and 12. BADEN.

These I have joyned together, though diſtinct Eſtates, becauſe both of them were taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, erected both about one time, and lie very cloſe, in a round together: bounded upon the Eaſt and South with Schwaben properly ſo called, on the North with the Lower Palatinate, on the Weſt with the Rhene, and that part of Schawen which is called Briſgow, parted aſunder by the mountainous ridge of Hills called Swartzwald; Wirtenberg lying on the Eaſt-ſide thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And firſt for WIRTENBERG. The Air thereof is very healthy, neither two hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the Soil near Swartzenwald lying on the Weſt, and the Alps of Suevia on the South, of it ſelf barren and unprofitable; but in ſome places, by the induſtry of the Plough-man, made to yield good Corn. But in the middle parts thereof which lie towards the Neccar, little inferiour for fruitfulneſs both of Corn and Wine unto any in Germany; beſides ſome Silver-mines near Wiltberg, and about Puellach, a ſmall Town, ſuch abundance of Braſs, that the Foundations of the Houſes ſeem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Caſtle of Wirtenberg, the firſt Seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Intuergi, inhabiting the Dutch ſide of the Rhene; or from the Virthungi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Trebellius Gallio in the Life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg, being added for a termination, made it firſt Tuerginberg, or Virthun-berg, and after Wirtenberg.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Stutgard, the Duke's Seat, a fair, rich and populous Town, and the chief of the Dukedom; ſeated in a pleaſant and fruitful Plain not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of Wine almoſt incredible. 2. Tubingen, on both ſides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair Stone-bridge. A Town well built, ſituate in a very rich Soil, and finally adorned with an Univerſity here founded by Eberhard the firſt Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1477, in which Leonardus Fuchſius that great Herbaliſt and Reſtaurator of Phyſick, was once a Profeſſor of that Faculty. 3. Canſtat, upon the Neccar alſo; not far from which, on the top of an Hill, ſtands the old Caſtle of Wirtenberg before mentioned. 4. Wiltberg, of great eſteem for its Mines of Silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schorndorf, upon the Rheems, much reſorted to by reaſon of the hot Baths there; as is alſo 7. Newnburg, on the Entz. 8. Haidenheim, 9. Greiningen, 10. Marbach; of which little memorable. There are alſo within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial. As 1. Wimpſen, and 2. Hailbrun, on the Neccar. 3. Gepping, upon the River Vils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutling, on the Neccar alſo, made Imperial by Frederick the 2. Anno 1240, otherwiſe of no great note but for the Paper-mills, 6. Eſsling.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Charitni of Ptolemy, and part of the Intuergi ſpoken of before. It was made ſubject with the reſt of theſe parts to the Almans, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which diſmembred in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous War raiſed againſt him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practice of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the firſt Earl being Conrade, in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the ſaid Emperour Henry. Increaſed by the addition of the Earldom of Montbelgard and many other Accruments, it was made a Dukedom in the perſon of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. Anno 1495. The Earls and Dukes whereof follow thus in order.

The Earls and Dukes of WIRTENBERG.

1100 1. Conrade, the firſt Earl.

2. Vlric, Son of Conrade.

3. John, Son of Vlric.

4. Lewis, Son of John.

5. Henry, Son of Lewis.

6. Eberhard, Son of Henry.

7. Vlric II. Son of Eberhard.

8. Eberhard II. Son of Vlric.

1325 9. Vlric III. Son of Eberhard.

1344 10. Eberhard III. Son of Vlric.
1394 11. Vlric IV. Son of Eberhard.
12. Eberhard IV. Son of Vlric.
1417 13. Eberhard V. Son of Eberhard the 4. by his Marriage with Henrica, or Henrietta, Daughter of Henry Earl of Montbelgard, added that Earldom to his Houſe.
1419 14. Lewis or Ludowick II. Son of Eberhard the 5.
1456 15. Eberhard VI. Son of Lewis, Founder of the Univerſity of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the firſt, the firſt Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1495. He deceaſed without Iſſue, Anno 1496.
1496 16. Eberhard VII. Son of Vlric, the younger Brother of Lewis the 2. ſucceeded on the death of Eberhard his Couſin-german.
1504 17. Henry II. the Brother of Eberhard the 7.
1519 18. Vlric V. Son of Henry the 2. expulſed out of his Dukedom by Charles the 5. for the Sack of Reutling an Imperial City, and his Eſtate conferred on Ferdinand of Auſtria, the Brother of Charles: but, after 15 years Exile, reſtored to his Dukedom by Philip Lantgrave of Haſſia, he reformed Religion, and liberally endowed the Univerſity of Tubingen. 31.
1550 19. Chriſtopher, the Son of Vlric the 5. a follower of his Father's ſteps in Reformation of the Church, and Advancement of Learning.
1568 20. Ludovick or Lewis III. Son of Chriſtopher.
21. Frederick, Son of George Earl of Montbelgard, the Brother of Vlric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22. John-Frederick, Son of Frederick the firſt.
23. John-Eberhard, eldeſt Son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1648.

The Revenues of this Duke are ſuppoſed to be equal unto thoſe of the Electors Palatine, ſpoken of before; and were it not for the Silver-mines in Saxony, little inferiour to thoſe of that Duke. But for proviſions of War, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furniſhed. A main defect, conſidering the ill terms he ſtands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the Houſe of Wirtenberg there have been always open Wars or ſecret Jealouſies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Palie-barrie, Sable.

As for the Marquiſate of BADEN, lying on the Weſt-ſide of Schwartzenwald, betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the moſt part, except towards thoſe Wolds, a very pleaſant and fruitful Country, and much of the ſame nature with the reſt of Wirtenberg; ſo called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marqueſs keeps his Seat in Winter; and that ſo named from the hot Baths there, as is alſo Baden (called, for diſtinction ſake, the Upper Baden) amongſt the Switzers: in which reſpect the City of Bath in Somerſetſhire had anciently the name of Caer-Baden alſo. Of theſe Baths it is ſuppoſed that there are in this City at leaſt 300, profitable for many Diſeaſes and exulcerate Sores, drawing a great reſort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquiſate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marqueſſes of Baden. The next to this is, 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a ſecond Branch of this Houſe; called alſo ſometimes Marqueſſes of Durlach only, but commonly the Marqueſſes of Baden-Durlach, 3. Liebenzel, amongſt the Hills of Schwartzenwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Liechtenaw, remarkable for a Monaſtery, the Burial-place of the firſt Marqueſſes. 5. Gerſpach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Pfortzheim, adjoining to the Wood Hagenſcheis, a branch of Schwartzenwald. 7. Rotelen. 8. Badenwile, and 9. Suſenburg, all ſeated in the Upper Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Briſgow. 10. Milberg, beautified with a fair Caſtle, the uſual Retiring-place of theſe Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquiſate, being alſo taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the perſon of Herman of Verona in Italy, who deſerving well of the Emperour Henry the 5. was by him ſetled in ſome Lands about theſe parts, An. 1120. and after marrying with the Daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa created the firſt Marqueſs of Baden, Anno 1155. The Eſtate was after much encreaſed by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg and the Appendixes thereof in Schwaben, into which Chriſtopher the 13. Marqueſs hereof, ſucceeded on the death of his Couſin Philip, the laſt Earl of Hochberg: both Princes deſcending originally from two Brothers; of which the eldeſt, in right of the Lady Judith his Wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the ſecond, by the favour of the ſaid Frederick Barbaroſſa, was made Marqueſs of Baden. They were Maſters alſo of many fair Eſtates in the Lower Palatinate, which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there ſaid) are ſince poſſeſſed of. Other particulars ſhall be ſhewn (if occaſion be) in the enſuing Catalogue of 1155 1. Herman, the firſt Marqueſs.

2. Herman II.
3. Herman III.
4. Herman IV.
1281 5. Rodolph, Son of Herman the 4.
1295 6. Herman V. Son of Rodolph.
7. Rodolph II. Son of Herman the 5.
1356 8. Frederick, Son of Rodolph the 2.
9. Rodolph III. Son of Frederick.
1372 10. Bernard, Son of Rodolph the 3.
1431 11. James, Son of Bernard.
1453 12. Charles, Son of James, the firſt of theſe Marqueſſes which was poſſeſſed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, deſcending on this Houſe by Matild Wife of Rodolph the 2.
1475 13. Chriſtopher, Son of Charles, who after the death of Philip, the laſt Marqueſs of Hochberg, ſucceeded alſo in that Eſtate.
1515 14. Bernard, Son of Chriſtopher, his Brother Erneſt ſucceeding in that of Hochberg.
15. Chriſtopher II. Son of Bernard, his elder Brother Philibert, and Philip Son of Philibert, dying in the life of Bernard.
16. Edward, Son of Chriſtopher, intending the ſale of his Eſtates to pay his Debts, was forcibly deprived of all by
17. Erneſt, Marqueſs of Hochberg, Nephew of Erneſt above mentioned; who by that means not only preſerved the Marquiſate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it, and removed his ordinary Seat to Durlach.
18. George, Brother of Erneſt, Marqueſs of Baden and Hochberg.
19. Frederick, the Son of George, born in the year 1594. ſucceeded his Father in both Eſtates; and (if living) hath a Son called alſo Frederick, to enjoy them after his deceaſe.

13. NORTHGOIA, or the UPPER PALATINATE.

THE County of NORTHGOIA, ſo called from the Northern ſituation of it in regard of Bavaria, is ſometimes alſo called the Palatinate of Bavaria, becauſe anciently belonging to that Eſtate; but generally Ober Pfaltz, or the Upper Palatinate, to difference it from the Lower. It is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, on the Weſt with Franconia and part of Schwaben, on the North with Voitland, and on the South with Bavaria. The Country is for the moſt part ſomewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in Mines of Iron, which it yieldeth in moſt places, and ſome of Silver about Amberg; extended from Hainburg, to the edge of Bohemia, 80 miles; and from the Hill Fichtelberg in the edge of Voitland, to Weiſſenburg near the banks of the Danow, 68 miles.

Obſervable things touching this Province are chiefly two. Firſt, that out of the Mountain Fichtelberg, before mentioned ariſe 4 Rivers running to the four Quarters of the world; that is to ſay, the Egra towards the Eaſt, the Maine or Mœnus towards the Weſt, the Sala or Saliza to the North, and the Nab or Nabus to the South; ſo that it may be probably thought to be the higheſt Hill in all Germany. 2. That in the South-weſt corner of it are two little Rivers; the one called Altmul, which falleth into the Danow, and the other Rednitz, which runs into the Maine, and finally into the Rhene: between the Heads whereof, being not much diſtant, Charles the Great once began to dig a Chanel, for making a paſſage out of the Rhene into the Danow. In which work he employed many thouſand men. But partly by exceſs of Rain, and partly by ſome ſtrange Affrightments, (all which they did in the day being undone in the night) he was fain to deſiſt. Some parts of the intended Water-courſe are to be ſeen near Weiſſenburg, ſpoken of before, which ſtandeth in the middle-way betwixt both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electoral Family are, 1. Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commodity of Iron digged out of the neighbouring Hills, here faſhioned into all ſorts of Utenſils, and hence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoyning: but prouder of its Mines of Silver than thoſe veins of Iron, affording to the Prince's Coffers 60000 Crowns yearly. 2. Manheim, in the midſt of a fruitful Valley, near a Wood of Juniper. 3. Newburg, upon the River Swartzach, which gives Title to the ſecond Branch of the Palatine Houſe, called the Counts Palatines of Newberg, Competitors with the Marqueſs of Brandenburg for the whole Dukedom of Cleveland, and finally poſſeſſed of Gulick and the Members of it. 4. Kelhaim, at the meeting of the Danow with the River Altmul. 5. Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the River Regen; which paſſing thence falleth into the Danow near the City of Regenſpurg. 6. Caſtel, where the Electors for the moſt part hold their Reſidence, when they are in this Country. 7. Awerbach, 8. Saltzbach 9. Weiden, 10. Newmarckt.

There are alſo in this Country ſome Towns belonging to the Lantgraves of Luchtenberg, one of the four old Lantgraves of the Empire; the other three being Duringen, Heſſia, and Alſatia: ſo called from Luchtenberg, an old Caſtle, ſituate on a lofty Hill not far from Pfreimt, the chief Town and ordinary Seat of theſe Lantgraves, ſeated on the River Nab. 2. Gransfelden, 3. Schonhoffen, an ordinary paſs and baiting-place in the way from Prague to Nurenberg.

But the chief City of this Country, and perhaps of Germany, is Nurenberg it ſelf, Norimberga in the modern, but Norica in the ancient Latine. So called from an ancient Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, the Ruines of which are ſtill remaining, encompaſſed with a deep, but dry, Ditch, now of no uſe nor ornament to the City at all, but reverenced for its antiquity, as the Mother of Nurenberg. The Caſtle is ſaid by ſome to be built in the time of Claudius Cæſar. More probably by ſome of the Norici, who, terrified with the Invaſion of Attila, in the Decline and wane of the Roman Empire, relinquiſhed Bavaria, where before they dwelt, and paſſed over the Danow, there to provide themſelves of a ſafer dwelling. Conquered by the Bavarians, it became, together with their Conquerours, ſubject to the French. In the time of Lewis the 3. it became Imperial, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charles the 4. From that time it encreaſed ſo faſt both in Wealth and Beauty, that it is counted the greateſt and wealthieſt City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 Stone-bridges for paſſage over the Pegnitz, which runneth through it, 12 Conduits of freſh water, 13 common Baths, 116 publick Wells, and 128 Streets. Of Figure it is ſquare, environed with a triple Wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully ſtored with all ſorts of Ammunition. The Marqueſſes of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of it; an Office of great power and juriſdiction, but ſold for a good ſum of money by Frederick the 3. Anno 1414. Albert his Son, attempting to recover the old Office again, beſieged the Town, having no leſs than 17 Princes on his ſide, and yet could not force it. That for an Argument of its Strength. A proof and evidence of the Wealth of it we have ſeen before, in that great havock made of their Towns and Villages, and the great Ranſom they were put to by another Albert, ſpoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people, that this great Wealth is gotten by their indefatigable Induſtry; the Town being ſituate on a barren and ſandy Soil, and deſtitute of thoſe Helps which commonly a navigable River brings unto a City; thoſe great Poſſeſſions which belong unto the State hereof being gotten out of the fire, as the ſaying is, by their continual working of Iron and other Manufactures, occaſioning a reſort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germany.

Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate are, 1. Altorff, where the Nurenbergers founded an Univerſity for the ſtudy of all Arts and Sciences, Anno 1575. 2. Herſpruck, a great Town and well ſeated, belonging to the State of Nurenberg alſo. 3. Eyſtet, (Aichſtaidium in the Latine) an Epiſcopal See, ſituate on the River Altmul. 4. Weiſſenburg, an Imperial City on the Borders of Schwaben. Here was alſo in this Province (if not ſtill remaining) the Town Winsberg, memorable for the Piety and Gallantry of the Women of it. For the Town being beſieged and diſtreſſed by the Emperor Conrade the 3. for ſiding againſt him with the Guelphs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the ſurrendry of it, but that the Women might have leave to depart in ſafety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained, they took their Husbands on their backs, and ſo left the Town: and by that noble act ſo moved the affections and compaſſion of the angry Prince, that he ſpared the Town, and gave them all a general Pardon. It is ſaid by ſome, that the odious names of Guelphs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Chriſtendom was ſo long diſtracted) took their beginning at this Siege: the firſt ſo called from Guelpho, Brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whoſe cauſe they fought; the other from Veibling, (the French and Italians ſpeak it Gueibling) a Town of Frankenland, in which that Emperor was born. Another original hereof of we had in our deſcription of State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two, though neither certain.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Nariſci of Tacitus. Afterwards ſome of the Norici,fearful or grown impatient of the Roman yoke, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Caſtle called Caſtrum Noricum, where now ſtands Nurenberg. Overpowered by the Boii,and uniting with them in the name of Boiarians,they followed the fortunes of Bavaria,till the year 1339, when Ludovick the Emperour and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the Eſtate betwixt him and Rodolphus his elder Brother, relinquiſhed it for ever to the Houſe of the Palatines. Returned for the preſent to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom it was conferred, together with the Electoral Dignity, by the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. in recompence of the great ſervice done him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof in the War of Bohemia, and the great charge he had been at in the reduction of that Kingdom to the Houſe of Auſtria. How long it will continue thus is known only to God,the diſpoſer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines ſince, have been ſo fully Maſters of it, but that the Lantgrave of Luchtenberg and the City of Nurenberg have put in for a ſhare.

The Arms of which great and puiſſant Cityare Azure, an Harpye diſplayed,crowned,crined and armed,Or.

14. The Kingdom of BOHEMIA.

THE Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemia it ſelf with the incorporate Provinces,is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland and Hungary, on the Weſt with the Upper Palatinate, Voitland and Miſnia, on the North with the Marquiſate of Brandenburg and ſome part of Miſnia, and on the South with Auſtria and Bavaria. It comprehends in it, beſides Bohemia it ſelf, the Marquiſate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Sileſia and Luſatia.

1. BOHEMIA, encompaſſed about with woody Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the Eaſt with Moravia,on the Weſt with the Upper Palatinate and Voitland,on the North with Miſnia,Luſatia and ſome part of Sileſia, on the South with parts of Bavaria and Auſtria.

It took this namefrom the Bemi,or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof; by Pomponius Mela called Bemi, with the addition of Gens magna, by Tacitus Boiemi; who make them the Deſcendents of the Boii, a Galick Nation, who to avoid theServitude which they feared from Rome, put themſelves into theſe Hercynian Deſarts, which from them was named Boiohemum; by which name it occurreth in Velleius Paterculus. And though the Marcomanni firſt, and the Sclaves and Croatians afterwards, became Maſters of it, theſe laſt continuing their poſſeſſion to this very day: yet it retaineth ſtill the name of Bohemia amongſt the Latines, as that Behemerland amongſt the Dutch.

It contains in compaſs about 550 Engliſh miles. The Soil is indifferently fruitful, and enriched with Mines of all ſorts, except of Gold. Tin they have here in good plenty, the Mines whereof were firſt found out by a Corniſh-man, baniſhed out of England, Anno 1240. Which diſcovery of Tin in theſe parts was, as ſaith my Authour, in magnam jacturam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ,(he meaneth that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans:) and no marvel, for in thoſe times there was no Tin in all Europe but in England. Wood they have here good ſtore; and in ſome of their Foreſts a Beaſt called Lomie, which hath hanging under its neck a Bladder full of ſcalding water,with which, when ſhe is hunted, ſhe ſo tortureth the Dogs, that ſhe eaſily eſcapeth them. Of Corn they have ſufficient for their own uſe,and ſometimes alſo an increaſe above their ſpending,wherewith they do ſupply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate: but they want Wine, the Air being too ſharp and piercing to produce a good Vintage. And it yields alſo ſtore of Saffron, no-where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinal Drugs.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. the Elve, or Albis, having here its ſpring; of whoſe courſe we have ſpoken elſewhere. 2. Egra, 3. the Muldaw or Multavius, and 4. the Wartz; all three exonerating themſelves into the Elve, which runneth through the midſt of the Country.

The Kingdom is not (as others) divided into Counties and Provinces, but into the Territories and poſſeſſions of ſeveral Lords, who have great authority and command over their Vaſſals. The figure of the whole is in a manner Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way ſome 200 miles; containing in that compaſs 700 Cities, walled Towns and Caſtles, and (as ſome ſay) 30000 Villages. It is inhabited by a people given to Drink and Gluttony, and yet valiant and with ſenſe of Honour: this laſt belonging to the Nobility and Gentry, the former to the common people; but more moderately than moſt others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebeians, rich, poor, noble and baſe, uſe the Sclavonian Launguage, as their Mother-tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of was Ziſca, who, in eleven Battels fought in the defence of the Huſſites, againſt the Pope and his Confederates, prevailed and went away victorious: inſomuch that at his death he willed the Bohemians to flay him, and make a Drum of his Skin; perſuading himſelf, if they ſo did, they could never be overcome. A fancy like to that of Scipio African, and Vortimer K. of Britain, ſpoken of before. Scholars of moſt note, John Hus and Hierome of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here preached by S. Methodius, the firſt Biſhop and Apoſtle of the Moravians. An. 900 or thereabouts: Borzivoius, (whom ſome call Borſinous) the 8. Duke from Crocus, being the firſt Chriſtian Prince, and next to him Wenceſlaus the ſecond. This laſt was moſt cruelly murthered by Boleſlaus his Brother, at the inſtigation of Drahomira, an obſtinate Heathen, Mother to them both; who having cauſed the Miniſters of the Lord to be butchered, and their Bodies to lie unburied for two years together,was ſwallowed,Coach and all, in that very place where their Bodies lay. Confirmed by this Prodigy,they continued conſtant in the Faith to this very day; though not without the intermixture of ſome notable Vanity. For one Picardus, coming out of the Low-Countries, drew a great ſort of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the ſame ſtate of Perfection that Adam was in before his Fall; from wence they were called Picards and Adamites. They had no reſpect unto Marriage; yet could they not accompany any Woman, until the Man coming to Adam, ſaid unto him, Father Adam, I am inflamed towards this Woman; and Adam made anſwer, Increaſe and multiply. They lived in an Iſland which they called Paradiſe, and went ſtark naked: but they continued not long; for Ziſca hearing of them, entred their Fools Paradiſe, and put them all to the ſword, Anno 1416. But to make amends for this Folly, they were exceedingly zealous of the Reformation. For much about the ſame time the Works of Wickliff were brought into Bohemia by a certain Scholar who had been Student in the Univerſity of Oxford, which hapning into the hands of John Huſſe and Hierom of Prague, (two men whereof this Country doth much boaſt) wrought in their hearts a deſire to reform the Church. A buſineſs which they proſecuted ſo earneſtly, that being ſummoned to the Council of Conſtance, they were there condemned for Hereticks, and burnt, Anno 1414: yet had their Doctrine ſuch deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be deſtroyed by the Tyrannies of War or Perſecution (though both were uſed) to this very day; multitudes of the Profeſſors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Caliſtini and Sub utraque, as before is ſaid) but much both ſtrengthened and increaſed by the Writings of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and ſuch other of the Proteſtant Doctors as travelled in the Work of Reformation. But this increaſe of ſtrength and number proved their greateſt weakening. For growing inſolent upon the ſenſe of their ſtrength and power, they formed themſelves into a party, got many of the Romiſh Catholicks to adhere unto them, under colour of aſſerting their Civil Rights, and, in the heat of ſome diſputes, cauſed certain of the Emperour's Council to be thrown out of the Windows of the Council chamber; and finally, about the latter end of the Reign and Empire of Matthias, they broke out into open Arms. In the courſe whereof the Calvinians being of moſt power, and having got a King of their own Opinions, ſo diſobliged the Lutherans and more moderate Papiſts, who had concurred with them at the firſt, that being invaded on the one ſide with a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxony, and a Popiſh Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were in fine utterly ſuppreſt and made inconſiderable: the conquering and ſucceſsful Emperour (Ferdinand the 2.) taking this occaſion to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Budweiſs, (conceived to be the Marobudum of Ptolomy) a Town towards Auſtria. 1. Auſt, near the Head of the Elb. 3. Tabor, a ſtrong Town built by Ziſca, to be a Retreat for the Huſſites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Melnick, both upon the Elb. 6. Littomiſſel, an Epiſcopal See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pilſen, the laſt Town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialiſts in the late long War about that Crown: and then alſo was it betrayed to Count Tilly for a ſum of money, by ſome of the Souldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then abſent, and had ſo long defended it againſt the Enemy. 8. Elnbogen, much eſteemed for the hot medicinal Bathes; ſituate on the River Egra. 9. Egra, ſo called of the ſame River, on which (near to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is ſtrongly ſituate: a large, fair City, containing three miles in compaſs. Imperial once, but ſold by the Emperour Ludovicus Bavarus to John King of Bohemia, for 400000 marks of Silver: in compaſs leſs; for Sweetneſs of the place, Elegancy of the buildings, Pleaſantneſs of ſite, and Richneſs of ſoil, ſuperiour far to Prague it ſelf. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, ſituate in the midſt thereof, on the River Muldaw; conſiſting of four ſeveral Towns, each of which hath its ſeveral Cuſtoms, Laws, and Magiſtrates. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly Buildings, a ſpacious Market-place, and a ſtately Council-houſe. The ſecond, called the New Town, is ſeparated from the Old by a Ditch of great depth and wideneſs. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old by the River Muldaw, joined to it by a beautiful Bridge, conſiſting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the Hill Rachine, on the ſides of which are many fair and ſtately Houſes belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the ſtrong Caſtle of S. Wenceſlaus, (ſituate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings and the later Emperours have kept their Reſidence. The fourth Town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, & live according to their own Law. The whole City is rather large than fair, the Streets being in Winter very dirty, of ill ſmell in the Summer; the Buildings for the moſt part of Clay & Timber clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though encompaſſed with Walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open Town, (ſo poor and weak are the Defences;) inſomuch that whoſoever is maſter of the Field, will be maſter of the City alſo. And yet beſides the honour of being the Royal Seat, it hath alſo of long time been an Archbiſhop's See, and was by Charles the fourth, Emperour and King of Bohemia, made an Univerſity. Near unto this Town was fought that memorable Battel between the Duke of Bavaria and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond, with 50000 men, on the one ſide; and Frederick, newly elected King of Bohemia, which the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurn, and 30000 men, on the other ſide. It was fought on the eighth of November ſtylo novo, wherein (ſuch was the unſearchable will of God) the Victory fell unto the Imperialiſts: the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurn, and Saxon-Weimar, with divers others, being taken priſoners; the Bohemian Ordnance all ſurpriſed, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor, and King Frederick with the Queen compelled to flie unto Sileſia. A moſt lamentable and unfortunate Loſs, not to this people only, but to the whole cauſe of the Reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our obſervation, that this great Battel was fought upon a Sunday, the 8. of November, about the time of Morning-prayer; in the Goſpel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity-Sunday) is that famous paſſage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ ſunt CÆSARIS, i. e. Render unto Cæſar the things which are Cæſar's; which ſeemed to judge the Quarrel on the Emperour's ſide.

But whether of the two Pretendents had the juſter Cauſe, may beſt be ſeen by canvaſſing the Records of that State and Nation, (for the ſucceſs of War is no ſtanding Rule for meaſuring the Equity and Juſtice of the Cauſes of it:) by which it will be clearly ſeen, that ſince the erecting of that Kingdom by the Sclaves or Croatians, it hath been evermore diſpoſed at the will of the Emperour, or by Election of the States and People. But I intend not at the preſent to diſpute that Point, but only lay down the Story of the Kings and People, as in other places, ſince the firſt coming of the Sclavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Juſtinian; at what time they inhabited on the Banks of the Iſter, but no the farther ſide thereof, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, Imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good Succeſſes againſt that Empire, their name was taken up by the reſt of the Sarmatians of Europe; who, either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, paſſed on more Weſtward, and by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Germany which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Burgundians and Boiarians; but were then either quite forſaken, or but ill inhabited, by the drawing down of thoſe people to the Roman Provinces, which they better liked. They were divided at, or after, their coming thus far Weſt, into four main Bodies: that is to ſay, the Winithi, poſſeſſed of the (now) Marquiſates of Brandenburg, Miſnia, and Luſatia, as alſo of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Auſtria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, poſſeſſed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Sileſia; and finally the Bohemian Sclaves, confined within the limits of that Kingdom only. Under what form of Government they lived at their firſt coming hither, is not certainly known. But being ſetled in theſe Countries of Poland and Bohemia, it was not long before they were erected into ſeveral Kingdoms; occaſioned by the coming of a new Body of Sclaves, Croatians, and others of thoſe ſcattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechius, a great Prince amongſt them, who about the year 640, together with his Brother Leches, was baniſhed Croatia for a Murther. He being very acceptable to the Sclaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own original Extraction, one of the ſame Language, Laws or Cuſtoms that themſelves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief or ſupreme Governour, by whatſoever name he was called at firſt: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own Language do call themſelves Zechians. After his death, the State relapſed again into a confuſed Anarchy, till the year 670; at what time, not reſpecting the Progeny of Zechius, the Founder of their Commonwealth and firſt Eſtate, they faſtned upon Crocus, a man of good eſteem amongſt them, and elected him to be their Duke. Crocus vir juſtus, & magnæ apud Bohemos opinionis, Princeps electus eſt, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocus being dead, the Bohemians elected Libuſſa, his youngeſt Daughter; and of her Government ſoon wearied, they made choice of Primiſlaus for their Prince, and made him Husband to Libuſſa. A man taken from the Plough (as the Stories tell us) to eſpouſe the Princeſs: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suitors, that he (whoſoever he was,) before whom an Horſe purpoſely let looſe, did firſt make a ſtand, ſhould be the Husband of the Lady, and have the Government of the State. The Horſe firſt makes a ſtand before Primiſlaus, being then at Plough, (having perhaps ſome Mare in his Team;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. Theſe, with the other Dukes from the time of Crocus, the firſt Legiſlatour of the Bohemians, take in order thus.

The Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1. Crocus, the Law-giver or Lycurgus of Bohemia.

2. Libuſſa, youngeſt Daughter to Crocus, with Primiſlaus her Husband, (a ſecond Quinctius) Founder of Prague.

3. Neramiſlaus, Son of Primiſlaus and Libuſſa.

4. Mnatha, one of the Sons of Neramiſlaus, co-temporary with Charles the Great.

5. Voricius, Son of Mnatha.

9. Wenceſlaus.

7. Bela.

8. Naſtriccus, Son of Bela.

9. Borzivoius, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Bohemians, co-temporary with the Emperor Arnulph.

10. Sbitignæus, Son to Borzivoius.

11. Vladiſlaus, Brother to Sbitignæus.

12. Wenceſlaus II. ſirnamed the Saint, ſlain by his Brother Boleſlaus.

13. Boleſlaus, a wicked and ungodly Prince.

14. Boleſlaus II. Son of the former,, a great advancer of Chriſtianity amongſt his people.

15. Boleſlaus III. one of the Sons of Boleſlaus the ſecond.

16. Jaromir, Son to Boleſlaus the third.

17. Udalricus, Brother of Boleſlaus the third, and Uncle of Jaromir.

18. Prediſlaus, Son to Udalricus.

19. Sbitignæus II. Son to Prediſlaus.

1061 20. Vratiſlaus, Brother of Sbitignæus, whom, for his manifold deſerts, the Emperor Henry the 4. created the firſt King of Bohemia, Anno 1086. Whoſe Succeſſors take thus out of Bertholdus and Dubravius.

The Kings and Dukes of BOHEMIA.

A. C.

1086 1. Vratiſlaus, the Brother of Sbitignæus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Mentz created King.

2. Conrade, Brother to Vratiſlaus, notwithſtanding that his Brother had three Sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.

3. Breciſlaus, Son to Vratiſlaus, the two Sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians choſen Duke.

1100 4. Borivorius, the 4. Son of Breciſlaus, is choſen by the Bohemians, his eldeſt Brothers then all living.

1109 5. Sutopulcus, Couſin-german to Borivorius, by the conſent & favour of the people, depoſed Borivorius, and cauſed himſelf to be elected in his place.

6. Vladiſlaus II. Brother to Borivorius, preferred by the people to the Throne before Otho the Brother, and Henry the Son of Sutopulcus, the laſt Prince.

7. Sobeſlaus. Brother to Vladiſlaus, promoted to the State before the Son of Vladiſlaus.

1159 8. Vladiſlaus III. Son to Vladiſlaus the 2. (the four Sons of Sobeſlaus omitted) is choſen and crowned the ſecond King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperor; but depoſed by the States, becauſe he was not by them formerly elected, according to their Priviledges and Cuſtoms.

9. Uldericus, the third Son of Sobeſlaus, his elder Brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Vladiſlaus and his Son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force eſtabliſhed in the Throne.

10. Sobeſlaus II. ſecond Son of Sobeſlaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he alſo by the Bohemians.

11. Conrade, Grandchild to Otho, the Brother of Sutopulcus, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual War.

12. Wenceſlaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and Son of Otho aforeſaid, was preferred before many nearer the Succeſſion. Him Primiſlaus expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.

13. Henry, Biſhop of Prague, a Stranger to the Blood, was by a general conſent elected Duke.

14. Vladiſlaus IV. Brother to Primiſlaus, the Son of Wenceſlaus, being put by, ſucceeded Henry, and ſoon after reſigned.

1199 15. Primiſlaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was Brother to Vladiſlaus the 4.

1248 16. Ottocarus, notwithſtanding that Wenceſlaus his elder Brother had been crowned in his Father's life-time, was acknowledged King. He was ſlain in Battel by Rodolphus the Emperor, near the Marh, a River of Moravia, An. 1278.

1278 17. Wenceſlaus II. Son to Ottocarus.

1284 18. Wenceſlaus III. Son to Wenceſlaus the ſecond, the laſt of the Bohemian Princes of the maſculine race.

1304 19. Rodolphus, Son to the Emperor Albertus, is by the potency of his Father, and the election of the States, ſeated on the Throne, being otherwiſe a Stranger to the Blood-royal of Bohemia.

1305 20. Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the Son of Meinard Earl of Tyrol, and Husband to Anne, the ſecond Daughter of Wenceſlaus the 2. is choſen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxenburg. Finally, Henry was murthered by one of his Nephews.

1311 21. John, Earl of Luxenburg, Son to Henry the ſeventh Emperor, and Husband to Elizabeth, youngeſt Daughter to Wenceſlaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.

1346 22. Charles, Son to John, and Emperor, of that name the fourth, the Authour of the Golden Bull.

1362 23. Wenceſlaus IV. Emperor alſo, in whoſe time the Troubles of the Huſſites and the Valour of Ziſca was famous.

1418 24. Sigiſmund, Brother to Wenceſlaus, maketh himſelf King by force; and at his death commendeth Albertus Duke of Auſtria, the Husband of his Daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.

1437 25. Albertus, Duke of Auſtria, elected upon the commendation of Sigiſmund by the Bohemian Lords.

1440 26. Ladiſlaus, Son to Albert, who, being the Brother of two Siſters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States, as fitteſt to ſucceed him.

1458 27. George Pogibrachius, neither by Affinity or Conſanguinity of the blood, ſucceeded. And he, though he had three Sons, yet, for the benefit of his Country, adviſed the Nobles, after his death to elect their King from Poland.

1471 28. Ladiſlaus II. Son to Caſimire King of Poland, and to Elizabeth the younger Daughter of Albertus Duke of Auſtria, the Iſſue of Anne the elder Siſter ſtill living, elected King of Bohemia.

1516 29. Ludovicus, Son to Ladiſlaus, elected and crowned by the means of his Father, then living, King of Hungary alſo.

1526 30. Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, Brother to Charles the 5. and Husband to Anne, Siſter to Ludovicus, by his Letters reverſal acknowledged that he was choſen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of meer free will, according to the Liberties of that Kingdom.

1565 31. Maximilian, eldeſt Son of Ferdinand, was in his Father's life-time, and at his ſuit, elected King, Anno 1540, into which he actually ſucceeded on his Father's death.

1575 32. Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany, and the eldeſt Son to Maximilian, elected King.

1610 33. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint ſuit of them both nominated & appointed King of Bohemia by the general conſent of the States, during his Brother's life-time, viz. An. 1610, which nomination they both proteſt in their Letters reverſal ſhould not be to the prejudice of the Liberties and ancient Cuſtoms of that Kingdom.

1618 34. Ferdinand II. Archduke of Auſtria, and of the Houſe of Gretz, was by Matthias adopted for his Son, and declared Succeſſour to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cauſe, amongſt others, he was by the States rejected, in like caſe as Vladiſlaus the 3. had formerly been.

1621 36. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the 2. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick the Prince Elector alſo; after whoſe death he ſucceeded in this Kingdom both in right & fact; King of Hungary alſo, Archduke of Auſtria, and Emperour of Germany, now living, Anno 1648; more moderate in his Counſels than his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to Peace, (though honoured with a more ſignal Victory againſt the Swedes, in the Battel of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life) which the Concluſions made at Munſter are ſufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we have took a view of the reſt of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Hungary, on the Weſt with Bohemia, on the North with Sileſia, and on the South with the Lower Auſtria and the River Teya: fenced on the Weſt by the Woods & Mountains of Bohemia, parts of the Hercynian Foreſt; on the North, by ſome Spurs or Branches of it, called Aſciburgius by Ptolemy; on the two other ſides open like an Half-moon or Semicircle. It is the moſt fruitful place of Corn in all Germany, and hath no ſmall ſtore of Frankinſcence; which, contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a Tree, but out of the Earth; and that too (which adds much to the miracle, if Dubravius do report it rightly) in the ſhape and figure of thoſe parts which men and women do moſt endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni and part of the Quadi, againſt whom when M. Antoninus the Emperour made War, he had unawares run himſelf into ſuch a Streight, that his Army was environed with Mountains one way, and Enemies the other. To this (as Calamities ſeldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. The the Emperour, thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his Army a Legion of Chriſtians, (Melitens he calleth them) which by Prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperour ſendeth for them, deſiring them to make ſupplication for the Army: which they did, & God Almighty, that never turneth a deaf ear to the Prayers of his Servants, when they are either for his Glory, the Churches or their own good, ſcattered and vanquiſhed the Quadi with Thunder-ſhot and Artillery from Heaven, and refreſhed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleaſant Showr. This Miracle purchaſed to that Legion the ſirname of κεραυνοβόλος, i. e. the Thunderer, and induced the Emperour to honour men of that holy profeſſion, and to make an end of the Fourth Perſecution, An. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion: which coming from the Pen of an Heathen, as this Author was, is of more credit in a matter of ſuch concernment unto Chriſtianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Writer.

Places of moſt note herein are, 1. Olmuntz, on the River Mach (or Morava) the chief Town of the Country, and a ſmall Univerſity; near which, out of the Hill Odenburg bordering on Sileſia, ſpringeth the great River of Odera, whoſe Courſe we have before preſcribed. 2. Brin, on the River Swarta, the Seat of the ancient Marqueſſes. 3. Hradiſch, and 4. Cremſer, both upon the Marh or Morava. 5. Znaim, on the Teya. 6. Niclasberg, (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Auſtria. 7. Iglaw. 8. Newburg. 9. Weiskerchen. 10. Boſerleitz, of which little memorable. 11. Gradiſco, near to which (and in this place only) the Frankincenſe is found to grow in the ſhape and form beforementioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is ſaid) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi: after them that Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who, from their habitation on the River Morava, called themſelves Moravians, and the Country which they dwelt in by the name of Moravia, (the Dutch call it Merheren.) They were extended at that time over all the Lower Auſtria, to the banks of the Danow on the South, and as far as to the river Tibiſcus (overſpreading a great part of the Upper Hungary) towards the Eaſt. Governed at the firſt by their own Kings, the firſt whoſe name occurs being Raſlai, in the time of the Emperour Lewis the Godly; by him taken Priſoner, and his Realm made tributary to the Empire. After him ſucceeded Hermodurus, and then Suentopulcus; in whoſe time the Moravians and other Nations of the Sclaves received the Goſpel by the preaching of Cyrill and Methodius, two Græcian Doctors; officiating all Divine Services in the Sclavonian or vulgar Language. For which when they made ſuit to the Pope then being, to whoſe Authority (as Patriarch of the Weſtern Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delaid the buſineſs; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, ſaying theſe words, Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum, & omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which Miracle their Suit was granted at the laſt, and a Letter Decretal ſent unto that effect from Pope John the 8. to Suentopulcus (or Sfentopulcher, as ſome call him) above mentioned. A Priviledge by them enjoyed full 200 years, and then reverſed by Gregory 7. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his Letters to Vratiſlaus the firſt King of Bohemia, An. 1086.

But to return unto the Story Suantobegius, Son to Suentopulcus, ſucceeded next, depoſed, or rather beaten out of his Country, by the Emperour Arnulph, for denying the accuſtomed Tribute. A Prince of great ſpirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him not Moravia only, according to the largeſt limits, but Sileſia, Bohemia, and Polonia alſo. Arnulph not able otherwiſe to effect his purpoſe, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whoſe help the Moravian was ſubdued, and his Kingdom ſhattered into pieces; ſeiſed on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations, and finally reduced to the preſent Limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquiſate, (but by whom we find not;) one of the Marqueſſes hereof being Jodocus Barbatus, elected Emperour Anno 1410. After whoſe death, Sigiſmund, his next Heir, Emperour and King of Bohemia, gave it to his Son-in-law Albert Duke of Auſtria, Anno 1417, who in the end ſucceeded him in all his Eſtates; ſince which time it hath always gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membred and lingued of the ſame.

3. SILESIA, (or SCHLESIE, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the Eaſt with Poland, on the Weſt with Luſatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompaſſed with Mountains, except towards the North, which lets in a ſharp Air upon them: the mid-land part being full of Woods, but withal of Minerals.

Chief Cities are, 1. Jagendorff, or Jegerndorff, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenburg, commonly called the Marqueſs of Jagendorff. The Lands and Eſtates in his poſſeſſion were firſt given by Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia to George ſirnamed Pius, one of the Sons of Frederick of Brandenburg, the firſt Marqueſs of Onſpach of this Houſe, for the many good ſervices he had done him. But his poſterity being extinct, they fell to the ſaid John Georgius, Brother to Sigiſmund the Elector; proſcribed by Ferdinand the ſecond, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeneſs in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian Wars. 2. Munſterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the poſterity of George Pogebrachius, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this Honour and a fair Eſtate. 3. Glatz, or Gletz, the laſt Town of Bohemia which held out for Frederick the Elector againſt that Emperour. 4. Glogaw, a ſtrong Town on the River Oder 5. Neiſſe, on a River ſo named, an Epiſcopal See. 6. Breſlaw, in Latine Vratiſlavia, ſo called from Vratiſlaus the Founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province, by whoſe procurement it was made an Epiſcopal See, Anno 970. or thereabouts. It is ſituate on the River Oder, all the water wherein could not ſave it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341, but it was preſently re-edified with a fair Free-ſtone, and is now one of the prettieſt Cities (for the bigneſs of it) in all Germany; fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even Streets, the chief of the Country. 7. Oppelen, on the Oder alſo, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricadoed by the River on the Weſt, and on the Eaſt with good Out-works, ſtrong Walls, and a fair Caſtle. 8. Straten. 9. Reichenbach, both made Towns of War ſince the beginning of the Bohemian Troubles.

There are alſo within this Province the two Seigniouries of Prignitz and Croſſen, ſo called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenburg; the two Dukedoms of Oſwitz and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland, as alſo the Dukedom of Ligaitz and Sweinitz, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns: of which two laſt, Sweinitz is in the immediate poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia; and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Marſigni, Burii, Gothini, and ſome part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eaſtern parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, it was laid unto the Dukedom or Kingdom of Poland, continuing a part thereof till the time of Vladiſlaus the 2. who, being driven out of his Kingdom by his Brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbaroſſa eſtated in this Country, to be held under the Soveraignty of the King of Poland. Divided betwixt his 3 Sons, & afterwards ſubdivided amongſt their poſterities, according to the ill Cuſtom of Germany, it became broke at laſt into fourteen Dukedoms, of 1 Breſlaw, 2 Oppelen, 3 Ratibor, 4 Ceſſin, 5 Bethom, 6 Glogaw, 7 Sagan, 8 Olentz, 9 Steinaw, 10 Falkenburg, 11 Sweinitz, 12 Lignitz, 13 Oſwitz, and 14 Zator. Of all which only the two laſt do remain to Poland; the five firſt being made ſubject to the Kings of Bohemia by Wenceſlaus the ſecond, the five next by King John of Luxemburg; Lignitz remaining in the poſſeſſion of a Proprietary Duke, (as before was ſaid) and Sweinitz given to Charles the fourth, Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Teſtament of Boleſlaus the laſt Duke: all Sileſia by this means (except the Dukedoms of Oſwitz, and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia, of which it is rather an incorporate than ſubject Province.

4. LVSATIA, by the Dutch called Lauſnitz, is bounded on the Eaſt with Sileſia, on the Weſt with Miſnia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Bohemia. The Country is rough and full of Woods, yet plentiful enough of Corn, and of ſuch Fruits as naturally ariſe out of the Earth: ſo populous and thick ſet with People, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot as good as any in Germany. Moſt commonly it is divided into the Higher, and the Lower; the firſt confining on Bohemia, the laſt on Brandenburg.

Places of moſt note in the Higher Lauſnitz are, 1 Bautzen, (Badiſſinum the Latins call it) the firſt Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony, when he took upon him the execution of the Emperor's Bann againſt Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly choſen King of Bohemia. The poor Prince in the mean time was in an ill condition, the Saxon being the Head of the Lutheran, and the Bavarian chief of the Popiſh party, arming both againſt him. So jealous are both ſides of the active and reſtleſs Calvinian ſpirit, as to leave no means unaſſaied for the ſuppreſſing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the moſt part is the Seat of the Governour for the King of Bohemia. 2 Gorlitz upon the River Neiſſe, which gave the Title of Duke to John Brother of Sigiſmund, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth, the laſt Dutcheſs of Luxemburg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and ſtrongly fortified; founded about the year 1231, and not long after ſo conſumed by a mercileſs Fire, Anno 1301, ut ne unica domus remanſerit, as my Author hath it, that there was not one Houſe left of the old foundation. But it was preſently re-built in a more beautiful form, and of more ſtrong materials, than before it was, both publick and private Buildings very neat and elegant. 3 Zittaw, on the ſame River, bordering on Bohemia. 4 Lawben, 5 Lubben, 6 Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they make up thoſe ſix Towns which are confederate together in a ſtricter League for the mutual Defence and preſervation, but under the Protection, and with the approbation, of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the Lower Luſatia there is 7 Spremberg, ſo named from its ſituation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Country, and in ancient times was called Suevus; ſuppoſed by ſome (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elve. 8 Tribel, upon the Neiſſe. 9 Cotthuſe, upon the Spre, or Suevus, which, together with ſome parts of the Lower Luſatia, belongs unto the Marqueſſes of Brandenburg.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof are by ſome ſuppoſed (and but ſuppoſed) to be the Benones of Tacitus; in the partition of theſe parts of Germany amongſt the Sclaves, made ſubject to the Winithi, or Venedi, the greateſt and moſt ſpreading Nation of all theſe People. When and by whom firſt made a Marquiſate, I am not able to ſay for certain; but ſure I am, it hath been very much given to the change of Maſters. It had firſt a Marqueſs of its own; Conrade the Marqueſs hereof, who died in the year 1156. being by the Emperour Henry the fifth made Marqueſs of Miſnia, added it unto that Eſtate: and it remained for ſome time united to it. After, being ſeiſed on by the Poles, it was ſold to Frederick the ſecond, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg; who, keeping Cotthuſe and ſome other Towns bordering next upon him in his own poſſeſſion, ſurrendred the reſt on Compoſition to George King of Bohemia, claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the fourth to Vratiſlaus the firſt Bohemian King, An. 1087. A Grant on which no Poſſeſſion followed, unleſs it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes of it, holding it afterwards of that Crown as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought theſe four Provinces into the power and poſſeſſion of the Kings of Bohemia, remaining ſtill diſtinct in their Laws and Governments, (as ſeveral limbs of the great Body of the Sclaves made up into one Eſtate) though joined together in the perſon of one ſupream Governour, who is ſeverally admitted & acknowledged by each Province diſtinctly for it ſelf, and not by any one of them in the name of the reſt. Out of all which ſo laid together there may be raiſed the ſumm of three millions of Crowns yearly for the King's Revenues, towards the defrayment of all Charges.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lion with a forked Tail Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms was firſt given by Frederick Barbaroſſa to Vladiſlaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good Service he had done him at the Siege of Millain. And though Vladiſlaus was depoſed by the States of that Kingdom, becauſe never formally and legally elected by them; yet his Succeſſors keep thoſe Arms to this very day.

THE Marquiſate of BRANDENBURG is bounded on the Eaſt with the Kingdom of Poland, on the Weſt with the Dukedom of Saxony, on the North with Pomerania and part of Mecklenburg, and on the South with Miſnia, Luſatia and Sileſia. So called from Brandenburg, the chief Town of it, and becauſe once the Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended farther towards Poland by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of thoſe potent people.

The Country containeth in length from Eaſt to Weſt 60 Dutch, or 240 Italian, miles, and is of correſpondent breadth; the whole compaſs making up 540 miles of the laſt accompt. Within which Tract are comprehended 55 Cities and walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Mark-Steten, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them) 38 Caſtles or Manſion-houſes of Noblemen, 17 Monaſteries, and 10 Parks well ſtored with Beaſts of game: the Country otherwiſe (conſidering the Extent thereof) being but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of neceſſaries, excepting Corn, of which theſe North-Eaſt Countries afford very great plenty.

The Religion of this Country is for the moſt part according to the form and Doctrine of Luther; firſt introduced and authorized by Marqueſs Joachim the firſt. In which eſtate it continued till the Breach betwixt George-William, the Father of the preſent Elector, and the Palatine of Newburg. At which time the Palatine, having married a Daughter of Bavaria, the moſt potent Prince of the Popiſh party, reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome, the better to aſſure himſelf of the Aid of Spain: and this Elector, having married a Siſter of Frederick the fifth, Prince Elector Palatine, the moſt potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himſelf to be of that Party and Opinion, the better to aſſure himſelf to the Aid of Holland, Anno 1614. But when on the perſuaſions of his Wife, he ſet out an Edict for ſuppreſſing the Lutheran Forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only, throughout his Dominions, (which was the year 1615) the people of this Marquiſate roſe in Arms againſt him: the difference being thus compoſed, that the Lutheran Forms only ſhould be uſed in all the Churches of the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people; and that the Marquiſate ſhould have the exerciſe of his new Religion for himſelf, his Lady, and thoſe of their Opinion, in his private Chappels.

1. ALTE-MARCK, or the OLD MARCK, ſo called becauſe the ancient Marches of the Empire againſt the Sclaves, lieth betwixt Lunenburg and the Elb, with which it is bounded on the Eaſt. The chief Towns thereof are, 1. Tangermund, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanagra or Angra; honoured ſometimes with the Reſidence of Charles the fourth. 2. Steindall, the chief of theſe Old Marches. 3. Soltwedel, divided into two Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gardeleben, fortified with the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſhimp. 5. Oſterburg, 6. Senhuſen, ſaid by ſome, but falſly, to be ſo called from the Senones, whom they would make the old Inhabitants of this Country, (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7. Werb, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE MARCHES, or UPPER-MARCK, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Oder, the Towns of moſt note are, 1. Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Templers in former times. 2. Spandaw, upon the Spre, a well-fortified piece. 3. Oderburg, called ſo from that River, on which it is ſituate; remarkable for a ſtrong Caſtle built by Marqueſs Albert the ſecond, at which all Paſſengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenburg, on the River Havel, a Biſhop's See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence: by ſome ſaid to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gauls; more truly by one Brando, a Prince of the Franconians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Francford (for diſtinction ſake) named ad Oderam, on which River it is ſituate; the Soil about it being ſo plentifully ſtored with Corn and Wines, that it is not eaſie to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be moſt enamoured of it. It was made an Univerſity by Marqueſs Joachim Anno 1506. and is alſo a flouriſhing and famous Empory, though not comparable to that of the other Francford, ſeated on the Maine. 6. Berlin, the ordinary Reſidence of the Marqueſs, ſituate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which, riſing in Luſatia, falleth into the Albis. 7. Havelburg, on the River Havel, a Biſhop's See, who acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg for his Metropolitan.

3. In the NEW MARCK, extending from the Oder to the Borders of Poland, and called ſo becauſe laſt conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire; there is Cuſtrin, a very ſtrong and defenſible Town, ſeated on the two Rivers Warta and Odera, fortified with great charge by John, Son of Marqueſs Joachim, and by him intended for his Seat. 2. Sunnenberg, and 3. Landſperg, both upon the Warta. 4. Soldin, in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenburg, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with as ſtrong a Caſtle, towards Pomerania.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country were the Varini and Naithones, part of the great Nation of the Suevians; and after them the Helvoldi, Wilini Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winithi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, who poſſeſſed themſelves of it. But Brandenburg being wone from them by the Emperor Henry the firſt, An. 920, (at what time the Goſpel was firſt preached amongſt them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigefride Earl of Rengelheim, (eldeſt Son of Theodorick, the ſecond Earl of Oldenburg,) a valiant Gentleman with the Title of Marqueſs, or Lord Marcher, Anno 927, upon condition that he ſhould defend thoſe Marches (the Old Mark, as they now call it) againſt the Sclaves. Theſe Marqueſſes were at the firſt Officiary, at the appointment of the Emperor, and to him accomptable. Sigard, the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the firſt Elector of theſe Marqueſſes, and Udo, the ſecond of that name, and third from Sigard, the laſt that held this Honour at the Emperor's pleaſure; that Dignity after his deceaſe being made hereditary in the perſon of Albert of Anhalt, ſirnamed Urſus, by the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his Border by the Conqueſt and extermination of the Sclaves, cauſed the unpeopled Country to be planted with new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zeland, Flanders, and thoſe parts of the Netherlands. The Houſe of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria to Lewis his Son; by Otho, the Brother of that Lewis, ſold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth; by Sigiſmund, the Son of Charles, to Jodocus Marqueſs of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the ſaid Sigiſmund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nurenberg, in recompence of his faithful ſervice in the Wars of Hungary & Bohemia. In his poſterity it remaineth, but much increaſed in power and Patrimony, by the additions of the Dukedom of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Marquiſates of Onſpach and Jagerndorff, the Earldom of Marck in Weſtphalen, now a part of Cleveland, the Lordſhips of Prignitz and Croſſen in Sileſia, the Towns of Hoff and Culmbach in Voitland, with the County of Raphin, and the Town & Territory of Cottbuſe in the Lower Luſatia. Inſomuch that this is now the moſt powerful Family in all Germany. The Marqueſſes hereof from Sigefride to Albert, the Son of Urſe, &c. follow in this order.

The Marqueſſes of BRANDENBURG.

A. C.

927 1. Sigefride, Earl of Rengelheim, made the firſt Marqueſs of this Border by the Emperor Henry the firſt.

2. Gero, by the appointment of Otho the firſt.

3. Bruno, Earl of Within, created Marqueſs hereof by the ſame Emperor.

4. Hugh, the Son of Bruno, by the favour of Otho the third.

5. Sigard, the Brother of Hugh, made by the ſame Emperor the firſt Marqueſs-Elector.

6. Theodorick, the Son of Sigard, outed of his Command by Miſtivoius, one of the Princes, of the Sclaves named Obotriti.

7. Udo, Earl of Soltwedel, (the Sclaves being beaten and expulſed) created Marqueſs and Elector by Conrade the 2.

8. Udo II. Son of Udo the firſt, proſcribed by Henry the 4. for joining with Rodolph Duke of Schwaben in the War againſt him.

9. Primiſlaus, King of the Obotriti, (the Anceſtor of the Dukes of Mecklenburg) was advanced unto theſe Honors by the ſaid Henry the 4. and held them unto his death. After which it was made hereditary by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, in the perſon of Albert of Anhalt, the Son of Vrſus.

1152 10. Albert of Anhalt, the firſt hereditary Marqueſs, Father of Bernard, who was created Elector and Duke of Saxony, in the place of Henry ſirnamed the Lion, by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa.

11. Otho, Son of Albert.
12. Otho II. Son of Otho the 1.
13. Albert II. Brother of Otho the 2.
14. John, Son of Albert the 2.
15. John II. Son of John the 1.
16. Conrade, Brother of John the 2.
17. John III. Son of Conrade.
18. Waldemar, Brother of John the 3.
19. Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the 1. by his Brother Henry.
20. John IV. Brother of Waldemar the ſecond, the laſt Marqueſs of the Houſe of Anhalt; the Marquiſate eſcheating to the Empire for want of Heirs.
21. Lewis of Bavaria, created Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg by his Father, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, on the ſaid eſcheat.
22. Lewis II. ſirnamed the Roman, on the Reſignation of his Brother ſucceeded in the Marquiſate and Electoral Dignity.
23. Otho, Brother to Lewis the firſt and ſecond, who ſold the Marquiſate & Electoral Dignity to Charles the fourth.
24. Wenceſlaus, Son of Charles the fourth, afterwards King of Bohemia and Emperor of the Romans.
25. Sigiſmund, Brother of Wenceſlaus, Emperor of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxenburg; who ſold this Marquiſate to Jodocus Marqueſs of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the ſame on 1417 26. Frederick, Burgrave of Nurenberg, ſolemnly inveſted herein at the Council of Conſtance Anno 1414, for which Inveſtiture he paid unto the Emperor the ſum of 400000 Crowns.

1440 27. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the firſt, to whom the Emperor Frederick the 3. gave the Dukedom of Pomeren.

1470 28. Albert, Brother of Frederick the 2. called the Achilles of Germany, relinquiſhed to Bugeſlaus the 10. the poſſeſſion of Pomeren; but his Succeſſors ever ſince have retained the Title, and kept on foot their Pretenſions to it. From Frederick his ſecond Son deſcended Albert the firſt Duke of Pruſſia, Frederick the firſt Marqueſs of Onſpach, George the firſt Marqueſs Jagerndorff, and Albert called the Alcibiades of Germany, who ſo haraſſed Franconia in the days of Charles the fifth.

1486 29. John, Son of Albert.

1499 30. Joachim, Son of John, who founded the Univerſity of Franceford, Anno 1506, and authorized the Reformation of Religion in his time begun.

1535 31. Joachim II. Son of Joachim the firſt.

1571 32. John-George, Son of Joachim the ſecond.

33. Joachim-Frederick, Son of John George.
34. John-Sigiſmund, Son of Joachim-Frederick, who had to Wife the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albert-Frederick the ſecond Duke of Pruſſia, and of Mary-Eleanor his Wife, eldeſt Daughter of William the firſt, Duke of Cleve.

1620 35. George-William, Son of John Sigiſmund and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Earldoms of Mark and Ravenſpurg, and the Seigniory of Ravenſtein; which he poſſeſſed a while, divided with his Couſin Wolfgangus Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen the younger Siſter of Mary-Eleanor. But falling out about their Partage, the Palatine of Newburg called in the Spaniard, and the Father of this Marqueſs, in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands, to aſſert their Titles. After the death of Bugeſlaus the laſt Duke of Pomerania, he was to have ſucceeded alſo in that Eſtate, then poſſeſſed by the Swede. Of the Agreement made between them, and the great Accrument thereby following to the Houſe of Brandenburg, we ſhall ſpeak more there.

36. Frederick-William, Son of George-William, now Elector of Brandenburg.

The Territories of this Family are the greateſt, as before is ſaid, of any in Germany, but a great part thereof is very barren, and his Subjects in thoſe parts as poor as the Country; much of his new acceſſions yielding little but the Titles only. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony: his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmoſt to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the Receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

The Arms hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membred and beaked Or.

POMERANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Pruſſia, from which it is parted by the River Weyſſel, or Viſtula; on the Weſt with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Bartze; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coaſt hereof for the ſpace of 200 Engliſh miles; and on the South with the Marquiſate of Brandenburg. So named from the Pomortzi, or Pomerani, a Nation of the Sclaves, to whoſe ſhare it fell; or from the ſituation of it on the Sea-ſhore, as the word in the Sclavonian doth ſeem to import.

The Country is for the moſt part plain, abundantly fruitful in Corn, carried hence to Dantzick, and tranſported thence to all parts of Chriſtendom in their times of Scarcity: yielding alſo good ſtore of Paſturage, and great Herds of Cattel; with plenty of Butter, Cheeſe, Honey, and ſome reaſonable quantities of Flax. Populous it is, and thoſe people of very ſtrong Conſtitution, as living under a ſharp and piercing Air. The whole is divided into the Continent, and the Iſlands: the Continent into 1. the Vpper Pomeren, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Bartze to the River Oder; 2. the Lower, reaching from the Oder to that part hereof which is now called 3. Pomerellia, betwixt it and Pruſſia, ſubject of long time to the Crown of Poland, and there we ſhall hear farther of it.

Chief places in the VPPER are, 1. Bardt, at the mouth of the River Bartze, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the Seat of the Dukes of this hithermoſt Pomeren. 2. Wolgaſt, upon the Baltick Sea, over againſt the Iſle of Vſedom, the chief of this part of Pomeren, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomeren Wolgaſt; the firſt Town taken in by Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous War for relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straelſund, a Town of great Trading and much reſort, ſeated upon the ſame Sea alſo, oppoſite to the Iſle of Rugen; a Town of great name in the courſe of the German Wars. 4. Gripſwald, on the ſame Sea, betwixt Wolgaſt and Straelſund, made an Univerſity, Anno 1456. 5. Anclam, upon the River Pone. 6. Tribbeſees, ſituate on a Lake out of which the ſaid River hath its courſe.

Then in the LOWER Pomeren there is 7. Camin, an Epiſcopal See, ſituate on the Baltick Shore, over againſt the Iſle of Wollin. 8. Colberg, a ſtrong Town on the ſame Shore alſo, at the fall of the Perſant into the Sea. 9. Coſslin, the laſt Sea-Town of this Tract lying towards Pruſſia. 10. Stargard, on the Ina, more within the Land; as is alſo 11. Griffenberg upon the Rega, and 12. Stetin on the Oder, once a poor Fiſher-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; riſing to this greatneſs (after the embracing of Chriſtianity) by the fall of Vineta, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all theſe parts; the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomeren-Stetin, as for diſtinction ſake they are uſed to call them.

The Iſlands hereunto pertaining are thoſe of Rugen, Wollin, Uſedom, touched upon before, but now more punctually to be handled. That of moſt note is RUGEN, over againſt Straelſund, from which it is divided only by a narrow Streight, in length ſeven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; ſo that the Compaſs of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or 100 Italian miles; and yet it was once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309, by the force of an outragious Tempeſt, a great part of it, lying towards the South-eaſt, as far as to the Iſle of Ruden, (then conjunct hereto) was torn away, and ſunk ſo deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greateſt Ships that be ſail over it. The Iſland is plentiful of Corn, the Granary of Straelſund, as they call it commonly; and reaſonably well ſtored with Cattel; full of Bays, Creeks, and winding Shores, with many and vaſt Promontories thruſting into the Sea, which gives them great increaſe of Fiſhing. Anciently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugiſlaus and Barnimus Dukes of Pomeren: continuing ever ſince part of that Eſtate. The chief Town of it is called Bergen, ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, but not containing above 400 Families. Others of leſs note and eſtimation being, 2. Sagart. 3. Wick. 4. Bingſt, &c. ſmall Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the beſt they have. And yet ſo populous is the Iſland, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men, if there be occaſion.

The ſecond of the three, in repute and bigneſs, is that of WOLLIN, ſituate over againſt Camin: ſo called from Wollin the chief Town, (Julinum it is called in Latine) made an Epiſcopal See by Wartiſlaus, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of this Nation, which on the Sackage of this City was removed to Camin. A Town which once ſo flouriſhed in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Conſtantinople: the Ruſſians, Danes, Saxons, Vandals, &c. having here their particular Streets. But being miſerably ſacked by Waldemar King of Denmark, Anno 1170. moſt of the Trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, ſince which time it never could come near its former glories.

The laſt in reputation is that of USEDOM, ſeated betwixt both, not far from Wolgaſt; ſo called from Uſedom the chief Town in it, of which little obſervable. All three were the Habitation of the ancient Rugii, who under Odoacer K. of the Heruli ſubverted the Weſtern Empire, conquered Italy, and made themſelves Maſters of it, till ſubdued by the Goths. Thoſe which remained in theſe Iſlands became after ſubject to the Sclaves, and had once Kings of their own: the firſt whoſe name occurs in Story being Crito, the Son of Ratze, a puiſſant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holſtein, Ditmarſh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and enlarged by Adolph the 2. Earl of Holſtein, by ſome eſteemed the Founder of it. But his Iſſue-male failing in the year 1326, it fell by Compact made between them to the Dukes of Pomeren, to whom theſe Iſlands ever ſince have continued ſubject.

And as for Pomeren it ſelf, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned, the Reudigni, Longi-Nani, and Longi-Diduni, with parts of the Peruli and Burgundians; into whoſe void rooms the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winithi (the moſt potent Nation of the Sclaves) did in fine ſucceed, extending their Dominions to the Banks of the Viſtula, the parts adjoining unto which, to difference them from Pomeren, were called Pomerellia. But that part of it being given by Meſtovinus, the laſt Prince thereof, dying without Iſſue, Anno 1295, to Primiſlaus Duke of Poland; the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania became confined within narrower Bounds than at firſt they had. The firſt Prince of it whom we meet with on good record was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian Family, Anno 933, whoſe Grandſon Suantiborus commanded over all this Tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his Sons, Bugiſlaus, who had Pomerellia, retained the Language and old Cuſtoms of the Sclavonians; Wartiſlaus, who poſſeſſed the reſidue, conformed himſelf to the Laws and Language of the Saxons: the Country being by that means accounted for a part of Germany, and added unto the Empire an account thereof in the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, by whom Bugiſlaus and Caſimir, Sons of Wartiſlaus were made Princes of the Empire and Dukes of Pomeren. The Eſtate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugiſlaus and Otho, Sons of Barnimus the firſt, and the Houſe of Otho failing in the perſon of Otho the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperor Frederick the third to Frederick the 2. Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, the cauſe of much Contention amongſt theſe Marqueſſes and the other Houſe of the Dukes of Pomeren, which was thus agreed at laſt, That both Princes ſhould continue the Arms and Title, the Poſſeſſion of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomeren, on the failing of whoſe Iſſue-male it ſhould deſcend upon the Heirs of the Houſe of Brandenburg. The Succeſſion of theſe Princes followeth in this order.

The Dukes of POMERANIA.

	1. Wartiſlaus, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Pomeranians, Baptized by Otho Biſhop of Bamberg, Anno 1124.
1128	2. Bugiſlaus, Son of Wartiſlaus, created by Frederick Barbaroſſa the firſt Duke of Pomeren.
1188	3. Bugiſlaus II. Son of Bugiſlaus, planted the void parts of Pomeren with Saxon Colonies.
1222	4. Barnimus, Son of Bugiſlaus the ſecond: after whoſe death Pomeren was divided into two Principalities.

Dukes of WOLGAST.		Dukes of STETIN.
1277	5. Bugeſlaus II. Son of Barnimus.	1277	1. Otho, Duke of Pomeren-Stetin.
1319	6. Wartiſlaus, Son to Bugiſlaus.	1345	2. Caſimir, Son of Otho.
1326	7. Barnimus II.	1368	3. Caſimir II. Son of Caſimir.
1365	8. Wartiſlaus II.

1394	9. Barnimus III.	1374	4. Suantiborus, Brother of Caſimir the 2.
1405	10. Wartiſlaus III.
1456	11. Ericus, Son of Wartiſlaus.	1413	5. Caſimir III. Son of Suantiborus.
	12. Bugiſlaus III. commonly called the tenth, the younger Princes of both Houſes making up the tale, ſucceeded	1433	6. Joachim, Son of Caſimir the 3.
		1451	7. Otho III. Son of Joachim, dyed without Iſſue, Anno 1464.

Otho the third in that part of Pomeren, uniting ſo the whole into one Eſtate.

1523 13. George, Son of Bugiſlaus the tenth.

1531 14. Philip, Son of George, in whoſe time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.

1583 15. Bugiſlaus IV. but the 13. in the Dutch account, Son of Philip; his younger Brother Erneſtus-Ludovicus having that of Stetin for his ſhare.

16. Bugiſlaus V. and 14. Son of Bugiſlaus the 4. born in the year 1580, ſucceeded in Pomeren of Wolgaſt; as Philip-Julius, Son of Erneſtus-Ludovicus, did in that of Stetin. After whoſe death Bugiſlaus became Lord of all Pomerania; in a fair way to have loſt all to the prevailing Imperialiſts, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden ſtopped their violent Progreſs. But Bugiſlaus dying without Iſſue in the time of the War, and in him the Male-iſſue of the Houſe of Bugiſlaus the tenth being quite extinguiſhed, George-William, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, put in his claim for the Eſtate, according to the compact and Agreement ſpoken of before. Betwixt whom & the Swedes (who, under colour of aiding the laſt Duke, had poſſeſſed themſelves of all the ſtrongeſt places in the Country) it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munſter, that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Iſles of Rugen and Wollin, and the Town of Stetin, ſhould from thenceforth belong to the Crown of Sweden: the Lower Pomeren to be enjoyed by the Houſe of Brandenburg, ſo long as the Male-Iſſue laſteth; on default whereof, that alſo to be added unto that Crown: the Arms and Titles to be uſed by both promiſcuouſly. And in regard the Marqueſs of Brandenburg was to part with the Upper Pomeren for the Contentation of the Swedes, (without which no firm Peace could be made in Germany;) it was alſo there agreed upon, that the Temporal Eſtates of the Biſhopricks of Halberſtad, Minden and Camin, together with that of Magdeburg, (after the deceaſe of the preſent Biſhop) ſhould be for ever added to the poſſeſſions of that Houſe; the Marqueſſes and Electors of it to be thenceforth intituled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Halberſtad and Minden. But what will be the iſſue of theſe Concluſions future Times muſt ſhew.

THE Dukedom of MECLENBURG is bounded on the Eaſt with Pomerania, on the Weſt with Holſtein, a Province of the Kingdom of Denmark, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Brandenburg and Saxon-Lawenburg. So called from Mecklenburg, or Megalopolis; (both names, in the ſeveral Languages of the Dutch and Greeks, ſignifying a great City.) a great Town of that name here being in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals, (the old Inhabitants of theſe parts) whoſe chief City it was; but on their leaving of this Country decayed to nothing. The Country is of the ſame nature as Pomerania, and as rich in Corn.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Wiſmar, a noted Port, on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea; raiſed out of the Ruines of old Mecklenburg before mentioned, about the year 1240. The Haven hereof is capable of the greateſt Veſſels, to which it gives a ſafe and aſſured Station, whence the name of Wiſmar; the word ſignifying, in the Sclavonian Language, idem ac Certum mare, (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or ſafe Sea. Now one of the Hanſe-Towns, and being it lies conveniently for the uſe of the Swedes, allotted to that Crown by the Treaty of Munſter; the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompence thereof to have the Temporalities of the Biſhopricks of Swerin and Ratzenburg. 2. Swerin, ſeated upon the South-ſide of the Lake ſo named; an Epiſcopal See, and honoured with giving the Title of a Barony to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3. Malchow, firſt walled by Niclot Prince of the Vandals, Anno 1270. 4. Ratzenburg, an Epiſcopal See, ſpoken of before. 5. Rotſtock, the next in reputation of all the Hanſe-Towns to Lubeck and Dantzick; large, rich, and much frequented by all ſorts of Merchants; in compaſs almoſt ſix Engliſh miles, ſituate on the River Warn, near the fall thereof into the Baltick; honoured with an Univerſity, here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419, the firſt Profeſſors in it being brought from Erfort in Saxony. 6. Stargard, which once gave the Title of Duke to the younger Princes of this Houſe. 7. Sarentine, memorable for a Nunnery there founded by Duke Magnus the ſecond. 8. Lau, built and fortified by Duke Henry the ſecond, as an Outwork to Roſtock, which he had lately bought of Chriſtopher then K. of Denmark. 9. Sternberg, of which little memorable. 10. Fridland, on the edge of Pomeren, not far from Stargard, which gave the Title of Duke to Albert of Wallenſtein, after that called Duke of Fridland, that eminent and proſperous Commander of the Imperial Forces in the late War of Germany; who was miſerably murthered after all his Services by command of the Emperour. 11. Fitchtel, both pleaſantly and ſtrongly ſeated on the edge of a Lake. 12. Dammin a ſtrong Town on the Marches of Brandenburg.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the reſt of the Heruli and Burgundians. But the Burgundians, being reckoned as a part of the Vandals, were not much took notice of, till their Irruptions on the Borders of the Roman Empire made them more conſiderable: the Princes of theſe Nations uſing no other Title than Kings of the Heruli and Vandals. Of theſe the firſt is ſaid to be one Anthyrius, Son of an Amazonian Lady, who learned his firſt Rudiments of Warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his Loins deſcended a long Race of Kings, amongſt whom Rhadaguiſe, who together with Alarick the Goth invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick, the ſeventeenth of theſe Kings, weary of ſo cold a Dwelling, paſſed towards the South; and, having harraſſed Gaul and Spain, ſhipped himſelf over the Streights of Gibralter, and erected the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk; whoſe Succeſſors we ſhall meet with there. By Vitalaus, the youngeſt Son of Genſericus, the Son of Gunderick, the Line of theſe Princes is continued; who after mingling with the Obotriti and other of the Sclaves, ſucceeding into the void places of the Vandals, left off the Title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themſelves Kings of the Heruli and Obotriti; continuing it to Pribiſlaus, or Primiſlaus the ſecond, who wrote himſelf, Pribiſlaus, Dei gratiâ, Herulorum, Wagriorum, Circipanorum, Palumborum, Obotritorum, Kiſſinorum, Vandalorúmque Rex, making herein a general Muſter of thoſe Tribes of the Sclaves and Heruli which remained under his command. But he being vanquiſhed by Henry ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the Title of King was laid aſide; his Succeſſors contenting themſelves with that of Princes. The Eſtate was divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribiſlaus by his Son Henry, into two Eſtates, Henry aſſuming to himſelf the Title of Prince of the Obotriti, and Niclot that of Prince of the Vandals. But the poſterity of Niclot failing in William, the laſt of that Line, Anno 1430, his Title with the Lands thereunto belonging fell to Henry the Fat, the fourth Duke of Meclenburg; to which Honour Albert and John, the Sons of Henry the fourth, deſcended from the elder Houſe, had been advanced by the Emperour Charles the fourth, at Prague, Anno 1348. The Succeſſion of which Family from Pribiſlaus take in order thus:

The Princes of the HERVLI, and Dukes of MECKLENBVRG.

1158 1. Pribiſlaus, the laſt King and firſt Prince of the Heruli, after their Subjection to the Saxons, reſtored to this Title and his former Eſtate by the bountiful Conquerours, to be held under the Right and Homage of the Houſe of Saxony.

1179 2. Henry, Son of Pribiſlaus, baptized with all his people in his Father's life-time, by the perſwaſion of Henry Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, by whom they were reſtored to their Eſtates.

3. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, dividing the Eſtate with his Brother Niclot.

1228 4. John, ſurnamed the Divine, ſo called, becauſe created Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, whither he was ſent by his Father to learn good Arts.

1260 5. Henry III. ſurnamed of Hieruſalem, becauſe of his Expedition thither againſt the Saracens.

1302 6. Henry IV. ſurnamed the Lion, for his Valour and undaunted Conſtancy.

1319 7. Albert and John, the Sons of Henry, going to Prague with a Princely Train to attend on the Emperour Charles the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenburg, Anno 1348.

1380 8. Magnus, Son of Albert.

1384 9. John, Son of Magnus, the Founder of the Univerſity of Roſtock, Anno 1419.

1423 10. Henry V. ſurnamed the Fat, who, on the death of William the laſt Prince of the Vandals, ſucceeded into his Eſtate.

1447 11. Magnus II. Son of Henry, Founder of the Cathedral Church of Roſtock.

1503 12. Albert II. Son of Magnus the ſecond.

1578 14. John III. Son of John Albert.

1592 15. Adolph Frederick and John Albert, Sons of John the third, diſpoſſeſſed hereof by the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond, An. 1628, their Eſtates, with the Title of Duke of Mecklenburg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenſtein, Duke of Fridland; who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the Aſſertor of the Liberties of Germany, reſtored it to the proper Owners. The Heir to whoſe Eſtates is Guſtavus Adolphus, the only Son and Heir of John Albert; the other of theſe two Brothers dying without Iſſue.

18. The Dukedom and Eſtates of SAXONY.

THE Dukedom and Eſtates of SAXONY (not reckoning thoſe which now paſs under other Names, and ſhall hereafter be deſcribed in their ſeveral places) are bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and parts of Lunenburg and Holſtein; on the North with other parts of Brandenburg, and part of Mecklenburg; and on the South with Franconia, and ſome parts of the Upper Palatinate.

It is (we ſee) an aggregate Body, conſiſting of two general Limbs; 1. the Dukedom of Saxony, 2. the Eſtates of Saxony, or Saxony properly ſo called: the firſt containing the whole Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, or the Upper Saxony, the proper Seat of the Duke Elector, 2. Miſnia, 3. Voitland, and 4. Thuringia; the other thoſe of 1. Anhal. 2. Mansfield, 3. Meydeburg, and 4. Lawenburg. And as it is an aggregate Body, ſo is it comprehenſive of all thoſe honourary Titles by which the Princes of Germany are diſtinguiſhed from one another; that is to ſay, the Electorſhip of Saxony, the Dukedom of Lawenburg, the Biſhoprick of Meydeburg, the Principality of Anhalt, the Marquiſate of Miſnia, the Lantgravedom of Thuringia, the Earldom of Mansfield, and the Seignioury or Lordſhip of Voitland. Of theſe eight Provinces, the 4 firſt mentioned are wholly ſituate without the Limits and Precincts of the ancient Saxony; and yet now are, and have been called long before, the Dukedom of Saxony, becauſe they make up the whole Patrimony and Eſtate of the Dukes Electors, who, ſince the Proſcription and Deprivation of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, in ſome or other of theſe Countries have had their fixed Seat and Habitation. The four laſt, being parts of the ancient Saxony, and heretofore in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes hereof, do ſtill paſs under the account and name of Saxony, though in the hands of ſeveral Owners; all which do acknowledge a Superiority in the Duke Elector, if not ſome great Relation to him and Dependence on him: ſo that we have an heterogeneous Body to diſcourſe upon, and therefore muſt conſider ſeverally of the parts thereof, but ſo, that either firſt or laſt we ſhall find them all in the Succeſſion and Affairs of the Dukes of Saxony. 1. then,

The DVKEDOM of Saxony is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, Luſatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with Haſſia, and part of the proper Saxony; on the North with the proper Saxony only; and on the South with Franconia, and the Upper Palatinate. So called, becauſe the proper Seat and Patrimony of the Duke-Elector: of very different nature both for Air and Soil, but the laſt eſpecially; as we ſhall ſee by looking over the particular Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, 2. Miſnia, or Meiſſen, 3. Voitland, 4. Thuringia, by the Dutch called Duringen.

1. OBER-SAX, or the Upper Saxony, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Marches of Brandenburg, on the Weſt with M*ansfield*, from which it is parted by the River Sala, on the North with M*eydeburg*, on the South with M*iſnia*. The reaſon of the name we ſhall ſee anon. The Air hereof is ſomewhat ſharp and piercing, the Soil ſufficiently fruitful, but therein not to be compared with M*iſnia*, and much leſs with Durengen, being both of them of a richer and more liberal nature.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Torgaw, by ſome placed in M*iſnia*, but by M*ercator* in this Province; built on on the Weſt ſide of the Elve, in form orbicular, and falling every way from the ſides of a Mountain; beautified with a ſtately and pleaſant Caſtle belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof, built by John-Frederick the Elector, Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compaſs, for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke 500 Guldens. 2. Worlitz, upon the Elve, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weiſſenburg, lying towards Brunſwick. 4. Kemburg, on the Elve. 5. Bitterfeldt, betwixt the Elve and the Mulda. And 6. Wittenberg, on the Elve, in an open Plain, but ſtrongly fenced with Walls, Ramparts, and deep Ditches. The chief beauty of it lieth in one fair Street, extending the whole length of the City: in the midſt thereof is the Cathedral-Church, a large Market-place, and the Common-Council-houſe. In former times it was the Seat of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral Dignity was conferred on the Houſe of Meiſſen, who, liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dreſden, but ſo, that Wittenberg is ſtill acknowledged for the Head City of the Electorate; and was made an Univerſity for Divines by Duke Frederick Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as ſome conjecture, from Wittikindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greateſt: famous for the Sepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the Walls of Popery firſt broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderful ſucceſs whereof we have ſpoke already.

Of the Affairs of this little Country we can ſay but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and conſequently to the name which it ſtill retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, ſurnamed the Lion, whoſe Greatneſs was grown formidable even to the Emperours themſelves, the Dukedom of Saxony was diſmembred into many parcels; Brunſwick and Lunenburg being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived, the lower Parts of Weſtphalen ſeized on by Philip Archbiſhop of Colen, the parts thereof about the Weſer by the Biſhop of Paderborn, Herman the Lantgrave of Thuringia laying hold of that part of this Eſtate which was neareſt to him, Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made Imperial, or governing themſelves as Free Eſtates, the Anceſtors of the Princes of Anhalt and the Earls of Manſfield endowed with large Poſſeſſions alſo out of this great Patrimony; the Emperour not only conniving at it, but willingly conſenting to that Diſſipation, the better to reward and content thoſe Princes who had aſſiſted him in his Wars againſt the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the ancient Saxony to be eſtated upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbaroſſa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry ſo deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good Services to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Wittenberg by Conrade the 3. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lawenburg; yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector, it pleaſed the Emperour Frederick to beſtow upon him all thoſe Lands and Territories which lay between the Sala and the Elve, on the North of Miſnia, to make Wittenberg the Electoral City, and give unto the County thus united to it the name of Ober-Sax or Upper Saxony, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA, or Meiſſen, is bounded on the Eaſt with Luſatia, on the Weſt with Duringen, on the North with Saxony ſpecially ſo called and ſome part of Brandenburg, on the South with Voitland & ſome part of Bohemia. The Country was once overſpread with Woods, and full of Bogs, rendring the Air unwholſom, and the Soil unprofitable; both rectified by the care and induſtry of the people; now yielding ſome Mines of Silver, and great plenty both of Corn and Paſturage; well watered with the Rivers Sala, Pleſſe, Elſter, and Mulda.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Dreſden, ſeated on the Albis, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks 150 Pieces of Ordnance; in it a Stable of the Duke's, in which are 128 Horſes of ſervice, and a Magazine, out of which 30000 Horſe and Foot may be armed at a day's warning. The Town it ſelf is ſituate on both ſides of the River, by which it is divided into the Old Town and the New, joined into one by a Bridge of 800 paces in length. The Country round about it is very rich and pleaſant, able to ſuſtain great multitudes. For that cauſe it was made the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both ſeated on the River Sala, two Epiſcopal Sees. 4. Leipzick, as famous an Univerſity for Philoſophers as Jene in Lorrain is for Phyſicians. It ſeemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not ſuffer their Beer to periſh, of which here is ſo much drunk and exported, that the very Cuſtom of it due unto the Duke amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly: yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the moſt part of fair Free-ſtone, and honoured with the Courts of Juſtice for all the Country. Though ſeated on the meeting of Pleſſe, Parde, and Elſter, 3. Rivers which lie almoſt on all ſides of it; yet it is not ſtrong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialiſts in leſs than 2 years during the late German Wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing elſe) for the great Battel fought near it between the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 on both ſides, and the loſs of all the Baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperialiſts) freed all theſe parts of Germany from that civil and ſpiritual Bondage which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Mulberg, on the Elve, where John Frederick the Elector was diſcomfited and taken priſoner by Charles the fifth, and by him deprived not long after of his Eſtate and Dignity. 6. Meiſſen, on the Weſt-ſide of the ſame River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the firſt for defence of the Empire againſt the Sclaves: a Biſhops See, and the firſt Seat of the Marqueſſes of this Country, both which, together with the Burgrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Manſion-houſes ſtanding cloſe together on the top of a Hill over-looking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meiſſen. 7. Friberg, near the Mountains of Bohemia, rich in Mines of Silver. 8. Roclitz, not far from which are rich Mines of Tin, diſcovered firſt in theſe parts by a Corniſh-man ſpoken of before.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanduri and Suardones, ſubdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Sclaves ſurnamed Winithi: firſt conquered by the Emperour Henry the firſt, who built the ſtrong Town of Meiſſen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Sclaves from any Incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany, it was a while governed by ſuch Officers as by the Emperours were appointed to guard theſe Marches: the firſt proprietary Marqueſs being one Echard, Son of the Earl of Oſtland, (deſcended from a younger Son of Wittikind, the laſt King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otho the third: not made hereditary till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrade Marqueſs of Landſperg and Luſatia, whoſe Nephew Theodorick by his Son Otho, ſurnamed the Rich, married Judith, Daughter of Herman Lantgrave of Duringen; by which Match Duringen gen accrued to the Houſe of Meiſſen, Henry their Son ſucceeding in both Eſtates. To this Henry ſucceeded Albert his Son, and after him ſucceſſively four Fredericks; the laſt whereof, on the faileur of the Houſe of Anhalt, was by the Emperour Sigiſmund created Elector and Duke of Saxony, either becauſe deſcended from the Houſe of Witikindus, or as moſt able to pay for the Inveſtiture, or elſe beſt able to ſuſtain the Eſtate and Dignity of a Duke-Elector, which had but weakly been ſupported by the former Family. In his poſterity theſe Honours and Eſtates do as yet continue; but neither all nor always in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes-Electors. For in the Partage made between Erneſtus and Albert, the Sons of Frederick, (according to the ill Cuſtom of Germany) this Country, or the greateſt part of it, was aſſigned to Albert, ſucceeded in the ſame by George and Henry his two Sons: which Henry was Father of that Maurice, who, being ſetled and confirmed herein by the Duke John-Frederick, did after moſt unworthily take up Arms againſt him, ſupplanted him, and finally poſſeſſed himſelf of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

3. VOITLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Bohemia, on the Weſt with Frankenland, on the North with Miſnia or Meiſſen, on the South with the Upper Palatinate. So called, as ſome ſay, from the Ivites or Vites, (ſome of that People who, together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to ſay, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that the Saxons did ſpread ſo far Eaſtward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Sclaves, who finding it deſerted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the alteration unto Voitland is both plain and obvious. It is the ſmalleſt Province of all Germany, and never of ſuch repute as to have any particular Prince, as moſt others had; but always reckoned as an acceſſory to ſome greater Eſtate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities of great eſtimation: the chief of thoſe which are being, 1. Olſnitz, 2. Worda, 3. Cornah, 4. Schneberg, near the Mountains called Sudeti by Ptolomy, famed for Silver-Mines. 5. Gotzberg, 6. Culmbach; and 7. Hoffe, not much remarkable, but only for the Princes of it of the Houſe of Brandenburg; called formerly Curia Pegniana.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nertereates and Danduti, ſucceeded to by the French and Sclaves, as they ſeverally deſcended Southwards into warmer Countries. Poſſeſſed and planted by the Sclaves it obtained this name. But being a ſmall Nation and a ſmall Eſtate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did moſt probably belong to the Lords of Meiſſen, upon which it bordereth, and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxony. But ſo that the Duke of Saxony is not the ſole Lord hereof: the Marqueſſes of Onſpach of the Houſe of Brandenburg poſſeſſing the Towns of Hoffe and Culmbach, and ſome other parts of it: the Patrimony at preſent of Chriſtian, Son of Joachim-Erneſt the late Marqueſs of Onſpach, who now enjoyeth them, with the Title of Marqueſs of Culmbach.

4. THURINGIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Miſnia and the River Sala, on the Weſt with Haſſia, on the North with the Wood Hirtz and the proper Saxony, on the South with the mountainous Foreſt of Duringer-wald, by it parted from Frankenland: the Foreſt and the Country both ſo called from the Thuringians, the ancient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Country is environed round about with woody Mountains, but within thoſe Mountains plain and pleaſant, fruitful in Corn, and very plentiful of Woods, which yield great profit to the people; not without ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich pits of Salt; able to furniſh out a Feaſt, but for Wine only, which is the greateſt want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more; yet is it ſo populous and well planted, that there are ſaid to be in it 12 Earldoms, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many Market-Towns, 150 Caſtles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of theſe are 1. Jene, on the River Sala, bordering upon Miſnia, an Univerſity chiefly of Phyſicians, founded in the year 1555 by the Sons of John-Frederick the Elector, taken priſoner and deprived by Charles the fifth. 2. Erfurt, on the River Gera, out of which are cut ſo many Chanels, that every Street almoſt hath the benefit of it. A rich, populous, and well built City, accounted amongſt the beſt of Germany, and made an Univerſity in the time of the Emperour Wenceſlaus, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but ſtill reviving, as the Phœnix out of the Aſhes, into greater glory. It was at firſt immediately ſubject to the Archbiſhops and Electors of Mentz, the firſt Founders of it, as being built by William, Son of the Emperour Otho the firſt, and then Archbiſhop of that City, of whom more anon: but having freed themſelves from him, they have ſince governed themſelves as a Free Eſtate, and are one of the Hanſe-Towns, not ſubject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good Neighbour only. 3. Mulhuſen, and 4. Northuſen, two Imperial Cities, but elſe not obſervable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the League here made Anno 1530 between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the Doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof, and of one another in the purſuance of that work: by which famous Confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his ſhoulders, but the Religion by him reformed grew to that ſtrength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kala, or Hale, on the River Falza; of great reſort for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vended in other places, at which Town Philip the Lantgrave was treacherouſly taken Priſoner, as you ſhall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town which, together with the Caſtle of Gotha, were aſſigned for the Eſtate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Prince John Frederick Duke of Saxony, after his Diſcomfiture and Impriſonment by Charles the 5. the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxon Weymar, who live here in a ſtately and magnificent Caſtle made of poliſhed Stone, moſt artificially contrived; and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleaſures, but made more pleaſant by the watering of the River Ilma, upon which it ſtandeth. 8. Gotha, upon the River Lon, ſaid by Rathaimerus to be built by the Goths, and by them thus named. A place not long ſince of great importance, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, called Grummenſtein, that being made the Retiring-place of one Grunbachius and other ſeditious perſons under the Protection of John Frederick, one of the Sons of the deprived Electors. It was taken after a long Siege by Auguſtus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the ſtrength of this piece being in the hands of the injured Family was a great Eye-ſore) and by the command of the Eſtates of the Empire at the Diet at Regenſpurg, Anno 1567, demoliſhed, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chaſuarii of Tacitus, and after them the Thuringi, who, with the Heruli, under the Conduct of Odoacer, conquered Italy; called by ſome Turcilingi, by others ſuppoſed to be the Tirangetæ of Ptolomy. Not heard of in this Country till the Reign of Childerick the fourth King of the French; then taking up the whole Provinces of Haſſia and Thuringia, under one Biſſinius their King. Their Arms were at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barrie Argent and Gules, armed and crowned Or. Being overcome at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen, where they joined with the Almans, they were afterwards totally ſubdued by Theodorick the French King of Metz, their King Hermanfridus taken, and moſt perfidiouſly ſlain; part of their Country taken from them, and given to the Saxons, (who aſſiſted in that War againſt them) becoming ſubject for the reſt to the Kings of France; but ſo, that for ſome time after they had Kings of their own, Baderick and Hermanfroy, two Brothers, Kings hereof ſucceſſively, being Uncles to Radegond, a Princeſs of great Piety, the Wife of Clotaire King of France, Anno 559. In following times it was united to the Empire by Henry the firſt; conferred not long after by Otho the firſt (the Son of Henry) on William, one of his younger Sons, then Archbiſhop of Mentz, which he left to his Succeſſors in that See; governed by their Vidames and Provincial Officers, till the time of Conradus Salicus, when Ludovicus Barbatus, one of theſe Vidames (or Vicedomini) made himſelf the Proprietary of it, and left the ſame unto his Children after his deceaſe. But in the time of Conrade the 2. the Iſſue of this Ludovicus either failing or diſpoſſeſſed, it was by the Emperour conferred on Lewis of Orleans, Son to a Siſter of his Empreſs, the Title of Lantgrave being given to them of this Family for their greater Honour. Under eight Princes of this Line, whereof five ſucceſſively had the name of Lewis, this Eſtate continued: next falling to Herman, a Brother of the fifth Lewis, who, by contributing to the Ruine of Henry Duke of Saxony, ſurnamed the Lion, in favour of Frederick Barbaroſſa, had for his ſhare (in the dividing of the Spoil) thoſe parts of his Eſtates which lay neareſt to him, called then the Palatinate of Saxony; recovered for the moſt part afterward by the Dukes of Brunſwick, the right Heirs of Henry. He being dead, this Country fell to a ſixth Lewis, and laſt of all to Henry the Brother of that Lewis, in whom the Male-iſſue failed, having continued for the ſpace of 252 years. To pleaſe all parties intereſſed in the Succeſſion, the Eſtate, before entire, was divided into two Parts or Provinces: of which this now called Duringen, or Thuringia, was allotted to Henry Marqueſs of Miſnia, Son of Judith, the Daughter of Herman; the Weſtern part thereof, with the Title of the Lantgravedom of Heſſen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant, in right of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the ſixth: in the deſcription of which Countries we ſhall hear more of them. United thus to the Houſe of Meiſſen in the perſon of Henry the then Marqueſs, Anno 1263, it flouriſhed in long Peace and Happineſs under the Princes of that Houſe. Finally, it much increaſed both in Power and Dignity by the addition of Ober-Sax and the Electorſhip of Saxony, conferred on Frederick the Fourth, Marqueſs and Lantgrave of theſe Countries, Anno 1423; in which Eſtate it ſtill continueth, the fourth and faireſt of all theſe Provinces which now make up the Dukedom of Saxony, (as for the reaſons above mentioned it hath long been called) though none of them, nor any part or parcel of them, within the Bounds and Limits of the ancient Saxony, as before was ſaid.

2. SAXONY properly ſo called, or the Proper S*AXONY*, is bounded on the South with Duringen and the great Wood Hartz, part of the old Hercynian Foreſt, and from thence ſo named; on the Eaſt with part of Miſnia, Ober-Sax, and the Marches of Brandenburg; upon the North with the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and on the Weſt with thoſe of Brunſwick, Lunenburg, and part of Holſtein. So called from the Saxons, once the Lords hereof, (of whom more anon) and the ſole part of all their great and many Conqueſts which retains their name.

The Air hereof is ſomewhat ſharp, but healthy; the Soil in the South-weſt parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals, elſewhere ſufficiently fruitful. It is divided into 4 Eſtates; that is to ſay, 1. the Principality of Anhalt, 2. the Earldom of Mansfield, 3. the Biſhoprick of Meydeburg, 4. the Dukedom of Lawenburg.

1. The Principate of ANHALT is bounded on the South with Duringen and the Wood called Hartz, on the Weſt and North with the County of Mansfield, on the Eaſt with Miſnia; much ſhaded, if not too much over-grown, with Woods, part of the Hartz, or old Hercynian Foreſt, whence it had the name; Holt in the Dutch ſignifying a Wood or Foreſt; and the Princes of this Houſe being created to this Dignity by the Style of Principes Hercyniæ in Anhalt. Chiefer Towns of it are, 1. Bernburg, the Dynaſtie and uſual Title of this Houſe before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2. Ballenſtede, part of the ancient Patrimony of the firſt Princes hereof. 3. Deſſaw, the birth-place of ſome, and the Burial-place of others, of this Family; beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, built by Prince Albert the 2. Anno 1341. 4. Sterveſt, the uſual place of the Prince's Reſidence. 5. Coeten, a well fortified place, in vain beſiged by the joint Forces of the Archbiſhop of Meydeburg and the Earl of Swartzenwald. 6. Candt. Here ſometimes alſo ſtood the old Caſtle of Aſcandt, the firſt Seat of theſe Princes, but long ſince deſtroyed, now only to be viſited in Records and Hiſtories.

We ſhall be ſent no higher than the firſt beſieging of the Roman Capitol by the ancient Gauls, to find out the Pedigree and Deſcent of the Earls of Lippe; but we muſt go as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; ſome fetching them from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and Nephew of Japhet, from whom, and no other, this Aſcanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedigree. But to content our ſelves with more ſober thoughts, we are to know, that when Theodorick King of Metz undertook the Conqueſt of the Thuringians, he was therein aided by the Saxons with 9000 men, under the conduct of one Bernwald, or Bernthobald, a man of great power and rank amongſt them. The Saxons were recompenſed for that ſervice with ſuch parts of the conquered Country as lay neareſt to them, and Bernthobald himſelf rewarded with the Towns of Aſcandt, Ballenſtede, and the Lands adjoining, Anno 524, to be holden by them under the Soveraignty of the French. From which Town and the Caſtle of Aſcandt, afterwards razed to the ground by Pepin King of the French, (for denying the accuſtomed Tributes) Anno 747, moſt probable it is that the name of the Aſcanian Family was aſſumed by them. So that we may behold it as a Family of as great antiquity as the moſt in Europe, little inferiour to any of the greateſt Monarchs. His Succeſſors were for the moſt part buſied in Wars againſt their neighbours of Miſnia; but rather upon hope of Spoil and plunder, than in way of Conqueſt; their Power & Patrimony being very little improved till the time of Albert ſurnamed Urſus, deſcended by a long ſucceſſion of Princes from Bernwald or Bernthobald, beſore remembred. This Albert having done many ſignal ſervices unto Conrade the 3. and his Son Frederick Barbaroſſa, (eſpecially in taking the Cities of Breme and Lunenburg) was by the laſt created Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg Anno 1153, the Father of that Bernard who, by the munificence and bounty of the ſame Emperour, was created Duke-Elector of Saxony in the room of Duke Henry ſurnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, becoming ſo the Stem of the two greateſt Princes of all the Empire. Henry the 2. Son of this Bernard, was by the ſame Emperor not long after enriched with much of the Lands and Territories lying neareſt to him, which had before belonged to Duke Henry the Lion, and created the firſt Prince of Anhalt, the firſt of all this ancient and illuſtrious Family which had been honoured with that Title, both Lands and Title continuing in his Race to this very day; the two Electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg being in the mean while tranſlated unto other Families. The moſt conſiderable of which Princes, though all men of Eminence, were 1. Rodolph, General of the Forces of the Emperour Maximilian the firſt againſt the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in Battel. 2. George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent Preaching; whoſe Sermons and other Tractates (learned for the Times he lived in) are ſtill extant. 3. Chriſtian, born in the year 1568, Commander of the Forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the Wars of Bohemia.

2. The Earldom of MANSFIELD is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Sala, parting it from Ober-Sax; on the Weſt with the River Wieper, which divides it from Brunſwick; on the North with the Biſhoprick of Meydeburg, and on the South with Anhalt and part of Duringen. So called from Mansfield, once the chief Town of it, ſituate on the River Wieper, but now much decayed: the other Towns of note herein being, 2. Iſleben, more in the middle of the Country; for that cauſe more convenient for the Seats of Juſtice, firſt ſetled here by Earl Voldradus, Anno 1448, and by that means made the Metropolis of this Earldom: By ſome affirmed to have took this name from the Goddeſs Iſis, who, after the death of her Husband, (as is ſaid by Tacitus) viſited theſe parts. Famous more certainly for the Birth of Luther, tranſplanted hence for the ſtudy of good Arts to Meydeburg, and choſen thence to be Divinity-Reader in Wittenberg, where he hammered out that great Work of the Reformation, as before was ſaid; born here in the year 1483, and here deceaſing in the houſe of the Earl of Mansfield, Anno 1546. 3. Wieper, (or Wipra) ſo called of the River on which it ſtandeth. 4. Quernfort, the honourary Title of the Anceſtors of the Earls of Mansfield. 5. Rotenberg, 6. Abſted, 7. Helderung, bought of the Earls of Holſtein.

Some, who delineate the Pedigree of theſe Earls of Mansfield, fetch it out as high as from one Heger, one of King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table, born at Manſfield in Nottinghamſhire, who, ſetling himſelf in Germany, gave that name to his Houſe: a military original, and very ſutable to ſuch an active and warlike Family. But thoſe that do not ſoar ſo high derive them from the Earls of Quernfort, men of authority in theſe parts; made more conſiderable by Lotharius Emperour and Duke of Saxony, but moſt of all by Frederick Barbaroſſa, who conferred many goodly Lordſhips lying hereabout (once part of the Eſtate of Duke Henry the Lion) on Burchard the fifth Earl thereof, a conſtant Follower of his, not only in his Wars againſt Duke Henry before named, but in thoſe alſo which he managed in the Holy Land, in the courſe whereof he died at Antioch Anno 1189. His Nephew Burchard, by a Son of the ſame name, was the firſt of this Family that had the Title of Earl of Mansfield, about the year 1250; continued ever ſince unto his poſterity, (but under ſome Acknowledgment to the Electors of Saxony.) Of theſe the moſt eminent were 1. Waleradus, one of the Council of Eſtate to the Emperour Sigiſmund Anno 1411, a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hereof. 2. John George, Lord Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Auguſtus. 3. Peter-Erneſt, Governour of Luxemburg under Charles the 5. and Philip the 2. by them much exerciſed and employed in their Wars with France and their Belgick Rebels. 4. Albert, a conſtant Friend of Luther, and a faithful Follower of John Frederick, the deprived Elector; in whoſe Quarrel being outed of his Eſtate, he retired to Meydeburg, which he moſt gallantly defended againſt the Emperour. And 5. Erneſtus, Nephew of that Albert by his Son John, ſo famous for the War which he maintained in moſt parts of Germany againſt Ferdinand the 2. in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine and the States of Bohemia, with ſo great conſtancy and courage.

3. On the North of Mansfield and Ober-Sax lieth the Biſhoprick of MEYDEBURG, having on the Weſt parts of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, and on the North and the Eaſt the Marches of Brandenburg: So called from the Epiſcopal See founded in Magdeburg the chief City, by ſome called Meydeburg and Meydenburg, whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis, and Virginopolis by a mungrel word made of Greek and Latine. A City ſeated on the Elve, divided into three parts, but all ſtrongly fortified, begirt with high Walls, deep Ditches, and almoſt unconquerable Bulwarks; yet very beautiful withall, (before the laſt Deſolation of it) of elegant Buildings, fair Streets, and magnificent Temples. It was built in the form of a Creſcent by the Emperour Otho the firſt, the Founder of it, who, having tranſlated hither the Archiepiſcopal See, for the greater honour of the place built the Cathedral of S. Maurice, where his Wife lies buried, Anno 948, teſtified by the Inſcription to be the Daughter of Edmund King of England. A Town which hath long flouriſhed in a great deal of Glory, and taſted of as much Affliction as any other in Germany. For refuſing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperour Charles the fifth, and given to him that could firſt take it. It was firſt hereupon attempted by the Duke of Mecklenburg, but he was in a Camiſado taken Priſoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made captive, and 260 Horſe brought into the City. Next, it was beſieged by Duke Maurice of Saxony, who on honourable terms was after a long Siege received into it, Anno 1550, when it had ſtood on its own Guard the ſpace of three years. Which long Oppoſition of one Town taught the German Princes what Conſtancy could do; it held up the coals of Rebellion in Germany; and indeed proved to be the Fire which burned the Emperor's Trophees. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that Confederacy by which not long after this great Emperor was driven out of Germany. At laſt it yielded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whoſe Succeſſors it hath ſince enjoyed a long courſe of Felicity, till the year 1631, in which it was moſt miſerably burnt and ſacked by the Earl of Tilly; of whom it is obſerved, that after that Fact he never proſpered, being ſhortly after totally routed at the Battel of Leipzick, and wounded to the death not long after that near the River Leck. Other places of note in this Biſhoprick are, 2. Wormſted, beautified with a fair Caſtle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary Seat or Retiring-place of the Biſhop. 2. Grabaw, upon the River Struma. 4. Mockeren, on the ſame River. 5. Barleben, beneath Meydeburg, on the Elve. 6. Louburg, betwixt the Elve and the Struma, not much obſervable.

The Archiepiſcopal See being tranſlated hither from Valerſleve and Vreſe (places too obſcure for ſo great a dignity) by Otho the firſt, and by him endowed with great Revenues and a goodly Territory round about it, the Archbiſhop hereof was alſo by his procurement made the Primate of Germany, acknowledged ſo by all but the Biſhop of Saltzburg and the three Spiritual Electors. For the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in matters Criminal and Civil, the ſaid Otho did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burgrave; conferring that Office firſt on Gero Marqueſs of Luſatia. Through many hands it came at laſt to Burchard Lord of Quernfort, and the Earls of Mansfield, many of which enjoyed this Honour, ſetled at laſt by the Emperour Rodolphus of Habſpurg on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Eſtate. The Archbiſhops notwithſtanding continued Lords of it, and the whole Territory or Diſtrict adjoining to it, till the Reformation of Religion; when the Revenues, ſeparated from the Juriſdiction, were given to Lay-Princes, (for the moſt part of the Houſe of Brandenburg) with the Title of Adminiſtrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munſter, this fair Eſtate is to be ſetled for ever on the Electors of that Houſe, to be poſſeſſed by them, and their Heirs and Succeſſors, by the Title of the Dukes of Magdeburg, the better to content them for the Conceſſion which they made to the Crown of Sweden of a great part of their right and Title to the Dukedom of Pomeren.

4. On the North-weſt of Magdeburg, and on both ſides alſo of the Elve, lieth the Dukedom of LAWENBURG, bounded on the North with Mecklenburg, on the Weſt with part of Holſtein, and on the South with the River Elve and part of Lunenburg; ſo called of Lawenburg the chief Town thereof, and the Seat of the Dukes. The Town was firſt built, as ſome conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxony, ſurnamed the Lion, the better to aſſure his Conqueſts on that ſide of the River, by whom it was called Leopolis, or Leoburgum, and Lawenburg for the ſame reaſons by the Dutch or Germans: on the Proſcription of which Prince, the Country being waſted and the Towns deſtroyed, Bernhard of Anhalt, deſigned his Succeſſor in the Dukedom of Saxony, liking the ſituation of it, cauſed it to be re-edified in ſtronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the Town of Erdenburg being carried croſs the Water to enlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the ſaid Duke Henry in the courſe of that War, it was re-built again by D Bernard, the new Elector, who is therefore by ſome Writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein are, 2. Erdenburg, a well-fortified piece, oppoſite to Lawenburg, on the hither-ſide of the Elve; not ſo large now as heretofore, the Town of Lawenburg being made greater by the leſſening of this 3. Raceburg, an Epiſcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry ſurnamed the Lion, upon his gaining of the Sclaves to the Chriſtian Faith, and of late times the Sepulture of this Ducal Family. 4. Molne, on the farther ſide of the Elb, not far from Lawenburg, the cauſe of much Contention betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a Title thereunto.

This Country, being for the moſt part under the Command of the Sclaves, was from them conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Chriſtian Faith: but he being proſcribed, and this Seigniory extorted from him by Duke Bernard of Anhalt, his Succeſſor in the Electoral Dignity, it was by Albert, Son of this Bernard, conferred on John his ſecond Son, from whom the Dukes of Saxony commonly called Dukes of Saxon-Lawenburg, do derive themſelves; who being pretermitted by the Emperour Sigiſmund at the death of Albert the 3. the laſt of the direct Line of Bernard, or elſe not caring for a Title which carried with it too great Sail for ſo ſmall a Veſſel as the Eſtate of the Elector at the preſent was, have ſince contented themſelves with their ancient Patrimony.

It is now time we ſhould proceed to the Story of Saxony, the ancient Inhabitants of which Tract were the Longobardi or Lombards of Magdeburg, and part of the Cheruſci about Mansfield and Wittenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is, containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eyder in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, and from the River Sala to the German and Baltick Oceans. Theſe are ſaid by ſome to be a People of Aſia, and there called the Sacæ, who, finding that ſmall Territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them, forſook their Country, and at laſt fixed themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe; where they firſt took the names of Sacaſons (or Sac-ſons,) that is to ſay, the Sons of the Sacæ. The improbability of this we have there diſputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural Germans, ſome Tribe of that moſt populous and potent People of the Suevi: but for the reaſon of the name, let every man enjoy the pleaſure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolomy's time they were poſſeſſed of thoſe parts beyond the Elb, and thence extended to the Eyder, part of which Tract is now known by the name of Holſtein; and were accounted in that time to be no New-comers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they enlarged their quarters, and paſſing over the Elb, in the time of the later Roman Emperours, poſſeſſed themſelves of the void places which were left by the French, then buſied in the Conqueſt of more fruitful Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in fine they ſtretcht themſelves from the River Sala on the Eaſt, to the German Ocean on the Weſt, and took up the now Dukedoms of Holſtein, Lunenburg, and Brunſwick, the Biſhopricks of Bremen, Verden, Hildeſheim, Halberſtadt, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenburg, the Earldom of Mansfield, Weſtphalen, both Frieſlands, Over-Yſſel, with as much of Gelderland and Holland as lay on that ſide of the Rhene. By which account the preſent Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their poſſeſſion; the Seat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the Alterations and Changes which have happened in that Eſtate; the name and Title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg, for no other reaſon but becauſe it was the chief Seat of the Dukes-Electors. But to proceed, a ſtout and valiant Nation queſtionleſs they were, the Conquerors of the Iſle of Britain; and the laſt People of the Germans which yielded up their Country unto Charles the Great, by his means gained unto the Goſpel Anno 785. Their laſt King was called Wittikindus, from whom deſcend the Kings of France ſince the time of Hugh Capet, the preſent Kings of Denmark of the Houſe of Oldenburg, the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoy, the Marqueſſes of Montferrat, beſides many other noble and illuſtrious Families though of leſſer note. The right or direct Line of the Male-iſſue of Wittikind (whom Charles the Great created, of a King, the firſt Duke of Saxony) determining in the perſon of Otho the third, Emperour of Germany, it was by him conferred on Bernard Lord of Lunenburg, (but the preciſe time I find not:) Henry, ſurnamed the Saint, who ſucceeded this Otho in the Empire, the next in the collateral Line, being pretermitted, either becauſe at that time ſetled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or becauſe there was no hope of Poſterity by him, or for ſome other private grudge, which I read not of. And it continued in this Line till, on the Forfeiture incurred by his poſterity, in the perſon of Duke

Henry the Lion, it was beſtowed by Frederick Barbaroſſa upon Bernard of Anhalt Anno 1180; whoſe Iſſue in the right Line failing, it was finally eſtated by the Emperour Sigiſmund on Frederick Lantgrave of Thuringia and Marqueſs of Miſnia, Anno 1423. In his Family it hath ſince continued, but not without a manifeſt breach in the courſe of the Succeſſion: which happened when John-Frederick being deprived of the Electoral Dignity and Eſtate, his Couſin Duke Maurice was inveſted in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious, but unfortunate, Prince, (if he may juſtly have the Title of unfortunate who ſuffered in ſo good a Cauſe, for ſo good a Conſcience) being diſcomfited and taken priſoner at the Battel of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die; but pardoned at the laſt, upon the interceſſion of ſome powerful Friends, upon condition that he ſhould reſign the Electoral Dignity, and all the reſt of his Eſtates, into the power of the Emperour: Which done, the Emperour gave him back again of his own accord the Caſtle of Gotha and the Town of Weymar, with all the Lands and Territories thereunto adjoining; from which laſt place his Poſterity are now called Dukes of Saxon Weymar. It was alſo much inſiſted on, that he ſhould relinquiſh his Religion, and reconcile himſelf to the Church of Rome: but thereto he oppoſed with ſuch Chriſtian ſtoutneſs, that in the end it was omitted. Theſe matters being thus tranſacted, the Emperour (with the general conſent of the Electors) inveſted Maurice, Couſin-german to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral Dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Eſtates (the Seigniouries of Gotha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him: which though it were a great wrong both to the Perſon and Poſterity of the Duke John-Frederick, yet it is obſerved by ſome grave Writers to have fallen out not unhappily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. 1. In regard of John-Frederick, whoſe Chriſtian Patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his Impriſonment added great reputation to the Cauſe for which he ſuffered. 2. In reſpect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work, and every way as zealous in purſuing of it as the other was. And 3. in relation to the Children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of ſuch weight and moment; inſomuch as it was ſaid of him after his deceaſe, Quod Filios reliquerit ſui diſſimillimos. It is now time we ſhould proceed to the Inveſtiture of the new Elector. And becauſe theſe Tranſactions of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Ceremonies thereat uſed, as I have collected them out of Sleidan. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which ſate the Emperor and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back-ſide of the State were placed the Trumpeters; right againſt it ſtandeth Duke Maurice with two bands of Horſmen: The firſt in a full career run their Horſes up to the Pavilion: out of the ſecond iſſued Henry Duke of Brunſwick, Wolfang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavier. Theſe, when they had in like manner courſed their Horſes about, alighted, aſcended to the Throne, and humbly requeſted the Emperour, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorſhip. He conſulted with the Electors, made anſwer by the Biſhop of Mentz, that he was content, ſo Duke Maurice would in perſon come and deſire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice with the whole Troop: before him were born ten Enſigns bearing the Arms of as many Regions wherein he deſired to be inveſted. When he came before the Throne, he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly deſired the Emperour to beſtow on him the Electorſhip of Saxony, and all the Lands of John-Frederick late Elector. His Petition was granted. Then the Biſhop of Mentz read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperour delivered unto him a Sword, which was a ſign of his perfect Inveſtiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, aroſe, gave the Emperour thanks, promiſed his Fidelity, made Obeiſance, and took his place amongſt the Electors. This Solemnity was on the 24. day of Febr. Anno 1548. Which ſaid, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of

The Dukes of SAXONY.

785 1. Wittikind, the laſt King of the Saxons, vanquiſhed, and created the firſt Duke by Charles the Great.

825 2. Bruno, the Brother of Wittikind.

843 3. Luitulphus, Son of Bruno.

855 4. Bruno II. Son of Luitulphus.

876 5. Otho, Brother of Bruno the ſecond.

916 6. Henry, ſurnamed the Fowler, Son of Otho, Emperour of the Romans and King of Germany.

938 7. Otho II. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Otho I.

974 8. Otho III. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Otho II.

984 9. Otho IV. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Otho III.

10. Bernard, Lord of Lunenburg, created Duke of Saxony, and the firſt Elector, by Otho the third, who was the laſt Duke of the Race of Wittikind.

1021 11. Bernard II. Son of Bernard the firſt.

1063 12. Ordulphus, Son of Bernard the 2.

1073 13. Magnus, Son of Ordulphus, who, taking part with Rodolphus of Schwaben againſt Henry the fourth, was taken priſoner and deprived.

14. Lotharius, Earl of Quernfurt, created Duke of Saxony by Henry the fourth. He was alſo Emperour of the Romans.

1125 15. Henry Guelph, ſurnamed the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, the Husband of Gertrude, Daughter of Lotharius, by whom he was created Duke-Elector.

1139 16. Henry II. ſurnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, Son of Henry the Proud by his firſt Wife Walfildis, the Daughter of Magnus, added to this Eſtate the Countries of Mecklenburg and Lawenburg, which he had conquered from the Sclaves, becoming by that means ſo great, that neglecting his Duty to the Emperour Frederick, ſurnamed Barbaroſſa, and ſiding with the Pope againſt him, he was by him publickly proſcribed, his neighbour Princes armed againſt him, and by their joint Forces outed of all his Eſtates, every one laying hold of that which lay neareſt to him; by means whereof this great Eſtate being parcelled and divided into many parts, the Title of the Duke Elector of Saxony was given by the ſaid Emperour to 1180 17. Bernard of Anhalt, Son of Albert Marqueſs of Brandenburg, and Grandchild of Elica, another Daughter of Duke Magnus: to whom, for his Seat and Habitation, the Emperour gave the City of Wittenberg, the Head ſince that time of this Electorate.

1212 18. Albert, Son of Bernard, from whom the Dukes of Lawenburg do derive their Pedigree.

1273 19. Albert II. Son of Albert the firſt.
1327 20. Rodolph, Son of Albert the 2.
1356 21. Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph the firſt.
1373 22. Wenceſlaus, Son of Rodolph the 2.
1389 23. Rodolph III. Son of Wenceſlaus.
1419 24. Albert III. Son of Rodolph the third, the laſt Elector of Saxony of the Houſe of Anhalt.
1423 25. Frederick, Lantgrave of Duringen, and Marqueſs of Miſnia, (on the failing of the Houſe of Anhalt Anno 1422) created Duke of Saxony by the Emperour Sigiſmund; the Houſe of Lawenburg pretermitted for want of putting in their Claim: by the advancement of which Prince, the Title of Duke of Saxony returned again to the Houſe of Wittikind, (the firſt King and laſt Duke hereof) after it had been alienated into other Families for the ſpace of 200 years.
1428 26. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the firſt.
1464 27. Erneſt, Son of Frederick the ſecond.
1486 28. Frederick III. Son of Erneſt.
1525 29. John, Brother to Frederick the third.
1532 30. John Frederick, Son of John the firſt; a great advancer of the Reformation of Religion, impriſoned and deprived of his Electorſhip by Charles the fifth.
1547 31. Maurice, Couſin-german to the Duke John-Frederick, (as being the Grandſon or Nephew of Albert, the younger Brother of Erneſtus the Duke Elector) created Duke Elector by Charles the fifth, whom afterwards he drave out of Germany; and was ſlain in the Battel of Siffridhuſe, againſt Marqueſs Albert of Brandenburg.
1553 32. Auguſtus, Brother of Maurice.
1586 33. Chriſtian, Son of Auguſtus.
34. Chriſtian II. Son of Chriſtian the firſt.
35. John George, Brother of Chriſtian the ſecond who firſt ſided with the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond againſt the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden againſt the Emperour.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greateſt of any one Prince's of Germany, (the Imperial Family excepted) amounting at the leaſt to 400000 l. per annum; though in multitude of Vaſſals and greatneſs of Territory he come ſhort of ſome of them. And to make up this Sum, (or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariſeth to him out of Silver-mines is no leſs than 130000 l. yearly; the Impoſt laid on Beer in Leipzick only, a City but of two Pariſh-Churches, (by which conjecture at the reſt) being farmed at 20000 l. per annum. Then hath he the Tenths of all ſorts of Increaſe, as of Corn, Wine, &c. the Salt-houſes at Hall and ſome other places, very fair Lands belonging unto his Domain; and beſides this, a ſtanding & perpetual Tax laid upon the Subject towards the maintenance of the War againſt the Turk, granted at firſt in times of Danger and hoſtility, but gathered ever ſince in the times of Peace (as to that Enemy,) under colour of being ready and prepared againſt him. According to the quantity of his Intrado ſo he keeps his State, well ſerved, and better attended than any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Chriſtian, the Father of the preſent Duke, three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations, (beſides the Nobility of his own) all Penſioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt and one of the Earls of Mansfield, both Homagers unto the Saxon, being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxony are Barre-wiſe of ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vert. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, when he confirmed Bernard of Anhalt in this Dukedom. For Bernard deſiring of the Emperour to have ſome difference added to the Ducal Coat, (being before only Barry, Sable and Or) to diſtinguiſh him and his Succeſſors from thoſe of the former Houſe; the Emperour took a Chaplet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it croſs his Buckler or Eſcotcheon of Arms, which was preſently painted on the ſame.

19. BRUNSWICK, and 20. LUNENBURG.

THE Dukedoms of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxony, extracted both from the ſame Root, and many times united in the perſon of the ſame one Prince, ſhall be joined together in the Story, though ſevered in the Chorography or deſcription of them; bounded on the Eaſt with Magdeburg and Mansfield in the Upper Saxony, on the Weſt with Weſtphalia, on the North with Denmark, on the South with Haſſia. The Air in all parts hereof is very cold and comfortleſs, but ſound and healthful: the Soil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Haſſia mountainous and woody, in other parts very plentiful of Corn, and well provided alſo of ſuch other Commodities as uſually do grow in thoſe colder Climates.

But to take the Chorography of them ſeverally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the Eaſt with the Earldom of Mansfield, on the Weſt with Weſtphalen, on the North with Lunenburg, on the South with Haſſia. So called from Brunſwick the chief City, and the Head of this Dukedom.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Goſlar, upon the River Goſe, whence it had the name; of a poor Village made a City by Henry the firſt, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a ſtately Palace; now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmſtat, in the middle way betwixt Brunſwick and Magdeburg; firſt fortified by Charles, Son of Charles the Great, for a Bridle to the neighbouring Sclaves; and being after given to the Abbots of Werden, was by them ſold to William the Duke of Brunſwick. 3. Quedlenburg, built alſo by Henry the firſt, much increaſed ſince by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnery, the Abbeſs whereof had formerly the Priviledges of a Prince of the Empire. 4. Hildeſhim, an ancient City, honoured with an Epiſcopal See by Charles the Great at the firſt Converſion of the Saxons. 5. Grubenhagen, which gave Title to a younger Branch of the Houſe of Brunſwick; a Principality, and a Member of the Empire. 6. Hannover, on the River Lein, well built, very ſtrongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunſwick, upon the River Onacra, which paſſeth through it, paſſed over by many handſom Bridges; the Metropolis of the ancient Saxony, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom, though of it ſelf Imperial, and one of the Hanſe. The City is of a quadrangular form, ſeated in the midſt of a Plain very fruitful of Corn, in compaſs about two Dutch, or eight Engliſh miles, ſomewhat larger than Nurenberg, and leſs than Erfort; containing in that compaſs not above twelve Churches, whereof two have Steeples covered with Lead, a third with Braſs, all the reſt with Tile. It is rich, populous, and ſtrongly fortified, on ſome ſides with a double, on others with a treble Wall; within which Walls are five Cities, diſtinguiſhed by Priviledges, but united by Laws. The whole firſt built by Bruno, Son to Ludolphus

Duke of Saxony, and Uncle to the Emperour Henry the firſt, about the year 861; from whence it had the name of Brunſwick, or Brunonis Vicus, by the more elegant Latinists Brunopolis. 8. Hamelen, on the Eaſt-ſide of the Weſer or Viſurgis, encompaſſed with a deep Moat, (occaſioned by a ſtream cut out of the River, round about which are divers Fortifications, and planted with Ordnance. Nigh unto this Town is the Mountain called alſo Hamelen, unto which the Py'd Piper (as they call him) led the Children of Halberſtadt, where they all ſunk, and were never more ſeen. But of this Story more hereafter, when we come to Tranſylvania. 9. Wolfebaiten, or Wolfenbuttel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunſwick giveth him his Title, yet will it not yield him any Obedience, but reputeth it ſelf amongſt the Hanſe-Towns; for which cauſe there have been great Wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberſtadt, a Biſhop's See, the late Biſhop (or Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick) being Chriſtian Duke of Brunſwick, that noble young Souldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the ſervice of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Couſin-german; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Biſhoprick of great Revenue, and a very large Territory; ſince the alteration of Religion, given with the Title of Adminiſtrator to the Sons of Brunſwick; but now, by the Concluſions at Munſter, aſſigned over to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Halberſtadt, the Family of Brunſwick being to be recompenſed with an alternate Succeſſion in the Biſhoprick of Oſnabrugge, and ſome other additionals. 11. Hetfield, the Seat ſometimes of the old Palatines of Saxony, but not elſe obſervable. 12. Amelungsbame, another Town of the ſaid Palatines, by one of which, called Sigefridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abby: the principal Towns (in thoſe days) of this Palatinate, which, bordering on that part of the Thuringians which is now called Haſſia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Lantgraves of that Country, on the Proſcription of Duke Henry ſirnamed the Lion; but on the faileur of his Line, recovered for the moſt part by the Dukes of Brunſwick, the right Heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG hath on the Eaſt the Dioceſe of Magdeburg, on the Weſt the Dioceſe of Bremen and part of Weſtphalia, on the North the Elb, and on the South the Dukedom of Brunſwick. So called from Lunenburg the chief City, once the Seat of the Dukes.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Lunenburg it ſelf, ſituate on the River Elmenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanſe; ſo called from the Moon here worſhipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form it is, and ſeated in a pleaſant Valley, but with Mountains near it: on one of which, called Calberg, is a very ſtrong Caſtle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be maſters of their Liberties. The walls about it are of Earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep: the Buildings generally fair, (for the moſt part of Brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Council-Houſe; the Streets broad and long, with two ſpacious Market-places, but of no very pleaſing ſmell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth, containing ſix Pariſh-Churches. But the thing moſt conſiderable in it is the Fountain of Salt, the greateſt riches of this City) and the Houſe in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 Rooms, and in each Room 8 Leaden Pans, in which are boiled daily 8 Tuns of Salt, every Tun being ſold for 8 Flemiſh ſhillings, bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; ſome part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, ſome to the City, the reſt to the Adventurers who employ their Stocks on it. 2. Cell, the Seat of the Duke of Lunenburg. 3. Getbern, of no great bigneſs or eſtimation, but for a ſtrong Caſtle of the Dukes. 4. Oldendorp, ſituate betwixt the Venaw and the River Eſca, memorable for the great Battel fought near unto it, Anno 1633, betwixt the Imperialliſts and the Swedes, the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, beſides ſuch as were found dead in the fields and high-ways, all covered over with dead bodies, took 1500 of them priſoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordnance, good ſtore of Ammunition, and three Mules laden with Silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this Victory drawing in Hamelen and other places of importance which ſtood out before. 5. Verden, an Epiſcopal See, but made a Lay fee, as moſt other Biſhopricks amongſt the Lutherans; the Profits thereof being received commonly by a Son of Denmark with the Title of Adminiſtrator, and laſtly, by the Treaty of Munſter appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden, the Kings whereof to be entituled Dukes of Verden. 6. Rodenburg, the chief Seat of the Biſhops of Verden.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe Dukedoms were the Dugnblini of Tacitus, with ſome parts of the Chauci and Cheruſci: theſe laſt of moſt fame for the Blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany after Druſus for Auguſtus Cæſar, who, behaving himſelf with great Inſolency towards the Natives, was ſet upon by theſe Cheruſci and their Confederates, under the Conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongſt them; himſelf ſlain, and his whole Army, conſiſting of three Legions, miſerably cut off and deſpightfully uſed: which Loſs, and the Shame thereof, ſo diſtracted the Emperour, (not formerly accuſtomed to the like Misfortunes) that he was many times obſerved to tear his Beard, knock his Head againſt the Poſts and cry out in the bitterneſs of his Paſſion, Redde mihi Legiones, Quintili Vare. Having long time after this maintained their Liberty, (for the Romans kept themſelves from that time forwards on the French ſide of the Rhene) they were at laſt ſubdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3 Otho's, Emperours of the Romans and Dukes of Saxony; who, looking on the Empire as a ſtate of Inheritance, diminiſhed both the Grandeur and Revenue of their ancient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or Endowment of many Biſhopricks, and partly by the erection of many petie Seigniouries to be holden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongſt which that of Lunenburg was none of the leaſt, continuing as a State diſtinct, till ſuch time as Bernard Lord of Lunenburg was by the Emperour Otho the third made Duke of Saxony, and created the firſt Duke-Elector, whereby again it was united to the reſt of that Dukedom, the greateſt part whereof he held in his actual poſſeſſion, together with a Superiority or Juriſdiction over all the reſidue, (the great Biſhopricks excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is ſaid: and it continued thus united till the Proſcription of Henry ſirnamed the Lion, ſpoken of before; whoſe Reconciliation being made by means of Henry the ſecond of England, whoſe Daughter Maud he had formerly married, the Emperour Barbaroſſa reſtored to him again the Cities of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, with their ſeveral Territories, of which his two Sons Henry and William were firſt created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunſwick, and the other of Lunenburg, by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond. Which Honours and Eſtates do ſtill remain unto their Poſterities. Before I come to the Succeſſions of theſe Princes, I ſhall crave leave to ſpeak of the Original of the Guelphian Family, Dukes at the ſame time of Bavaria and Saxony; of which they are at this time the ſole remainder. A Family derived from one Guelphus, (whence it had the name) the Son of Iſenberdus, Earl of Altorff in Schwaben; whoſe Wife,called Jermintrudis, having accuſed a poor woman of Adultery, and cauſed her to be grievouſly puniſhed for having 12 Children at a Birth, was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them Sons. Her Huſband being abſent at the time of her Delivery, ſhe commanded the Nurſe to kill 11 of them; fearing, it ſeems, the like ſhame and puniſhment as by her inſtigation was inflicted on the other woman. The Nurſe going to perform this ungodly command was met by the old Earl then returning homewards; who asked her what ſhe had in her Apron. She made anſwer, Whelps. He deſired to ſee them: ſhe denied him. Angry at this refuſal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own Sons, pretty ſweet Babes, and of moſt promiſing Countenances. Examining the matter, he found out the truth, and injoyning the old Trot to be ſecret in it, he put the Children out to Nurſe. Six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feaſt moſt of his own and his Ladies Kindred, and attiring the young Boys all alike, preſented them unto their Mother; who ſuſpecting, by the number of them, what the matter was, confeſſed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelps, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies which the Nurſe told him ſhe had in her Apron. From the eldeſt of theſe Guelphs or Guelps ſucceeded that Henry-Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorff, whom Conrade the ſecond made Duke of Bavaria; many of whoſe poſterity enjoyed that Dukedom: encreaſed at laſt by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxony, in the perſon of Duke Henry ſirnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the firſt Dukes of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, whoſe Succeſſion followeth in this Order.

The Dukes of BRVNSWICK and LVNENBVRG.

1. Henry, ſirnamed the Lion, the laſt Duke of Saxony, and the firſt of this Title.

	Brunſwick.		Lunenburg.
1195	2. Henry firſt Earl, after Duke of Brunſwick.	1195	2. William, firſt Earl, after Duke of Lunenburg.

1213 3. Otho, Son of William, Duke of Lunenburg; after the death of Henry, Duke of Brunſwick alſo.

1254	4. Albert, Son of Otho.	1252	4. John, Son of Otho.
1279	5. Albert II. Son of Albert.	1261	5. Otho II. Son of John.
1318	6. Otho II. Son of Albert the 2.	1330	6. Otho III. Son of Otho the 2.

1334 7. Magnus, Son of Albert II. on the failing of the other houſe, enjoyed both Eſtates.
1368 8. Magnus II. Son of Magnus the firſt.
1073 9. Henry, Son of Magnus the ſecond.

1416	10. William, Son of Henry.		10. Bernard, Brother of Magnus the ſecond.
1482	11. William II. Son of William.	1434	11. Frederick II. Son of Bernard.
1503	12. Henry II. Son of William the ſecond.	1478	12. Otho III. Son of Frederick the 2.
1514	13. Henry III. Son of Henry the 2.	1514	13. Henry III. Son of Otho the 3.
1568	14. Julius, Son of Henry the 3.	1532	14. Otho IV. Son of Henry the 3.
1589	15. Henry IV. Son of Julius, who married the Lady Elizabeth, Siſter to Anne Queen of England.		15. Erneſt, the Brother of Otho, ſucceeded in his Brother's life time, ſurrendring his Eſtate for an Annual Penſion.
	16. Frederick-Vlric, Son of Elizabeth of Denmark, and of Henry-Julius.	1546	16. Henry IV. Son of Erneſt.
1634	17. Auguſtus, Son of Henry Duke of Lunenburg, ſucceeded, on the death of Frederick-Vlrick, and the faileur of the Houſe of Brunſwick in him, in this Dukedom.	1590	17. Erneſt II. Son of Henry the 4.
			18. Wolfgangus, the Brother of Henry the 4. and Uncle of Erneſtus the 2. now Duke of Lunenburg, Anno 1648.

The Arms of theſe Dukedoms were firſt the ſame, that is to ſay, Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; which Arms they took by reaſon of their extraction from the Kings of England, then Dukes of Normandy; retained to this day by the Dukes of Brunſwick, without any addition. But thoſe of Lunenburg have added three Coats more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly, 1. Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; 2. Azure, Semé of Hearts Gules, a Lion of the firſt, Armed and Crowned Or; 3. Azure, a Lion Argent, Crowned Gules; and 4 Gules, within a Border Componie Or and Azure, a Lion of the ſecond, Armed of the third.

HASSIA is bounded on the North with Brunſwick, on the South with Veteravia or the State of Weteraw, on the Eaſt with Thuringia, and on the Weſt with Weſtphalia. So called from the Heſſi, who, having vanquiſhed the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Country, poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached here by Boniface, or Winefride, an Engliſh-Saxon, (afterwards Archbiſhop of Mentz) Anno 730, or thereabouts. Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, That in old times there were golden Prelates and wooden Chalices, but in his time wooden Prelates and golden Chalices. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. That once the Chriſtians had blind Churches, and lightſom hearts; but now they have lightſom Churches, and blind hearts.

The Country is very fruitful of Corn, and affordeth good Paſturage for the feeding of Cattel, of which they have great Droves and Herds in many places; with great abundance of Stags and other Deer for the pleaſures of Hunting, harboured in the Woods hereof, with which in many parts of it it is very much ſhaded. It breedeth alſo on the Downs good ſtore of Sheep, enriched with the fineſt Fleece of any in Germany; the Staple Commodity of this Country: and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of Braſs, Lead, and other Metals, which yield great profit to the people.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Alendorff, on the Weſer, (or Viſurgis) of much eſteem for the Springs or Fountains of Salt which are thereabouts. 2. Fritzlar, upon the Eder, well walled, and ſituate in a fruitful and pleaſant Soil, belonging to the Archbiſhop and Elector of Mentz; but, in regard of the convenient Situation of it, much aimed at, many times attempted, and ſometimes forcibly poſſeſſed, both by the Lantgraves of Haſſia and Dukes of Saxony. 3. Fulda, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monaſtery there founded by Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz by the name of Saint Saviours, the Abbat of which is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellour of the Empreſs, and Lord of a goodly Territory in this Country, called from hence Stift Fuld. 4. Frankenberg, on the Eder alſo, ſo called from the French, who incamped there in their Wars againſt the Saxons; firſt founded by Theodorick the French King Anno 520, but much enlarged by Charles the Great about the year 804. 5. Eſchewege, on the brow of an Hill, near the River Wert; of great trading for Woad, of which the Fields adjoyning yield a rich increaſe. Being deſtroyed by the Hungarians, it was reedified and enlarged by the Emperour Henry the 2. and having ſuffered much miſery in the long War between Adolph Archbiſhop of Mentz and the Lantgraves of Haſſia, it fell at laſt into the poſſeſſion of the Lantgrave, Anno 1387. 6. Melſingen, on the River Fuld. 7. Darmſtadt, lately, if not at the preſent, the Seat and Inheritance of Count Ludowick, of the younger Houſe of the Lantgraves, taken priſoner by Count Mansfield Anno 1622, and his whole Country expoſed unto ſpoil and rapine, becauſe (beſides many other ill offices) he was the chief perſuader of the Princes of the Union to diſband their Forces, provided for defence of themſelves and the Palatinate, and to reconcile themſelves to the Emperour. 8. Marpurg, the Seat of the ſecond Houſe of the Lantgraves, deſcending from that Philip who was Lantgrave in the time of Charles the fifth, whom he ſo valiantly withſtood; pleaſantly ſeated on the Lon, amongſt Viny Downs and ſhady Mountains; honoured with an Univerſity founded here by Lewis Biſhop of Munſter, Anno 1426, and beautified with a magnificent Caſtle (the ordinary dwelling of thoſe Princes) ſituate on an high Hill ſomewhat out of the Town, wich gives it a very gallant Proſpect over the Town and Country. 9. Geiſſen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Caſſels, and a ſmall Univerſity alſo. 10. Dietz, upon the River Lon, belonging alſo to the Houſe of Caſſels. 11. Caſſels, the chief Town and ordinary Reſidence of the Lantgraves of the elder Houſe, who are hence ſometimes called the Lantgraves of Caſſels: commodiouſly ſeated in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil, and well fortified with ſtrong earthen Walls and deep Ditches; but the Houſes in it of no great beauty, being compoſed for the moſt part of Wood, Thatch and Clay.

Within the limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, not ſubject to the Lantgraves of Haſſia, though included within the Bounds of it before laid down, taking up the Weſtern parts thereof, where it meets with Weſtphalia: in figure very near a ſquare, each ſide of which is of the length of ſix ordinary Dutch, or twenty four Engliſh miles. The Soil is much of the ſame nature with the reſt of Haſſia, ſave that it hath ſome veins of Quickſilver and inexhauſtible Mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; theſe laſt in greateſt pleanty about Wildung and the ſtrong Caſtle of Eiſenberg, two of the beſt Towns and places of it. Others of chief note are, 3. Waldeck it ſelf, on the River Eder, the firſt Seat of the Earls hereof, who have here an ancient Caſtle, from whence the whole Country takes its name. 4. Mengerickhuſe, in a fair Caſtle whereof live the preſent Earls. 5. Witterberg, in a pleaſant and fruitful Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twitſche and Abra. 6. Corbach, famous in the times of Albertus Magnus for its Golden Mines, yielding great profit to theſe Earls. The Pedigree of which Earls is fetched from one Wittikind Earl of Snalenberg, whom Charles the Great made Advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Weſtphalia, being an Office in thoſe times of great Juriſdiction. By Wittikind the ſecond, one of his Succeſſors, this Office was ſurrendred into the Hands of the Chapter, for the ſum of 300 marks in Silver: and to cut off all farther Claims, Henry, the Nephew of this Wittikind by his Son Otho, was by the Chapter gratified with the Town of Waldeck, of which he was the firſt Earl; whoſe Nephew Henry, ſirnamed Ferreus, ſubdued Corbach, Anno 1366, and added it to his Eſtate. By a third Henry, Grandchild of this Ferreus, or Man of Iron, this Earldom, formerly held in Fee of the Church of Paderborn, was firſt under the Patronage and Protection of the Lantgraves of Haſſia, Anno 1428, as it continueth to this day. The Earls hereof content with their own Eſtates, and more addicted to the Book than unto the Sword, have acted little in the Wars to improve their Fortunes.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the reſt of Haſſia, and alſo of the County of Naſſau in Veteravia near adjoining, were the Catti, or Chatti, mentioned by the Ancients. It was firſt conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman Forces) by the Heſſi, and both ſubdued not long after by the Thuringians: ſubject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen, till the death of Henry, the laſt of the Male-iſſue of Lewis of Orleans. In the diviſion of whoſe Eſtate, the Weſtern moiety of Duringen fell to the ſhare of Henry Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitors, who, leaving the Title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marqueſs of Miſnia, took to himſelf the Title of the Lantgrave of Heſſen, in memory of the Heſſi ſpoken of before. Of his Succeſſors the moſt puiſſant was that Philip who in the time of Charles the fifth much ſwayed the Affairs of Germany. Anno 1520 he diſcomfitted King Ferdinand, and reſtored Vlrick to the Dukedom of Wirtenberg. Anno 1530 he united all the Proteſtant Princes and Cities of Germany in a common League at Smalcald, for the defence of the Proteſtant Religion. An. 1545 he undertook the Cauſe of Goſlaria againſt the Duke of Brunſwick, whom in a ſet Battel he took priſoner, together with his Son, and poſſeſſed his Country. Anno 1548 he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany in an offenſive and defenſive League againſt Charles the fifth. But that War ſucceeded not proſperouſly. For the Duke of Saxony, his perpetual Confederate, being taken Priſoner, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Emperour at Kala, or Hale, in Duringen; his Sons-in-Law, Duke Maurice, the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, and Wolfang Prince of Deuxponts, having given their Bonds for his return. The Conditions of his Pardon were, firſt, That he ſhould diſmantle all his Towns, except Caſſels. 2. That he ſhould yield up unto the Emperour all his Munition. 3. That he ſhould pay unto the Emperour 150000 Crowns. The ſame night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to Supper, his Sons-in-law of Saxony and Brandenburg accompanying him. After Supper he was, contrary to the Laws of Hoſpitality and the Emperour's exact Promiſe, detained Priſoner. The fallacy ſtood thus: In the Emperour's Compact with the three Princes the words were, that the Lantgrave ſhould be kept, Nicht in einig gefengknes, that is, Not in any priſon; which the Emperour's Secretary, by a ſmall daſh of his Pen, turned into Nicht in ewig geſengknes, that is, Not in everlaſting priſon. Well, in Priſon he ſtaid five years; which being expired, he was again ſet at large by Duke Maurice, the Overthrower and Reſtorer of the German Liberty. The reſidue of theſe Lantgraves in their ſeveral times occur in the enſuing Catalogue of 1263 1. Henry of Brabant, Son of Henry Duke of Brabant, and of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the ſixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, after a nine years War betwixt him and the Marqueſs of Miſnia, divided the Eſtate, and took unto himſelf the Title of Lantgrave of Heſſen.

1308 2. Otho and John, Sons of Henry.
1323 3. Henry II. and Lewis, Sons of Otho.
1376 4. Herman, the Son of Lewis.
1414 5. Lewis II. Son of Herman, ſurnamed the Mild.
1458 6. Lewis III. Son of Lewis the Mild.
7. William, the eldeſt Son of Lewis the third, diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by
8. William II. his youngeſt Brother.
1509 9. Philip, the famous Lantgrave ſpoken of before, Son of William the ſecond.
1567 10. William III. eldeſt Son of Philip, ſucceded in one moiety of the Eſtate, and reſided at Caſſels, the other moiety being divided betwixt his Brethren, Ludowick of Marpurg, and George of Darmſtadt, Father of Ludowick of Darmſtadt before mentioned.
1590 11. Maurice, eldeſt Son of William the third.
12. William IV. Son of Maurice, now living, 1648.

The Arms of theſe Lantgraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces, Argent and Gules, crowned Or. Which, being properly and originally the Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, were given by Conradus Salicus, Duke of Fraconia and Emperour, to Lewis of Orleans, at ſuch time as he inveſted him in the Lantgravedom of Thuringia: on the expiration of whoſe Line they were challenged and born by the Lantgraves of Haſſia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6. and his Brother Henry, the laſt male Princes of that Houſe.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Haſſia, Brunſwick, and part of Lunenburg; on the Weſt with the Biſhoprick of Colen, Cleve, Over-Yſſel, Weſt and Eaſt-Frieſland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holſtein; and on the South with Weteravia, and ſome part of Haſſia.

It was thus called of the Waſtphali, a Tribe or Diviſion of the Saxons, diſtinguiſhed heretofore into the Tranſalbinos, inhabiting beyond the Elb or Albis, in the County of Holſtein, now a part of Denmark, the Ooſtphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Sala and the Weſer, taking up the Biſhopricks of Breme, Verden, Hildeſheim, Halberſtadt, and Meydeburg, with the Dukedoms of Lunenburg and Brunſwick, the Angrivarians, taking up the North-weſt part of the modern Weſtphalen, betwixt the Biſhoprick of Breme and the Earldom of Oldenburg; and finally, the Weſtphali, or weſtern Saxons, inhabiting the reſt of the modern Weſtphalen, with the Earldoms of Marck, Berg, Zutphen, the Seignioury of Over-Yſſel, and ſome parts of Gelderland and Holland. But the Saxons being ſubjugated by the power of the French, and ſeveral new Eſtates erected out of that old Stock; the remnant of the Weſtphali and Angrivarians the Biſhoprick of Breme being added unto the account,) were comprehended and united in the name of WESTPHALEN.

The Soil, according to the ſeveral parts of it, is of different natures: the parts adjoyning to the Weſer being deſart and barren; thoſe towards the Earldoms of Marck and Bergen mountainous and full of Woods; the Biſhoprick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry Sands, Heaths and unfruitful Thickets, like the wilde parts of Windſor Foreſt betwixt Stanes and Fernham. In other parts it is exceeding plentiful of Corn, and of excellent Paſturage; ſtored with great plenty of wild Fruits, and (by reaſon of the many Woods) abundance of Acorns; with infinite Herds of Swine (which they breed up with thoſe natural helps) of ſo good a reliſh, that a Gammon of Weſtphalie Bacon is reckoned for a principal Diſh at a great man's Table.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci majores about Bremen; the Chamavi, Angrivarii and Bructeri, inhabiting about Munſter, Oſnabrug, and ſo towards the Land of Colen; and part of the Cheruſci (before ſpoken of) taking up thoſe parts which lie neareſt unto Brunſwick and Lunenburg. All of them were vanquiſhed by Druſus the Son-in-law of Auguſtus, but ſoon reſtored to their former Liberty by the great Overthrow given by the Cheruſci and their Aſſociates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards, uniting into one name with the French, they expulſed the Romans out of Gaul, leaving their forſaken and ill-inhabited Seats to be taken by the Saxons, with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themſelves both in Name and Nation. Of that great Body it continued a conſiderable Member, (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom,) till the Proſcription & Deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion: at what time the parts beyond the Weſer were uſurped by Bernard Biſhop of Paderborn; thoſe betwixt the Weſer and the Rhene, by Philip Archbiſhop of Colen, whoſe Succeſſors ſtill hold the Title of Dukes of Weſtphalen: the Biſhopricks of Breme, Munſter, Paderborn and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly Territories, had ſome Accruments alſo out of this Eſtate, every one catching hold of that which lay neareſt to him. But not to make too many Subdiviſions of it, we will divide it only into theſe two parts, viz. 1. Weſtphalen ſpecially ſo called, and 2. the Biſhoprick of Bremen.

1. In WESTPHALEN ſpecially ſo called, which is that part hereof which lieth next to Cleve, the places of moſt obſervation are, 1. Geſeke, a Town of good repute; 2. Brala, a Village of great Beauty; 3. Arusberg, and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the Title of Prefectures. 5. Wadenborch: 6. Homberg, lording it over fair and ſpacious Territories. All which, with two Lordſhips and eight Prefectures more, diſperſed from the Dukedom of Engern and County of Surland, belong unto the Biſhop of Colen, the titulary Duke of Weſtphalen, and really of Angrivaria, (Engern) as he ſtyles himſelf: the Title and poſſeſſion of Duke of Engern being acquired unto this See by Bruno Archbiſhop hereof, Son of Henry the firſt, Emperour and King of Germany, ſirnamed the Fowler, with the conſent of Otho the firſt, his elder Brother. 7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) ſeated in that part hereof which is called Weſterwald; a Town of conſequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers. 8. Rhenen, 9. Schamlat, and 10. Beckem; reaſonable good Towns, all of the Biſhoprick of Munſter. 11. Munſter it ſelf, famous for the Treaty, and Concluſions made upon that Treaty, for the Peace of Germany; ſeated upon the River Ems, and ſo called from a Monaſtery here founded by Charles the Great, which gave beginning to the Town; ſuppoſed to be that Mediolanum which Ptolomy placeth in this Tract. A beautiful and well-fortified City, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporal Lord of it: famous for the woful Tragedies here acted by a lawleſs crue of Anabaptiſts, who choſe themſelves a King (that famous Tailor. John of Leyden) whom they called King of Sion,, as they named the City New Jeruſalem, proclaimed a Community both of Goods and Women, cut off the heads of all that oppoſed their doings; and, after many fanatick and deſperate actions, were by the care and induſtry of the Biſhop and his Confederates brought to condign puniſhment. The Story is to be ſeen at large in Sleiden, Mr. Hooker's Preface, and ſome modern Pamphlets; wherein, as in a Mirrour, we may plainly ſee the face of the preſent Times. 12. Oſnabrug, firſt built, as ſome ſay, by Julius Cæſar, as others, by the Earls of Engern; but neither ſo ancient as the one, nor of ſo late a ſtanding as the others make it. Here is an Epiſcopal See, founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the Priviledges of an Univerſity; liberally endowed at the firſt erection of the ſame, and ſince ſo well improved both in Power and Patrimony, that an alternate Succeſſion in it by the Dukes of Brunſwick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munſter, as a fit Compenſation for the Biſhoprick of Halberſtadt, (otherwiſe diſpoſed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13. Quakenburg, on the River Haſe. 14. Warendorp, and 15. Wildſhuſen; Towns of that Biſhoprick. 16. Paderborn, an Epiſcopal See alſo, founded by Charles the Great at the firſt Converſion of the Saxons; more ancient than ſtrong, yet more ſtrong than beautiful. 17. Ringelenſtein, and 18. Oſſendorf; belonging to the Biſhop of Paderborn. 19. Minden, upon the Weſer, another of the Epiſcopal Sees founded by Charles the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to Lay-uſes ſince the Reformation, under colour of Adminiſtration of the Goods of the Biſhoprick, and now, by the Concluſions at Munſter, ſetled for ever on the Electors of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Minden. 20. Rintelen, a ſtrong Town, conveniently ſeated on the Weſer, not far from Minden, to the Biſhop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Weſtphalen had formerly been a part of S. Peter's Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy: but there are ſome Free Cities and Secular Princes which have ſhares therein. As 1. Warborg, a neat Town, but ſeated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dimula; a Town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and ſold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it ſelf under the Earls hereof, now governed in the nature of a Free Eſtate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brakel, accounted of as Imperial alſo. 3. Hervorden, a Town of good ſtrength and note, governed by its own Laws and Magiſtrates, under the Protection of Colen. 4. Lemgow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe; but by them ſo well priviledged and enfranchiſed, that now it governeth it ſelf as a Free Eſtate. Here is alſo 5. the Town and County of Ravenſperg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the Right of that Houſe to the Elector of Brandenburg: as alſo 6. the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the Weſt ſide of the Weſer; the Pedigree of the Earls whereof ſome fetch from that Sp. Manlius who defended the Roman Capitol againſt the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geeſe which preſerved that Capitol;) others with greater modeſty look no higher for it than to the times of Charles the Great, one of the noble Families of the ancient Saxons. 7. Here alſo ſtands the Town and Caſtle of Aremberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony thereunto adjoyning; which, being much increaſed by the acceſſion of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir-general of this Houſe conveyed in Marriage to Engelbert, the 9. Earl of Marck, whoſe ſecond Son, called Eberhard, (but the only one he had by this Venter) ſucceeded in his Mother's Eſtates and Honour's; which were kept undivided, till Eberhard, the 6. Lord thereof of the Houſe of Marck, contenting himſelf with the Titles and Eſtates of Aremberg, left Sedan and the pieces which belonged unto it to his younger brother Robert. The great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called alſo Robert, created the firſt Earl of Aremberg, left his Eſtates and Titles to his Siſter Margaret, married to John Lord of Brabanſon, a perſon of great note and power in the Belgick Provinces, and faithful to the laſt in the Cauſe and Quarrel of King Philip the 2. in which finally he loſt his life, Anno 1568, leaving both his Eſtates and Title unto Charles his Son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Aremberg in the Stories of the Belgick Wars, in which he was no leſs conſiderable for his eminent Valour, than for his ſingular Fidelity to his Lord and Maſter. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but theſe moſt conſiderable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their Acknowledgments hereof little more than titular; though ſince in danger of performing more real Services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the Surprize of Holſtein and ſome part of Denmark, Anno 1627, gaining ſo far upon this Country, that, had not the King of Sweden come in ſo ſeaſonably, he had made himſelf abſolute Maſter of it, and, by the opportunity of the ſituation of it on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to ſome great Extremities. As for the Title of Duke of Weſtphalen and Engern, it hath been long uſed (as before was ſaid) by the Biſhops of Colen; as alſo (but with better Right as to that of Weſtphalen) by the Houſe of Lawenburg, deſcended from the ancient Electoral Family, writing themſelves in that regard Dukes of Saxony, Weſtphalen, and Angrivaria or Engern.

2. The Biſhoprick of BREME lieth on the other ſide of the Weſer, extending as far as to the Elb and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme, the principal City, ſeated on the Weſer, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous, and rich, beautified with fair and even Streets, and very ſtrongly fortified againſt all Invaſions both by Art and Nature; the Town being ſo ſeated amongſt Fens, occaſioned by the Over-flowings of the River, that it may be eaſily drowned on all ſides, to keep off an Enemy; adorned alſo with a ſpacious Market-place, a fair Council-houſe, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Archbiſhop, who is the Temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other Towns of ſpecial note are 2. Oſenbridge, not far from Breme, from whence great quantity of Linen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3. Aruſten, on the Weſer alſo. 4. Otterendorp, on the River Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Boxtebude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the hither ſide of the water. 6. Stode, Stade, or Stadium, ſeated on the River Zwinghe, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accounted the ancienteſt Town in all Saxony, and one of the firſt which was enrolled amongſt the Hanſe, and by ſpecial Priviledge had the pre-emption of all the Rheniſh Wine that paſſed by them, and the right alſo of Coining money. But being over-topped by the Power and Trade of Hamburg, (5 Dutch miles from it) it grew at length ſo poor and in ſuch decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90 l. per annum, ſo that they were fain to ſell their Priviledges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themſelves under the Protection of the Biſhops of Breme. It revived again upon the coming thither of the Engliſh Merchants, who, finding ſome hard meaſure from the Hamburgers, fixed their Staple here: by means whereof the Citizens in ſhort time grew exceeding wealthy, the Buildings fair and beautiful, the Town ſtrongly fortified. It is ſituate in a place ſo eaſily overwhelmed with water, that the people, in oſtentation of their Strength and Security, uſed to have Ordnance of Stone planted over their Gates. But the late German Wars have made them ſenſible of their folly; when, notwithſtanding their new Works, and an Engliſh Garriſon under Sir Charles Morgan, they were compelled to ſubmit themſelves to the Earl of Tilly Anno 1627, recovered after by the Swedes, in the courſe of their Victories.

As for the Biſhoprick of Bremen, it was firſt founded by Charles the Great, in the perſon of Willibrode an Engliſh Saxon, one of the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel in theſe parts of this Country. The Town, before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archiepiſcopal See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into eſteem, as the Biſhop did in Power and Patrimony, till they became Lords of this Tract. It was governed ſince the Reformation of Religion by Lay-Biſhops, or Adminiſtrators of the Rents of the Biſhoprick, which under that Title they inverted to their proper uſe. And now of late, by the Concluſions made at Munſter, is ſetled as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweden, to be enjoyed; together with the Biſhoprick of Verden, by the Kings thereof, with the Title of Dukes of Breme and Verden: the ancient Liberties of thoſe Cities, formerly granted by their Biſhops, being ſtill preſerved.

22. EAST-FRIESLAND.

EAST-FRIESLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Weſer, by it parted from Weſtphalen; on the Weſt with the River Ems, which parteth it from Groeningen and the reſt of Weſt-Frieſland; on the North with the German Ocean; and on the South with the Earldom of Marck, and part of Cleveland. So called from the Friſii, who, caſting out the old Inhabitants, poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and called it by their own name, Frieſland: divided by the Ems, or Amiſus, into the Weſtern, ſpoken of amongſt the Netherlands, and the Eaſtern or Eaſt-Frieſland, in which now we are.

The nature of the Soil we ſhall ſee anon, when we come to the Subdiviſions of it. The chief Rivers (beſides thoſe of 1. Ems, and 2. Weſer, ſpoken of elſewhere) are 3. Jada, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence De Jade. 4. Dollaert, on which ſtandeth the City of Emden. 5. Delm, and 6. Honta, neighboured by Delmenhorſt and Oldenburg, Towns of this Country. The whole is divided into 1. The County of Emden, or Eaſt-Frieſland properly ſo called; and 2. The Earldom of Oldenburg.

1. EAST FRIESLAND ſpecially ſo called hath on the Weſt the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the Eaſt and South the Earldom of Oldenburg: called alſo the County of EMDEN, from the fair Town of Emden, the chief City of it. The Soil hereof is very fruitful both in Corn and Paſturage, ſending great ſtore of Oxen, Horſes, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheeſe, and all ſorts of Grain, into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not eaſily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatſoever. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Emden, ſo called from the Ems, on which it is ſituate; Dollaert a ſmall River falling here into it: a noted and well-traded Town, beautified with a Haven ſo deep and large, that the greateſt Ships with full Sail are admitted into it. The people are rich, affirmed to have 60 ſhips of 100 tuns apiece, and 600 leſſer Barks, of their own; beſides 700 Buſſes and Fiſher-boats, maintained for the moſt part by their Herring-fiſhing on the Coaſts of England. The Buildings are generally fair, both private and publick, eſpecially the Church, the Town-Hall, and Earl's Palace. This laſt is a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle, ſituate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all ſides encompaſſed by the Sea, and yet not ſtrong enough to preſerve the Townſmen in their due Obedience: who in the year 1595, taking advantage of the Abſence of their Earl, kept him out of their Town, becauſe he ſeemed not to approve the Calvinian humour; and have ſince governed in the nature of a Commonwealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better Eſtabliſhment and ſupport. So eaſily is Religion made a maſk to diſguiſe Rebellion. 2. Aurick, by ſome called Anſeling, ſeated in the Inlands, rich and well walled, of great reſort by reaſon of the pleaſure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Foreſts and Woods adjoyning, drawing hither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Eſen, on the Sea-ſhore, which gives the Title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth alſo, 4. Jever, ſituate on the Weſt of the River Jada; but both Earls ſubject to the Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland. 5. Vredeburg, (that is to ſay, the Free Village) ſo called from ſome Immunities granted by the Earls; poſſeſſed a while by thoſe of Brunſwick, who fenced and garriſoned it for themſelves, but in the end recovered by Ezard the 2. Earl. 6. Broeck, the Seat and proper Government of the Anceſtors of theſe Earls; from whence the parts adjoyning are called Broeckmerland. 7. Norden, another Prefecture or Captainſhip of the ſaid Anceſtors. 8. Dunort, a ſtrong Caſtle and Retiring-place of the Earls. 9. Lingben, upon the Ems, a ſtrong Town well fortified, and as well garriſoned; belonging to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Frieſland, even to Ditmarſh and the Confines of Denmark. A Dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5. of the Emperour Frederick the 3. in right whereof the King of Spain, as Heir of the Houſe of Burgundy, hath ſome pre-eminence over Emden, of little uſe to him ſince the falling off of the Belgick Provinces. More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Caſtles, ſtately Dwelling-houſes, and well-built Villages, an incredible number; ſtanding ſo thick, that in many places they join together: ſome of them being withal ſo large, ſo well peopled, and of Streets ſo ſpacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany. Of all which the moſt City-like is named Leere.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Chauci minores, deſcribed by Pliny, to be ſo barbarous a people, and ſo deſtitute of all neceſſary Proviſion for the life of man, that they had no drink but Rain-water, preſerved in great Troughs before the doors of their Cottages. Theſe were outed or ſubdued by the Friſons, a neighbouring People poſſeſſing North Holland, the Diſtrict of Vtrecht, with the Countries of Groening and Weſt-Frieſland, who, having once paſſed over the Ems, extended their Dominions as far as Denmark; governed by Kings, but intermingled with and over-powred by the Saxons, till the time of Charles the Great, by whom the laſt King Roboald overcome in fight was perſwaded to receive the Sacrament of Holy Baptiſm: but being told that his Friends and Kinsfolks were in Hell, becauſe no Chriſtians, Neither will I (ſaith he) be of that Profeſſion, for I love to be amongſt my Kindred. After this, Frieſland was a Member of the French Kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charles the Bald, Anno 893, at which time all Frieſland on the Weſt ſide of the Ems was conferred upon him; poſſeſſed, but not without much War and Bloudſhed, by his Succeſſors; the Friſons ever and anon rebelling againſt them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Thoſe parts of it on the other ſide of the Ems remained unto the German Empire: governed by Deputies, puties, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accomptable to the Emperors for the Adminiſtration, till the year 1453, in which Vlrick, Governour hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Embden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland, tranſmitting the Eſtate and Title unto his Poſterity.

Earls of EAST-FRIESLAND.

1453 1. Vlricus, Son of Enno, the Son of Ezardus, Captains or Governours for the Empire in Broeck and Norden, made the firſt Earl of Eaſt-Frieſland by the Emperour Frederick.
1466 2. Ezard, the Son of Vlrick, who got Vredeburg from the Citizens of Brunſwick.
1528 3. Enno, the Son of Ezard, who regained Greetzyl, formerly uſurped by the Dukes of Geldres.
1540 4. Ezard II. Son of Enno, who married Katharine, Daughter to Guſtavus the firſt of Sweden.
5. Enno II. Son of Ezard the 2. and the Lady Katherine.
1586 6. Rodolphus-Chriſtianus, Son of Enno the 2. who, being well affected to the Lutheran Forms, (firſt introduced in the time of Enno the firſt) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Emden, diſpoſſeſſed of that City, Anno 1595.
1608 7. Enno-Ludovicus, Son of Rodolphus-Chriſtianus, ſucceeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is ſtill living, for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of Eaſt-Frieſland are Argent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Heurts Or, 4, 3, 2, 1.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBURG containeth that part of this Country which lieth on the Weſt-ſide of the Weſer, betwixt the Biſhoprick of Munſter and Eaſt-Frieſland ſpecially ſo called, and ſo extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg, the chief City of it, and the Head of this Earldom.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, but in Paſtures ſpecially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel, and furniſh not this Country only, but ſome of their German Neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations, with Horſes, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheeſe. Here is alſo good ſtore of Pulſe, Barley and Oats; plenty of Fruits, and Trees of all ſorts; large Woods, and thoſe well ſtored with Veniſon, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of Hunting. But the Air is cold and foggy in ſome extremity; eſpecially in winter, and nigh the Sea.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Oldenburg, on the River Honta, repaired, if not built, by Otho the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptiſt. A Town of no great ſtate or beauty; the Houſes being generally of Clay, but the Caſtle (the Dwelling-place of the Earls) of well-hewn Stones; of an orbicular form, with deep Ditches of water, the Town and Caſtle both being ſtrongly fortified. 2. Delmenhorſt, on the River Delm, a ſtrong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247 by Otho, Brother of Earl Chriſtian the 2. and having been 65 years in poſſeſſion of the Biſhops of Munſter, was ſuddenly ſurprized on Palm-Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1547, continuing ever ſince part of this Eſtate. 3. Beckhuſen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea which is called De Jade. 4. Eguarden. 5. Ovelgard; both ſeated on a long Languet or Demy-Iſland betwixt the ſaid De Jade and the River Weſer, called Butiada: both taken and the laſt well fortified by John Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1520, belonging formerly to the Prefecture of Eaſt-Frieſland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Weſterberg, the chief Town, of a ſpacious Territory. 7. Vriejade, a ſtrong piece on the River Jade, built by Earl Chriſtiern, one of the younger Branches of the Houſe of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum. 9. Jadelle, places of principal importance; the one on the River Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is alſo within this Earldom the Province of Amerlander, ſuppoſed by ſome to have been the Seat of the Ambrones, who accompanied the Cimbri and Teutones in their Expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were ſlain by Marius.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themſelves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Wittikindus, the laſt King and firſt Duke of the Saxons; who having about the year 850, built a ſtrong Caſtle on the Borders of Bremen, in the honour of his Wife Alteburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Alteburgum, ſo called by the Latiniſts to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his Male-Iſſue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elimar, the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Friſian bloud, who had married Richſa, the Daughter of John, the fifth Earl of this Family. From him in a direct Line deſcended Chriſtian or Chriſtiern, eldeſt Son of Theodorick; who, being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denmark, An. 1448, left his Eſtate in this Earldom (but reſerving the Title, according to the faſhion of Germany) to his Brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his Pretenſions to the Dukedom of Sleſwick and the Earldom of Holſtein, in which he did pretend a ſhare. The Patrimony of it was much improved by the additions of the Countries of Ruſtringen, Ooſtringen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea, bequeathed by the laſt Will and Teſtament of the Lady Mary, Counteſs of Jever in Eaſt-Frieſland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succeſſion of theſe Earls, in regard the Royal Line of Denmark, and by conſequence of Great Britain, is deſcended from them, I have here ſubjoyned in this enſuing Catalogue of 850 1. Walpert, of the Race of Wittikind, the firſt Earl of Oldenburg.

The Earls of OLDENBURG.

856 2. Theodorick, the Son of Walpert.
3. Theodorick II. the Son of Theodorick the 1.
4. Otho, Son of Theodorick the 2.
5. John, the Son of Otho, accompanied the Emperour Henry the 2. in his Wars againſt the Greeks and Sarazens, Anno 1007.
6. Huno, ſirnamed the Glorious, Son of John.
7. Frederick, Son of Huno, fortunate in his Wars againſt the Friſians; the laſt of the Male-line of this Houſe.
8. Elimarus, the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Friſian bloud, and of Richſa his Wife, the Daughter of John the fifth Earl.
1120 9. Elimarus II. Son to Elimar the firſt.
10. Chriſtianus, Son of Elimar the 2. ſirnamed the Couragious, or the Warlike; a profeſſed Enemy of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, from whom he took the City of Breme.
11. Maurice, the Son of Chriſtian, an Aſſociate of Arnulph Earl of Holſtein in his Wars with Denmark.
12. Chriſtian II. Son of Maurice.
13. John II. Son of Chriſtian the 2.
14. John III. Son of John the 2.
15. Conrade, the Son of John the third.
16. Chriſtian III. Son of Conrade, a Student in Colen, len, where he was initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquiſhed, much againſt the will of his Brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17. Theodorick, Son of Chriſtian the 3. the firſt Earl of Delmenborſt of this Line; which fell to him at the death of Nicolas Archbiſhop of Treme, deſcended from a younger Son of John the ſecond.

1440 18. Chriſtian IV. Son of Theodorick, and of Heduigis, Siſter and Heir of Gerrard and Adolphus, Dukes of Selſwick and Earls of Holſtein; elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448.

1448 19. Gerrard, the Brother of Chriſtian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet ſpirit, always in Wars, and always worſted. He loſt the Town of Delmenborſt to the Biſhop of Munſter.

1500 20. John IV. Son of Gerrard, repaired the Ruines of his Eſtate, and ſetled the Diſtractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in Exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butiada.

1526 21. Anthony, the Son of John the 4. by a ſudden Surpriſe recovered Delmenborſt from the Biſhop of Munſter, Anno 1547, which he ſtrongly fortified.

1573 22. John V. Son of Anthony, enlarged this Earldom with the Provinces of Ruſtringen, Ooſtringen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the laſt Will of the Counteſs of Jever, in Eaſt-Frieſland.

23. Anthony II. Brother of John the 5. in whoſe life-time he was Earl of Delmenborſt, and after his death of Oldenburg alſo: ſtill living, Anno 1648, for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we ſee the preſent eſtate of Germany, diſtracted and divided amongſt many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporate Towns the chief of which are herein mentioned and deſcribed. But beſides theſe there are many others of leſs note and ſmaller Territories, which yet are abſolute and free: inſomuch that in one day's riding a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws and divers Coins; every Free Prince and Free City (whoſe Laws the Emperours are ſworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what Laws and coin what Money they will. And hence, in the Cenſure of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is ſaid to be Rex hominum, becauſe of his Subjects reaſonable Obedience; the King of France, Rex Aſinorum, becauſe of their infinite Taxes and Impoſitions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum becauſe of his Subjects often Inſurrection againſt and Depoſition of their Princes: but the Emperour of Germany is called Rex Regum, becauſe there is ſuch a number of Reguli or Free Princes which live under his Command; or rather at their own Command, (for they do even what they liſt) as the Emperour Maximilian the firſt well noted.

And, to ſay truth, the publick Government thereof is nothing leſs then Monarchical; the Emperour being accompted amongſt the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of, by Bodin and others of our great Statiſts and Civilians, as an abſolute Monarch, ſuch as the King of England, France and Spain, are confeſſed to be. For the Priviledges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Eſtates Hereditary, and the Empire Eligible; the Emperours were brought at laſt to ſuch low condition, as to be made accomptable to the States of the Empire; who if they be perſwaded in their Conſciences; or but think they be ſo, that he is likely by his Male-adminiſtration to deſtroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good Advice, ab Electorum Collegio Cæſareâ majeſtate privare poteſt, (as my Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man choſen into the place, and that too, as the Emperour Jodocus Barbatus hath declared in one of his Conſtitutions, An 1410, ſine Infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of Treaſon or Diſloyalty. So that the ſupreme Power and Majeſty of the Empire ſeems to reſide eſpecially and contractedly in the Electoral Colledge; diffuſedly, in the Imperial Diets; by way of Execution, in the chamber of Spires, and other the ſupreme Courts of the ſeveral Circles. But that which makes that Body which they call the Empire, is the Aſſembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commiſſioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour preſiding in them: whom he that ſaw adorned in his Royal Robes, with the Imperial Crown and Scepter, with the Titles of Cæſar and Auguſtus given at every word, would think that the whole Action did take life from him; whereas, indeed, he hath not ſo much Priviledge as a Negative voice, but is to put in execution ſuch Decrees and Sanctions as theſe Eſtates aſſembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own Authority, which may ſpeak him Emperour. But, on the other ſide, the Princes take power unto themſelves of making Laws for, and impoſing Taxes on, their Subjects; of raiſing War upon one another, or againſt a third; and doing many other acts of ſupreme Authority, which in the Emperour would be counted matter of Male-adminiſtration. Such Points as theſe, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magiſtrates, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in general Diets; which may be ſummoned by or without the Emperor, as occaſion ſerveth. And to this weakning of the Majeſty and Power Imperial the neighbouring Princes have afforded their beſt aſſiſtance; jealous of their own Intereſts and decreaſe of Power, if that vaſt Body ſo well limbed ſhould be ſtrongly jointed, and all the ſeveral Members of it united under the command of one ſupreme Head. Clear proof whereof we have in thoſe ſolemn Leagues and Confederations made in their ſeveral times againſt Charles the fifth and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as ſoon as they began to be in ſome poſſibility of ſetling the Imperial Majeſty in its proper Splendour, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been, by the way of Election, as before was noted. The buſineſs was firſt projected in the Court of Rome by Gregory the firſt, then Pope, who, being a Native of this Country, thought it the moſt expedient courſe to continue the Imperial Title among thoſe of his Nation. But whatſoever was pretended, the Deſign of it chiefly was to make the Emperors leſs powerful, and diſtract the Germans (whom they feared) into Parts and Factions, that ſo the Popes might have the better opportunity to grow great in Italy. And that the Emperour might be ſuch as the Pope ſhould like of, the matter was ſo ordered, that the one half of the Electors ſhould be always of the Eccleſiaſticks, who, being obnoxious to the Popes, and for the moſt part driving on their Intereſt, were very like to ſerve him on all occaſions. The Electors only ſix in number: that is to ſay, 1. The Archbiſhop of Mentz, Chancellour of the Empire. 2. The Archbiſhop of Colen, Chancellour of Italy. 3. The Archbiſhop of Triers, Chancellour of France. 4. The Count-Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer. 5. The Duke of Saxony, Lord Marſhal, and 6. the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain. Upon equality of Voices the Duke of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a Seventh; who by Office is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great Solemnities. For upon days of great Solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the firſt days of the Imperial Diets, and the like to theſe, theſe Offices are performed only; and then performed in this manner following, either in perſon or by Proxy. Before the Palace-Gate ſtands an heap of Oats, ſo high that it reacheth to the breaſt of the Horſe on which the Duke of Saxony rideth, having in his hand a ſilver Wand and a ſilver Meaſure, both which together are to weigh 200 Marks. The Duke, ſtill ſitting on his Horſe, filleth up the Meaſure with Oats, then ſticks his Wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the meaſure of Oats unto ſome of his Servants who ſtand neareſt unto him, and ſo attends the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entred and ſate down at the Table, the three Spiritual Electors, ſtanding orderly together, ſay the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marqueſs of Brandenburg on horſe-back alſo, with a Baſin of water in his hand, (the Baſin being of the weight of 12 Marks of Silver) and a fine clean Towel on his Arm; which, alighting from his Horſe, he holds to the Emperour till he waſh. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene mounted on his Horſe, with four ſilver Platters full of Meat, every one of the weight of three Marks of Silver; which, deſcending from his Horſe, after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entring the great Hall on Horſe-back as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his Hand of the weight of 12 Marks in Silver, alighteth from his Horſe, and preſenteth the Cup unto the Emperour. But we muſt know, that of late times theſe Offices are ſeldom or never performed by the Electors in their own perſons. It is enough if they ſend their Ambaſſadors, or ſubſtitute ſome one or other of the Emperour's Court to do it for them.

The Election is uſually celebrated at Francford on the Maine, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair upon the day appointed by the Archbiſhop of Mentz, whoſe Office it is (as being Chancellour of the Empire) to iſſue out the Summons for this Aſſembly. In their paſſage unto Francford they are to be ſufficiently guarded by every Prince through whoſe Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 Horſe, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met, they go into S. Bartholomew's Church, the moſt capacious of that City) where, after the High-Maſs is ſaid, the three Spiritual Electors laying their Hands upon their Breaſts, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make Oath to chuſe a fit Temporal Head for the People of Chriſtendom. Upon equality of Voices, as it ſometimes happeneth, the Bohemian hath the caſting Voice, and concludes the buſineſs. If in the ſpace of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then muſt they have no other allowance but of Bread and Water, nor be ſuffered to go out of the City, till that neceſſity compelleth them unto ſome Agreement. Which being at the laſt reſolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince ſo elected is preſently ſaluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour being not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope: though ſince the time of Charles the fifth, without any ſuch trouble to themſelves or the Popes of Rome, the Title of both Emperour and Imperial Majeſty is uſually conferred upon them from their firſt Election. The Election being finiſhed, and ſignified to the party choſen, the Inauguration was held anciently at three ſeveral places: viz. 1. at Aquiſgrane, or Aken, in the Land of Gulick, where he received the Silver Crown, for the Kingdom of Germany; 2. at Millain, by the Archbiſhop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown, for Lombardy, or the Realm of Italy; 3. at Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himſelf, he was crowned with a Golden Crown, for the Roman Empire. But ſince, thoſe Journeys unto Rome and Millain have been long laid by; the Emperours holding their Elections to be ſtrong enough to make good their Title to that Dignity, being meerly titular, and their Inauguration at Aken to be as effectual as if they had alſo viſited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Conſtitutions of the German Empire, we find ſummed up together in the Golden Bull of Charles the 4. by him firſt promulgated An. 1359. But we muſt know that, ſince the publiſhing of that Bull, the buſineſs of Election hath received ſome change as to the number and the perſons of the Parties intereſſed. For, it pleaſed the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. on the Proſcription of Frederick the firſt Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral Dignity, with the Office of Archidapifer, or Arch-Sewer, from that Houſe to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the Powers and Priviledges which belonged unto it, to be infeoffed upon him and his Heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperour being proteſted againſt by ſome of the Electors, in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themſelves, in not admitting ſuch a dangerous precedent for the time to come; it was at laſt concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munſter Anno 1648, That the Duke of Bavaria and his Heirs enjoying the ſaid Electoral Dignity with the Upper Palatinate, according to the Tranſlation of it from the Palatine Family ſpoken of before; an Eighth Electorate ſhould be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate by Charles Ludowick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his Heirs, who alſo, on the faileur of the Line of Bavaria, are to be repoſſeſſed of their ancient Rights, the Title of Arch-Treaſurer being given unto them at the preſent inſtead of that of Archidapifer, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a ſtep unto the Empire, and for the better aſſurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Auſtrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charles the fifth, (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7.) that his Brother Ferdinand ſhould be choſen King of the Romans whilſt himſelf was living, and by that means be the more certain of the Empire after his deceaſe. Which Policy being followed by all his Succeſſors, the Title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of the Heir apparent, or deſigned Succeſſor, in the preſent Empire of the Germans; as that of Cæſar was, from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the ancient Romans. Inſomuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one who is already ſo far eſtated in the Empire, that on the Death, Deprivation, or Reſignation of the preſent Emperour, he is immediately to ſucceed. And ſo accordingly it hath happened ſince this Act of Charles; who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his Son and Heir, whom he found capable enough of ſo high an Honour; yet he could not do it: it being thought by many underſtanding men, that on notice of this underhand practice, his Brother Ferdinand, who had the like mind to tranſmit the Empire to his own Poſterity, did ſecretly lend Duke Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germany, as in brief he did. As for the reaſons, or, to ſay better, the pretences, upon which Charles did inſtitute this Rex Romanorum, (for queſtionleſs the true reaſon of it was to perpetuate the Empire in the Auſtrian Family) they were theſe that follow. 1. Becauſe that, having the command of many Nations, he could not always perſonally attend the Affairs of Germany. 2. The troubled Eſtate of Chriſtendom, of the Empire eſpecially, occaſioned by the Preachings and Works of Luther. 3. The late rural War raiſed by the Boors of that Country, on the coming out of theſe new Doctrines, and not yet throughly extinct. 4. The violent Power of the Turk, who, by his Conqueſt of a great part of Hungary, was grown too near a neighbour to them. And 5. the imminent Diſobedience in all parts of the Empire. All which conjunctly ſeemed to require ſome Prince both of Power and Title to aſſiſt him in the bearing of ſo great a Burthen. And by theſe and the like ſuggeſtions he effected his Deſign herein, though thereby he changed in a manner the Imperial Style. For whereas the firſt Emperours of the Houſe of Charles the Great were Emperors of the Romans, and Kings of Germany; the later Emperours of the Houſe of Charles the fifth may not improperly be called Emperours of Germany, and Kings of the Romans. It is true indeed, that the wiſe and underſtanding Duke of Saxony ſaw farther through theſe Pretences than the reſt of the Electors either did or would; and that the main Plot was no other, than to make Germany (as Galba ſaid in his Oration unto Piſo of the Empire of Rome) unius quaſi Familiæ Hæreditatem, hereditary in times following to the Houſe of Auſtria; and thereupon did openly deny his ſuffrage to the ſaid Election. But finding that the major part of the Electors were reſolved upon it, he moved for an Act to paſs, prohibiting the continuance of the Imperial Title in any one Family more than three Succeſſions. In which not able to prevail, (as the Game was plaid) he left the Electors to themſelves, by whom Ferdinand was choſen King of the Romans, and not long after crowned at Aken with the uſual Rites, Jan. 16. An. 1531. The ſame courſe was followed by this Ferdinand, when poſſeſſed of the Empire, in cauſing his Son Maximilian to be elected Rex Romanorum, whilſt himſelf was living; and ſo by all the reſt ſince then, as before is ſaid.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to meaſure the Abilities and Power of Germany; we may diſcern them by thoſe Levies which have been raiſed upon particular occaſions, or by the joint conſent of the Free Eſtates aſſembled in the Imperial Diets. Firſt, for particular Levies made by private perſons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horſe raiſed by the Prince Palatine of Zweibruck, for Aid of the French Hugonots againſt their King; and, on the other ſide, no fewer than 7000 Horſe, under the Conduct of the Duke of Aumal and the Earl of Mansfield, for the ſervice of that King againſt the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by conſent of the States, we find that Charles the 5. had under his Enſigns at Vienna 90000 Foot, and 35000 Horſe; Maximilian the 2. at Javarin in Hungary, 34000 Horſe, and full 100000 Foot; and finally, that in the War betwixt Charles the 5. and the Proteſtant Princes, there were no leſs than 150000 men on both ſides: which numbers no one Country in Europe is able to equal. In a word, it is generally conceived that the Empire is able to raiſe 200000 Horſe and Foot, with Arms, Cannon, and Ammunition of all ſorts proportionable; which the inſtances before brought do moſt plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenues of the Empire, I find them eſtimated by Boterus, and ſome others ſince, at ſeven millions of Crowns yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia with the hereditary Eſtates of Auſtria into the accompt. But ſince they are not ſo united unto the Empire but they may at ſome time or other be disjoined again, no reaſon they ſhould come into the reckoning, unleſs it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it ſelf, taken abſtractedly from the perſonal and Patrimonial Eſtate of the Emperour, whoſoever he be, it can amount to no ſuch ſum: the Tribute paid by the Free or Imperial Cities (at leaſt 60 in number) amounting to no more per ann. than 15000 Florens, or 1500 l. Engliſh: and what is that, but like a Pepper-corn for a Quit-rent, in that mighty Continent? By this we may conjecture what the reſt may come to. And though, in the way of ſaving Charges, (which may be reckoned as a part of his Income alſo) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of War againſt the Turk with 3842 Horſe and 16200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it: yet War is ſuch a great devourer, that if the Diets do not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a ſorry Gainer by the Undertaking; beſides the ſmalneſs of thoſe Forces conſidered with the numbers they are able to raiſe, and the puiſſance of the enemy whom they are to encounter.

Finally, for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sol, an Eagle diſplayed with two Heads Saturn, armed & crowned Mars: the two Heads ſignifying (as ſome think) the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Empires. Cuſpinian, a learned German, conceives rather that theſe Arms are two Eagles conjoined, and not one Eagle with two Heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation, in memory of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus diſcomfited by them; at what time they ſeized on two of the Roman Eagles, (the Military Enſign of that People) the third being caſt into the Fens by the Standard-bearer. But whether it be one or two, certain it is that the one Head is quite pulled off, and the whole Body quite ſtripped of all its Feathers; the Imperial Dignity being little more than titular, deſpoiled and ſtript of all authority appertaining to it.

DENMARK.

THE Kingdom of DENMARK, or DANEMARK, reckoning in the Additions of the Dukedom of Holſtein and the great Continent of Norway, with the Iſles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Eſtate, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Baltick Sea and ſome part of Sweden, on the Weſt with the main Weſtern Ocean, on the North-Eaſt with a part of Sweden, full North with the main Frozen Seas, and on the South with Germany, from which it is divided on the South-weſt by the River Albis, and on the South-eaſt by the Trave; a little Iſthmus or Neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It took this name from the Danes, of long time the Inhabitants and Poſſeſſors of it; ſo called quaſi Danorum Tractus, ſive Regio, (as Mercator hath it,) becauſe the Country of that People: but rather quaſi Danorum limes, the Bounds or Marches of the Danes, bordering cloſe upon the Dutch; from whom it hath the name of Danemarch.

As for the Situation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Artick Circle; extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Clime, or 55. Degree of Latitude, where it joineth with Germany, as far as the 71. Degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which accompt, the longeſt Day in the moſt Southern parts hereof is 17 hours and a quarter: but in the parts extremely North, they have no Night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and ſome ſeven hours over; as on the other ſide, no Day for the like quantity of time, when the Sun is moſt remote from them, in the other Tropick. The Air hereof by conſequence muſt be ſharp and bitter, even in the very warmeſt places. Of which, and of the nature of the Soil, we ſhall ſpeak more punctually in the Deſcription and Survey of the ſeveral Parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good Stature, clear of Complexion, well-coloured, for the moſt part healthful and long-lived; for though they eat and drink beyond meaſure, they have good Digeſtions. In Manners they are very ſevere, crafty and provident in the managing of their Affairs, but proud withall, and (as the Hiſtorian ſaid of another perſon) Omnium quæ dixerant fecerantve Oſtentatores, great Vaunters of whatſoever they do or ſay, highly opinionated of their own Actions, and peremptory in maintaining their own Opinions: religious obſervers of their Words and Contracts, and ſtrict in executing Juſtice; eſpecially in puniſhing of Thieves and Pirats. Such of them as do follow the Wars prove reaſonable good Souldiers, both by Sea and Land; but fitter for the Sea than Field-ſervice. The Magiſtrate is wiſe rather by experience than ſtudy, though they love Learning, and eaſily attain all Languages which they give their minds to. The old men are covetous, the young men thriſty, and the Merchant ambitious. The Nobility and Gentry are generally of as ancient Families as moſt in Chriſtendom; here being ſome of thoſe Houſes ſtill remaining which were preſent at the Pacification made betwixt Charles the Great and Hemingus King of the Danes: and, which adds much unto their Honour, they keep their Blood unmixt from Marriages with the Vulgar ſort; and reckon it for an high diſgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereunto. The Women are fair, diſcreet, and courteous, and knew well how to govern their Houſholds; exceeding fruitful in bearing of Children, but delivered of them with great difficulty. Both Sexes ſpeak the Dutch or German, common (but with ſome difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norway and Swethland.

Of no great note for men of Learning in the former times, it hath been fortunate in theſe laſt for 1. Tycho Brahe, that renowned Aſtronomer; 2. Hemingius, a well-known Divine; 3. Bartholinus, a Phyſician and Philoſopher of good eſteem; 4. John Cluverus, the Hiſtorian, &c. More famous for great Captains and men of War; eſpecially for 1. Godfrey, or Gotricus, who ſetled the Government of this Kingdom, and endangered the great Realm of France. 2. Sueno, and 3. Canutus, the fortunate Conquerours of England. 4. Waldemar the 3. a right-valiant Prince; but unſucceſsful in his Wars againſt the Hanſe-Towns, then newly entred into League. 5. Chriſtiern the 2. a great Commander in the Wars, but of greater Cruelty. 6. Chriſtiern the 4. little inferiour unto many of his Predeceſſors. To whom we may ſubjoin (though of different Sex) Q. Margaret, the Semiramis of theſe Northern Countries; a Lady of a maſculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all Enterpriſes, as ſhe declared in the Conqueſt of Swethland, and Subjection of Norway, by her united to this Crown.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached to thoſe of Holſtein (the next-neighbouring Country unto Germany) by S. Angarius, Biſhop of Bremen, the general Apoſtle of thoſe Northern parts, in the year 826, Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the Weſt. In whoſe time Harald King of Denmark, being expulſed his Kingdoms by the Sons of Godfrey or Getricus, was baptized at Mentz, with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbiſhop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that ſervice; the Converſion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the firſt, aſſigned by the Miniſtry of one Poppo the firſt Biſhop of Arthuſen; Sueno, or Swain, then reigning amongſt the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaus the third, Anno 1055, or thereabouts: the Engliſh aſſiſting in the work, and the good King ſo zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint after his deceaſe. Relapſing for the moſt part to their ancient Gentiliſm, they were finally regained unto Chriſtianity by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an Engliſh-man, about the year 1156, before his aſſuming of the Popedom called Nicolaus Breakſpear. But by whomſoever firſt converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend ſome Power and Juriſdiction over them. Which when they began to exerciſe with too much Authority, Waldemar the third is ſaid to have returned this Anſwer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitias à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Eccleſia; quam, ſi nobis invides, renunciamus per præſentes: that is to ſay, We hold our Life from God, our Crown from our Subjects, our Riches from our Anceſtors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if you envy us, we do here remit it by theſe preſents. But this Renunciation, though then threatned, was not made till afterwards; when the whole maſs of Popery was aboliſhed by King Frederick the firſt, uſing therein the Miniſtry of Bugenhage, a Divine of Pomeren, by whom they were reformed according to the Doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church ſince that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbiſhops and Biſhops, in number as before; but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their Power. For Frederick, though he found it neceſſary to remove the old Biſhops, (not one of which would be perſwaded to the change of Religion) yet he ſubſtituted others in their places, allowing them a convenient Maintenance, with a power of Preſidence in all Church-Aſſemblies, where they are to take the Advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of ſuch Aſſemblies to receive Complaints, to provide remedy againſt Scandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inſpectors, which concern the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbiſhops and thirteen Biſhops: that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Lunden, the Biſhops of Roſchilt, Odenſee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arthuſen, Sleſwick, and Haderſleve, for the Kingdom of Denmark, the Archbiſhop of Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norway; and the Biſhops of Halar and Schalbelt, for the Iſle of Iſeland: the Churches of Holſtein (formerly under the Biſhops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Superintendents, as the reſt of the Lutherans.

The whole Body of the Eſtate (as appears by this) conſiſteth chiefly of three Members: viz. 1. the Dukedom of Holſtein; containing Wagerland, Ditmarſh, Stormaria, and Holſtein ſpecially ſo called: 2. the Kingdom of Denmark; comprehending both Juitlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes, or Baltick Iſlands: and 3. the Kingdom of Norway, conſiſting of Norway it ſelf, and the Iſlands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we ſhall ſurvey in order, as before laid down; premiſing firſt a word or two of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, in which the Dukedom of Holſtein and the two Juitlands are contained.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE.

THE CIMBRICK CHERSONESE hath on the Eaſt the Baltick Sea, on the Weſt the main German Ocean, on the North a part of the Ocean bending into the narrow Streight or Fretum which they call the Sundt, on the South-weſt the great River of Albis, on the South-Eaſt the ſmall River of Trave; betwixt which is the Neck or Iſthmus which unites it to Germany. I know that ſome contract it into narrower bounds, and limit it upon the South with the River Eyder: but I have drawn it down to the Elve and the Trave, which give it more reſemblance to a Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland than the other doth, diſſenting in this point from the common Opinion. It had the name of Cherſoneſus, ἀπὸ τῆς χέρσου καὶ νήσου, à Terra & Inſula, it being the ſame with a Peninſula in the Latin. Of which name there are 5. moſt famous: that is to ſay, 1. Peloponneſus, in Greece, which is now called Morea; 2. Thracia Cherſoneſus, in Thracia, near the Sea Propontis; 3. Taurica Cherſoneſus, in the Euxine Sea, now a part of Tartary; 4. Aurea Cherſoneſus, in India, which we now call Malaca, (of all which we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places;) and 5. Cimbrica Cherſoneſus, where now we are. This laſt was ſo called from the Cimbri, the firſt Inhabitants hereof, originally deſcended from Gomer the ſon of Japhet; thence called Gomerii and Cimmerii, by contraction Cimbri. Leaving the Plains of Phrygia as too narrow for them they ſought out new Dwellings, and are ſaid to have firſt dwelt on the banks of Palus Mæotis; where they gave name to the Boſphorus Cimmerius there being. Being overcome by the Scythians, they removed their Seats more Northward, into a Country bounded, according to Plutarch, by the great Ocean on the one ſide, and the Foreſt of Hercynia on the other: within which Bounds is the Peninſula or Country where we now are. They were a people of extraordinary big Stature, having blew and red Eyes, and lived moſt upon Theft: ſo that, for their ſakes, Κίμβρους ἐπονομάζουσι Γέρμανοι τοὺς λῃστὰς, the Germans called all Thieves Cimbers. It happened that the Ocean overflowing a great part of their Country, compelled them to ſeek new Seats: whereupon in great multitudes abandoning their Dwellings, they petitioned the Romans, then lording over a great part of the World, for ſome place to ſetle in. This requeſt being denied, they proceeded in another manner, winning with their Swords what their Petitions could not obtain. Manlius, Sillanus, and Cæpio all Roman Conſuls, periſhed by them, ſo that now (ſaith Florus) actum eſſet de Imperio Romano, niſi illi ſeculo Marius contigiſſet: for he, as we have elſewhere told you, utterly overthrew them. The next Inhabitants hereof were the Saxons, Juites, and Angles; upon whoſe Removal into Britain, the greateſt part of it was peopled by the Danes, who ſtill poſſeſs it.

It containeth in length about 100 Italian miles, and 80 of the ſame miles in breadth; and comprehendeth in that tract or extent of ground 30 walled Towns, 6 Epiſcopal Sees, (beſides thoſe of Hamburg and Lubeck, which are under the Archbiſhop of Bremen) and 20 Royal Caſtles and Palaces, as well for the reception of the Nobles and great men of the Country, as the private Retirements of the King. The Soil is naturally more fit for Paſturage than Tillage, feeding ſuch multitudes of Oxen, that from hence no fewer than 50000 are ſent yearly to Germany. Divided at the preſent into the Dukedom of Holſtein, and the Province of Juitland.

1. The Dukedom of HOLSTEIN.

THE Dukedom of HOLSTEIN taketh up the Southern part of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe where it joins to Germany, extending as far North as the River Eyder, which divides it from Juitland. So called from the Dutch word Holt, which ſignifies a Wood or Foreſt, according to the nature of it; the Country being low, mariſhy, and full of Woods, as it continueth to this day. It contains in it theſe four Provinces; 1. Wagerland, 2. Stormaria, 3. Ditmarſh, and 4. Holſt or Holſtein ſpecially ſo called.

1. WAGERLAND is that part of Holſtein which lies on the South-eaſt of this Cherſoneſe, bounded on the Eaſt with Mecklenburg and the Baltick Sea, on the Weſt with Holſtein ſpecially ſo called, on the North with the Sea Baltick alſo, on the South with ſome part of Mecklenburg. So called from the Wagrii, a Tribe or Nation of the Sclaves, who poſſeſſed this Tract; from whence the name of Wagria in our Latine Writers.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Lubeck, pleaſantly ſeated on the Confluence of the Trave and the Billow, near the fall thereof into the Baltick, from which it is diſtant five Italian miles. The River is capable of ſhips of a thouſand tun, which commonly they unlade at Travemund, the Port-town to the City, ſeated upon the very brink of the Sea, where the united Rivers have their fall into it. It was firſt built by Adolph the ſecond Earl of Holſtein, Anno 1143; but ſo well priviledged by him and his next Succeſſors, that in ſhort time it bid defiance to its Founders, (the cauſe of many Differences betwixt it and thoſe Princes) and was made a Dukedom of it ſelf. By Frederick the firſt it was united to the Empire, after whoſe death they choſe themſelves another Duke; who, having governed them five years, was ſubdued by the Danes, and the City made ſubject to that Kingdom, remaining ſo till delivered by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond; by whom again once infranchiſed, it became Imperial; afterwards liſted amongſt the Hanſe-Towns, and the firſt in eſtimation of all the company, having above 600 Ships of all ſorts (ſome of a thouſand Tun and upwards) which belong unto it. But being their Trade is for the moſt part on the Baltick Seas, which are generally free from Pirates, they are moſt of them built for Burthen, and are ſlow of ſail, and little ſerviceable, if at all, for a Fight at Sea. But to return unto the City: It is built upon all the ſides of a riſing Hill, on the top whereof ſtandeth the Church of Saint Mary, (once the Cathedral of the City, for it was Epiſcopal) whence is a Deſcent to all the Gates of the City, affording to the Eye a moſt pleaſing proſpect. The Buildings are very beautiful, and all of Brick; the Streets ſtraight and even; the Churches (ten in number) in good repair, adorned with excellent Imagery, and much admired even by ſkilful Workmen: and unto every private Houſe a Pipe of water is conveyed from the publick Conduit; according to the Pattern whereof, it hath been obſerved that the Conduits were firſt made in London and other places. In a word, there is not any City of Germany or the more Northern Countries which can equallize it, either for the Beauty and Uniformity of the Houſes, the pleaſant Gardens, fair Streets, delightful Walks without the Walls; or for the Citizens themſelves, who are much commended for their Civility to Strangers, and ſtrict execution of Juſtice without partiality. The whole in compaſs is about ſix miles, fortified with a double Wall, deep Ditches, and unfordable Rivers. 2. Segeberg, on the River Trave, four Dutch miles from Lubeck, and near the head of that River. 3. Oldeſlo, on the ſame River, in the midſt betwixt both. 4. Gronneberg, and 5. Newkirk, on the Baltick Shore: and 6. Stendorp, more within the Land, near the edge of a Lake, out of which runs the River Suentin.

2. South-weſt of Wagerland lieth STORMARIA, betwixt the Elb and two leſs Rivers called the Bille and the Stoer: from which laſt, and the Mariſhneſs of the ſituation, or from that River and the Marſi, once the Inhabitants hereof, comes the name of Stormarſh. Places of moſt importance are, 1. Crempe, on a little River ſo named, which falls not far off into the Stoer, and both together not much farther into the Elb. A Town well fortified by Chriſtiern the fourth, and reckoned one of the Keys of the Kingdom; as well appears by the Reſiſtance which it made to the Duke of Fridland, againſt whom it held out 13 months, and yielded at the laſt upon good Conditions, An. 1628. 2. Tychenberg, (Tychapolis my Author calls it) a Dutch mile from Crempe, but on the very Bank of the River Elb, where it receives the Rhin, a ſmall River upon which it is ſeated; firſt built, and afterward well fortified, by Chriſtiern the fourth, of purpoſe to command the Elb, and put a ſtronger Bridle in the mouths of the Hamburgers, Anno 1603: now held to be the ſtrongeſt piece of all his Dominions; the only Town of all this Dukedom which yielded not to the prevailing Imperialiſts in their late Wars againſt the Danes, Anno 1628. 3. Bredeberch, a ſtrong Town belonging to the Rantzows, one of the beſt pieces of the Kingdom; remarkable for the ſtout Reſiſtance which it made to Walleſtein (Duke of Fridland) in the War aforeſaid: who, at laſt taking it by Aſſault, put all the Souldiers to the Sword. 4. Pinnenberg, another ſtrong place and of very great conſequence. 5. Jetzeho, or Itzeho, on the River Stoer. 6. Gluckſtadt, upon a Creek or Bay of the German Ocean, repaired and fortified by the ſaid Chriſtiern the fourth, (who much delighted in the place) to command the Paſſage up the Elb. 7. Stoer, 8. Hamburg, upon the Bille, where it falls into the Elb; an ancient City, built in the time of the Saxons, repaired by Charles the Great, and walled by the Emperour Henry the fourth. Accounted ſince that time an Imperial City, and made one of the Hanſe, upon the firſt incorporating of thoſe Towns. Which notwithſtanding, on a Controverſie ariſing about that time betwixt the Earl of Holſtein and the people hereof, it was adjudged to belong to the Earls of Holſtein; and that Determination ratified by Charles the fourth, Anno 1374. In purſuance whereof the Hamburgers took the Oath of Allegiance to Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of Denmark of that Houſe, as Earl of Holſtein, acknowledging him and his Succeſſors for their lawful Lords: though ſince they have endeavoured to ſhake off that Yoak, preſuming very much on their power at Sea, and the aſſiſtance which they are aſſured of upon all occaſions from the reſt of the Hanſe-Towns. As for the Town it ſelf, it is ſeated in a large Plain, with fat and rich Paſtures round about it, well fortified by Art and Nature, the Haven being ſhut up with a ſtrong Iron Chain. The Buildings for the moſt part are of Brick, but more beautiful than well contrived; and the Streets ſomewhat of the narroweſt. The publick Structures are very fair, eſpecially the Council-houſe, adorned with the Statues of the Nine Worthies carved with very great Art, the Exchange, or Meeting-place for Merchants, and nine large Churches. The Citizens are generally rich, maſters of many as great Ships as ſail on the Ocean, ſome of them 1200 Tun in Burthen, which bring in great profit, beſides the great reſort of Merchants and their Factors from moſt places elſe: ſometimes the Staple-Town for the Cloth of England, removed on ſome Diſcontents to Stade, and from thence to Holland. It is obſerved, that there were in this Town at one time 177 Brewers, and but 40 Bakers, nor more than one Lawyer and one Phyſician. The reaſon of which diſproportion was, that a Cup of Nimis was their only Phyſick; their Differences ſooner ended over a Can than by order of Law; Bread being accounted but a Binder, and ſo not to be uſed but in caſe of neceſſity.

3. Betwixt the Rivers Stoer and Eyder, coaſting along the German Ocean, lies the Province of DITMARSH, moſt properly called Tuitchmarſh, from the Mariſhneſs of the ground and the Dutch Inhabitants, or from a mixture of thoſe people with the Marſi, ſpoken of before. The people, being naturally of the Saxon Race, retain much of the ſtomach and animoſity of the ancient Saxons; never brought under the command of the Earls of Holſtein (as Wagerland and Stormaria were) till Holſtein it ſelf was joined to the Crown of Denmark. And though it was aliened from the Empire by Frederick the third, and given in Fee to Chriſtian Earl of Oldenburg, the firſt King of that Houſe, Anno 1474; yet would they not ſubmit unto his Authority, but held it out againſt him and ſome of his Succeſſors, whom in the year 1500 they vanquiſhed in the open Field; till broken and made ſubject by the valour and good fortune of King Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1550. Chief places in it are, 1. Meldorp, upon the Ocean, the chief Town of the Province; the Inhabitants of which are ſo wealthy, that many of them cover their Houſes with Copper. 2. Lunden, oppoſite to a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland called Eyderſtede, on the Weſt ſide whereof it ſtandeth. 3. Heininckſted, and 4. Tellinckſtede; of which nothing memorable.

4. And as for HOLSTEIN it ſelf, the fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate, though the firſt in power and reputation, it taketh up the Inland parts, betwixt Stor- maria and Juitland, ſave that it hath an Outlet into the Baltick on the North-weſt of Wagerland. Chief places in it are, 1. Kiel, (Chilonium in Latine) ſeated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedom of Sleſwick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious Haven, ſeldom without good ſtore of Shipping from Germany, Liefland, Sweden, and the reſt of Denmark. 2. Rensborg, the beſt fortified piece in all this Province. 3. Niemunſter, on the North weſt of the Stoer, not far from the head of it. 4. Wilſter, on a ſmall River ſo called. 5. Bramſtede, 6. Borſholm, not much obſervable, but for a Monaſtery in which Henry one of the Earls hereof (of a younger Houſe) turned Monk, and died Anno 1241.

The ancient Inhabitants of this and the other three were the Saxons, Sigulons, and Subalingii, placed here by Ptolomy; whom I conceive to be no other than ſome Tribes of the Cimbri, of whom this Cherſoneſe took name: the two laſt of which paſſing into the name of the firſt, and in the Declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and ſpreading all along the Coaſts of the German Ocean, moleſted with their Piracies and Depredations the Shores of Britain, known by that means unto the Britans, they were invited to aſſiſt them againſt the Scots and Picts. Which action, with the Aid of the Juites and Angli, (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe) they performed ſo honeſtly, as to make themſelves Maſters of the beſt part of the Iſland. Such as remained behind, not being able to defend their own againſt the Sclaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Mecklenburg; which, being peopled by the Vagrii, took the name of Wagerland. But the Saxons being vanquiſhed by Charles the Great, theſe on the North-ſide of the Elb became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxony; and ſo continued till diſmembred by Lotharius, both Duke and Emperour, who gave the proper Holſt (or Holſtein ſpecially ſo called) with the Province of Stormaria to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deſerved well of him in his Wars, with the Title of Earl of Holſtein, Anno 1114. By Adolph the ſecond, his Succeſſor, it was ſetled in this Houſe; who, having made a full Conqueſt of it, cauſed it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or Germans from Holland, Weſtphalen, and Frieſland; by which means the name of Sclaves was at laſt worn out. By Gerard the fifth the Dukedom of Sleſwick was alſo added; conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whoſe Wars he ſerved. Adolph the laſt Earl of this Houſe dying without Iſſue, the whole Eſtate fell on Chriſtiern, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of Hednigis his Wife, Siſter and Heir to Adolph before mentioned; who, being called to the Crown of Denmark, compounded with his Brother Gerrard for the ſum of 50000 Marks; and having gotten Ditmarſh alſo of the Emperour Frederick the third, prevailed ſo far as to have the whole Eſtate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1474, to be held by him and his Succeſſors of the Sacred Empire. Which ſaid, we will next add the Catalogue of 1114 1. Adolph of Schaumburg, by Lotharius, Emperour and Duke of Saxony, made the firſt Earl of Holſtein.

The Earls and Dukes of HOLSTEIN.

1137 2. Adolph II. Son of Adolph the firſt.

1164 3. Adolph III. Son of Adolph the 2. vanquiſhed by Canutus King of the Danes, loſt himſelf and his Country.

1232 4. Adolph IV. in his Fathers life-time recovered his Eſtate from Waldemar the Succeſſor of Canutus, overcome by him in a well-fought Battel Anno 1226, his Father then Priſoner to the Danes.

1261 5. Gerrard, the 2. Son of Adolph the fourth, his elder Brother John making choice of Wagerland, ſucceeded in Holſtein.

1281 6. Henry the Son of Gerrard, the firſt that ſet up a Cuſtom-houſe at Hamburg, for receipt of his Tolls and Taxes.

1310 7. Gerrard II. Son of Henry, ſlain treacherouſly by the Danes.

1339 8. Henry II. Son of Gerrard the ſecond.

1381 9. Gerrard III. Son of Henry the ſecond, created the firſt Duke of Sleſwick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.

1404 10. Henry III. Son of Gerrard the third.

1427 11. Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (thoſe of the younger Houſes being reckoned in) the laſt Earl of this Houſe.

1459 12. Chriſtiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his Wife Heduigis, Siſter of Henry and Adolphus the two laſt Earls, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Holſtein, inlarged with the addition of Ditmarſh, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick the third Anno 1474. But ſeeing that Otho Earl of Schaumburg pretended a Right unto the whole, as the next Heir-male, according to the Conſtitutions of the Empire of which it was holden; and Gerrard the Brother of Chriſtiern put in for his Share, according to the ill Cuſtom of Germany, of which it was then counted part: he was fain to buy his peace of both; giving to Otho 43000 Florens in ready money, with the Towns of Pinnenberg, Haltzburg, and Bramſtede, the ancient poſſeſſions of the Earls of Schaumburg; and 50000 Marks to his Brother Gerrard, beſides his whole Intereſt in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was ſaid. By this means Holſtein was united to the Crown of Denmark, the Kings thereof, as Dukes of Holſtein, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither ſend unto the Diets, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick Taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of Subjection to it more than meerly titulary. Only it was ordained at the requeſt of the Subjects, when firſt they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in caſe of any grievance or unjuſt ſentence in the ordinary Courts of Juſtice, wherein they found no remedy in the ſupreme Council of the Province, it might be lawful for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the preſent time, on ſufficient Caution; ſo hath it ſeldom or never been put in practice; the very Grant or Priviledge (if ſuch it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But ſince this uniting of the two Eſtates, the Title of Duke of Holſtein and a good part of the Country was given unto Adolphus, Brother of Chriſtiern the 3. (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter Anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their ſeveral turns: after whoſe death, and the death of all his Children dying without Iſſue-male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrick, Son of Frederick the ſecond, and Brother of Chriſtiern the fourth, created Knight of the Garter by King James Anno 1605, In whoſe poſterity it remains till this preſent time.

2. The Kingdom of DENMARK.

IN which, 1. JUITLAND containeth all the reſt of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, divided from the Dukedom of Holſtein by the River Eyder, the ancient Boundary betwixt the Saxons and the Danes; but principally by a long Trench and Wall from one Sea to the other, of ſuch breadth, that a Chariot or two Horſe-men a-breaſt might ride upon it. Firſt built, in imitation of the Picts Wall in England, by Godfrey King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great; either to hinder the daily Incurſions of the Saxons, as ſome, or to ſtop the current of the Victories of the ſaid Charles, as others think. The Tract thereof, ſtill very eaſie to be ſeen, is called Dennewerk (or the Danes Work) to this very day.

It was ſo called from the Juites, who, together with the Angli and neighbouring Saxons, made a Conqueſt of the beſt part of Britain. The Country ſo aboundeth in Cattel, that it ſendeth yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, beſides great ſtore of Butter, Cheeſe, Tallow, Hides, and Horſes: divided commonly into North Juitland, and South Juitland, or Juitland ſpecially ſo called, and the Dukedom of Sleſwick.

SOUTH JUITLAND, or the Dukedom of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe which lies next to Holſtein; called South Juitland, from the Southern ſituation of it; and Sleſwick, from the chief Town of it, and the Head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the moſt part, is plain, little ſwelled with Mountains; the Fields whereof do interchangeably yield both Fiſh and Corn. For during one three years they ſow it conſtantly, and reap the Fruits of it, and for the next three let the Pools overflow the Land, to the end the Fiſh may eat up the Graſs, (whom they catch as often as they pleaſe) and the Mud which is left behind inrich the Soil. But beſides their Pools, they have alſo on the Baltick Shores many goodly Bays; not only commodious for Merchants, but well ſtored with Fiſh, and with Salmons eſpecially.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Flensborch, ſeated among very high Mountains on the Shore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port ſo deep, ſo ſafe, and ſo commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their Ships cloſe to their houſes. 2. Huſem, or Huſſum, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eyder. 3. Haderſleve, a Biſhop's See, if not rather ſome Town or Manor of the Biſhops of Sleſwick, ſituate on a navigable In-let of the Baltick Sea, wherewith it is almoſt encompaſſed; beautified with the fair Caſtle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldeſt Son of King Chriſtiern the firſt, then Duke of Holſtein, but finiſhed by Frederick the ſecond, King of Denmark. 4. Londenberg, in the Peninſula called Eyderſtede, over againſt De Strandt, an Iſland of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gottorp, a ſtrong Fort or Caſtle of the Duke of Sleſwick's, at the end of a large Bay or In-let of the Baltick alſo: remarkable for the Toll-booth or Cuſtom-houſe there erected, at which there is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen ſent out of the North Juitland into Germany. 7. Sleſwick, originally by the Danes called Hydebui, built, as they ſay, by Hethe a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleſwick, as the Town upon the River Sley, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Epiſcopal See, and made the Head of the Dukedom, ſo giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom firſt erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel a former King Anno 1280, to be held by him under the Right and Soveraignty of the Kings thereof. But the Male iſſue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holſtein, as before was ſaid, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, ſhe extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; but it was again recovered by the Valour and good fortune of his Son Adolphus. After whoſe death it fell, together with Holſtein, upon Chriſtiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, as before related, by whom it was incorporated with that Crown, never ſince aliened, but aſſigned ſometimes in Portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the Sons of Alexander, ſurnamed of Sunderborg, (the place of his Nativity) Son of John, one of the younger Sons of King Chriſtiern the third.

NORTH JUITLAND, the moſt Northern part of all the Cherſoneſe, hath on the South the Dukedom of Sleſwick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Biſhopricks, into four Dioceſes or Diſtricts; that is to ſay,

1. The Dioceſe of RIP or RIPEN, bordering next to Sleſwick, containing 30 Prefectures or Herets, (as they uſe to call them) ſeven Cities or walled Towns, and ten Caſtles. The chief of which are, 1. Ripen, the Epiſcopal See, ſituate near the German Ocean. 2. Kolding, on a Creek of the Baltick Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Chriſtiern the third built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an Univerſity.)

2. The Dioceſe of ARHUSEN, lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltick, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, ſeven Cities or walled Towns, and five Caſtles. The chief whereof are, 1. Arhuſen, the Epiſcopal See, ſeated on the Baltick, enjoying a commodious Port and well frequented; the firſt Biſhop hereof being that Poppo who converted this Nation; Chriſtianity and Epiſcopacy going for the moſt part hand in hand together. 2. Schanderborg, on the South of Arhuſen. 3. Kallo, a ſtrong Caſtle of the Kings, ſeated in the inmoſt part of a large Bay, occaſioned by the Promontory or Cape of Hillenis, extending hence two Dutch miles to the high Hill of Ellemanberg. Oppoſite whereunto, and pertaining to this Juriſdiction, lie the Iſlands of 1. Samſoe, 2. Hiolm, 3. Tuen, 4. Hiarnee, (perhaps Gerno) 5. Hilgenes, and others.

3. The Dioceſs of WIBORCH, on the North of Arhuſen, containeth ſixteen Herets, the Iſlands of 1. Jegen, 2. Hanſholm, 3. Oſtholm, 4. Ciſland, 5. Egholm, and 6. Bodum; three Cities or walled Towns, and as many Caſtles. The principal of which is Wiborch, the Epiſcopal See, an Inland City, but ſituate on a Water which runneth into the Bay of Limfort. The ordinary Seat of Judicature for both the Juitlands, for all Cauſes, as well Criminal as Civil: the Court continually ſitting from one day to another, unleſs perhaps the Judges do ſometimes adjourn it for their own Refreſhments.

4. The Dioceſe of BURGLAVE, or Vandalia, lying farther North, is commonly ſubdivided into four Parts or Members: that is to ſay, 1. Thyland, lying South of the Bay of Limfort, on the Baltick ſide, whoſe chief Town is Alborch, the ordinary Seat and Reſidence of the Biſhop of Vandalia, from hence many times ſtiled Alburgenſis, ſituate on the Bay aforeſaid, which, opening into the Baltick Sea, extendeth through the main Land Weſtward almoſt as far as the German Ocean. 2. Morſee, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures or Herets, the Town of Nicoping, the Caſtle of Lunſted, and the Iſle of Ageroe. 3. Hanheret, on the North weſt of the Bay of Limfort, containing four Herets, the Town of Thyſtad, where Chriſtiern the third founded a publick School, or ſuch another Univerſity as that of Kolding, the Caſtle of Orum, and the Iſlands of Oland and Oxholm. There is in this part alſo the high Rock called Skeringelint, a noted Sea-mark, fitly ſerving to give notice to the Sailour of the Quick-ſands which lye underneath it and about this Coaſt. 4. Wenſyſſel, Venſilia, or Wenſlie, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Vandalorum ſedes, the Seat of the Vandals, taketh up all the reſt of the North of Juitland, containing ſix Prefectures, the Iſlands of 1. Groyſholm, 2. Hertzholm, and 3. Tidſholm, three Towns, and one Caſtle: the moſt remarkable of which is Schagen, within the moſt Northerly point of all this Cherſoneſe. In this part is a very high Mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found ſome marks and remainders of the ancient Giants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Juitlands, in the time of Ptolomy and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phunduſi, Charudes, and in the moſt Northern Tracts the Cimbri, of whom the four firſt were but Tribes or Nations. Theſe moving toward the South in that great Expedition againſt Spain, made by the neighbouring Vandals on the Roman Empire, occaſioned the Juites and Angli to inlarge or ſhift their Dwellings, each taking up the parts which lay neareſt to them. The Juites, or Gutæ, being a People of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolomy, took up the Northern parts thereof, from them named Juitland: the other being a People of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts which lay next the Saxons, their old Friends and Confederates, (their chief Town being Sleſwick) where Angelen, now an obſcure Village, once of greater note, doth preſerve their memory. But theſe uniting with the Saxons in the Conqueſt of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep poſſeſſion of the Country againſt the new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them, by whom the Country being conquered as far as to the River Eyder, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdom: of whom we ſhall ſay more in the cloſe of all; firſt taking a ſurvey of the Baltick Iſlands, and ſuch Provinces on the main Land of Scandia as properly make up the Kingdom of Denmark.

2. THE BALTICK ISLANDS are in number 35, and are ſo called, becauſe they lie diſperſed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the Germans De Oſt Zee; anciently by ſome Mare Suevicum, by Pomponius Mela Sinus Codanus, by Strabo Sinus Venedicus; but generally Mare Balticum, becauſe the great Peninſula of Scandia, within which it is, was by ſome Writers of the middle and darker Times called Balthia. It beginneth at the narrow paſſage called the Sound; and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia and Lituania. The reaſons why this Sea, being ſo large, doth not ebbe and flow, are, 1. the Narrowneſs of the Streight by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2. the Northern ſituation of it, whereby the Celeſtial Influences have leſſer power upon it. The principal of this great ſhole of Iſlands are, 1. Seland, 2. Funen, or Fionia, 3. Langland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falſtre, 6. Aria, 7. Alſen, 8. Tuſing, 9. Ween, 10. Femera, and 11. Bornholm. Some others of leſs note we ſhall only name, and ſo paſs them over.

1. SELAND, the greateſt Iſland of the Baltick Seas, is ſituate near the main Land of Scandia, parted from it by a narrow Streight or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sundt or Sound. A Streight through which all Ships which have any trading to or from the Baltick muſt of neceſſity take their courſe; all other Paſſages being barred up with impaſſable Rocks, or otherwiſe prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon Forfeiture of all their Goods. So that being the only ſafe Paſſage which theſe Seas afford, one may ſometimes ſee two or three hundred Ships in a day paſs through it: all which pay a Toll or Impoſition to the King, according to their Bills of lading. And to ſecure this Paſſage, and command all Paſſengers, there are two ſtrong Caſtles, the one in Scandia, called Helſinburg, whereof more anon; the other in this Iſland, which is called Cronenburg.

But before we come to this Caſtle, we muſt view the other parts of the Iſland, being in length two days journey, and almoſt as much in breadth: the Soil ſo fertile, that, without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all Neceſſaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Codanonia, and containeth in it fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Caſtles. The principal whereof are, 1. Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Iſlands, by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants; ſituate near the Sea, with an handſom Port; the Iſle of Amager, which lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Town, making a very ſafe Road for all kinds of Shipping. The Town is of an orbicular form, and reaſonably well fortified; but the Buildings mean, for the moſt part of Clay and Timber, only to be commended for a ſpacious Market-place. Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdom, and ſituate in the heart of thoſe Dominions, is the Palace-Royal; built of Free-ſtone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great Beauty or Magnificence. Moſt memorable for the Univerſity here founded by Henry, or Ericus the ninth; but perfected by King Chriſtiern the firſt, by him and the ſucceeding Princes liberally endowed. 2. Fredericksburg, amongſt Woods of Beech, built for a place of Pleaſure by Frederick the ſecond, where the King hath a fine Houſe, and a little Park, in which (amongſt other foreign Beaſts) are ſome Fallow-Deer tranſported hither out of England in the 24. year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Roſchilt, not walled, but counted for a City, as a See Epiſcopal; the Biſhops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning and Inaugurating the Kings of Denmark. In the Cathedral Church hereof are to be ſeen the Tombs of many of the Daniſh Kings; ſome of them very fair and ſumptuous, the moſt mean and ordinary. 4. Sora, of old times beautified with a goodly Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School built here by Frederick the firſt. But in the year 1623, Chriſtiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other diſſolved Monaſteries, the one in the Iſle of Lawland and the other in Juitland, founded here a new Univerſity, for the better ſupply of learned Miniſters for the Churches of Denmark and Norway, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen; and furniſhed it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences for its firſt Profeſſors. 5. Elſenore, or Helſingore, a Village only, but much frequented by Seafaring men as their Ships paſs by the Sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle of Cronenburg, built with uncredible charge and pains by King Frederick the ſecond; the foundation of it being laid on huge Stones ſunk into the Sea, and ſo faſtened together, that no Storm or Tempeſt, how violent ſoever, is able to ſhake it; well fortified as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace and a Fort, being ſince the firſt building of it the moſt conſtant Reſidence of the Kings of Denmark, who from hence may eaſily diſcern each Ship which ſails through the Sundt, each of which addeth more or leſs unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleaſing Proſpect. By the Commodity of this and the oppoſite Caſtle, the King doth not only ſecure his Cuſtoms, but very much ſtrengthen his Eſtate: the Caſtles being ſo near, and the Streight ſo narrow, that, by the addition of ſome few Ships, he may keep the greateſt Navy that is from paſſing by him.

Unto the Government and Juriſdiction of this Iſland belong many others, the principal whereof are, 1. A- magria, Amager, or Amach, which helps to make up the Port or Road of Copenhagen, ſpoken of before; planted with Hollanders brought hither by the procurement of Chriſtiern the ſecond. 2. Mund, or Moen-land, the chief Town whereof is called Stekye. 3. (2) HVENE, or WEEN, a little South of Cronenburg Caſtle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite ſo broad; remarkable only for the Studies of that famous Aſtronomer Tycho Brahe, to whom Frederick the ſecond gave this Iſland, that living in a private and ſolitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day moſt obſervable for the Caſtle of Uranopolis, or Urenborg, in which the greateſt part of his Mathematical Inſtruments are preſerved in ſafety.

3. FIONIA, or FUNEN, the ſecond Iſland of account in all the Baltick, is ſituate betwixt Seland and Juitland, from which laſt it is parted by a Streight called Middelfar Sundt, ſo narrow, and of ſo ſmall a Sea, that the Iſland and the Cherſonſe ſeem joined together. A Country of a pleaſant and delightful Situation, and as fruitful withal; containing 12 Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets or Prefectures, 16 Towns, and 6 Royal Caſtles, beſides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens Houſes. The chief whereof are, 1. Odenſee, or Othenſche (called in Latine Othonia) an Epiſcopal See, founded here, at the firſt converſion of this People, by Otho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town is not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Canute, the other to St. Francis: ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, from which the reſidue of the Towns are almoſt equally diſtant; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated for Trade and Merchandiſe, as they do not only traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Ruſſia, Flanders, and Germany 2. Nyborch, 3. Foborch, 4. Swynborch, 5. Middelfar, whence the Streight is ſo named, 6. Bowens, and 7. Kartemunde; all ſeated on ſome Haven, or convenient Creek. The principal of the Caſtles are, 1. Newborg, 2. Hagerſhow, 3. Eſcheborg, 4. Hinſgagel, 5. the Court of Rugard. In this Iſland, not far from the Caſtle of Hagenſchow, is the Mountain of Oſſenberg, where John Ranzovius An. 1430. diſcomfited the great Army of Chriſtopher, the Brother of Anthony, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in thoſe unſettled times to invade the Kingdom, under colour of reſtoring Chriſtiern the ſecond, formerly depoſed: in which Fight the Earls of Hoye and Teckleborg were both ſlain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like Pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 leſſer Iſlands, moſt of them inhabited: the chief of which are,

4. LANGLAND, ſeven Dutch miles in length, in which, beſides many Villages and Gentlemens Houſes, we have the Town of Rudkoping, and the Caſtle of Franeker.

5. LAWLAND, disjoined from Seland by a little narrow Streight called Grone-ſundt; ſo plentiful of Corn and Cheſnuts, that Ships full fraighted with them are ſent yearly hence. An Iſland which, beſides many Caſtles, Villages and Manſion-houſes of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nyſtadt, 2. Naſco, 3. Togrop, 4. Richus, and 5. Mariboane; in which laſt anciently was a very rich Monaſtery, the Revenues whereof are now imployed for the endowment of the new Univerſity of Sora, founded by Chriſtiern the fourth, as before was noted.

6. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of Corn yearly to ſome neighbouring Iſlands. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the Elegancy of the place and Pleaſantneſs of the Situation is called the Naples of Denmark. 2. Stubeopen, from whence there is the ordinary paſſage into Germany, ſeven Dutch miles hence.

7. TUSING, not far from Swynborch, or Swineburg, a Town of Fionia; a Dutch mile in length, ſituate in a dangerous and troubleſom Sea, from whence is no ſafe paſſage either to Seland, Funen, or Juitland, though much diſtant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Aſſens, towards Juitland; 2. Niburg, towards Seland, and 3. the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Roſencrantz.

8. FEMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitful and well-peopled Iſland, having in it the Towns of 1. Derborch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Pietterſdorp. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not ſo much in danger of being made ſubject to the Imperialiſts by the taking of Holſtein and both Juitlands, as by planting a ſtrong Garriſon in this ſmall Iſland: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, againſt all Invaſions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Iſlands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aroe, 2. Romſo, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebelo, 5. Boko, 6. Brando, 7. Zoroe, 8. Agernis, 9. Hellenis, 10. Jerdo, 11. Birkholm; of which nothing memorable.

Amongſt theſe Iſlands, but not ſubordinate to Fionia, are,

9. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleſwick, conſiſting of 3. Pariſhes, ſome Gentlemens Houſes, and the Town and Caſtle of Koping: ſuppoſed to be the habitation of the Arii, ſpoken of by Tacitus; but a Colony rather of them, as I ſuppoſe. And not far off,

10. ALSEN, another little Iſland, but of more repute, callled in Latine Elyſia, oppoſite to the Gulf or Bay of Flensborg in the Dukedom of Sleſwyck, to which it alſo appertaineth. Well ſtored it is with Beaſts for profit, and Game for pleaſure; ſo populous, that ſome thouſands of men may be eaſily and ſuddenly raiſed in it; conſiſting of 13 Pariſhes and 4 Towns: that is to ſay, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Oſterholm, 3. Norderborg, and 4. the good Town and Caſtle of Sunderborg, one of the ordinary Reſidences of the Dukes of Sleſwick, and honoured with the Birth of many of their Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the Habitation anciently of the Elyſii, ſpoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli: But being the Angli in thoſe times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when ſome Colonies of the Angli ſeated themſelves in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, as before was ſaid, ſome of the Arii and Elyſii might go along for company, and plant themſelves near them and theſe Iſlands.

11. BORNHOLM, the laſt of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is ſituate more Eaſtward, oppoſite to that part of Scandia which is called Bleking, betwixt it and Pomeren. An Iſle of excellent Paſturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, wherewith, as alſo with Butter, Cheeſe, Wool, Hides, and ſome ſtore of Fruits, they ſupply the wants of ſome of their neighbours; beſides good quantities of powdered Beef & Mutton, which they barrel up and ſell to Mariners. It containeth many good Towns and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Iſland. Both Town and Iſland were pawned by ſome former Kings unto thoſe of Lubeck; from them redeemed by King Frederick the ſecond for a great ſum of money, after it had been in their poſſeſſion about 50 years.

Theſe Iſlands in the time of Pomponius Mela were by one general name called the Hemodes, in number reckoned to be ſeven; the reſidue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are no-where mentioned in the Ancients. Of theſe ſeven, the greateſt and beſt peopled was called Codanonia, (ſuppoſed to be Seland,) in which the ſaid Authour placeth the Teutoni. By Ptolemy it is called Scandia dia Minor, with reference to the great Peninſula of Scandia, ſuppoſed by him to be an Iſland. From this, or from the Sea adjoining, called Sinus Codanus, the people of theſe Iſlands and the next Eaſtern Continent took the name of Danes; ſpreading the name afterwards, as they did their Conqueſts; of which more anon. In the mean time we muſt croſs over the Sound, and take notice of ſuch other parts of this Kingdom as lie on the other ſide thereof, in the vaſt Continent or Demy-Iſland (which you will) of Scandia: of which ſomewhat muſt be firſt premiſed, in regard that not only ſome parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norway (the Northern Iſlands excepted) are contained in it.

3. SCANDIA, by Pliny and Solinus called Scandinavia, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the Eaſt that Bay or Branch of the Baltick which is called the Finniſch and Bodner Seas, on the North and Weſt the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick or Ooſt Zee, as the Dutch call it; joined to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Iſthmus, or Neck of Land, at the bottom of the Bodner Zee, not far from Wardhuys. In regard of ſo great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Ancients thought to be an Iſland, but incompertæ magnitudinis, of an unknown greatneſs, as both Pytheas and Xenophon Lampſicenus do affirm in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baſilia, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations and Experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Iſland, but a part of the Continent, and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdom of Norway, the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and ſome part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark is ſituate in the South of this great Peninſula, and divided into the three Provinces of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleking: and in them are 23 Herets or Prefectures, and 15 Cities.

1. HALLANDIA, or HALLAND, hath on the Eaſt the wild Woods which part it from Gothland, on the Weſt the intervening Sea betwixt it and Juitland, on the North Sweden properly and ſpecially ſo called, on the South Scandia or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulneſs of the Air, plainneſs of the Soil, commodiouſneſs of Havens, plenty of Fiſh, pleaſure of Hunting, for inexhauſtible Mines of Braſs and Lead, (with ſome veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and Villages, and Civility of the Inhabitants, is not inferiour to any. Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Laholm, 2. Halmſtad, 3. Falkenborch; all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable Streams, whoſe names I find not. 4. Warsberg, upon the Sea-ſide alſo, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an Hill; taken and garriſoned by the Swedes Anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again Anno 1569.

2. SCANIA, or SCHONEN, hath on the Eaſt Bleſcida or Bleking, on the Weſt the Sound, running along the ſhore hereof for the ſpace of twenty German miles, on the North Halland, on the South the Baltick or Ooſt Zee. The Country is of the ſame nature with Halland, as before deſcribed; the Character of that pertaining to all the three; this having over and above, as peculiar to it, that the Sea-ſhores are ſtored with ſuch Sholes of Herrings, that ſometimes Ships are ſcarce able with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which are, 1. Lunden, an Archbiſhop's See, the Metropolitan of Denmark and Norway; advanced unto that honour by the means and mediation of Ericus the firſt, who purpoſely made a journy to Rome to effect that buſineſs; the Church of Denmark being before that time ſubject to the Archbiſhops of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is ſituate ſomewhat within the Land, but the Cathedral eaſily diſcernible by Mariners as they ſail along. The City is but mean, and, were it not for the Cathedral, of no beauty at all. But that indeed is affirmed to be a work of much Magnificence and Art, eſpecially for the Clock, the Dial, and ſome outward adjuncts. For in the Dial curiouſly ſet out with divers Colours are to be ſeen diſtinctly the Year, Month, Week-day, and Hour of every day throughout the year; with the Feaſts, both moveable and fixed; together with the Motion of the Sun and Moon, and their paſſage through each Degree of the Zodiack. Then for the Clock, it is ſo framed by artificial Engines, that whenſoever it is to ſtrike, two horſemen encounter one another, giving as many blows apiece as the Bell ſounds hours: and on the opening of a door there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Chriſt in her Arms, and the three Kings or Magi (with their ſeveral Trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and preſenting ſeverally their Gifts; two Trumpeters ſounding all the while, to adorn the Pomp of that Proceſſion. 2. Malmoge, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, juſt oppoſite to Copenhagen in Seland, a well-traded Port; the Birth-place of Gaſpar Bartholinus, otherwiſe called Malmogius Danus, that great Mathematician, ſuppoſed to be the Authour of the Clock and Dial before deſcribed. 3. Trelleborg, on the North of Elbogen, 4. Landſcron, on the Sea-ſide, of great ſtrength and conſequence. 5. Helſenborg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, juſt oppoſite to Helſinore and Cronenburg in Seland; the other of the two Keys which openeth into the Sound. 6. Rottenby, a Frontier-town bordering on Verendia, a Province of Swethland. 7. Chriſtiana, or Chriſtierndorp, a ſtrong piece built by Chriſtiern the fourth, An 1604, compaſſed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marſhes, thought to be impregnable.

3. BLESCIDA, or BLEKING, is bounded on the Eaſt and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Verendia, a Province of Swethland, on the Weſt with Scania or Schonen; more mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking ſomewhat of the former Character which we had of Holland. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Vſted, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2. Chriſtiernburg, in Latine Chriſtianapolis, on the borders of Swethland; raiſed out of the ground by Chriſtiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdom on that ſide, Anno 1604, but not long after by a warlike ſtratagem ſurpriſed by the Swedes, in the late War betwixt thoſe Kingdoms in the year 1611; deſtroyed and diſpeopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleaſant Object, but ſince repaired and repleniſhed. 3. Ahuys, upon the River which divides the Kingdoms not far from Chriſtiernburg.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Guta and Dauciones, taking up the South-parts of this great Peninſula. Meridionalia tenent Gutæ & Dauciones, as we find in Ptolemy, Geogr. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability muſt be meant of theſe Provinces. Of theſe the Gutes, paſſing over into the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, poſſeſſed themſelves of the North parts of it, ſince from them called Juitland. The reſt, uniting with the people of thoſe many Iſlands which lye together in the Bay or Gulf called Sinus Codanus, (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes; and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof above 1000 years before the Birth of our Saviour. Firſt taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Juſtinian the firſt; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived that they made themſelves Maſters of ſo much of the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe as had been formerly poſſeſſed by the Juites and Angli, whoſe forſaken or ill peopled Seats they poſſeſſed themſelves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confuſed eſtate, ſometimes made ſubject to the Norwegians, ſometimes to the Swedes, but always without Law and Order; till by the King Godfrey or Gotricus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they firſt began to infeſt the Coaſts of England, invaded Frieſland with a Fleet of 200 Sail; and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unſeaſonable death of Godfrey, and the Quarrels which aroſe about the Succeſſion after his deceaſe, had not kept them off. Their Affairs at home being again well ſettled, they imployed their whole Forces againſt England, as the weaker Enemy: over which they tyrannized 250 years, and reigned 26, under three Kings of that Nation. Outed of that, and the terrour of their name being over, they have been moſt buſied with their Neighbours of Sweden and Germany; improving their Eſtate, but rather by Marriages and civil Contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norway and the Dukedom of Holſtein: their Pretenſions to, and for a time the poſſeſſion of, the Crown of Sweden getting them nothing in concluſion but Blows and Loſſes. So that we have no more to do then to ſum up a Catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norway, leaving the reſt that follow to another place.

The Kings of DENMARK.

A. Ch.

797 1. Gotricus, the firſt Legiſlator of the Danes, and the Eſtabliſher of their Kingdom; a prudent and valiant Prince.

2. Olaus Son of Gotricus, or Godfrey.

3. Heningus, Son of Olaus.

873 4. Siward, Son to a Daughter of Godfrey, by the King of Norway.

5. Regnier, Son of Siward.

6. Siward II.

7. Ericus, or Henricus, baptized at Mentz at the ſame time with his Brother Harald, recovered the Kingdom to his Houſe, (of which they had been outed by the Race of Godfrey.)

8. Canutus, the Son of Ericus, the Heatheniſh Son of a Chriſtian and pious Father.

880 9. Froto, the Son of Canutus, a profeſſed Chriſtian.

886 10. Gormo, (our Engliſh Writers call him Gormund) Son of Froto.

889 11. Harald, the Son of Gormo, or Gormund.

900 12. Gormo II. Son of Harald, an enemy of the Chriſtian Faith.

927 13. Harald II. Son of Gormo the ſecond, a good Chriſtian.

975 14. Sueno, or Swain, Son of Harald, at firſt a great Enemy of the Goſpel, an Uſurper of the Throne in his Father's life-time, and a great Scourge unto the Engliſh. Outed of his Eſtate by Ericus of Swethland, he received the Goſpel, regained his Kingdom, and eſtabliſhed Chriſtianity in this Country; his War on England ſtill continuing.

1010 15. Olaus, the eldeſt Son of Swain, King of Denmark and Norway.

1020 16. Canutus II. Brother of Olaus, the firſt King of England of the Danes, ſucceeded his Brother in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway; to which he added alſo the Crown of Sweden.

1037 17. Canutus III. Son of Canutus the ſecond, the laſt King of England of the Race of the Danes.

18. Magnus, Son of Olaus King of Norway.

1051 19. Sueno II. Siſter's Son of Canutus the ſecond, by Ulſo an Engliſh Duke.

1074 20. Harald III. baſe Son of Sueno the ſecond.

21. Canutus IV. another of the baſe Sons of Sueno, murthered at the Altar in the Church of Odenſee in the Iſle of Fionia; afterwards canonized a Saint.

1088 21. Olaus II. another of the baſe Sons of Swain.

1099 23. Ericus II. another of the baſe Sons of Swain, the Founder of the Archiepiſcopal See of Lunden.

1102 24. Harald IV. baſe Son of Henry or Ericus the ſecond.

1133 25. Nicolas, another of the baſe Sons of Swain.

1135 26. Ericus III. another of the baſe Sons of Ericus the ſecond.

1140 27. Ericus IV. commonly called the fifth, (ſome one of the younger Houſe being reckoned in) Nephew of Ericus the ſecond.

1150 28. Sueno III. Son of Ericus the third, and Canutus the fifth, Grandchild of Nicolas, both Kings; the firſt reigning in Scandia, the other in Juitland: both died without Iſſue; Canutus being ſlain by Sueno, and he by Waldemar.

1157 29. Waldemar, Son of Canutus, the lawful Son of Ericus the ſecond, after the interpoſition of ſo many Baſtards, ſucceeded at the laſt in the Throne of his Fathers. By his means the Rugians and Vandals imbraced the Goſpel.

1185 30. Canutus V. Son of Waldemar.

1203 31. Waldemar II. Brother of Canutus, and Duke of Sleſwick before his coming to the Crown.

1243 32. Ericus V. called the VII. Son of Waldemar the ſecond, ſlain by the practices and Treaſon of his Brother Abel.

1251 33. Abel, Brother of Ericus, ſlain by the Peaſants of Frieſland.

1252 34. Chriſtopher, Brother of Abel and Ericus.

1260 35. Ericus VI. (VIII.) Son of Chriſtopher.

1287 36. Ericus VII. (IX.) younger Son of Ericus, ſupplanted his eldeſt Brother Chriſtopher.

1327 37. Chriſtopher II. eldeſt Son of Ericus, at firſt diſpoſſeſſed of his Birth-right by his Brother Ericus; after whoſe death he ſucceded in the Crown, by the help of his Half-brother the Earl of Holſtein.

1334 38. Waldemar III. Son of Chriſtopher the ſecond againſt whom and his Encroachments the Sea-towns, commonly called the Hanſe, did firſt confederate, and vanquiſhed him in many Battels.

1376 39. Margaret, Daughter and Heir of Waldemar the third, married with Aquin King of Norway, ſo uniting the Kingdoms: of whom and their Succeſſors we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we have took a view alſo of the Kingdom of Norway, and the Appendixes thereof.

3. NORWAY.

NORWAY is bounded on the Eaſt with Swethland, from which it is parted by a perpetual Ridge of rough and wild Mountains, called the Dofrine Hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to ſay, by the Frozen Sea upon the North; the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the Weſt; and on the South with the Daniſh

Sea, interpoſing betwixt it and the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, being in breadth from Schagen, the moſt Northern point of Juitland, to Congel, the moſt Southerly Town of Norway, no leſs then 250 miles.

It is called Norway quaſi Tractus ſeu Via Septentrionali, from the Northern ſituation of it; containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above half ſo much, inhabited by a People given to Hoſpitality, Plain-dealing, and abhorring Theft. Anciently they were great Warriers, & became terrible to all the more Southern Nations; by whom they were called Normans, (that is to ſay, Homines Boreales, or North-men, as Willielmus Gemiticenſis rightly hath it) being at that time a Mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Swethlanders, apart from the Danes; whoſe ſteps they followed in their frequent, or rather continual, Piracies on the Coaſts of England, France and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the ſame ſenſe they are called Nordluidi, a name made into Latine out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word Lieu, ſignifying men of a Northern Place or Nation.

Of the Poſition of it in regard of the Heavens we have ſpoke already; but more particularly it reacheth from the firſt Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 58 Degrees, 26 Minutes, as far as to the 71. Degree of Latitude. By which accompt the longeſt Day in the Southern point is but 18 hours; whereas at Wardhuys, being ſituate fartheſt North of all this Country, they have no Night for almoſt three whole months together.

The Country is for the moſt part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vaſt Woods, extream cold, and but ill inhabited. In the beſt parts thereof it affords little Corn, and in the moſt Northern none at all: inſomuch that the common ſort of people are fain to uſe dried Fiſh (that which we commonly call Stock-fiſh) in ſtead of Bread, but the better (that is, the richer) ſort buy Corn of ſuch Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief Commodities are Stock-fiſh, rich Furs, Train-oyl, Pitch, and Tackling for Ships, as Maſts, Cables, Deal-boards, and the like; which the Inhabitants exchange for Corn, Wine, Fruits, Beer, and other neceſſaries for man's life. The Country is exceedingly troubled with certain little Beaſts which they call Lemmers. They are about the bigneſs of a Field-Mouſe, and are by the Inhabitants ſaid to drop out of the Clouds in tempeſtuous weather. They devour, like the Locuſts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time die all in heaps (as it were) together; and with their ſtench ſo poiſon the Air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies and with a Giddineſs in the Head. But theſe Beaſts come not ſo often to infect the Land, as the Whales do to terrifie and moleſt the ſhores, the Weſtern Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for thoſe great Leviathans: againſt whoſe violence and fury the Mariners and people of the Sea-coaſt have found a Remedy, which is by caſting out ſome water intermixed with the Oyl of Caſtor; the ſmell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this help there were no Fiſhing on theſe Coaſts, which is the greateſt Staple-commodity (beſides materials for Shipping) which the Country yieldeth.

The Towns here are exceeding thin, and in them the Houſes for the moſt part very poor and miſerable; commonly patched up of Dirt and Hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage-houſes in the Fen-Countries. It is diſtributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Caſtles which command the ſame. Of theſe,

1. The firſt moſt towards the South is the Caſtle of BAHVYS: to which are ſubject the Towns of 1. Marſtrand, ſeated in a Demi-Iſland begirt with Rocks; of moſt note for the infinite quantity of Herrings caught hereabouts. 2. Congel, upon the Sea, a Town of Merchandiſe, oppoſite to Schagen in Denmark. 3. Oddewald.

2. AGGERHVYS, the ſecond of the five Royal Caſtles, hath under its Command the Towns of 1. Anſlo, or Aſloia, on a Bay or Gullet oppoſite to Juitland, an Epiſcopal See, and of moſt eſteem of all the Country, by reaſon of the Courts of Judicature which are therein held. 2. Tonsberg, or Koningsberg, that is to ſay, the King's or the Kingly Mountain, formerly a Retiring-place of the Kings of Norway. 3. Frederickſtadt, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Denmark. 4. Schin or Schon, remarkable for its Mines of Iron and Copper. 5. Saltzburg, 6. Hammar the greater, and 7. Hammar the leſs, divided by the interpoſing of the Bay called Sinus Mœſanus in former times the See of a Biſhop, ſince removed to Aſloia, or rather thereunto united in theſe latter times, as many poor Biſhopricks be in Ireland.

3. BERGERHVYS is the third Caſtle of Command herein. Subordinate whereunto are, 1. Bergen, the principal Town of the Country, an Epiſcopal See, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark, ſituate amongſt high Mountains, at the bottom of a deep Creek or Arm of the Ocean called Carmeſunt. A noted Port, and much reſorted to by Merchants of moſt forein Nations, bringing in Corn, Meal, Bread, Beer, Wine, and Aqua-vitæ, to ſupply the natural wants and defects hereof; and in exchange tranſporting hence Fiſh, Furs, Cordage, and other materials for Shipping. In which regard it was accounted formerly one of the four chief Staple-Towns of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanſe: the other three being London in England, Novogrod in Muſcovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath loſt moſt of its Trade, removed hence to Wardhuys, nearer unto Muſcovie: as the great Town of Novogrod, by reaſon of the change of Navigation from the Baltick into that of the Northern paſſage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her Traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amſterdam. For the Hollanders, by blocking up the Haven, but eſpecially by keeping Bergen op Zoon, have ſuch a command over the River, that no Veſſel can paſs or repaſs without their licence. 2. Staffanger, an Epiſcopal See alſo, but not elſe obſervable.

4. The Caſtle of TRONDHEIM is the fourth, ſituate in the Town of Trondheim, or Drontheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine Nidroſia; the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Metropolitan of Norway. A beautiful City heretofore, but ſince the Subjection of this Country unto the Danes reduced to a Burrough. So called of the River Nider, upon which it is ſeated, and Roſa, the name then of the principal Church; which in time gave place to the Cathedral for greatneſs and neatneſs of the Fabrick, all of poliſhed Stone, not giving place to any in Europe; about the year 1530 much defaced with Fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being eſtimated at 7000 Crowns; a great ſum of money in thoſe times, and ſo poor a Country. So that, by caſting up our reckoning, we find in Norway one Archbiſhop and four Biſhops; that is to ſay, the Archbiſhop of Trondheim or Nidroſia, the Biſhops of Bergen, Anſlo, Staffangor, and Hammar: of the ſame Power, Juriſdiction and Revenue, ſince the Reformation, as thoſe of Denmark; whereof, and of the firſt Converſion of this People to the Chriſtian Faith, we have ſpoke already.

5. The fifth and laſt Caſtle which commands this Country is that of WARDHVYS, ſo called of the Town of Wardhuys, as that is from the Iſle Ward, in which it is ſeated. A ſmall Caſtle, and the Town in former times but mean and poor, ſituate in the extreme North-point of all this Kingdom; but in thoſe times accounted (as eaſily it might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honoured in the Summer time with the Seat and Reſidence of the Governour, retiring more Southwards in the Winter, at what time, by reaſon of the extremity of the Cold, and long abſence of the Sun for ſome months together (the Town lying within the Arctick Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late time it is much improved both in Wealth and Building, by reaſon of the removal of the Engliſh Trading from Novogrod, near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of S. Nicolas, not far from hence; drawing by that means the Trade of Muſcovie and Norway more near together. So that now it is not only uſeful unto the Danes, in regard that it ſomewhat aweth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives, for that cauſe fortified very ſtrongly by King Frederick the ſecond; but made very profitable to him alſo, by the reſort of Dutch and Engliſh, who muſt of neceſſity touch at it (if they make no ſtay there) in their way to Muſcovie. Other Towns in theſe two laſt Prefectures are not worth looking after.

And ſo much for the Continent or Main-land of Norway: let us next look upon the Iſlands in the Northern Ocean which belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the Northern Ocean.

THE Northern Sea, ſo named from its Northern ſituation, is by ſome called Mare Scythium, becauſe it coaſted along the Shores of Scythia; by Juvenal Oceanus Glacialis, becauſe often frozen; by Pliny, in the ſame ſenſe, Mare Amalchium, the word in the Scythick Language ſignifying frozen, or congealed; by the Ruſſes or Muſcovites Myrmanskoy Mare; by the Cimbrians, in their Tongue, Marimoruſa, that is to ſay, the Dead Sea, becauſe of the ſlowneſs of its motion, often clogged with Ice; and, in the ſame ſenſe, Mare pigrum, by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth beſt deſcribe, from whom take it thus “Trans Sueones Mare aliud pigrum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes there “is another Sea, ſo ſlow and almoſt immoveable, that “many think it to be the Bounds which compaſs the “whole World. Some are perſwaded that the Sound of “the Sun is heard as he ariſeth out of this Sea; and that “many ſhapes of Gods are ſeen, and the Beams of his “Head. Illuc uſque (& fama vera) tantùm Natura; At “this Sea (the Report is credidle) is the end of Nature “and the World. The Engliſh were the firſt of all civil people who adventured to open and diſcover the Paſſages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancellour, arriving by this way in Ruſſia, An. 1553, and tracing out the way; which others of that Nation, together with the Flemmings, Hollanders, and ſome Towns of the Hanſe, have ſince followed. Of which more in Muſcovie. The principal Iſlands diſperſed in it are, 1. Groenland. 2. Iſeland. 3. Freezland, belonging to the Crown of Norway, to be ſurveyed at the preſent: Nova Zemla and Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Iſland, appertaining (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Muſcovie, of which more hereafter.

1. ISELAND is ſituate under the Arctick Circle; in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the abundance of Ice in it and about it; frozen continually for the ſpace of 8 months, and ſo vehemently chilled with the Northern Winds, that it yieldeth neither Corn nor Trees, except Juniper only: yet there is Graſs in ſuch abundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they do not ſometimes keep their Cattel from feeding, they are in danger to ſurfeit and die with fulneſs. Beaſts for Labour here are both Horſes and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without Horns, but the Sheep not ſo: and they have alſo here a fine breed of little Dogs, known amongſt us by the name of Iſeland Dogs, the delight of Ladies; as alſo white Falcons and white Ravens, Eagles with white Tails, with Hares and Bears of the ſame colour. By reaſon of their want of Corn, the people eat Stock-fiſh (as in Norway) in ſtead of Bread: yet notwithſtanding, by reaſon of the benefit of the Sea and acceſs of Strangers, they have all things neceſſary brought unto them, (even to Wood and Timber) of which the richer ſort make uſe, giving the Merchant in return ſometimes the fleſh of Beeves and Mutton, but ordinarily Butter, Skins, Horſes, Hawks, Brimſtone, and Fiſh eſpecially, the Staple Commodity of the Country; of which they have ſuch plenty, and of ſo good condition, that a piece of Iſeland Ling is counted with us as a fit Diſh for a Nobleman's Table.

The people for the moſt part are of a plain and ſimple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which Nature gives them, without help of Art, more than that of making Cheeſe and Butter: the Mountains ſerving them for Towns, and the Rivers for Drink, and their lodging is all under one roof with their Horſes and Oxen. They uſe neither phyſick nor Phyſicians, yet live ſo long (and probably the longer for it) that many of them attain to the age of 150 years and more. The Women are exceeding fair, but they know not how to attire themſelves; nor is there any difference in Apparel betwixt the Sexes, ſo that it not eaſie to know one from another. Few of them but have ſome familiar Spirit to do them ſervice: and notwithſtanding the endeavour of the Miniſters to purge them from this Impiety, yet it is ſo graffed in them that they cannot leave it.

It is obſervable, that notwithſtanding the cold condition of this Iſland, yet in many places it is full of Heats and Fire under the ground: which, by the Antiperiſtaſis of the cold Air ſtopping the Pores of the Earth, and taking from it the liberty of Evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: inſomuch that there are three high Mountains whoſe Tops are always covered with Snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecla, Helga, and La-Croix, but the firſt the principal, by ſome called Heclefort; which ſometimes caſts out Fire, ſometimes flaming Water, then Black Aſhes and Pumice-ſtones in ſo great abundance that it darkneth the Sun, and makes the Country for ſix miles round about it to be uninhabited. Stranger things are not ſpoken of Ætna than of theſe three Mountains: and here the Superſtitious people have the ſame opinion which they have in Sicily, viz. That underneath muſt needs be Hell, and the habitations of the Damned. But to judicious men the natural reaſon of theſe Flames is plain and obvious; occaſioned by thoſe veins of Brimſtone (great quantity whereof they ſend into forein parts) on which the foundation of the Hills is laid: here being many Bathes and Fountains of hot water, which have Sulphur ſwimming at the top.

At the firſt planting of this Iſland, the people did not trouble themſelves with building Towns, but every one ſeated himſelf where he thought convenient, dwelling in Cells and Caverns digged in the bottom of the Rocks. By means whereof the Inland parts have not many Houſes: but the Sea-coaſts, ſince the coming of ſo many Strangers to them, begin to be built in many places, the Buildings for the moſt part being of Timber, roofed with Flags with an Hole on the ſides of the roof to let in the Light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principal of them which are being, 1. Halar, in the North, and 2. Schalbolt, in the Southern part; both Biſhops Sees, having petty Schools, conſiſting of 24 Scholars apiece, to whom the Latine Tongue is taught at the charge of the Biſhops. 3. Haffenfordt, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their Commodities. And 4. Beſtede, a Caſtle, the ordinary Reſidence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Iſland is that Thule which the Poets ſo often ſpeak of: as Tibi ſerviat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec ſit terris ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian. Nor did there want ſome reaſon to perſwade them to this opinion; this being indeed the fartheſt part of the old known World. But greater reaſons are againſt it. For when Solinus ſaith, Multæ ſunt circa Britannicum Inſulæ, è quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule muſt be one of the Britiſh Iſles. And when Tacitus ſaith of Agricola, Inſulas quas Orcadas vocant domuit, deſpecta eſt & Thule; I am ſure that Iſeland is ſo far from being kenned by any one of the Orcades, that it is at leaſt eight Degrees diſtant. So that Thule muſt be ſought for in another place, and where that is hath been ſhewed already. As for Iſeland, it was ſo far from being known unto the Ancients, that it was hardly known unto thoſe of Norway till the year 874, when ſome of the Norwegians were driven out of their Country by Harald the firſt, who firſt ſuppreſſing the many petit Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them ſeek new Dwellings; of which ſome few arrived here: where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loſs (if any) by change of their Dwelling, they invited many of their Friends and Countrymen to come unto them. An. 1070, they were converted to the Goſpel by ſome Preachers ſent hither from Adelbert the Archbiſhop of Breme. By whoſe perſwaſion and procurement they founded two Epiſcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious Houſes: that is to ſay, the Monaſteries of Pingore, Remeſtede, Modur, and Monkeniere, under the Government and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Halar; and thoſe of Videy, Pernebar, Kirckebar, and Skiade, under the Biſhop of Schalbolt. In the year 1260, it was firſt brought under the Crown of Norway, following ſince that the Fortunes of it in all Changes both of Church and State; made ſubject with it to the Kings of Denmark, together with it reformed in matters of Religion according to the Confeſſion of Angsburg, retaining ſtill their Biſhops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monaſteries unto other uſes, as there they did, according to the will and pleaſure of their Lords of Denmark.

2. South-weſt of Iſeland lies another, and as cold an Iſle, commonly called by the name of FREEZLAND, from the continual Froſts unto which it is ſubject. By the Latines it is called Frizlandia, to diſtinguiſh it from Friſia or Frieſland in Germany. It is ſituate under the North Frigid Zone; but not ſo much within the Arctick as Iſeland is; the longeſt Day here in the height of Summer not exceeding 20 hours: and yet the Soil is ſo cold and barren, that it beareth neither Corn nor Fruit, the Inhabitants living moſt on Fiſh; which as it is their only Food, ſo is it alſo their chief Commodity wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is ſuch abundance caught upon their Coaſts, that they are never without the company of Hanſe men, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and Engliſh; by which laſt it hath been ſo frequented in theſe later times, that it hath been called by ſome the Weſtern England. For quantity it is ſomewhat bigger than Iſeland; but by reaſon of the bitter Air, and the Defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freezland, by the name of the Iſland; ſituate on the Eaſtern Shore of it. Beſides which, there are ſome others ſet down in the Maps; as 2. Sameſcot. 3. Andefort. 4. Sorand; but not much obſervable. Weſtward whereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Maginus) telleth us, is a leſs Iſland called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoyning: ſo called (by his miſtake or tranſlation of the Fable) from Icarus the Son of Dædalus, a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over theſe Iſlands.

III. GROENLAND, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from the Greenneſs of it in the Summer; as others ſay, by Antiphraſis, becauſe never green, by reaſon of the ſharpneſs of Winter. But the former Etymology is more agreeable to the ſtate of the Country. For though it be continually covered with Snow, except in June, July and Auguſt, (inſomuch that though the people be always clad with Furs and Skins, yet they feel no heat) yet in thoſe months it is exceeding freſh and green, and affords good Paſturage. It is ſituate for the greateſt part within the Arctick, between the 65. and 77. Degrees of Northern Latitude: ſo that the longeſt Day in the Southern part is 21 hours and a half; and in the moſt Northern they have no Night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer than ſo for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect diſcovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the Engliſh and Hollanders, (two great Seafaring Nations) for the benefit of the Whale-fiſhing, much there in uſe. Their chief Commodities are Fiſh, white Bears, wild Deer, and ſome ſtore of Cattel there bred upon their Paſtures, but houſed for the moſt part all the Winter. The greateſt part of the people dwell in the Caves, and delight in Necromancy, to which they are more wilfully addicted than thoſe in Iſeland, becauſe leſs acquainted with the Goſpel.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monaſtery of Dominican Friers) ſeated in the North-Eaſt part of the Iſland; concerning which Mercator ſpeaks of one thing which is very obſervable, relating that it is not far from a flaming or burning Mountain, ſeated upon hot ſcalding ſprings, conveyed by Pipes of ſtone into the Monaſtery, and ſerving both as a Stove to warm them, and for a Fire to boil their Victuals. The Walls of the Monaſtery are built of Pumiceſtones caſt out of that Mountain; which, being tempered with the water of thoſe burning Springs, doth make a glutinous ſubſtance, ſerving inſtead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flouriſh all the year with Herbs and ſweet ſmelling Flowers; and the adjoyning Sea, for the ſame reaſon being never frozen, affords good plenty of Fiſh and Fowl the whole year about, not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Iſlanders. So far and to this purpoſe he. The ſecond Town of note is Ilva, not far from this Monaſtery: and 3. Munderpre, on the South Eaſt point. Others, as in a Country not well diſcovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years ſince Nicolas Zeni, a Venetian, caſt by Tempeſt on the Coaſt of Freezland, and by the King thereof imployed upon new Diſcoveries, An. 1380, firſt made it known to us of Europe; it being immediately on that diſcovery poſſeſſed by the Norwegians, and made a Member and portion of that Crown.

As for the Norwegians themſelves, now their Fellow-ſubjects, they were firſt known in the time of Ptolemy by the name of Chedini, poſſeſſing then the Weſtern parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swithlanders, they became better known in the flouriſhing times of the French Empire by the name of Normans; firſt called ſo by Eginhartus in his Hiſtory of the Life of Charles the Great, infeſting then the Sea-coaſts of France and Belgium. Under this name they fell ſo heavily on the French, eſpecially in the times of Charles the Simple, that they extorted from him that goodly Country, ſince of them called Normandy, conferred on Rollo, firſt Duke thereof, Anno 912, whoſe Succeſſors much increaſed their glory by the Conqueſt of England; as ſome private Adventurers of them did by the Conqueſt of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicily, and Antioch. Afterwards ſetling on their own bottom, every one of theſe Northern Nations acting by it ſelf, they were called Norwegians: ſometimes, as formerly, commanding over all three Kingdoms, ſubject ſucceſſively to each; but moſt an end governed by their own Kings, till their final Subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting ſolely and by it ſelf, they ſubdued Ireland under the conduct of Turgeſius, who tyrannized there for a time; as alſo all the Orcades and the Iſle of Man, ſold or ſurrendred by them upon good conditions to the Engliſh and Scots, who by thoſe Titles ſtill poſſeſs them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all thoſe of the darker times (parallel to our Brute and the firſt Scotiſh Fergus) as meerly fabulous, we will begin with King Suibdagerus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongſt his three Sons; whoſe Succeſſors Munſter thus reckoneth.

The Kings of NORWAY.

1. Suibdagerus.
2. Haddingus.
3. Hetharius.
4. Collerus.
5. Frogerus.

18. Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth, and of Norway by Conqueſt.
19. Olaus III. Son of Swain or Sueno, ſucceeded in the Realms of Denmark and Norway, Canutus his younger Brother being King of England. In this King's time the Norwegians firſt received the Goſpel.
20. Canutus, King of England, ſucceeded his Brother Olaus in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway, to which he alſo added the Crown of Sweden.

25. Magnus II. King of Sweden and Norway.

1326 26. Magnus III. King of Sweden and Norway, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldeſt Son, conferred that of Norway on Haquin, or Aquinus, his ſecond Son.

1359 27. Aquinus, King of Norway, younger Son of Magnus the third, married with Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; ſo uniting the Kingdom. And though Olaus, the only Son of his Bed, died young without any Iſſue; yet the Danes, having once got footing in Norway, ſo aſſured themſelves of it, that they have ever ſince poſſeſſed it as a ſubject Kingdom, keeping the Natives ſo poor and low, that they are not able to aſſert their former Liberties, and not permitting them to uſe any Shipping, ſo much as for tranſporting their own Commodities, for fear they ſhould grow wealthy and ſtrong at Sea. Beſides, the ſtrong Garriſons maintained in moſt parts of the Country keep it in ſuch an abſolute Awe, that they dare not ſtir againſt the Danes, if their ſtomachs ſerved them. So that now Norway being made ſubject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made Fellow-ſubjects to the ſame King; we muſt next look upon theſe Kings, not as Kings of each diſtinct and ſeparate from the other, but as they are in Fact and Title.

The Kings of DENMARK and NORWAY.

1376 1. Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark and Norway: of this laſt by Deſcent, of the other by Marriage.

1380 2. Olaus, Son of Aquinus and Margaret.

1383 3. Margaret, Wife of Aquinus, Mother of Olaus, and Daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her Son, (in whoſe time ſhe governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own Right; not only keeping Norway in the ſtate ſhe found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the Vanquiſhment of Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.

1411 4. Ericus, Duke of Pomeren, and Knight of the Garter, Son of the Lady Mary, Dutcheſs of Pomeren, Daughter of Ingelburgis, the Siſter of Margaret, by whom he was adopted for her Heir, ſucceeded after her deceaſe in all the three Kingdoms; outed of all before his death by a ſtrong Faction made againſt him, and his Eſtates conferred on 1439 5. Chriſtopher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria, (but in Title only) the Son of Margaret, Siſter of Ericus; choſen by the joynt conſent of all the States of theſe Kingdoms. After whoſe death (without Iſſue) the Danes conſidering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norway, pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleſwick and Earl of Holſtein, for the next Succeſſor, that they might get in thoſe Eſtates to their Kingdom alſo. Who, excuſing himſelf by reaſon of his Age and want of Children, commended to them Chriſtiern Earl of Oldenburg, his Kinſman and next Heir, who was choſen accordingly.

1448 6. Chriſtiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, choſen King of Denmark and Norway, ſucceeded his ſaid Uncle in the Eſtates of Holſtein and Sleſwick, continuing ſince united unto that Crown, and added alſo thereunto by Conqueſt the Kingdom of Sweden.

1482 7. John, Son of Chriſtiern, ſucceeded in all three Kingdoms; Knight of the Order of the Garter.

1514 8. Chriſtiern II. Son of John, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which laſt he held under with great cruelty; hated, by reaſon of his Tyranny toward all ſorts of people, and outed of his Kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522. by whom at laſt he was taken, and kept in priſon till he died, Anno 1559.

1523 9. Frederick, Brother of John, and Uncle of Chriſtiern the ſecond, choſen King of Denmark and Norway on the Abdication of his Nephew, Reformed Religion in both Kingdoms according to the Confeſſion of Augsburg.

1535 10. Chriſtiern III. ſuppreſſed with great trouble the Party formed againſt him in behalf of Chriſtiern the ſecond, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the Univerſity of Copenhagen.

1559 11. Frederick II. Son of Chriſtiern the third, ſubdued Ditmarſh, before unconquered by the Danes or Earls of Holſtein, and added it unto that Dukedom, (both being united to that Crown, though held of the Empire;) Knight of the Garter.

1588 12. Chriſtiern IV. Son of Frederick the ſecond, Brother of Anne Queen of Great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; who, engaging in a War againſt the Emperour Ferdinand the ſecond for the Liberty of Germany, was ſuddenly beat out of all the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe by the prevailing Imperialiſts, but compounded the buſineſs upon very good terms, and was reſtored to all his own.

1648 13. Frederick III. the youngeſt Son of Chriſtiern the fourth, his eldeſt Brethren being all dead without Iſſue, ſucceeded in the Crowns of Denmark and Norway.

Having thus muſtered up the Kings of theſe ſeveral Kingdoms, taken diſtinctly and conjunct; we muſt next look upon the way of their coming to their Regal Throne, their form of Government together with their Powerableneſs and Revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regal Throne, the Danes pretend the Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary; yet ſo as they have always ſet the eldeſt Son on the Throne of his Father, unleſs ſome extraordinary occaſion have diſpoſed it otherwiſe. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can ſee no ſuch matter, the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succeſſion, unleſs by Faction or Uſurpation ſome popular and powerful Pretender hath interloped; as oftentimes hath happned in ſuch other Eſtates as are Hereditary meerly, without claim or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the Male-iſſue failing in Olaus the Son of Margaret, and the Princes which pretended by the Females after her deceaſe not being of ſufficient power to aſſert their Titles; the Kingdom was transferred to the houſe of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of Election. Which, being an extraordinary caſe, is to make no Precedent; though ſeconded by the outing of King Chriſtiern the ſecond, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Eſtate: theſe being acts of Violence and Force, and juſtified only by the falſe Topick of Succeſs. But whoſoever loſt by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon ſuch Conditions as have made him and his Succeſſors little more than Titulary. For he was fain to ſwear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death or Baniſhment but by the judgment of the Senate, that the Great men ſhould have power of Life and Death over their Tenants or Vaſſals; that no Appeal ſhould lie from them to the King's Tribunal, nor the King be partaker of the Confiſcations, nor, finally, advance any to Commands and Honours but by conſent of his great Council. Which Oath being alſo taken by his Succeſſors, made Bodinus ſay, Non tam re ipsâ quàm appellatione Reges eſſe; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (ſo they call their Gentry) have but ſmall Eſtates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Bloud) and that Degree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to croſs or oppoſe their King, but when ſome of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have concurred with them in it: as in the caſe of Chriſtiern the 2. depoſed by the People, but thoſe people headed and ſet on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate or great Council, ſpoken of before, it conſiſts wholly of men choſen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long Deſcent) ſeldom exceeding the number of 28; to each of which there is allowed a convenient Salary, with ſome fair Caſtle in the Country for his Retirements, during his being of that Body: his whole Eſtate being freed alſo for that time from all publick Payments. Without their counſel and advice the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new Leagues or Confederacies, nor impoſe any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King jointly is the laſt Appeal: ſuch being the Conſtitution of this Eſtate, that all Cauſes and Controverſies are firſt decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they firſt ariſe; from whence it is lawful to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Laws of Waldemar the firſt, who firſt reduced the Laws into ſet form and writing, the Biſhops were to ſit with his Council in all Cauſes of moment: but were diſcharged from that employment by King Chriſtiern the third, by whom it was alſo ordained, that the Clergy ſhould not ſell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdom are able to raiſe may beſt be ſeen by ſome of their particular Undertakings: thoſe ſpecially of Chriſtiern the ſecond, who, at the requeſt of Henry the ſecond of France, ſent a Navy of an hundred Sail into Scotland againſt the Engliſh, and therein no fewer than 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holſtein, who in his War againſt this Chriſtiern, (whoſe removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field to make good his Quarrel. And queſtionleſs, conſidering the many Ports and Iſlands that this Crown is Maſter of, both within the Baltick and without, it cannot be but he may ſuddenly raiſe a ſtrong power at Sea. And then conſidering that each of the Nobility, which are here numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horſe upon all occaſions; as are thoſe alſo who hold Lands of the King, which the Danes call Verlehninge: it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies for a ſudden Service, eſpecially in defence of their own Dominions.

The Revenue of this King conſiſteth principally in the great Impoſt laid upon all Ships which paſs through the Sound: the greatneſs whereof may eaſily be conjectured at by the multitude of Ships which of neceſſity muſt paſs by it in the Trade of the Baltick; though of late ſomewhat leſſened of what it was, ſince the Engliſh found out and frequented the Northern paſſage into Moſcovia. There are alſo ſome Crown-lands, and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel which paſs into Germany; as alſo of the Fiſh tranſported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treaſures of this King are not very great: partly becauſe there is no other important Commodity but Fiſh to draw Merchants thither, and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms for the entertaining of Commerce.

The chief order of Knighthood in it is that of the Elephant, inſtituted by Frederick the ſecond. Their Badge, a Collar powdred with Elephants towred, ſupporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1. Or, three Lions paſſant Vert, crowned of the firſt, for the Kingdom of Denmark; and ſecondly, Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, crowned and armed of the firſt, in his Paws a Dansk Hatchet Argent, for the Kingdom of Norway. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holſtein and Sleſwick I am yet to ſeek.

SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Moſcovie, on the Weſt with the Dofrine Hills, which divide it from Norway, on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, ſpoken of before; on the South with Denmark, Liefland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suethans, or Suethidi, and the word Land added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length, from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the Borders of Denmark, about twenty good days journey on horſeback: inſomuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this ſide of Lapland and the Gulf or Bay of Bodner, account it little leſs than all Italy and France together; but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other ſide of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The ſituation of it in regard of the Heavenly bodies is the ſame with Norway, under the ſame Parallels and Degrees; but of ſo different a temper, both for Soil and Air, as if diſpoſed of under ſeveral and long-diſtant Climes. For the Air here is very pure, but not ſo ſharp and inſupportable as it is in Norway: though in ſome places, where the Moors and Waters ſettle, for want of care to open and cleanſe the Water-courſes, they have great Foggs and Miſts, which do ſomewhat putrifie it. And for the Soil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: ſo that beſides thoſe Neceſſaries which they keep for themſelves, they uſually tranſport into other Countries ſtore of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Braſs, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the Hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and coſtly Furs. They have alſo ſome Mines of Silver, not mixt with any other Metal; plenty of Fiſh in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for Ships and Houſes; yielding beſides, among the Woods, good ſtore of Tar and Honey, and ſome other Neceſſaries. But hereof we ſhall ſpeak more punctually in the ſeveral Provinces.

The principal Mountains of this Country are the Dofrine Hills, a vaſt and continual Ridge of Mountains which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uſes, yet partly by reaſon of their great Froſts and flakes of Ice, partly by reaſon of the falling of Trees which lye croſs their Chanels, they have not many navigable, or any of great fame. The principal of ſuch as be are, 1. Meler, at the mouth whereof ſtands the City of Stockholm, 2. Luſen, 3. Dalacarlie, giving name to the Province ſo called, or denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of moſt note is the Lake of Weret, which, receiving into it 24 Rivers, diſburtheneth it ſelf at one mouth into the Baltick, with ſuch noiſe and fury, that they call it commonly the Devil's head.

The people are naturally ſtrong and active, provident, patient and induſtrious; hoſpitable towards Strangers, whom they entertain with great humanity; ſo healthy, that, if they do not ſhorten their days by Exceſs and Riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and ſo laborious, that a Beggar is not ſeen amongſt them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing: not much addicted to the one; and ſo kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other: but much improved in both reſpects in theſe later days: Ericus, the firſt King of the preſent Race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Guſtavus Adolphus, the laſt King, who freed the Germans from the Yoke of the Houſe of Auſtria, not being eaſily to be matched in the Arts of War. And ſince they began to give themſelves to the ſweets of Learning, this Country hath produced (amongſt ſome other learned men) Olaus Magnus, Archbiſhop of Upſal, of great note for his Hiſtory of the Goths and Vandals; the Firſt-fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable, by reaſon of their late Commerce with the German Nations, they will give better teſtimony to the World hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Arts Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without employing Smith, Maſon, Carpenter, or any other manual Trades. Very valiant they are both on foot and horſeback, which their long Wars againſt the Danes, and their late Wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their Women are diſcreet and modeſt, free from that Intemperance which theſe Northern parts are ſubject to. Both Sexes uſe a corrupt Dut[illegible]ommon to all three Northern Kingdoms; except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other ſide of the Bodner Sea, where they partake ſomewhat of the Moſcovite or Ruſſian Language.

The Chriſtian Religion was firſt planted amongſt them by the care and diligence of Anſgarius Archbiſhop of Breme, the Apoſtle-general of the North. Corrupt with Popiſh Superſtitions, it was reformed, according to the Auguſtine Confeſſion, in the time of Guſtavus Ericus, the firſt of the preſent Royal Family, ſolicited thereunto by one Peter Nevicius a Lutheran Divine, and Laurence the Archdeacon of Strengnes; but chiefly moved (as others ſay) by a deſire to appropriate to himſelf the Goods of the Church. And this appears to have had ſome ſtrong influence upon him in it, in that he preſently ſeiſed upon what he pleaſed; and made a Law, that Biſhops ſhould enjoy no more than the King thought fit: yet having pretty well leſſened their Revenues, he was content they ſhould remain as formerly both in power and number; reſerving to himſelf and his Succeſſors the Nomination of the perſons; but ſo as the Approbation of the Clergy (in a kind of Election) doth uſually go along with the Kings appointment.

The Biſhops are in number ſeven: that is to ſay, 1. of Lincopen, containing in his Dioceſe 226 Pariſhes. 2. Of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. Of Scara, ruling over the ſame number of Churches. 4. Of Strengnes, under whom are a hundred only. 5. Of Abo, the greateſt for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Pariſhes. 6. Of Wyborg, and 7. of Habſay; whoſe Dioceſes for the moſt part lie out of the bounds of Sweden, in Moſcovie, Livonia, and ſome other of the out-parts of the Realm of Poland. All of them are under the Archbiſhop of Upſal, as their Metropolitan, whoſe Dioceſe, extending into Lapland and Finmarck, containeth 171 Pariſh-Churches. By which accompt there are in all the Kingdom of Swethland but 1417 Pariſhes; but many of them of a thouſand or eight hundred Families: the people being diſperſed in Foreſts and other places, where they have ſtore of Timber to build them houſes, and ſtore of Paſturage for their Cattel; which is the reaſon why they have not ſo many great Towns, nor ſo well inhabited, as is uſual in far leſſer Countries. As for the Authority of theſe Biſhops, they ſtill retain their Voice in Parliament, and with them ſo many of the inferiour Clergy as are from every Socken (a certain number of Pariſhes, like our Rural Deanries) deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the Affairs whereof the Biſhops do direct and order, as well in as out of publick Meetings, according to the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions formerly eſtabliſhed; and if any great occaſion be, they may either adviſe with their Conſiſtorials, or call a Dioceſan Synod, (as they think moſt fit) and therein make ſuch Laws and Canons as they conceive to be moſt proper for their own Edification.

The whole Kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the Eaſt, the other on the Weſt-ſide of the Bay or Gulf of Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and ſpacious Branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the moſt Southernly Point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the North. According to which diviſion, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the Weſt-ſide of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, ſhutting it up upon the North; 4. Bodia or Bodden, and 5. Finland, on the Eaſt-ſide thereof; and 6. the Swediſh Iſlands, where it mingleth with the reſt of the Baltick.

GOTHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with the Bodner Sea, on the Weſt with the Mountains which divide it from Norway, and ſo much of Denmark as lies in the ſame Continent with it, on the North with Sweden, on the South with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whoſe original Country it is commonly affirmed to be; or quaſi goot Landt, from the goodneſs and fertility of the Soil, (Gootlandia, quæ Germanicè Terra bona ſonat, as Maginus out of Munſter hath it) the Soil being very fruitful for Corn and Cattel, affording plenty of Mines, with great ſtore of Fiſh, and generally a better-conditioned Country than any of the reſt of theſe Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Ooſtrogoth, or Eaſt-Gothland; Weſter-goth, divided from the former by the great Lake of Weret, ſpoken of before; and South-Gothland, ſubdivided into Smalandia, Tuiſcia, and Verendia. Chief Towns in Ooſtrogoth are, 1. Lincopen, a Biſhops See. 2. Loduſe, adorned with a very fair Haven. In Weſter-goth, 3. Scara, on the Lake Weret, a Biſhops See alſo. 4. Elſeborg, on the Weſtern Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway; a place of conſequence, and flanker'd with two very ſtrong Caſtles in the parts adjoining, the one called Croneberg, and the other Goldberg. 5. Tragualle, remarkable for Iron works, occaſioned by the Mines adjoining. And finally in South-Gothland there is 6. Vexime, or Vexio, another of the Epiſcopal Sees. 7. Walburg, a reaſonable fair Town, with a ſtrong Caſtle. 8. Elcholm, in that part hereof which is called Verendia, near the Confines of Denmark. 9. Calmar, a noted and well traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Caſtle not inferiour to that of Millain, and ſo well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Chriſtiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611, there were found mounted on the works 108 braſs pieces of Ordnance, ſix Men of War to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gottenburg, (or Gothorum Burgus) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth, enjoying a commodious Haven, on the Baltick alſo, and very much frequented for the Trade of Germany, to which it ſerves exceeding fitly; the principal Town of all this Province, and for that cauſe the ordinary Seat or Reſidence of the Governour for the King of Sweden.

The firſt Inhabitants of theſe South parts of Scandia are commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS, whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis makes to have iſſued out of this Country, and to plant themſelves on the North Banks of the Iſter, near the Euxine Sea, ſome time before the Trojan War: aſcribing to them whatſoever is reported in old Writers of the ancient Scythians, as their Encounter with Vexoris or Seſoſtris the King of Ægypt, the Acts and Atchievements of the Amazons, their Congreſs with Alexander the Great in his Perſian War, and the like to theſe. In which Jornandes, being himſelf a Goth, is no more to be credited than Geofry of Monmouth, a Welch-man, in the Story of Brute and his Succeſſors, to whom he doth aſcribe the taking and ſacking of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be the Brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Moſt probable it is, that they were originally a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the Land of Pruſſia; who, finding their own Country too narrow for them, might paſs over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions; and not well liking that cold Clime, might afterwards in ſome good numbers go to ſeek new Dwellings, and at laſt ſeat themſelves on the Banks of the Iſther, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, beſides the general name of the Gothones or Goths, and thoſe of Ooſtro-goths and Wiſigoths, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alaric, Theodoric, Riccared, (the names of their Kings and Captains) ſeem to me to evidence. That they were once ſeated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. by the name of Gothland here ſtill remaining; 2. by the Title of Rex Gothorum, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royal Style; 3. by ſome Inſcriptions in ancient unknown Characters engraven on the Rocks near Scara in the Continent, and in Wisby in the Iſle of Gothland, ſuppoſed by learned men to be ſome monument of that People. And finally, that their fixt Dwelling, when firſt known by this name amongſt the Romans, was on the North-ſide of the Iſter, is evident by the teſtimony of all ancient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had ſome tumultuary Skirmiſhes in his way towards Perſia, till their violent Irruption into Italy and the Weſtern Provinces: moſt famous in this Interval for a great Fight with Decius the Roman Emperour, whom they overcame and ſlew in a Battel Anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian, the Roman Emperours, a Quarrel being grown amongſt them, managed by Phritigernes and Athanaricus, the Leaders of the oppoſite Factions; Phritigernes, overthrown in fight, had recourſe to Valens, from whom he received ſuch Succours, that giving his Adverſary another day for it, he obtained the Victory. Whereupon Phritigernes and his Party received the Goſpel, but intermixt and corrupt with the Leven of Arianiſm, by the practice of Valens, who ſent them none but Arian Teachers, to whom and their Factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Iſter by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out-parts of Thrace for an Habitation, on condition they ſhould ſerve under the pay of the Emperour, and become Chriſtians: the cauſe that Arianiſm over-ſpread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one part only. Ulphilas, a devout and learned man, was their firſt Biſhop; who, for their better Edification in the way of Godlineſs, invented a new Gothick Character; and tranſlated the Scriptures into that Language: in the ſtudy whereof they ſo well profited, that many of them in the time of their firſt Converſion ſuffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burthened by Valens, and denyed their accuſtomed Pay, they haraſs and depopulate the reſt of Thrace, marching towards Conſtantinople; encountred in the way by Valens, whom they overcame and killed, after all his Favours. Vanquiſhed by Theodoſius the ſucceeding Emperour in many Battels, they became good neighbours, inlarging their Bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into ſuch eſtimation with him, that Ricimer and Franita, two of that Nation, did obtain the Conſulſhip: not to ſay any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gainas had attained unto in the Court it ſelf. Made inſolent by ſo great Honours, and apt to pick Quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great Bodies, conſiſting of no fewer than 200000 fighting men. The firſt whereof, under the Conduct of Rhadaguiſus, was diſcomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, at Feſulæ in the Streights of the Apennine. The other, by his Treachery permitted to paſs, ſacked Rome, and ſubdued the moſt part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He, dying immediately after this great Victory, left the fruits of it to his Son Athaulfus; who, marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperour's Siſter, relinquiſhed Italy, and had all Gallia Narbonenſis, and a great part of Hiſpania Tarraconenſis aſſigned unto him, where he erected the Kingdom of the Wiſi Goths or Weſtern Goths, poſſeſſed of Spain and Tingitana for the ſpace of 300 years and upward, when they loſt that Kingdom to the Moors, as hath there been ſaid. In the mean time the Goths which were left in their own Countries, diſtinguiſhed from theſe by the name of Ooſtro-Goths, by reaſon of their more Eaſtern ſituation, kept themſelves in quiet: being firſt ſubdued by the Huns, and, when by Wilamir freed from that ſubjection, not intermeddling or attempting any thing againſt the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperor of Conſtantinople into Italy againſt Odoacer and the Heruli, who had then ſubdued it. Which action they managed with ſo much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodorick, that they vanquiſhed Odoacer, poſſeſſed Italy, and held it above 60 years; when, broken in many ſet Battels by Beliſarius and Narſes, Lieutenants for the Emperour Juſtinian, their Kingdom and Name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a ſucceſſion of them in Jornandes from Berig, who firſt conducted them out of Scandia towards the Eaſt, till the going of Theodorick into Italy; but made up with ſo little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it than the Stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota, Pharaoh's Daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and ſucceſſion are theſe few that follow.

The Kings of the GOTHS.

344 1. Athanaricus, King of the Goths in the time of Conſtantius and Conſtans, the Sons of Conſtantine the Great.

357 2. Alaricus, the firſt of that name, in the time of Conſtantius.

3. Phritigernes, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the firſt Chriſtian Prince among that People.

370 4. Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian the ſecond; under whom the Goths were firſt ſetled on this ſide of the Iſter.

379 5. Rhadaguiſus, who in the time of Honorius firſt led the Goths into Italy; ſlain at the Battel of Feſulæ.

410 6. Alaricus II. who, purſuing the War of Italy, ſacked Rome, ſubdued Naples, and the moſt of Italy.

412 7. Athaulfus, the Son of Alarick the ſecond, who firſt erected the Kingdom of the Wiſi-Goths in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the ſpace of 300 years and upwards; the preſent Kings of Spain coming from this Stock.

417 8. Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the Eaſt at the departure of Rhadaguiſe and Alaricus, diſtinguiſhed from their Plantations by the name of Ooſtro-Goths: vanquiſhed by Attila, they became Subjects to the Huns in the time of Theodoſius the ſecond and Valentinian the third, Emperours of the Eaſt and Weſt.

9. Wilamir, one of the Bloud-Royal of the Goths, Vaſſal to Attila at the firſt, whom he aſſiſted, or ſerved rather, in the great Battel near Tholouſe againſt the Romans: but, taking advantage of ſome Quarrel amongſt the Sons of Attila, ſhook off that Yoke, and recovered the Kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.

10. Theodomir, Son of Winithar, and Brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperour of Conſtantinople.

11. Theodorick, Son of Theodomir, kept at Conſtantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hoſtage for his Father, where he was inſtructed in all the Greek and Roman Learning, and made the adopted Son (as is ſaid by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno; by whom he was ſent into Italy againſt Odoacer and the Heruli, and erected there the Kingdom of the Ooſtrogoths; which continued till the Reign of Juſtinian, when it was deſtroyed by Beliſarius and Narſes, as before is ſaid: the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their Bloud intermixt with the beſt Italian. The ſum of their whole Story, for varieties ſake, take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goth, which whilom iſſued forth
From the cold frozen Iſlands of the North,
Incamp'd by Viſtula: but the Air almoſt
B'ing there as cold as in the Baltick Coaſt,
He with victorious Arms Sclavonia gains,
The Tranſylvanian and Valachian Plains;
Then flies to Thracia, and then leaving Greeks,
Greedy of Spoil, four times he bravely ſeeks
To pluck from Rome (then Mars his Minion)
The Plumes which ſhe from all the World had won,
Guided by Rhadaguiſe and Alarick,
Bold Vindimarus and Theodorick,
Thence flies to France; from whence expulſt, his Legions
Reſt ever ſince upon the Spaniſh Regions.

The Arms of theſe Kings are ſaid to have been Or, three Ravens with diſplayed wings Purple, membred Gules. And let this ſuffice for the Original, Succeſſes, and final Period of the Goths; reſerved by me unto this place, becauſe moſt commonly conceived to be their original Country, at leaſt the place out of which they iſſued when they firſt moved towards the Eaſt to ſeek new Dwellings.

2. SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the Eaſt with the Bodner Sea, on the Weſt with the Doſrine Hills, which part it from Norway, on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gothland. So called from the Suethans, or Suethidi, the old Inhabitans hereof; of whom more anon. A Country ſufficiently fruitful, but for the goodneſs of the Soil inferiour to Gothland; and not ſo well planted or inhabited as that is, by reaſon of the vaſt Woods which they will not ſuffer to be deſtroyed, and the greatneſs of ſome Mariſhes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would; as appeareth by that plenty of Corn growing amongſt the Woods, though much hindred by their ſhade and thickneſs both from Sun and Rain. But for the Character of this Country, we had it formerly, when we ſpake of Swethland in the general; relating ſpecially to this, as the principal part.

And as the largeſt and principal part of this great Body, it contains in it many Provinces and Subdiviſions: as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Sudermannia, 3. Nericia, 4. Weſtmannia, 5. Dalecarlie, 6. Vermland, 7. Coperdale, 8. Geſtricia, 9. Helſingia, 10. Middelfar, 11. Angermannia, bordering on Lapland, the fartheſt of theſe Provinces towards the North. Many of theſe have no Towns or Cities of any greatneſs or beauty, the people living thin and ſcattered, where they have Wood for Building, Paſturage for their Beaſts, and elbow-room enough for themſelves and their Cattel. Of theſe the principal are, 1. Upſal, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity, ſituate not far from the Bay of Bodner; beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is ſtiled Archiepiſcopatus Upſalenſis. 2. Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Ruſſians Stecolne; the Royal Seat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the Kingdom; exceeding ſtrong both by Art and Nature, as being ſituate in the Mariſhes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake or River of Meler, the paſſage to it out of the Bay being very narrow, and by conſequence eaſily defended, and yet ſo deep withall, that the greateſt Ships of Burthen may ſail up to the City: the Port within the Streight being ſo ſafe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 Sail, which uſually ride there without any Anchor. The Caſtle of this City is conceived to be one of the ſtrongeſt holds in the world, fortified for the more aſſurance of it with 400 braſs Pieces, many of which are double Cannon. 3. Nicopen, a Sea-town on the ſame Bay alſo. Theſe three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4. Strengnes, an Epiſcopal See, and 5. Telga, on the Lake of Meler, in the Province of Sudermannia; the Title and Eſtate of Charles, Father of Guſtavus Adolphus late King of Sweden, before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Suderman. Next, in the Province of Weſtmannia, there are 6. Arboga, on the Weſt-ſide of the ſaid Lake of Meler; and 7. Aroſia, rich in Silver-mines, out of which are made the beſt Dollars of Sweden: the Mines here being ſo rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of Silver the workmen draw a pound weight of Gold. 8. Helſinge, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helſingia, taking name from hence. 9. Orebo or Orubo, a ſtrong piece in Nericia. And 10. Leſinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the fartheſt North of Sweden diſtinctly and ſpecially ſo called.

3. LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the moſt Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the Eaſt Ruſſia, on the Weſt the Province or Prefecture of Wardhuys in the Kingdom of Norway, on the North the main Frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia or Bodden, on both ſides of the Bay ſo called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it, as they are from their blockiſh behaviour; the word Lappon ſignifying the ſame with ineptus or inſulſus in Latine; for ſuch they are, rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as alſo without Corn and Houſes, or any certain Habitations, (except only in Finmarck;) feeding for the moſt part on Fiſh and the fleſh of wild Beaſts, with the Skins whereof ſowed together they hide their nakedneſs. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving Divine honour all the day following to that living Creature, whatſoever it be, which they ſee at their firſt ſetting out in the morning; great Sorcerers, and abhorring the ſight of Strangers, whom till of late they uſed to flee from at their firſt approach, but within few years paſt beginning to be more ſociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true deſcendents of the ancient Finni, (poſſeſſed in old times of all that Tract which lieth between the Bay of Finland and the Frozen Ocean) whoſe natural rudeneſs and barbarity, unmixt with the condition of more civil people, they do ſtill retain.

It is divided into the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez or Great Duke of Moſcovy, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikiloppi, or the wild Lappians, is ſubdivided into Biarmia and Corelia; of which, if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, we ſhall there ſpeak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, ſubdivided into two parts alſo, that is to ſay, 1. Finmarck, and 2. Scricfinnia.

1. FINMARCK, being that part hereof which lieth next unto Norway, is the more populous of the two. The people are for the moſt part idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and reſort of Strangers unto Wardhuys and the parts adjoining, ſomewhat civilized, and in the Borders of both Kingdoms ſavouring of Religion, poſſeſſed of Sheds or ſorry Houſes, and thoſe Houſes reduced to Pariſhes under the Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Upſal; the chief of which (if there be any chief amongſt them) are named, 1. Samman, and 2. Hielſo. Called Finmarck, as the ancient Bounds and Marches of the Finni, (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneouſly by Maginus made a part of the Kingdom of Norway.

2. SCRICFINNIA lieth between Finmarck and Ruſſia. The name is derived from the Finni, a great People of Scandia, and Sckriken, a Dutch word ſignifying leaping, ſliding, or bounding, for ſuch is their gate. An Etymologie not much improbable, in that the Wooden-ſoled-ſhoes with ſharp bottoms, which they uſed for their more ſpeedy ſliding over the Ice, of which this Country is full, are by the Germans (who alſo uſe them) called Scrikeſhoenen, or Sliding-ſhoes. The ancient Writers call this people Scrictofinni.

Theſe are indeed the natural and proper Laplanders, and unto theſe the former Character doth of right belong. Of ſtature very low, little more than Pygmies, but ſtrong and active; well ſkill'd in Archery, and patient of Cold and Labour; much given to hunting of wild Beaſts, whom they kill with their Bows, devour the Fleſh, and cloath them ſelves with their Skins, which they tye at the top of their Heads, and leave no place open but for the Sight; giving thereby occaſion unto ſome to write that they are hairy all over, like Kine or Horſes. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkilled, they make to draw in little Carts, as they ſhift their Quarters. But having ſerved them for a while, they are killed at laſt, though perhaps for nothing but their Skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden in the way of Tribute. Three Companies of theſe Laplanders, ſo clad and armed as aforeſaid, came into Germany in the year 1630, to ſerve Guſtavus Adolphus in thoſe Wars: looked on with admiration by all Spectators.

Towns we muſt look for none here, where no Houſes be: and yet there are ſome Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-ſhore, which Mariners having made for their refreſhment when they came on Land, have beſtowed ſome names on, and poſſibly in time may become good Towns, now not worth the naming.

BODIA, BODDEN, or BODNER, is ſituate on the South of Scriefinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf hence named; extending Southwards on the Weſt ſide of it, till it joins to Sweden, and on the Eaſt-ſide, till it meets with the Province of Finland. Hence is the diviſion of this Country into the Eaſtern, Northern, and Weſtern Bodden, with reference to the Situation of it on the Bay aforeſaid. The Country is not very plentiful of Grain or Fruits, but full of great variety of wild Beaſts, whoſe rich Skins yield great profit unto the Inhabitants; and by reaſon of the commodious Situation on all ſides of the Bay, it is well ſtored with Fiſh. Anciently it was part of the poſſeſſions of the Finni; but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, or Bodden, or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whence ſoever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoining is called Sinus Bodicus, the Bodner Zee by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Birkara, in Weſt Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable Lake. 2. Toronia, a well-traded Empory at the very bottom of the Bay, in North Bodden. 3. Helſingeliac, more North than that; towards the Borders of Lapland. And 4. Kerlabi, in Eaſt-Bodden, on the Bank of the Gulf, conveniently ſeated for a Town of Trade.

5. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North Bodia, on the South the Baltick Sea or Mare Suevicum, on the Eaſt Sinus Finnicus, on the Weſt Sinus Bodicus. It is by Munſter thought to be called Finland, quaſi fine land; quod pulchrior & amœnior ſit Sueciâ, becauſe it is a more fine and pleaſing Country than Sweden it ſelf. But indeed it is ſo called from the Finni or Fenni, a potent Nation who have here dwelt, whoſe Character is thus framed by Tacitus; Finnis mira Feritas, fœda Paupertas, non Arma, non Equi, non Penates; Victui Herbæ, Viſtitui Pelles, Cubili Humus, ſola in Sagittis ſpes. The Finns, ſaith he, are wonderfully barbarous, miſerably poor, without Arms, Horſe, or Houſhold-gods; Herbs their Food, the Ground their Bed, and the Skins of Beaſts their beſt Apparel, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our preſent Finlanders, eſpecially thoſe of Scriefinnia and ſome parts of Finmarchia; who are not ſo well reclaimed to Civility as the other are: but very different from that which Jornandes gives them, who, living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) entercourſe with foreign Nations, telleth us of them, that they were Scanziæ Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suethidi themſelves. If ſo, they did deſerve to live in ſo good a Country, more plentiful and plain than Sweden, and neither ſo hilly nor ſo mooriſh.

The principal places in it are, 1. Abo, an Archbiſhop's See, ſituate on the moſt Southern Point of it, ſhooting into the Baltick. 2. Wyborg, a Biſhops See alſo, whoſe Juriſdiction for the moſt part is without this Province, on ſome part of Ruſſia; all Finland being in the Dioceſe of the Biſhop of Abo. A Town conveniently ſeated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulf of Finland, (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia; well fortified, as the chief Bulwark of this Kingdom againſt the Moſcovite; and ſo well garriſoned withall, that the keeping of this Town, and Rivallia or Revel in the Borders of Liefland, do coſt the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a Point or Promontory of the ſame Gulf, oppoſite to Narva, another Garriſon of this King in Liefland. 4. Verma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5. Cronaburg, more within the Land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Piente. 6. Deckala, on the Banks of the great Lake called Holela. 7. Varta, more Northwards towards Lapland. Of which laſt four I find not any thing obſervable in the way of Story.

6. The SWEDISH Iſlands.

AND now at laſt I come to the Swediſh Iſlands, here and there interſperſed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Iſle of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Liefland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland: the principal of which are, 1. Gothia, or the Iſle of Gothland; and 2. Inſulæ Vlandæ, or the Iſles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Iſle of GOTHLAND, is ſituate over againſt Calmar, a ſtrong Town in the Continent of Gothland; in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth; of a rich Soil, but more fit for Paſturage than Tillage, yielding great Herds of Cattel, ſtore of Game for Hunting, plenty of Fiſh, excellent Marble, and abundance of Pitch, which it ſends forth to other Countries. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages, beſides the Haven Town of Wisby, heretofore rich and of very great Trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moſt in Europe; but now much decayed, and neither ſo well peopled nor ſo rich as formerly. The Trade removed hither from Wollin in Pomerania (deſtroyed by Waldemar the firſt of Denmark, Anno 1170) made it flouriſh mightily; the greateſt Traffick of the Baltick being managed here: but after that, by reaſon of the long and continual Wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poſſeſſion of this Iſle, it became unſafe, the Factory was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently ſeated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and ſometimes poſſeſſed it; but at the preſent it is in the hand of the Swethlander. By ſome conceived to be the Eningia ſpoken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Iſles of Vlandt, ſo called in the plural number, becauſe there are many of them, of which this the principal is ſituate over againſt Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiouſly ſeated to invade or annoy this Kingdom; and therefore very well fortified and as ſtrongly garriſoned: here being the good Towns of 1. Viborg, 2. Vames, and 3. the ſtrong Caſtle of Caſtrolm.

Beſides which Countries here deſcribed, the King of Sweden is poſſeſſed of the ſtrong Towns of Narva, and Rivallia or Revel, and Pernaw, in Liefland; of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Corelia, a Province of Ruſſia; with very fair and ample Territories appertaining to them: ſubdued and added to this Crown by John the ſecond, Anno 1581; except Rivallia, which voluntarily ſubmitted to Ericus the ſecond King of this preſent Race An. 1561. But being theſe Towns and Territories are not within the Bounds of Swethland, we ſhall defer all farther diſcourſe thereof to a place more proper.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Kingdom, beſides the Goths and Finni ſpoken of already, were the Sitones and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavonæ, the Phiræſi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Ptolomy, placed by him in the Eaſt and middle of this great Peninſula. Which, being the general names of ſome mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into leſſer Tribes, of the Suethans, Theuſtad, Vagoth, Bergio, Hallin, Liothida, Athelnil, Gaurigoth, Raumaricæ, Rauragnicii, Grannii, Aganziæ, Vnixiæ, Arochitamii, Enageræ, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally, and the whole Kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor ſpoken of at all by Munſter, or Crantzius, which two (but ſpecially the laſt) have written purpoſely of this people. Gaſper Peucerus deriveth them from the Suevi, who anciently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albis; from whom the Baltick Sea was called Mare Suevicum: which people he conceiveth to have been driven by the Goths and Daci into this Country; and by the change of one letter only to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to ſtand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thoſe colder Countries, they fell into theſe parts which are ſtill called Suevia, (the Schwaben of the Modern Dutch) where we find them in the time of Cæſar. And after, in fatali illa Gentium commigratione, when almoſt all the Northern Nations did ſhift their Seats, we find ſuch of them as had ſtaid behind to have accompanied the Vandals in their On-falls into Gaul and Spain. Of any Expedition of theirs croſs the Baltick Seas, nè gry quidem, nothing to be found in more ancient Authours. We muſt therefore refer the original of this People either to the Suiones, or the Suethidi, or perhaps to both; both being anciently ſetled in theſe Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the Book of Tacitus inſcribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom they are reported to be ſtrong in Men, Armour, and Shipping. And that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two Circumſtances in that Author. 1. That the people were not permitted to wear Weapons, quia ſubitos Hoſtium Incurſus prohibet Oceanus, becauſe the Ocean was to them a ſufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the ancient Suevians, but agreeth very well with the ſituation of this preſent Country, defended by the Baltick and vaſt Northern Ocean from the ſudden Aſſaults of any Enemy. 2. Becauſe the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmoſt bounds of the World; Trans Suiones Mare aliud, quo cingi claudique Terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country. 3. Add unto theſe this paſſage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the ſecond, where it is told us of the Danes, relicta patria apud Suiones exſulabant, that they were baniſhed into the Country of the Suiones; which cannot ſo well be underſtood of any place as of this Sweden, being next neighbour unto Denmark. And 4. that this People, both by Munſter and Crantzius, are as well called Suiones, as Sueci or Suedi; which ſheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suethans or the Suethidi, whom Jornandes ſpeaks of in his Book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Iſle of Scandia, (for ſuch this great Peninſula was eſteemed to be by moſt ancient Writers.) Now that theſe Suethidi are no other than the preſent Swethlanders, appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the Names. 2. In that he maketh the Finni and Finniathæ the next neighbours to them. And 3. in that they are affirmed by the ſame Authour to have furniſhed the Romans with rich Furs, and the Skins of wild Beaſts, with which Commodities this Country is abundantly well ſtored. Now to which of theſe two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suethidi, thoſe of Sweden are moſt indebted for their Original, will (I conceive) be no great controverſie: the Suethans and Suethidi of Jornandes being no other than a Tribe of the Suiones, though the greateſt and moſt powerful of all thoſe Tribes; placed therefore in the Front to command the reſt, and ſo moſt like to give the name unto the whole.

Their Government was anciently under Kings, affirmed ſo to be by Tacitus, who telleth us alſo that they were abſolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Eſtates at the will of the Subject. But their Hiſtorians have gone for Antiquity hereof beyond the ſtory of Brute or the Trojan War, (beyond which very few of that ſtrain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Magog the Son of Japhet, reigning here within 90 years after the Floud. But letting paſs theſe Dreams and Dotages ges of the Monkiſh times, certain it is that ſometimes they were under the Danes, ſometimes under the Norwegians, ſometimes had diſtinct Kings of their own; and finally ſometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians under the general name of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon foreign Actions. Omitting therefore the Succeſſion of their former Kings, of whoſe very being there is cauſe to make great queſtion; we will begin our Catalogue of them with Jermanicus, who entertained Harald King of Denmark and his Brother Regenfride, driven out of that Kingdom by Gotricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemaign; of whoſe Succeſſors Munſter giveth us more certainty.

1387 29. Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three Kingdoms under her Command, cauſed an Act of State to be paſſed in Calmar, a chief Town of Swethland, for the perpetuation of this Union unto her Succeſſors; the Laws and Priviledges of each Kingdom continuing as before they were.

1411 30. Ericus IV. Duke of Pomeren, adopted by Margaret, of whoſe Siſter Ingelburgis he was deſcended, was in her life-time choſen King of the three Kingdoms, into which he ſucceeded actually after her deceaſe: but outed of them all by a ſtrong Faction raiſed againſt him Anno 1439, he died in a private eſtate in Pomeren, Anno 1459.

1448 32. Carolus Canutus, one of the meaneſt of the Nobility, and not long pleaſing to the Great ones: whoſe Diſpleaſure when he had incurred, and feared the conſequents thereof, he gathered together all the Treaſure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his days.

1455 33. Chriſtiern, King of Denmark and Norway, called in by a party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed again under colour that he had not kept Conditions with them: the Kingdom being governed after that (for a time) by Marſhals.

1458 34. John, King of Denmark and Norway, the Son of Chriſtiern, received King by the Swedes then overpowered by the Moſcovite: but their turn being ſerved, they expelled him again, returning to their former Government under Marſhals. Of which Marſhals (deſcended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mother's ſide) there were three in number; viz. 1. Steno, 2. Suanto, and 3. Steno Stur the ſecond: of which the two firſt died natural deaths, and the laſt being by Chriſtiern the ſecond ſlain in Battel, this Kingdom was again poſſeſſed by the Danes.

1519 35. Chriſtiern II. King of all three Kingdoms, uſed his Victory ſo cruelly here, and his Subjects ſo inſolently at home, that here he was outed by Guſtavus Ericus, and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.

1561 37. Ericus V. Son to Guſtavus 8.

1569 38. John II. Brother of Ericus, married Catharine the Siſter of Sigiſmund the ſecond, King of Poland.

1593 39. Sigiſmund, the Son of John the ſecond, in the life-time of his Father choſen King of Poland Anno 1586, but was diſpoſſeſſed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long War) by his Uncle Charles.

1607 40. Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngeſt Son of Guſtavus Ericus, and Brother of John and Erick the two former Kings, firſt governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigiſmund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raiſed up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whoſe Principles he began firſt to withdraw his Obedience from his natural Prince, and afterwards to aſſume the Government to himſelf: ſpeeding ſo well in his Deſign, that after a long War he forced his Nephew to deſiſt from all farther Enterpriſes, and made himſelf King, An. 1607.

1611 41. Guſtavus Adolphus, Son of Charles, having ſetled his Affairs in Sweden, and made Peace with the King of Denmark, with whom his Father was in War at the time of his death, fell firſt upon his Couſin Sigiſmund, the King of Poland, from whom he took many places of importance in Pruſſia and Livonia; and in purſuance of that War was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having ſetled a Truce with him, he paſſed into Germany, then in great danger of being abſolutely inthralled to the Houſe of Auſtria. In which he proſpered ſo beyond all expectation, that in one year he paſſed over the Elb, the Rhene, and the Danow, (which no Conquerour ever did before:) and having twice vanquiſhed the Imperialiſts led by Tilly, and reſtored many of the German Princes unto their Eſtates, was in the current of his Victories ſlain in the Battel of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632; his body royally conveyed to Swethland, and there interred.

1632 42. Chriſtina, ſole Daughter of Guſtavus, of the age of ſeven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the Eſtate being governed by the Counſels of the Nobility. After a long War, with variable ſucceſs, in Germany, they came at laſt to this Accord in the Treaty of Munſter, That ſhe and her Succeſſours, Kings and Queens of Swethland, ſhould peaceably enjoy all the higher Pomeren, with the Iſles of Rugia, Wollen, and the Town of Stetin, in Lower Pomerland; the Town and Port of Wiſmar in the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and the whole Biſhoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wilchuſen; with the Title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomeren, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wiſmar, and by thoſe Titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Aſſemblies which concern the publick. By which Agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germany, a ſtrong Influence upon all the Councils of the Empire, a Door open for more Forces, (if occaſion be) and a free paſſage into the Weſtern Ocean, which before they wanted; but may in time prove abſolute Maſters of the Baltick Sea, and make the Hamburgers, thoſe of Lubeck, and poſſibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire it ſelf, be at their devotion.

But leaving theſe things to the doubtful iſſue of Contingency, let us next look upon the Forces and Revenues of the Crown of Sweden before the time of Guſtavus Adolphus, or as he found them at his Succeſſion to that Crown. For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, eſpecially ſince the failing of the Royal Line in Magnus the fourth and Albert of Mecklenburg: yet ſtill the eldeſt Son or next Heir ſucceedeth; unleſs put by by Faction and ſtrong hand, as in the caſe of Sigiſmund and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles ſo ordered his affairs, that having engaged the Kingdom in a War againſt his Nephew, he was ſolicited at the laſt to accept of the Crown: to which he would by no means yield, till a law was made for the entailing of the ſame for ever unto his Poſterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once ſetled in the Throne is an abſolute Monarch; having not only a power to levie Taxes on his Subjects, as he ſeeth occaſion; as five, ſix, ſeven, eight Dollars, or more, yearly upon every Houſholder, according to the proportion of his Eſtate, but alſo to grant a certain number of Peaſants unto ſuch as he means to favour, to be as Subjects and Vaſſals to him, according to his well-deſerving. And whereas in the Conſtitution of this Government every Pariſh hath a Landſman or Conſul to decide the Controverſies of the ſame, as every Territory hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen; there lieth an Appeal from the Landſman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who if they be ſuppoſed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Council, and from the Council of Eſtate to the King himſelf, (in whom is fixed the Soveraignty and Dernier Reſort) and not unto the King and Council, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea or Land. By Sea he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Bodner, and hath a great Power in all the reſt of the Baltick; being able to ſet out 70 good men of War, as John the ſecond did in the year 1578; ſeven of which were good Gallions, and all the reſt did carry above 50 caſt Pieces of all ſorts, beſides many other good Veſſels fit for Service. And if a Navy of this ſize will not ſerve the turn, he is not only furniſhed with Timber, Cordage, and all other neceſſaries for the building of Ships, and with good ſtore of Ordnance and Ammunition for preſent uſe, but is able to raiſe upon a ſudden 6000 Mariners, and upon little warning as many more; all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner than to find Victuals: inſomuch as John the ſecond, before mentioned, did uſe to ſay, that that which coſt the King of Spain a million of Crowns, coſt not him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-Forces, they may beſt be eſtimated by the Trained Bands (as we may call them) in every Province; there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Enſigns) of Foot conſtantly trained and muſtered in the ſeveral Provinces, each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the total to 20000 Foot; all in a manner Musketiers, ready to march whenſoever the Kings occaſion ſhall ſo require. And then for Horſe, there are eleven Cornets in continual readineſs for Sweden and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the charges of thoſe Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaſeth. And for an inſtance of what this King is able to do, without putting his Eſtates in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his Kingdom, we find that John the ſecond, in his Navy of 70 Ships ſpoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Souldiers, beſides Mariners. And in the Army which Guſtavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germany, there were muſtered no fewer at one time than 12000 Horſe, and 34000 Foot, all Finns and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillery and the like Engines of War, it is thought that the Kings hereof are Maſters of 8000 great Pieces, for the moſt part Braſs, with Mortar-pieces and Granado's in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land-Forces moſt conſiderable is their Hardineſs in enduring the extremities of Wind and Weather, (inſomuch that it is uſual with them to ſtand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long without being relieved) their exact Diſcipline, and Obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable Induſtry in making their own Shoes, Apparel, Stocks for Muskets, and all other neceſſaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the Wars, but keeps them from Idleneſs and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of Sloth and Eaſe. Nor do they want incouragement on the Kings part neither; who, 1. gives to every Souldier Victuals, which he accompts not in their pay, and that according to his Obedience and deſert. 2. If a Souldier be taken Priſoner, him the King doth uſually redeem at his own charges. And 3. if a Souldier's Horſe be ſlain under him, the King ſupplieth him with another. Which make the Souldiers (very ſenſible of ſuch Obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his Commands, how dangerous ſoever they ſeem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they muſt needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amaſs his Treaſures. Firſt the Revenues of the Church, conſiſting before the Reformation of ſeven Biſhopricks and ſixty Monaſteries, which enjoyed very great Poſſeſſions; all ſeized on by Guſtavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crown, excepting only what is given back to maintain the Biſhops. Secondly, Mines, which are here of all Metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more ſparingly; the Tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yields him ſuch a fair Intrado, that in the year 1578 the King's part out of two or three Mines of Copper only amounted to 30000 Dollars. Thirdly, Tenths out of all Increaſe, as Rie, Wheat, Barley, Fiſh, Oxen, Skins, and the like Commodities; the ſum whereof though not certainly known, (becauſe the increaſe is ſo uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the Tenth of the Oxen only came in one year to 18000 Dollars, beſides Proviſion for his Houſhold. Fourthly and laſtly, Cuſtoms impoſed on Merchandiſe, and paid in all his Haven Towns for all Commodities imported or exported, of what ſort ſoever. Beſides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of War, power of impoſing Taxes, (though moderately uſed) as his Neceſſities require; and on the Marriage of a Daughter, the Kingdom is to provide her Portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain ſum of 100000 Dollars, beſides Plate and Movables. Out of which ſeveral Items to ſum up the Total: It was obſerved, that in the year 1578 King John the ſecond (all Charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being firſt deducted) did lay up into his Treaſury no leſs then 700000 Dollars; which was a vaſt ſum for thoſe times, conſidering eſpecially the great Charge which the King had been at that year, in furniſhing a Navy of 70 Sail, and raiſing 18000 Land-Souldiers, (beſides Horſe) for defence of his Realm againſt the Danes. And yet it is conceived by ſome knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater then they are, if he did employ Strangers to work the Mines, which the Natives do not husband to the beſt advantage; and yet are fearful to diſcover them to other Nations upon ſome Jealouſies. which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own Ships ſend out Corn and Cordage, with Maſts and Timber fit for Building, and in them bring back Salt and other Neceſſaries which his Kingdom wants, ſetting them at a far leſs price than now they go at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, three Crowns Or.

There are in Swethland

And thus much for SWETHLAND.

R*USSIA* is bounded on the Eaſt by Tartary on the Weſt with Livonia and Finland, from which it is divided by great Mountains and the River Poln; on the North by the Frozen Ocean, and ſome part of Lapland; and on the South by Lituania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Crim-Tartars, inhabiting on the Banks of Palus Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. It ſtandeth partly in Europe, and partly in Aſia, the River Tanais or Don running through it, the common Boundary of thoſe great and noted parts of the World.

It was thus called from the Roſſi or Ruſſi, a People of Mount Taurus, or Taurica Cherſoneſus, (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire poſſeſſed themſeves of ſome parts of it, and, being the prevailing People, impoſed their Name on all the reſt. Called alſo Ruſſia Alba, to diſtinguiſh it from Ruſſia Nigra, a Province of Poland; quod Incolæ omnium Gentium ipſius imperio ſubjectarum (as one obſerves, diſcourſing of the Affairs hereof) Veſtibus albis & Pileis plerunque utantur, becauſe the Inhabitants uſe to wear white Caps and Veſtments. And why not thus? ſithence the People of Margiana and Sogdiana in Aſia have the name of Jeſelbas only becauſe they wear green Turbants, as the word importeth. Finally, it is called Moſcovie, from Moſcovie the chief Province of it, as that is denominated from the Moſchi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the Heavenly bodies it is ſaid by ſome to be ſituate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates; the longeſt Day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almoſt 22 hours and an half in the Northern parts. But this is to be underſtood only of the Province of Moſcovie properly and ſpecially ſo called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moſcovite according to the Bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as Eaſt-Lapland, Condora & Petzora, lying within the Arctick Circle, the longeſt Day in Summer will be full 6 months, (for ſo long do thoſe Countries ſee no Night at all;) which is a mighty diſproportion from the length of the longeſt Day in the moſt Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is ſaid. And by this Rule we are to take the Dimenſions alſo. For though ſome make the length hereof from North to South, that is to ſay, from Cala in the North to Aſtracan near the Caſpian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Verſts, or 3690 Italian miles; yet they confeſs that, reckoning forwards from Tromſchua, the fartheſt point of Petzora, the full length thereof will be nigh ſo much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narva on the Bay of Finland, (now in poſſeſſion of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the Eaſt, it amounteth to 4400 Verſts, or 6300 Italian miles; each Verſt being eſtimated at three quarters of an Engliſh mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled anſwerable to ſome other parts of the World, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puiſſant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their Bargains, Falſe-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their Promiſes, and ſtudying nothing more than ways to evade their Contracts. Vices ſo generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with Strangers, they diſſemble their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear leſt no body ſhould truſt them. Deſtitute they are of humane Affections,and ſo unnatural, that the Father inſults on his Son, and he again over his Father and Mother: ſo malicious one towards another, that you ſhall have a man hide ſome of his own Goods in the houſe of ſome man whom he hateth, and then accuſe him for the ſtealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, inſomuch that all heady and intoxicating Drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the moſt part they are ſtrong of Body, ſwift of Foot, of a ſquare Proportion, broad, ſhort, and thick; gray-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furniſhed with prominent Panches. The Commons live in miſerable ſubjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great Slavery to the Duke or Emperour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his Grievances: nay the mean Lords and Officers are ſqueamiſh in this kind, and, but on great ſubmiſſion, will not commend unto the Duke a poor man's Cauſe. They are altogether unlearned, even the Prieſts meanly indoctrinated; it being cautionated by the Great Duke, that there be no Schools, leſt there ſhould be any Scholars but himſelf: ſo that the people uſe to work commonly on the Lord's,day,holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to ſay in a difficult queſtion,God and our Great Duke know all this; and in other talk,All we enjoy, Health and Life, is all from our Great Duke; according to whoſe pleaſure every man is preſcribed what Habit he ſhall wear, both for matter and faſhion, ſuitable unto their Condition. In the time of my Authour their Habit was a long Garment without Plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very ſtraight Sleeves; on their Legs wearing Buskins up as high as the calf, for the moſt part red, high at the heels, and beſet with nails of Iron. The ſtuff and trimming of the Dreſs is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Peaſant.

The Women are attired alſo much after this manner; but if great and noble, ſuffered to ſet forth themſelves with ſtore of Pearls and Precious Sones, which hang ſo thick about their ears, that they do almoſt pull their ears from their heads. A ſecond Marriage is conceived no blemiſh in point of Chaſtity, but the third condemns them of Incontinence. They are naturally ſubject enough to the Luſts of the fleſh, but private, and fearful to offend; if once laſcivious, then moſt intolerably wanton. It is the faſhion of theſe Women to love that Husband beſt which beateth them moſt; and to think themſelves neither loved nor regarded, unleſs they be two or three times a-day well-favouredly ſwaddled. The Authour of the Treaſury of Times telleth a Story of a German Shoemaker, who, travelling into this Country, and here marrying a Widow, uſed her with all kindneſs that a woman could (as he thought) deſire; yet did not ſhe ſeem contented. At laſt learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cauſe of her Penſiveneſs, he took ſuch a vein in cudgelling her ſides, that in the end the Hangman was fain to break his Neck for his labour.

They uſe the Sclavonian Language, but ſo corrupt and mixt with other Languages,that they and the Sclavonians underſtand not one another's meaning but by circumſtance only: yet in Jugria (out of which the Hungarians are thought to have iſſued) they ſpeak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petzora and the Country of the Czeremiſſians they have a Language to themſelves, diſtinct from others.

They firſt received the Chriſtian Faith in the year 987, or, as ſome ſay, Anno 942, by the preaching and miniſtery of the Greeks ſent hither by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; of which Church they are conſtant followers, both for Rites and Doctrine: but not without ſome Superſtitions of their own ſuperadded to them; viz. not coming near a Croſs,Church or Monaſtery,but they kneel down, and make the ſign of the Croſs, ſaying, Miloy Hiſpodi, i. e. Lord, have mercy upon us; nor entring into any Church, untill waſhed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews,whom they ſuffer not to live amongſt them; and ſo great friendſhip unto a Calf, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his fleſh. Their Church is governed by 18 Biſhops,and 2 Metropolitans, all of them ſubordinate to their Archbiſhop or Patriarch; as he in former times to the Conſtantinopolitan, by whom he uſed to be confirmed. But about an hundred years ago they withdrew themſelves from that ſubjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and conſecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counſel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperour or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Biſhops are all choſen out of the Monaſtick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the order of S. Baſil) to live very religiouſly, in hope to be advanced to the Epiſcopal Dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochial Prieſts, there is not much required of them, but to ſay their Maſſes, (which being in their own Language they may eaſily do) and to read now and then one of S. Chryſoſtom's Homilies,tranſlated heretofore for the uſe of thoſe Churches. After the death of their firſt Wives they are not permitted to marry; in other things little differing from the reſt of the people. Once in the year it is lawful and uſual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Croſier or Paſtoral-ſtaff carried before him, as the Pope's Legate hath the Croſs; where they make Conſtitutions for the publick Government, and the regulating of Divine matters; which are punctually and carefully obſerved by the Prince himſelf.

As followers of the Greek Church, (but ſo as to be counted a Church diſtinct) they differ much both from the Romiſh and reformed. 1. Denying the Holy Ghoſt to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the Dead. 3. Believing that holy men enjoy not the preſence of God before the Reſurrection. 4. Communicating in both kinds but uſing Leavened bread, and mingling warm Water with the Wine, which both together they diſtribute with a Spoon. 5. Receiving Children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, becauſe then they begin to ſin. 6. Forbidding extreme Unction, Confirmation, and fourth Marriages. 7. Admitting none to Orders but ſuch as are married, and yet prohibiting Marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8. Rejecting Carved Images, but admitting the Painted. 9. Obſerving 4 Lents in the year. 10. Reputing it unlawful to faſt on Saturday; or to eat Blood, or any thing that hath been ſtrangled,according to the firſt Council holden at Hieruſalem. 11. And finally, diſſolving Marriage by Divorcement upon every ſlight occaſion, or conceived diſpleaſure. Which diverſity betwixt the Romaniſts & this people in point of Religion hath bred ſuch a difference betwixt them in point of Affection,and made them ſo ill-conceited of one another, that if a Moſcovite be known, or but ſuſpected, to have converſed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted perſon, and muſt be ſolemnly purged and purified, before he be admitted to partake of the bleſſed Sacrament.

In matters of War the people are indifferent able, as being almoſt in continual Broils with their Neighbours; and have a Cuſtom, that when they go to the Wars, every Souldier giveth to the Emperour or Great Duke a piece of money, which at the end of the War he receiveth again: and by that means the number of the ſlain is exactly known. At their Funerals they uſe to put a Peny into the Mouth of the party deceaſed, a pair of Shoes on his Feet, and a Letter in his Hand, directed (ſuch is their Superſtition) to S. Nicolas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtleſs very prejudicial to the Pope's and S. Peter's Prerogatives.

This Country is not ſo populous as ſpacious. The Eaſtern parts are vexed with the Tartars, who, like Æſop's Dog, will neither dwell there themſelves, nor ſuffer the Moſcovites to plant Colonies in them: the Weſtern parts almoſt as much moleſted by the Swediſh and Polonian Kings; the Southern by the Turks and Precopenſes; and the Northern by the coldneſs of the Air, which is of ſuch vehemency, that Water thrown up into the air will turn to Ice before it fall to the ground. The better to reſiſt the extremity of this Cold, not only the Clothes of this people, but their very Houſes, are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his Dwelling-houſe, a Stove or Hot-houſe, in which they keep as it were, to thaw themſelves. Such as travel on the way uſe often to rub their Noſe or Ears with Snow or Ice, to ſettle and recal the motive Spirits into thoſe parts, which otherwiſe they would be in danger to loſe; the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery was not the leaſt cauſe that, in the year 1598, of 70000 Turks which made an Inrode into Moſcovie, 40000 were frozen to death. By reaſon of theſe extremities of Froſts and Cold, it is the Cuſtom of this people to lay the Bodies of their dead all the Winter long on heaps in the Belfrees of their Churches, where they lie without putrefying or any ill ſavour to the end of March; at what time the Air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging, each Family looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This exceſs of Cold in the Air gave occaſion to Caſtalian in his Aulicus wittily, and not incongruouſly, to feign that if two men being ſomewhat diſtant talk together in the Winter, their words will be ſo frozen that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the ſame place, their words will melt into the ſame order that they were frozen and ſpoken, and be plainly underſtood. Such is their Winter: neither is their Summer leſs miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner covered the whole ſurface of the Country, are at the firſt approach of the Sun ſuddenly diſſolved, the Water quickly dried up, and the Earth dreſſed in her holy-day Apparel: ſuch a mature growth of Fruits, ſuch flouriſhing of Herbs, ſuch chirping of Birds, as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reaſon of which ſtrange and ſudden alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the Snow on the face of the Earth, keeping it from the rigour of the Winter Froſts; which being diſſolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth ſo throughly drench and ſoke the Ground, (being of a light and Sandy mold) and conſequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun ſhining hotly on it, that it forceth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to ſhoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a ſhorter time then can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much overſpred with Woods, parts of the great Hercynian Foreſt, heretofore over-running all the North, and ſtill more viſible here than in other places: either by reaſon of the Idleneſs of the people, naturally given to Sloth and Eaſe; or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already Ground enough for Tillage to ſupply their neceſſary uſes. For here do grow the goodlieſt and talleſt Trees of the World, through which, by reaſon of their thickneſs, the brightneſs of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce; affording ſhelter to great multitudes of Cattel, but of wild Beaſts eſpecially, whoſe Skins are better than their Bodies; as Bears, Marterns, Zibellines, Wolves, Black-Foxes, whoſe skins are of very great eſtimation. Of the Timber of theſe Trees are ſquared all neceſſaries both for Forts and Houſes; the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge Beams faſtned together, (the Chinks filled with Earth) not eaſily ſhaken by Battery, though much ſubject to Fire. And out of them iſſueth an unſpeakable quantity of Pitch and Roſin, which are hence diſtilled: beſides an everlaſting Fountain of Wax and Honey; the Bees, without the Midwifery of the Art of Man, building their Hives or Houſes in the hollow Trees. Concerning this there goeth a Story (reported and believed for a certain truth) of a Countryman who accidentally had ſlipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he ſtood up to the breaſt in Honey, continuing there two days without other Suſtenance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the Booty, he laid hold of his Legs, and ſo terrified him with his Cries, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth alſo great ſtore of Flax and Hemp, which is tranſported yearly into other Countries, (and would make them very excellent Cordage, if the people had any skill in Manufactures or Mechanical Arts) and in ſome places rich Paſtures, and ſuch ſtore of Corn, that therewith they do furniſh Lapland and the North parts of Sweden. Fiſh they have alſo in good plenty, which they ſalt and dry, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in ſtore for their Forts and Families. By which account it will appear that the principal Commodities which they ſend abroad are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales-greace, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Roſin, Nuts, Filberds and the like: which either the Dutch and Engliſh buy of them at the Port of S. Nicholas, or the Armenians at Aſtracan near the Caſpian Sea; giving them in return Cloth, Silks, Tapeſtry, and ſome other Merchandiſe, tranſported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 Poad, (every Poad containing 40 Engliſh Pounds) of Tallow 100000 Poad, 100000 Hides, 100 Ships laden with Flax and Hemp; the reſt of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author; ſince whoſe time the Trade hereof hath been much increaſed.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by ſome it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are, 1. The Don, called Tanais by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Aſia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It diſburtheneth it ſelf into Palus Mæotis; and hath its Fountain not out of the Riphæan Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Iwanoweſero, in the Foreſt of Okonieskilies or Jephapinolies, ſome 20 Engliſh miles from the City of Tulla; and having run a great way Eaſtward, turneth back again, and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Mæotis, as was ſaid before. 2. Boryſthenes, now called Nieper, whoſe ſpring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now diſcovered to be near Duiperck, a Village of Moſcovy ſpecially ſo called, in the Foreſt of Wolkonskie. Whence paſſing South, and running by the Town of Smolensko, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongſt them that of Deſna (by the ancient Writers called Hypanis) notwithſtanding, whoſe muddy waters it ſtill retains its natural Clearneſs, and ſo falls into the Euxine Sea. 3. Turuntus, (ſo called by Ptolemie) or Duina the leſs, (to difference it from Duina the greater) which riſing not far from the Head of Boryſthenes, out of the Lake of Duina, and waſhing the Walls of Riga, the chief Town of Livonia, loſeth it ſelf in the Baltick Sea. 4. Duna, or Dwine, (commonly called Duina the greater) ſo called from the meeting of two Rivers, the Juga and the Sachan, (whereof more hereafter) of which that of the longeſt courſe, not known unto the Ancients, hath its Head in the Province of Permia, and it falls into the Frozen or Northern Ocean at the Port of S. Nicolas. 5. Occa, or Ocyne, riſing in the Territory of Miſceneck, and making all the Country fruitful through which it paſſeth, emptieth it ſelf into the Volga. 6. Volga, by Ptolemie called Rha, by the Tartars Edill; which riſeth 25 Dutch miles from Moſco, towards Lituania, and fetching a great compaſs in and out, after it hath ſwallowed up many leſſer Rivers, diſchargeth it ſelf with 70 Mouths into the Caſpian Sea, now called Mar di Bachu. Here are beſides theſe Rivers many notable Lakes, as thoſe of Duina and Volga, out of which the ſaid two Rivers iſſue; that called Ilmen, not far from Novogrod the great, 80 Italian miles in compaſs; that of Ladoga, 100 Dutch miles in length and 60 in breadth, in which are many pleaſant Iſlands; and that called Bieloyeſero, (Lacus Albus in Latine) about 12 German miles long and as many broad, into which 360 Rivers are ſaid to diſcharge their Streams; in the midſt whereof is a ſtrong Caſtle, ſaid to be impregnable, in which the Great Duke keeps the moſt part of his Treaſure, and into which he doth withdraw in the times of Danger and Sedition.

As for the Mountains of this Country, here are the Montes Amadoci, Riphæi, and Hyperborei, ſo much talked of and ſo little known amongſt the Ancients: a continual and craggy Chain of Hills running croſs Sarmatia Europæa, South and North, and thence Eaſtwards into Aſiatica. Beginning not far from the fall of Boryſthenes into the Euxine, they extend directly towards the North, and are there called Montes Amadoci; afterwards bending for a long ſpace towards the North-eaſt, they are called Riphei; and then paſſing on directly Eaſt, by reaſon of their Northernly ſituation, called Hyperborei. And though Sir Walter Raleigh ſays, I know not on what authority, that there are no Riphæan Mountains in rerum natura: yet Mercator placeth them in this Tract, and telleth us, that in regard of their being always covered with Ice and Snow they are hardly paſſible: calling theſe and the ſaid Hyperboræi (in his Europa) by the name of Cingulum terræ, or the Girdle of the Earth, a great part whereof (though known in divers places by different names) they do ſeem to compaſs.

It is divided, for the better Government hereof, into four parts, (by them termed Chetfords) and thoſe governed by four Lieutenants, not reſident upon their Charges, but attending on the Emperour's perſon whereſoever he goeth, and there holding their Courts, but eſpecially at Moſco, the prime Seat of the Empire, where from their Under-Deputies they receive the Complaints of their Provinces, and inform the Emperour's Council of the buſineſs, and from them again receive inſtruction for Reformation. But as to the Corography of it, it is divided into the Province of 1. Muſcovie, eſpecially ſo called. 2. Smolensko. 3. Moſaiski. 4. Pleſcow. 5. Novogrod the great, 6. Corelia. 7. Biarmia. 8. Petzora. 9. Condora. 10. Obdora. 11. Jugria. 12. Severia. 13. Permia. 14. Rezan. 15. Wiatbka. 16. Caſan. 17. Aſtracan. 18. Novogordia inferior. 19. The Mordwits, or Mordua. 20. Worotine. 21. Tuver. 22. Wolodomir. 23. Dwina, and 24 the Ruſſian Iſlands. Others of leſs note (of which there is no want) are reduced to theſe. In my Deſcription whereof I ſhall not be ſo exact and punctual as I have been hitherto; the Country not being much travelled by Strangers, nor any of the Natives ſuffered to go into Foreign Nations, or permitted (out of Jealouſies of State) to hold diſcourſe with the Embaſſadors of Neighbouring Princes, but only in the Emperour's hearing. By means whereof the Corography of this vaſt Empire is come but lamely to our hands; though the Power, Policy and Revenues of it, being Points diſcernible by the Miniſters of other Princes, and by the courſe and conduct of their Affairs, are as well known as thoſe of leſs diſtance. Which ſaid, we will firſt begin with Moſcovie, the prevailing Province, that which gives name to this whole Empire; with reference to which the Situation and Poſition of the reſt of the Provinces is ſet forth unto us in our Authors.

MOSCOVIE ſpecially ſo called is ſeated in the very Center of this Eſtate, and ſo more fit to order the Affairs thereof. It is the largeſt Province of the whole, extending from Eaſt to Weſt 600 Dutch, or 2400 Engliſh miles: ſo populous withal, that beſides 30000 Boiares or Gentlemen, bound to ſerve on horſe-back at their own charges, (like the Turks Timariots) the Great Duke is able to raiſe 70000 Foot, (which is a great matter for a Country ſo little cultivated.)

The Soil hereof is ſtiff and clammy, but might be made more profitable than it is, were it well manured, or ploughed and ordered, as it is in all other Countries. For here, and in moſt parts elſe of this large Dominion, the people are accuſtomed to ſow no more of their Land than what they dig with the Spade, or can break up with a Stick very ſharply pointed; whereof they carry great numbers into the Field, that when one breaks they may uſe another.

Chief places in this Province are, 1. Moſco, the Imperial Seat, and the See of the Patriarch, ſo called of the River Moſco upon which it is ſituate. Exceedingly improved both in ſtate and beauty ſince the time that Daniel the fourth Lord of Muſcovie, removed the Seat-Royal hither from Wolodomir, where before it was; inſomuch that it was once grown to nine miles in compaſs, containing then 41500 Families: but being fired by the Tartar Anno 1571, (at what time there were burnt 80000 perſons) it is reduced to five miles only. The Houſes for the moſt part are of Wood and Dirt, the Streets very miry; without either Ditch, Wall, or Rampart, to defend it againſt an Enemy. Inſtead whereof there are two Caſtles in the outward parts of it, the one called Kitagorod, the other Balſigorod. It is environed with the River Moſco, and another Water called Neglinna, which here falls into it. It contains 16 Churches, moſt of them of the ſame materials as the Houſes are; and the Palace of the Great Duke, ſituate in the midſt hereof, (which for the greatneſs of it may be thought a little City:) fortified with 17 Towers, 3 Bulwarks, and a continual Garriſon (if the Great Duke be there) of 25000 men for the Guard of his perſon. 2. Sloboda, aa Biſhop's See, North-eaſt to Moſco, on the Banks of one of the greateſt Rivers which fall into the Volga. 3. Ruſchow, the Title of a Dukedom, fortified with a Caſtle of Wood, (of which ſtuff moſt of the Fortreſſes of this Country are made) ſituate 23 leagues from Moſco towards the Weſt, on the Banks of the Volga, which hath its fountain in the Territory and Precincts hereof. 4. Jaroſlaw, on the Volga alſo, a Town and Caſtle diſtant about 46 Dutch miles from Moſco; formerly the Eſtate and Patrimony of the ſecond Sons of the Great Duke, but united to the Royal Domain by John Waſiliwich, and by him added alſo to the Style Imperial. It is alſo one of the Sees Epiſcopal. 5. Ruſtow, the See of one of the two Metropolitans, ſituate in a fruitful Soil, well ſtored with Fiſh, and yielding good plenty of Salt. One of the ancienteſt Principalities of all this Empire, and held accuſtomably by the ſecond Son of the Great Duke as a State diſtinct; but conquered by John Waſiliwich, Anno 1565, and added to the Style and Patrimony of the Great Duke himſelf, the younger Sons being from thenceforth put off with Penſions. 6. Vologda, a Biſhop's See, ſituate in a fenny and woody Country; very ſtrong by nature, and beautified with one of the ſtrongeſt Caſtles of all this Eſtate, where the Great Duke doth ſometime lay a part of his Treaſure; that part eſpecially which is raiſed of the Engliſh and Dutch Merchandiſe, which, being landed at the Port of S. Nicolas, is firſt brought hither, where having paid a new Toll or Cuſtom, it goeth on to Moſco. Betwixt this City and that of Jaroſlaw before mentioned, for the ſpace of an hundred Engliſh miles, where ſtood in former times 50 goodly Villages, (ſome of them of a mile in length) the Country in a manner is left wholly deſolate and without Inhabitant; abandoned by the people by reaſon of the inſupportable Preſſures which were laid upon them.

2. SMOLENSKO. 3. MOSAISKI. 4. PLESCOW.

THe Dukedom of SMOLENSKO is ſituate on the courſe of the River Nieper or Boryſthenes, full of many thick Foreſts, from whence they carry a great number of rich Skins yearly. Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Smolensko, ſituate on the Nieper, a Biſhop's See, about 80 Polonian miles from Moſco, begirt on every ſide with Mountains and ſpacious Woods. A large Town, and of great eſteem in theſe parts of the Empire, and giving name unto this Province; which hitherto was governed in a free condition under the Patronage and Protection of the King of Poland, in the time of Alexander a late King thereof; but by Baſilius the Great Duke conquered and added unto this Eſtate: taken by the Polanders in the year 1610, after a long ſiege of two years, with the ſlaughter of 200000 Muſcovites, and the loſs of many of the Beſiegers; but reſtored again to Michael Fedovitius the Great Duke, on the making of the Peace between them. 2. Biela, a Principality of it ſelf, having the honour of a Caſtle, and reckoned in the uſual Style of the Knez or Emperour.

MOSAISKI hath in length 350 Italian miles, and as much in breadth; ſo called from Moſaiski, the chief Town hereof, and a Biſhop's See; taken, together with the Territory or Province appertaining to it, from Alexander King of Poland, by John the Great Duke, Father of Baſilius before mentioned.

PLESCOW, or PSKOW, contains in length 350 Italian miles, in breadth 230 or thereabouts, ſo called from Pleſcow, or Pskow, the chief City of it, and a Biſhop's See, great, powerful, and well walled about, the only walled City of all this Empire: ſo large within the Walls, that when it was beſieged by Stephen King of Poland, there were in it for defence thereof 70000 Foot and 7000 Horſe, beſides the natural Inhabitants of it, which in all ordinary computation muſt be many more. It belonged formerly to the Poles, in the right of the Dukedom of Lituania; taken from them by Baſilius the Great Duke of Muſcovie, Anno 1509, by whom and his Succeſſors it is uſed in the Royal Style.

5. NOVOGORD.

NOVOGORD, or NOVOGROD, is one of the largeſt Provinces or Dukedoms in all Ruſſia, bordering on Livonia, towards Sinus Finnicus or the Gulf of Finland. A colder Country and leſs fruitful than that of Muſcovy, becauſe ſituate ſomewhat farther North: the longeſt Summer day in Moſco not being above 18 hours; whereas in Novogrod, the chief City hereof, it is very near 20. By conſequence, the Winter-nights being of that length muſt make the Air exceeding cold, and the Soil as comfortleſs. Here is in this Province the great lake Ilmen, ſpoken of before, 80 Italian miles in compaſs; as alſo that called Ladoga, before alſo mentioned.

Towns of moſt eſtimation in it are, 1. Novogrod it ſelf, the wealthieſt and goodlieſt City of all the North, affirmed to be in greatneſs not inferiour to Rome; called therefore Novogrod the great, (to difference it from another of the ſame name near unto Wolodomir:) an Archbiſhop's See, and one of the four Mart-Towns of the Hanſe Merchants, reſorted to from all parts for the Trade of Muſcovie, brought thither by Land, and thence tranſported through the Baltick to moſt parts of Chriſtendom. So confident were they in thoſe times of their power and ſtrength, that they uſed to ſay, that Men could do nothing againſt God and them: but they found the contrary, when taken from the Crown of Poland by the Great Duke of Muſcovie. The Trade hereof is ſince much decayed, by the finding out of the North eaſt paſſage to the Port of S. Nicolas, where the Engliſh and Dutch Merchants barter with the Muſcovite. Yet ſtill it keeps the reputation of the principal City; ſituate on the River Naſ, which the Dutch call Ny. The Buildings are for the moſt part of Wood and Clay. It is diſtant from Moſco 120 Dutch miles, and about 200 from the main body of the Baltick; betwixt which and this City lieth the whole Bay of Finland, the Entrances whereof upon the Duina (which leads towards Novogrod) are fortified which the ſtrong Towns and Garriſons of Narva and Revel, both in the hands of the K. of Sweden; which is another great hinderance to the Trade of this Town. 2. Narva, on the North-Bank of Duina, where it falls into the Bay of Finland or Sinus Finnicus, in the Province or Territory of Wichidaw: heretofore reckoned of as a part of Livonia; but being taken by Baſilius the Great Duke, with the reſt of this Country, and the Town of Novogrod it ſelf, Anno 1477, it was impregnably fortified by the care of his Son Waſiliwich, who for a reward unto the Architect, being a Polonian, put out both his Eyes, to diſable him from building the like again. But having left all the Natives in their own Habitations, without abating either their ſtrength or number, the Town and Caſtle not long after was betrayed to the King of Sweden, who ſtill holds it. 3. Pozow, or Pozovia, and 4. Volocoluc; two ſtrong Pieces, ſituate in the Borders againſt the Polanders. 5. Vobſco, beſieged by Stephen King of Poland with an Army of 100000 men; who was forced to retire without taking it, with the loſs of many of his beſt Captains and common Souldiers. It is diſtant from Novogrod 28 Dutch miles: the Country about it is called Volks; where they ſay for certain, that all Cattel which are brought thither, of what hair or colour ſoever they be, upon a little ſtay there become all white. The People of this Tract have a Language (or ſome Dialect rather) peculiar only to themſelves. 6. Juanogorod, a ſtrong Caſtle not far from Vobſco, 40 miles from Novogrod, a Frontier-Caſtle againſt the Swedes garriſoned in Narva, to repulſe whoſe Inrodes it was built.

In this Country, and not far from the Town of Novogrod, was fought that memorable Battel betwixt the Sarmatians and their Slaves. For when the Aſiatick Scythians went to plant themſelves in Media, and the parts adjoyning, ſome of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this Tract, went along for company. Their long ſtay cauſed their Wives, deſpairing of their return, to comfort themſelves with their Slaves both at bed and board; to whom they brought a luſty increaſe of Youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joyned together againſt them; the Slaves, to retain their Wealth and Freedom which they were poſſeſſed of, the Women, for fear of the diſpleaſure of their Husbands, and the Young men, for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joynt Forces they go out to meet them before their entry into the Country; neither are the Maſters ſlow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the firſt ſight of each other. The Maſters, ſcorning to defile their Swords on ſo ignoble an Enemy, aſſault them with Whips; and by the terrour thereof got a ſignal Victory. In memory of which Battel, the people of that City have ever ſince ſtamped their money with the figure of an Horſeman ſhaking a Whip in his hands: And it is the Cuſtom of all Muſcovie, that the Maids in the time of wooing ſend ſuch a Whip, curiouſly wrought by her own hands, to that Suitor whom ſhe reſolves on for her Husband, in token of her future Subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. GORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod lieth the Province called CORELIA, extending Northwards as far as to a Branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longeſt Day is 20 hours and a half; the Nights proportionable in the Winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the Eaſt of Finland, from which it is parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reaſon of which Situation betwixt two great Princes, the people are enforced to pay Tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the Great Duke of Muſcovie. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Kexholm, or Hexholm, in the hands of the Swedes, and 2. Corelnburg; the chief Towns of the Province, belonging with the reſt of the Country unto the Moſcovite. By ſome this Province is made a part of the Eaſtern Lapland; but, I think, erroneouſly: the people having ſome good Towns, and ſavouring of ſome Humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongſt the Laplanders. 3. Nodenburg, on the mouth of a Lake, which by the River called Warſuga emptieth it ſelf into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North-ſide of that Branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean which bounds Corelia lieth the Weſtern part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the Country of the Dikiloppi, or wild Lappians, as the Moſcovites call them, to whoſe Duke or Emperour they are ſubject. We had their Character before when we were in Swethland, nor ſhall we need to repeat it here: as Barbarous and as rude as the worſt ſort of thoſe mentioned in Scricfinnia, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to Luſtfulneſs than the others. In the Winter Solſtice, when the Sun entreth into Capricorn, they have Night for three whole months together: during which time, lurking in their Caves, they have leiſure to conſult with the Prince of Darkneſs; being very great Sorcerers, able (as ſome affirm) to raiſe Winds, Clouds, Tempeſts, and do many ſtrange things. Towns there are none. Some Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-coaſts, patched up by the Sailors of their reception and refreſhment as they come on Land, and named according to their fancies, but not here conſiderable.

8. PETZOKA. 9. CONDORA. 10. OBDORA. 11. JVGRIA.

Oppoſite to Biarmia, or Weſt-Lapland, on the other ſide of the Bay, leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lieth a large Promontory or Head-land, ſtretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctick, comprehending in it 4 Provinces of the Ruſſian Empire; that is to ſay, Petzora, Condora, Obdora, and Jugria: belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Ruſſian Emperours; extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in Power or Patrimony. Howſoever ſomewhat muſt be ſaid of them, becauſe parts of this great Body which we are to diſſect.

PETZORA, ſo called from a River of that name, is fenced on every ſide by Mountains and unpaſſable Rocks, extending Northwards to the Sea, and croſſed with a vaſt Chain of Hills, part of the Hyperborei, ſpoken of before: ſo high, that a certain man, having travelled in the aſcent of them 17 days together, is ſaid to have returned back again, deſpairing to attain the top of them: covered in the Winter-time with perpetual Snows, in the Summer with as ſcorching Heats, by the continual lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and ſimple nature, and received the Ruſſian Faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it is Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea; a ſmall Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof, though otherwiſe ſufficiently ſimple, as before is ſaid, do in the Summer-time catch Partridge, Ducks, Swans, Geeſe, and other Fowl, which they ſalt and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unfitly give it the titles of Artis Magiſter and Ingenii largitor Venter: whereof this may ſerve for one example.

CONDORA lieth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by conſequence is a colder Country, and of worſe condition; one half of the Year being continual Day, and the other half as long a Night. The people are univerſally Idolaters, worſhipping ſome Images (or Idols(in the ſhape of a Man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the richeſt Furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Ruſſes; who, if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt thoſe parts for Sables, Foxes and Bevers, take away their Furs, and beſtow a greater heat upon them in Fires. The chief Town hereof is Puſtozera, over againſt Nova Zemla; on or near the great Lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; ſituate in the 68. Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

OBDORA, ſo called from the River Ob, on both ſides of whoſe Banks it lieth, is the moſt North-eaſtern Province of all theſe Dominions; won to the Obedience of the Ruſſes in the Reign of Theodore the Son of John, Great Duke of Moſcovie. At what time the people had no Cities, lived in Hoords or Companies, ate the Beaſts they took, knew no Corn nor Bread. They were then very good Archers, ſharpning their Arrows with Fiſhbones; with which bones and the Sinews of the Beaſts they ſowed Furs together for their Clothing; which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the Summer, covering their Houſes with Elk-skins. By this Theodore were ſome Caſtles built on the River-ſide, to which he ſent condemned perſons, and brought it into the form of a petit Kingdom. But his Succeſſor Boris built Tooma, the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both ſides of the Water, not worth naming here. But notwithſtanding this Subjection to the Moſcovite, they continue ſtill in their old Idolatry, worſhipping an ancient Idol in form of an old Woman,holding in each Arm a Child,and a third at her feet,called by them Zlatu Babu, or the Golden old Wife; to which they offer precious Furs, ſacrifice Harts, and therewith do conſult touching things to come. But ſome account this for a Fable, or a meer miſtake.

JVGRIA, or JVHAR, lieth alſo on the Northern Seas, but more South than either of the other, betwixt Petzora or Pechora, and the Province of Dwina: the longeſt Day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people are for the moſt part Idolaters, and worſhip the ſame Images as do thoſe of Obdora: affirmed by ſome to be the Progenitors of the preſent Hungarians, who, Comming out of this Country, over ran all Pannonia, and there fixed their Dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they ſpake the old Hungarian Language, not uſed but in this Country and the North parts of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus: which more learned men affirm to be the Jazygian, the Language of the Jazyges, who anciently poſſeſſed that Country in the times of the Romans. But leaving this diſpute to another place, certain it is that they are ſubject to the Moſcovite, but ſo poor and miſerable a people, that they have few Towns,and not many Houſes; and ſo bare of money, that in ſtead thereof they pay Furs for Tribute to their Emperour.

SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moſcovites call it, lieth in a long Tract on the Banks of the River Ob or Oby, South of Obdora and the reſt of the four laſt Provinces. The Country is very fruitful, and abounding with all things neceſſary, notwithſtanding that there be great Deſarts, and ſome Foreſts alſo; but thoſe Foreſts well ſtored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild Beaſts, which yield more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Country doth by its Corn and Fruits. Inſomuch that in the year 1589 there were collected out of this Province only, in the way of Tribute for the Emperour, 466 Timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 Skins) five Timber of Marterns, 180 Caſes of black Foxes, (every Caſe containing 40 Skins) beſides other Commodities. The Woods alſo do offer good plenty of Honey,and the Plains of Herbage; well watered with the River Sem, which falleth into the Deſna, and both together into that of the Nieper, or Boryſthenes. There are in it many Towns and Caſtles, the principal whereof are, 1. Sibier, on the Weſt ſide of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province. 2. Branki, not far from the great Foreſt from hence named. 3. Starodus, 4. Potuvolo, and 5. Czernigo. [Here by miſtake the two Provinces of Siberia and Severia (which differ as the fartheſt North-eaſt and South-weſt points of Muſcovia, betwixt which there is a vaſt Tract of ground) are confounded, part of the Towns belonging to one, part to the other; as do the two Rivers, the Ob, and the Nieper.]

The people hereof, by reaſon of their continual Skirmiſhes with the neighbouring Tartars,are the moſt Warlike Nation of all the Ruſſes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the firſt acknowledged no Superiour, but afterwards was ſeverally and ſucceſſively tributary to the Lituanians, the Polanders,and the Moſcovite; and finally, the laſt Duke, being falſly accuſed of Treaſon, was outed of his Eſtate by Baſilius the Great Duke; who added it to the reſt of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever ſince.

PERMIA is ſituate on the South-weſt of Sibior, or Severia, a large Province,diſtant 250 Dutch miles from Moſco; ſo called from Perm, or Permia, the chief Town hereof, ſituate on the River Viſchore, or Viſtorna. The ſecond Town of note is called Sicwiarskey. The people (as alſo thoſe of Sibior) are of the Moſcovite Religion, and live moſt by hunting wild Beaſts, whoſe Fleſh they eat, and make good Merchandiſe of their Skins, many of which they pay yearly to the Great Duke in way of Tribute,who makes a good Commodity of them,ſelling them to the Merchant at exceſſive rates. They have no Corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elſewhere; but, in ſtead of Bread,eat the fleſh of Stags dried and prepared in the Sun; ſpeaking a Language of their own,different from the reſt of the Ruſſes; and in ſtead of Horſes and Oxen, make uſe of great Dogs and Stags,whom they train up to draw their Sleds from one place to another. There is good ſtore of Woods amongſt them; but they want Cedars,and they have paid dearly for that want.For John Vaſiliwich, meaning to pick a Quarrel with them, ſent to them for certain loads of Cedar-wood,whereof he knew there grew none in their Country; and upon word returned that they had no ſuch Wood, he fined them at 12060 Rubbles.

REZAN, a great and goodly Province, is ſituate betwixt the River Tanais and that of Occa; the moſt fruitful Country of all Ruſſia, and (if report be true) of the whole World alſo: it being credibly affirmed that one grain of Corn doth bring forth ſix Ears; the Stalks hereof growing ſo thick, that an Horſe can hardly paſs through them, or a Quail flie out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is alſo great plenty of Fruits, better than are to be found elſewhere in Ruſſia; together with good ſtore of Honey, Fiſh, Fowl, and other Commodities; beſides Ermins, Bevers, and the like, common in theſe Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tulla, famous for the Fountain or Spring-head of the River Tanais, which ariſeth near it. 2. Colluga, well garriſoned for fear of the Crim-Tartar. 3. Coſſira, a Biſhop's See; as is alſo 4. Rezan, the principal of the Province, which it giveth name to, ſeated upon the Banks of the River Occa. A Country populous and well-planted, affording to the Great Duke 15000 Boiares, or Gentlemen which ſerve on horſe-back, and betwixt 30 and 40000 Foot.

SOuth-eaſt of Rezan, beyond the banks of the River Kamme, and about 150 Dutch miles from Moſco, lieth the Province called WIATHKA; fenny and barren, but well ſtored with Fiſh and Honey, and wild Beaſts good plenty. Heretofore ſubject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive Servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expulſed, it was made ſubject by Baſilius to the Dukes of Moſcovie. I do not read of any Towns which ſhould be here, which makes me think that they do ſtill retain ſo much of the Tartar with them as to live in Hoords and Companies, without any fixt Dwellings, or at the beſt in ſcattered Houſes, not hitherto united into Towns and Villages; except it be the Town of Wiathka it ſelf, built ſince the ſubjection of it to the Moſcovite, and made a Garriſon, to defend theſe out-parts of this Empire againſt the Incurſions of the Tartars.

CASAN, a Kingdom formerly of Tartaria deſerta, hath on the South-eaſt of Wiathka, the moſt civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that Civility to their converſation with the Muſcovites, (though none of the civilleſt themſelves,) tilling their Lands and building Houſes where they may with ſafety. For although the Soil hereof be tolerably fruitful and fit for Habitation, yet the Country for the moſt part is deſolate and ill inhabited;partly by reaſon of ſome vaſt Deſarts, lying betwixt the Cities of Caſan and Aſtracan; but principally in regard of the Crim-Tartar, who will not ſuffer the Moſcovite to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Weſtern parts,where they are protected by Garriſons. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Caſan, upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom; ſince the Subjection of this People to the great Duke, and their Converſion to the Faith, made a Biſhop's See. 2. Surick, upon the River Sure, in the middle of the vaſt Deſarts betwixt Caſan and Aſtracan; built by Baſilius the Great Duke, for a Stage or Reſting-place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repoſe themſelves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was ſaid; the laſt of which named Chelealcesk, ſubmitted himſelf unto Baſilius the Great Duke, and became tributary; but afterward revolting, he was vanquiſhed John Vaſiliwich, An. 1553, and this Kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Ruſſia: the Emperours ſince that time writing themſelves Czar Caſanski, or King of Caſan. And poſſible enough it is that Baſilius, who firſt made it tributary, might from hence take the name of Baſilius Caſan, according to the cuſtom of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremiſſi, a People that live in great Foreſts without any Houſes, living for the moſt part of Honey and the fleſh of wild Beaſts, with the Skins of which they are apparelled. Their Language is different from the reſt. They are ſwift of foot, and very good Archers,carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practiſing their Children ſo timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after ſuch an age) until they can hit a White which is ſet before them.

ASTRACAN lieth alſo South-eaſt of Caſan, more near unto the Caſpian Sea; parted from Caſan by thoſe Deſarts ſpoken of before, but ſituate on the ſame Branch of the River Volga; which, having run a courſe of 2000 Italian miles, diſchargeth it ſelf into this Sea with no leſs then 70 Mouths or Chanels. It took this name from Aſtracan the chief Town hereof, ſituate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of thoſe 70 Mouths or Chanels into the Caſpian: by the commodiouſneſs whereof it is one of the beſt Towns of Trade in all theſe Dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their Silks and Manufactures for the Furs and other natural Commodities of the Ruſſes or Moſcovites. A Kingdom formerly, but a Kingom of leſs eſteem than that of Caſan; conquered (together with it) by Baſilius the Great Duke Anno 1494, and by him made Chriſtian. But afterwards revolting, they were more abſolutely ſubdued by John Vaſiliwich, who brought into the field againſt them no fewer then 120000 Horſe and 200000 Foot, (enough to over-run a far greater Country) and yet had hardly got the better,but for the terrour of his great Ordnance,which the others wanted. Upon that Victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Ruſſia, the Emperour whereof hath ſince ſtyled himſelf the King of Aſtracan.

BUT it is now time we return toward Europe, out of which we have wandred up and down in the skirts of Aſia,in tracing out the ſeveral Provinces of this Empire, ſince our firſt croſſing over the Bay of Grandvic, or Saint Nicolas, into the Country of Petzora. But in our way we muſt firſt take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower, ſo called to difference it from Novogrod (ſurnamed the Great) ſpoken of before;ſituate almoſt in the midſt betwixt Caſan and Moſco, diſtant from the laſt 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the Borders of the other; every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Country is generally very rich both for Tillage and Paſturage,inferiour unto none in all this Eſtate but Rezan and Wolodomir only. So called from Novogrod, the chief Town ſituate at the Confluence of the Occa and Volga; beſides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which ſtoreth it plentifully with Fiſh. A City of great eſteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of Houſes, in that not eaſily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Caſtle, cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Baſilius the Great Duke; but principally for a ſtately and magnificent Temple,built above 600 years ago, in imitation (or emulation,as ſome ſay) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople. To this Town the Story of the Scythian or Sarmatian Slaves ought, in my mind, to be aſcribed; though commonly reported of the other Novogrod, in the Weſt parts of this Empire. My reaſon is,becauſe it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the Borders of the Baltick Sea ſhould croſs all this Country, to join with the Aſiatick Scythians,ſo remote from them,in a needleſs War, which thoſe of this Tract might well do, as near Neighbours to them,if not of the ſame Nation or Extraction with them: nor is it probable that the Slaves would ſuffer their Maſters to waſte all the Country as far as to the Baltick Sea, and to increaſe their ſtrength by the Spoil thereof, before they met them in the Field to give them Battel.

Subject to the Eſtate hereof are the MORDWIT Tartars,lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Don or Tanais, where it beginneth to return Weſtwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the ſame nature with the Czeremiſſois, but that they have ſome Villages and ſcattered Houſes,which the other either want,or elſe care not for. They are Idolaters for the moſt part (and the reſt Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts whereſoever they go; worſhipping that Beaſt all day which they firſt ſee in the morning, and ſwearing by it for that day, as their chiefeſt Deity.

AND now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almoſt as many Titles as Towns with Territories. Four of them (beſides ſome before) are either ſituate in the Province of Moſcovy, or elſe ſo intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may eaſily be taken (or miſtaken) for Members of it. The principal are,

WOROTINE, ſeated on the Weſt ſide of the River Occa, a diſtinct Dukedom of it ſelf; ſo called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River,about 3 Dutch miles from Colluga in the Province of Rezen, lying on the farther Bank thereof; beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a pleaſant Soil. The 2. Miſceneck, the next Town of note,remarkable for the Head of the River Occa, which ariſeth in the fields adjoyning.

TVVER, or OTVVER, as ſome call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the Banks of the River Volga: ſo populous, that it is ſaid to contain 40000 Boiares or Gentlemen fit to ſerve on horſeback, and double that number of the common or inferiour ſort. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Ruſſian Emperour, and is ſo called from Tuver the chief Town thereof, and a Biſhop's Sea; affirmed to be a fairer and more ſtately City than Moſco it ſelf, from which it is diſtant 36 Dutch miles.

WOLODOMIR is one of the moſt fruitful Countries in all Ruſſia, not parallel'd by many Countries in the World; the Soil here (if all be true which is ſaid of it) yielding ſuch an Increaſe, that many times the Huſbandman hath twenty, and ſometimes twenty five, for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Ruſſian Emperour, and hath precedency before Moſcovy in the Style Imperial. So called from Wolodomir, the chief City of it, and a Biſhop's See, and that ſo named from the Founder, who probably was the ſame Valadomir (one of the firſt Kings of the Ruſſes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Conſtantinople. The City is ſituate 36 Polonian miles on the Eaſt of Moſco, anciently the chief Seat and Reſidence of the Great Duke, and ſo continued till the time of John, the Son of Daniel, who firſt tranſlated it to Moſco, that from thence he might more eaſily confront and oppoſe the Tartars, with whoſe Irruptions and Invaſions both he and his Predeceſſors had long been troubled. Under the Government hereof is the City of Suſdali, of great eſteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal Seat remained at Wolodomir, betwixt which and Moſco it is ſeated. After it fell into decay, and being once deſtroyed by the Tartars, could never ſince recover its ancient Luſtre; having now little to uphold its reputation but a Biſhop's See.

DWINA, ſo called from the chief Town, is ſituate on the Confluence of two Rivers, Juch and Sachona, whence it hath the name; Dwine in the Language of that Country ſignifying two, as twain doth with us amongſt Country-people. A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to ſtand very thin, the Towns (conſidering the great compaſs of it) to be very few, and the Inhabitants for the moſt part to live upon dried Fiſh and the Fleſh of wild Beaſts, which they have no want of. The chief Commodity is Salt, with which they uſe to furniſh the neighbouring Provinces, and provide ſuch Neceſſaries for themſelves as they ſtand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Dwine, ſpoken of before, ſituate in the midſt of the Province, on the meeting of the ſaid two Rivers, which here united into one Stream take the name of Dwine, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean in the Bay of Granvic. 2. Sagan, ſo called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is ſeated. 3. Colmagro. 4. Pinnegue, two ſtrong Caſtles.

Unto this Province (becauſe I know not elſe how to diſpoſe of them) I muſt reduce theſe four Towns following: that is to ſay, 1. Vſting, a Biſhop's See, ſituate on the Weſtern ſide of the River, over againſt the Town of Dwine, and in a Country ſo ill furniſhed with Neceſſaries, that the people eat dried Fiſh inſtead of Bread, but have Salt enough to ſeaſon it from thoſe of Dwine. 2. Cargapol, a Biſhop's See alſo, on the ſame ſide of the River that Dwina is of. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Biſhop's See; ſituate at the influx of Dwina into the Gulf of Granvicus, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded ſince the diſcovery of the North-eaſt paſſage by the Engliſh, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch Traffick from Novogrod hither; from hence diſperſed with more eaſe and ſpeed into all the parts of this vaſt Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea ſide, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great Trade, by the Engliſh eſpecially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reaſon whereof the Engliſh Merchants have not only great Privileges and Immunities (as the Authors of ſo great a benefit unto this Eſtate) not granted to others, but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them than any others have received. The cauſe of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Q. Elizabeth, who held very good correſpondence with them, continued ever ſince by mutual Embaſſies on both ſides; and ſecondly, the conformable Behaviour of the Engliſh themſelves, ſo acceptable to thoſe Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vaſiliwich nailed the Hat of another foreign Embaſſador to his Head, for his too much perverſeneſs, he uſed our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindneſs imaginable. Another time, when the Jeſuite Poſſevine began to perſwade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome; upon the information of the Engliſh Embaſſador, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiſs his feet, he grew into ſuch a rage, that the Jeſuite was afraid he would have beat out his Brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas; it is ſo called from an Abbey there built unto that Saint, the Tutelary Saint and local Patron of the Nation. Which ſaid, I will ſet ſail from this Port to the Ruſſian Iſlands, and ſee what may be ſaid of them to our preſent purpoſe.

24. The RUSSIAN Iſlands.

THE RUSSIAN Iſlands are but two, both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coaſts of this Country; that is to ſay, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Iſland, and Nova Zemla; both ſubject (if to any) to the Knez, or Great Duke of Moſcovie.

1. WILLOUGHBIE'S ISLAND was ſo called from Sir Hugh Willoughby, becauſe he firſt diſcovered it, Anno 1553, and was hereabouts found frozen to death the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the ſixth, to find out a new way to Moſcovy, Cathaie and China, he proceeded ſo far as to this Iſland, (ſituate almoſt oppoſite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the Weather proved ſo extreme, and the Froſts ſo vehement, that his Ship was ſet faſt in the Ice, and all his people with himſelf frozen to death, in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact deſcription of their Voyage and Fortunes. Notwithſtanding which diſaſtrous beginning, the Enterpriſe was purſued by ſome noble Adventurers, as Jenkinſon, Burroughs, Pet. Jackman, and others of the Engliſh Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the Eaſt Bounder of Ruſſia;) but by reaſon of the length of the way, the vaſt floating Iſlands of Ice, and perpetual Nights for many months together in Winter, could advance no farther.

2. NOVA ZEMLA, ſituate on the Eaſt of Willoughbie's Iſland, oppoſite to Puſtozera in Condora before mentioned, was firſt diſcovered by ſuch Adventurers as followed Willoughbie's Deſign. Famous for nothing but a race of ſhort-ſtatured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pygmies: not yet ſo far diſcovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Ruſſes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the Preſcripts of any Law; but that they worſhipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer a yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Iſland is woody, deſart, and not eaſie for travel, having in it neither green Bough nor Graſs, yet harbouring great ſtore of Bears, and ſuch ravenous and dangerous Beaſts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentſon and his Aſſociates, employed by the Hollanders for this Diſcovery, Anno 1594, and 1596, in which laſt year, after many dreadful Combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Iſland, where they built an Houſe, as well to preſerve themſelves from being buried in Snow, as from being devoured by the Bears, (ſome of them 13 foot in length) which, with the loſs of two of their company devoured by thoſe ſavage creatures, they at laſt effected; ſome of them coming home in ſafety the October following. And though they ſeemed to give ſome hope that a way might be found unto Cathaie on the North of this Iſland, (themſelves having gone as far North as the 81. Degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the ſucceſs impoſſible.

And ſo I leave it, to return to the Story of Ruſſia, called anciently by the name of Sarmatia Europæa, but known no farther Northwards than the Head of Tanais. And for Sarmatia Europæa, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemy by the Baltick Sea and ſome Terra Incognita on the North, the Jazyges Metanaſtæ (now Tranſylvania and the Upper Hungary) upon the South, the River Viſtula, or Weſſel, which divided it from Germany, upon the Weſt, and the Tanais upon the Eaſt. Beyond that, all along the Banks of the Euxine Sea to the Mare Caſpium, and as far North as any Conquerour had gone, it was called Sarmatia Aſiatica: the Countries farther Eaſtward being then called Scythia. By which accompt, as Ruſſia, containeth not all Sarmatia Europæa, of which Pruſſia and the reſt of the incorporate Provinces of Poland paſs for a part; ſo neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanais into Aſiatica. The ancient Inhabitants, called by a general name Sarmatæ, by the Greeks Sauromatæ, were ſubdivided, ~~for ſo~~ much of this part of it as was then made known, into the Agathyrſi, Rutheni, Pagiritæ, dwelling in the North; the Oſyli, Alauni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongſt many other barbarous Nations, theſe were ſome of the principal. And from theſe Roxolani, as the principal of all the reſt, Matthias à Michou, a learned Polander, doth derive the Original of the Roſſes, (which we now call the Ruſſians;) ſeconded herein by the more learned Bochartus, who proveth out of ancient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Cherſoneſus (from which the paſſage into this Country is both ſhort and eaſie) have been formerly called Rhos. Ταύρους τοὺς Ῥῶς καλεῖσθαι, Tauros vocari gentes Rhos, as he ſaith from Tzetzes. Which Ros, or Rhoſes, firſt mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian People, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards poſſeſſing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Roſſi, of Mount Taurus (from whom thoſe of Taurica deſcended) in their enterprizes on Conſtantinople and the parts adjoyning, return to their old name of Roſſi. The Roſſi, or Ruſſians, were then the firſt Lords of this Country generally, the Moſcovites poſſeſſors of a Province only; ſo called from the Moſchi, ſpoken of by Lucan in his Pharſalia, and placed by Pliny near the head of the River Phaſis, which, riſing from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Meſech, (or Moſoch, as the Ancients called him) the Son of Japhet, placed originally in the North and North-eaſt of Syria, on the Confines of Colchis and Armenia; where Pliny, as before is ſaid, hath fixed the Moſchi, and where there is a long Chain of Hills, which moſt of the old Writers call Montes Moſchici. But to return unto the Roſſi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael the third, Emperour of Conſtantinople; in whoſe Reign they infeſted the Euxine Sea, and had the boldneſs to attempt the Imperial City, Anno 864; ſaid by Cedrenus and ſome other of the Eaſtern Writers to be a People of Mount Taurus, (next neighbours to Meſech or the Moſchi.) Failing in their attempt upon Conſtantinople, and not willing to go home again, they ſpread themſelves, with their Confederates and Aſſociates in this Expedition, upon the North-weſt Banks of the Euxine Sea; enlarging their bounds Northwards with leſs oppoſition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Conſtantinople being once again in vain attempted in the Reigns of Conſtantine the 7. and Henricus Auceps. Converted to the Chriſtian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eaſtern Emperours, Helena, Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valodomirus one of their Kings. From that time forwards they turned their Forces on the Polanders and their weaker neighbours; ſave that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, ſlain accidentally at Conſtantinople in a private Quarrel, they made another fruitleſs Journey againſt that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their Eſtate to the Weſt and South, they became Maſters of a great part of Sarmatia Europæa, Lituania, Podolia, Nigra, Ruſſia, and other Provinces, now ſubject to the Crown of Poland, being then parts of their Eſtate. Anno 1240 the Tartars, under the Conduct of Bathu, or Baydo, Son of Occata Chan, broke in upon them and ſubdued them: the Country before this entire, under one ſole King, being broken afterwards into divers petit and inferiour Governments, according to the will and pleaſure of the inſolent Victors. The principal of theſe (deſcended from the former Kings) were Lords of Volodomir, Moſco, and ſome other Cities; held by them with no other Title than that of Lords of Moſcovy, and for that Tributary to the Tartars, as were all the reſt. Their Seat was originally at Volodomir, till the time that John, the Son of Daniel, the fifth Lord of the Ruſſes, deſcended of the old Regal Line, taking a good liking of the River and Town of Moſco, repaired the Town, being before but mean and ordinary, and made it the chief Seat of his Principality. From whence the reſidue of the Ruſſes, united in ſucceeding times unto this Eſtate by Marriages, Fraud and Conqueſt, had the name of Moſcovites. But notwithſtanding this increaſe of their Power and Empire, the Tartars held them for their Vaſſals, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous Inſolency. Under which Thraldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians, being divided amongſt themſelves, and grown leſs terrible to their Neighbours, were outed of their Power and Command here by the valour of John, ſon of Baſilius the ſecond, who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke, and after into that of Great Duke, as his Fortunes thrived. Yet not ſo great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their Wars, that the Tartars ſhould relinquiſh all their Holds in the Country; and on the other ſide, that once every year, within the Caſtle of Moſco, the Great Duke, ſtanding on foot, ſhould feed the Horſe of the Crim-Tartar with Oats out of his own Cap. This Homage was by Baſilius changed into a Tribute of Furs; which being alſo denied by his Succeſſors, (as they grow in power) occaſioned the long Wars betwixt the Nations; the Tartars always preſſing on them by ſudden Inroads, ſometimes by Armies of no leſs than 200000 fighting men. But notwithſtanding all their Power, and the Friendſhip of the Turk to boot, the Moſcovite is not only able to aſſert his Soveraignty, but hath alſo wreſted from them many goodly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf (as I ſee ſome do) in tracing a Succeſſion of them as far as from the times of Auguſtus Cæſar; when neither the Roſſi nor the Moſchi had here any footing. We will therefore go no higher than the time of George, whoſe Daughter Anne I find to have been married to Henry the firſt of France. From whom in a direct Line deſcended another George, with whom we do intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the laſt King of the Ruſſes before the coming of the Tartars. He, wiſely yielding to the Storm, waved the Title of King, contented only with the Title of Lord, as more ſafe for him, and leſs invidious to the Tartars. The fifth from whom, called John, (as before is ſaid) having removed his Seat to Moſco, took to himſelf the Title of Lord of Moſco, the chief ſeat of that Power and Soveraignty, which he tranſmitted afterwards to his Poſterity; affecting for that cauſe the Title of Duke of Moſcovie (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place alſo in his Style) as much as that of Emperour of Ruſſia; which ſome of them have aſſumed alſo ſince the time of Baſilius, who ſtiled himſelf Baſilius, by the Grace of God, Emperour and Lord of Ruſſia, Great Duke of Volodomir, Moſcovie, Novogrod the great, Pleſcow, Smolensko, Tuver, Jugar, Wiatbka, Bulgar, &c. Lord and Great Prince of the lower Novogrod, Czernigow, Rezan, Wologda, Pſcow, Biele, Roſtow, Jaroſſane, Poloskie, Bielloziere, Udore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Caſan and Aſtracan. But leaving them to their ſwelling and voluminous Title, (little inferiour unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the Succeſſion from the time aforeſaid of

The Great Dukes of MOSCOVIE.

1. John, the firſt Great Duke, who ſhook off the Tartarian Bondage.
2. Baſilius Caſan, won the Provinces of Severia, Roſcovia, and Smolensko, with the Realms of Aſtracan and Caſan.
3. John Baſilius, conquered Livonia and Lituania. Both which his Succeſſor

1548 4. Joannes Baſilides, or Waſiliwich, loſt in his age; though in his youth he had ſubdued the Noybacenſian Tartars to his Empire, and vanquiſhed Selim Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the Engliſh firſt began to confederate.

1583 5. Theodorus Johannides, the laſt of the old Royal Line of Moſcovie.

1591 6. Boris Theodorus, Brother to the Wife of the laſt Great Duke, partly by the laſt Will of his Predeceſſor, partly by practiſing with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmerciful Tyrant, was diſpoſſeſſed by the Polanders coming in favour of one.

1605 7. Demetrius, pretending himſelf to be the Son of John Waſiliwich, (and generally believed to be ſo) preſerved in a Monaſtery from the Tyranny of Boris, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whoſe aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperour in the City of Moſco. But the Ruſſian Lords diſdaining to have a Prince impoſed on them from Poland, roſe in Arms againſt him, and at laſt vanquiſhed and ſlew him in open Field: his Wife, a noble Polonian Lady, being ſent poorly home, and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.

1606 8. Baſil Juanniwich, ſurnamed Sniskius, the chief of the Conſpirators, was by the reſt of his Faction choſen Knez or Emperour, and held the State with great Trouble till the year 1610, when

1610 9. Demetrius II. another pretender to the State as the Son of John Waſiliwich alſo, in oppoſition unto Sniskius, ſet up by a ſtronger Faction, gave occaſion to the Polander to work upon this Diſtemper; by whom Sniskius was taken Priſoner, Demetrius ſlain, Smolensko and other great Towns ſubdued, and Vladiſlaus, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Ruſſians to be choſen Emperour. But the Ruſſes, loth to fall under the power of the Polander; and weary of their own Confuſions, made choice at laſt of 1615 10. Michael Fedrovitz, Son of Theodore the Patriarch of Moſco, who at laſt ſetled this vaſt Empire, and managed it in a more conſtant way of Peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian and Swethlander, than any of his Predeceſſors had done before him.

1646 11. Alexius Michaeliwitz (or the Son of Michael) ſucceeded his Father in the Empire, troubled at firſt with ſome Diſtempers in the State, (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly ſetled, Anno 1648.

The Formalities with which theſe great Emperors are inveſted or ſetled in the Throne are not many nor ſtately; ſuch as they be, I here afford you out of the Hiſtory of the Life of Johannes Baſilides, written in Latine by Paulus Oderbornius. On the 2. of June, Anno 1583, Theodorus Johannides went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principal Church in all Moſco; the Streets all covered with Flowers, the Doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the Air echoing with the noiſe of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people ſo crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked Swords forced a paſſage through them, it had been impoſſible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church-door, the Lords of the Country (Knezes they there call them) went out to meet him; and the Archbiſhop of Moſco, clad in his Pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, imbraced him. The Pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapeſtry, and the Stalls adorned with coſtly Hangings. The Great Duke ſate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of Silk, buttoned down with Golden Buttons: on his Head he wore a Purple Cap ſpangled with rich Jewels, and on his Fingers abundance of Rings. Being thus ſeated, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God to bleſs him, his People, and his Government: which was ſeconded by the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of his Subjects; amongſt whom no ſmall ſtore of Silver-money was flung by the Treaſurer, and ſo they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperour being abſolute Lord of the Lives, Lands and Goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the baſe, ſubſcribing themſelves in their Petitions to him by the name of Keloptery, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Mahomet, a Turkiſh Baſhaw, was uſed to ſay, that his Maſter and the Muſcovite were the two moſt abſolute Princes in all the World. Firſt for their Goods; when any Embaſſadour returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the Preſents which he hath received, giving him perhaps ſome ſmall Reward, perhaps none at all: and as for Lands, they paſs not from Father to Son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly, (beſides the caſe of Permia ſpoken of before) John Vaſiliwich ſent a Command to Moſco, to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a Medicine: and when the Citizens returned anſwer that it was impoſſible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their Diſobedience. Another time he laid a Mulct of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, becauſe he had no good Sport in his Hunting: which they again extorted from the common people; and under colour of want, commanded from ſome Biſhops and Monaſteries the ſum of 100000 Rubbles, from ſome 50000, more or leſs from others, according unto their Revenues. And it is uſual with the beſt of them to cauſe the Boiares (or Gentlemen which ſerve on horſe-back) to pretend themſelves robbed, that he may ſend unto the City to find out the Felon, and, on a Non eſt inventus, fine them at diſcretion, ſometimes 8000, ſometimes 10000, and ſometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their Lives, there is a Story, that Vaſiliwich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Gooſe ſtuffed full of Silver for a Bribe, cauſed him to be brought into the Market-place of Moſco; where without any legal Trial, he commanded the Executioner firſt to cut off his Legs about the Shins, and then his Arms about the Elbows, (ſtill asking the miſerable man how he liked Gooſe-fleſh) and in the end to cut off his Head; in ſimilitude of a Gooſe ready for the Spit. And that they may the better preſerve this Power, the Great Dukes ſeldom ſhew themſelves unto the people but in Apparel of ineſtimable value, joyning the Ornaments of a Biſhop unto the Majeſty of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their Heads ſhining with Diamonds and rich Stones: and when they wear it not on their Heads, they place it before the Chair of State, (over which are the Images of Chriſt and the Bleſſed Virgin) holding in their hands a moſt rich Croſier-Staff, and all their Fingers full of Rings. And upon ſolemn Feſtivals and Entertainments the great Chamber is beſet with Cupboards of Plate of infinite value, and filled with men cloathed with Cloth of Gold to the very foot; all of them ſeeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other than the graveſt and portlieſt Citizens of Moſco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperour's Wardrope; which, to ſuch as do not underſtand the Fraud, look like ſo many Princes, and cauſe no ſmall wonder at his Magnificence. So that the people ſeeing him in ſuch Royal ſtate, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home, reverence him as Slaves, not Subjects, and look upon him rather as a God than a King.

Having ſo abſolute a Command on their Lives and Goods, it will be eaſily ſuppoſed that he may raiſe what Forces and amaſs what Treaſures he hath a mind to. Firſt, for his Forces, it is ſaid that he is able to raiſe 300000 Horſe, if occaſion be: and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that John Vaſiliwich, in his War againſt thoſe of Aſtracan, had actually 120000 Horſe; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiares, bound by their Tenure to ſerve with Horſe whenſoever he pleaſeth; and that there are 110 men choſen by the Emperour, and by him enfeoffed with Lands, (during pleaſure only) who for theſe Lands are to find 65000 Horſe with all things neceſſary for the Wars, and thoſe in a continual readineſs fit for preſent Action. Then for ſuch Horſe as he himſelf doth keep in perpetual pay, there are no fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his perſon, all of them well-experienced men and fit for ſervice: which, added to the 65000 ſpoken of before, make up a ſtanding Body of 90000. Had he Foot anſwerable unto this proportion of Horſe, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vaſiliwich to his great Army of 120000 Horſe having but 20000 Foot; the Foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far ſhort of ſuch a ſtanding Body of Horſe as before we ſpake of. And this defect hath been the reaſon why the Polanders with far leſs Armies have prevailed againſt them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Villocolne, or beſieging Pleſcow (though his Army was not above 60000 in both Horſe and Foot) for want of ſtanding Bands of Foot to make good his ground. Generally both Horſe and Foot are very obedient to their Captains and Superiour Officers: patiently enduring all Diſcommodities of Cold, Rain, and Hunger; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortreſs than ſerve in Field) and ſo regardleſs of their Lives in the day of Battel, that they will rather loſe themſelves than yield themſelves Priſoners or demand Quarter.

For his Revenues, they may be what he will himſelf, conſidering (beſides his extraordinary power of oppreſſing his Subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amaſſing Treaſure: viz. the Foreſtalling of home-bred Commodities, and ingroſſing the foreign; ſelling them at what price he liſt, and hindering all men elſe from Trade till his own be ſold; proviſion of Rent-corn and Victual, raiſed in ſome years to 200000 Rubbles, Rent-wood and Hay to 30000, Poll-money to 400000, Cuſtoms on Merchandiſe to 800000. By which and other means of collecting Monies, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raiſe vaſt Sums: yet it is thought that, his Houſhold-charges being deducted, there remain not towards all other Expences three millions of Rubbles; every Rubble being as much as an Engliſh Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two Leaves and as many Degrees Or.

There are in RUSSIA

OF POLAND.

POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with Ruſſia and the Crim-Tartar, from whom it is parted by the River Boryſthenes; on the Weſt with Germany, on the North with the Baltick Sea and ſome part of Ruſſia, on the South with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary, Tranſylvania and Moldavia.

It is an aggregate Body, conſiſting of many diſtinct Provinces united into one Eſtate, of which Poland, being the predominant, hath given name to the reſt, called all together the Realm of Poland: and that ſo named from Pole, which in the Sclavonian Language (the common Language of the Country) ſignifieth plain; becauſe it is but little ſwelled with Hills. It is of Figure round, in compaſs 2600 miles, ſituate under the eighth and twelfth Climates; ſo that the longeſt Day in the Southern part is but 16 hours, and about 18 hours in the parts moſt North.

This Country is plain, but full of Woods, which ſerve to rectifie the Air, being naturally ſo cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes; inſtead whereof they uſe that kind of Drink called Ale, in former times the uſual Beverage of England and this Country only. Barley they have, and Pulſe in ſuch abundant meaſure, that no ſmall quantities of each are tranſported yearly: nor yield they any thing at all to Denmark or Hungary for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces.

The People are very induſtrious, and ſtudious of all Languages, eſpecially of the Latine; to which they are ſo devoted, that there is ſcarce a mean man who is not able in ſome meaſure to expreſs himſelf in it. According to their abilities, they are rather prodigal than truly liberal; and good Souldiers generally. The Peaſants live in miſerable Servitude unto their Lords; the Lords in ſuch Equality of eſtate amongſt themſelves, that none of them (excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Proud in their Garb, coſtly in their Apparel, impatient in their Humours, and delicate in Diet. Theſe laſt Conditions are common to the Women alſo, who are for the moſt part indifferently fair, and rather witty than well ſpoken. But this, being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly ſo called, is not perhaps communicable to the people of the reſt of the Provinces, whom we ſhall ſpeak of ſeverally in their proper places.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt planted in this Kingdom at ſeveral times and by ſeveral perſons, according to the different parts of which it conſiſteth: in Poland ſpecially ſo called in the time of their Prince Miecislaus, Son of Nemomyslaus, Anno 963; in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200, or thereabouts; in Lituania, not until the year 1386, at the admiſſion of Jagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as ſome ſay) by Thomas of Walden, (or Waldenſis) an Engliſh Frier; in Samogitia and Volhinia at the ſame time with Lituania; in the reſt at other times and on other occaſions: yet ſo that in many places of it Idolatry was never totally rooted out, the ſeeds and practice whereof in many Points ſtill remain amongſt them. Corrupted by the Superſtitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endeavoured at ſuch a time as John Hus flouriſhed in Bohemia, the next neighbouring Kingdom: but by the rigour of Vladiſlaus the ſixth, then King thereof, aſſiſted by his Biſhops and Noblemen, it was at that time hindred. Afterwards in the time of Luther, ſome who had ſtudied at Leipzick and Wittenberg (Univerſities of Saxony) brought his Opinions home with them into the Province of Poland; as ſome Dutch Merchants) with the reſt of their Commodities) did into Dantzick, the chief Town of Pomerellia, Anno 1525: from whence it ſpread it ſelf over moſt part of that Country. According as it was favoured or diſliked by the Palatines, Chaſtellans and other great men of the Realm, ſo was its entertainment either good or bad: the Græcians in the mean time taking opportunity to win ſome parts of it to their ſide, and confirm others in it, who, being originally Members of the Church of Greece, becauſe originally converted by the Biſhops thereof, did ſtill continue in Conformity and Obedience to it. In the end, by reaſon of the over-great Liberty of the Nobility and People, and want of Power in the King to controle their doings, every man took up what Religion he beſt liked; ſome following the Auguſtane Confeſſion, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciouſly to the Church of Rome; and ſome, inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Hereſies under new Diſguiſes, have brought in ſuch a Miſcellanie or Babel of Religions into this Eſtate, (Jeſuites, Lutherans, Calviniſts, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptiſts, and indeed what not? being here all tolerated) that at laſt it grew into a By-word, that If any man had loſt his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or elſe believe it to be vaniſhed. A by-ward afterwards applied unto Amſterdam, communicable ſince unto other places, Libertas prophetandi, or the Liberty of Propheſying, being now as much allowed of in ſome parts of Chriſtendom, as Libertas opinandi was in Rome under Nerva's Government, ubi & ſentire quæ velis, & quæ ſentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he liſted of the publick, and ſpeak what he thought. But whether this be ſuch a rara temporum Felicitas, ſuch a Felicity of theſe our Times, as Tacitus conceived the other to be of thoſe, future times will ſhew.

But to return again to Poland: notwithſtanding this mixture of Religions, yet that moſt publickly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authorized by the Church of Rome, aſſerted here by the Zeal of the Kings unto that Cauſe, and the great Power of the Biſhop's, who ſeeing how thoſe of their Order have ſped in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of ſome things amiſs, have hitherto upheld the Eccleſiaſtical Eſtate in the ſame form they found it. The Government of the Church is as formerly by 3 Archbiſhops and 19 Biſhops, who challenge a Juriſdiction over all the Kingdom, but exerciſe it upon thoſe only who ſubmit unto them: thoſe who embrace the Doctrines of Luther or Calvin following the Forms of Government by them eſtabliſhed; as others do ſome new ones of their own deviſing. And for thoſe Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or were parts heretofore of the Ruſſian Empire, and ſtill hold a Communion with thoſe Churches, they have Archbiſhops and Biſhops of their own Religion; that is to ſay, the Archbiſhops of Vilne and Lemburg, the Biſhops of Poloczo, Luzko, Pinsko, Volodomir, Preſmil, and Kiovia. Yet amongſt all theſe different Churches and forms of Government there is this Conformity, that whenſoever the Goſpel is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry uſe to draw their Swords, (according to an ancient Cuſtom which they had among them) ſignifying their readineſs to defend it againſt all Oppoſers. Which reaſon doubtleſs gave beginning to the ſtanding up at the Creed and Goſpel in the Primitive times, retained ſtill in the Church of England, whereby we do declare how prepared and reſolute we are to defend the ſame: though ſome of late, holding it for a Relique of Popery, with greater nicety than wiſdom have refuſed to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of War were. 1. Caſimir the third, the great Eſtabliſher of this Kingdom after long Diſſenſions. 2. Jagello, or Vladiſlaus the firſt, who firſt brought down the Pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous Victory. 3. Caſimir the 4. the fortunate Conqueror of the Knights of Pruſſia, brought by him under the Command of the Kings of Poland, 4. Sigiſmund the firſt, by whoſe Valour and good fortune the Dutch Knights were totally ſuppreſſed, and the greateſt part of Pruſſia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigiſmund the ſecond, ſurnamed Auguſtus, fortunate in his Wars againſt moſt of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom. Of moſt ſpecial note for learning, Hoſius, a Divine of the Papal party, whoſe great Abilities advanced him to the ſtate of a Cardinal. 2. Crellius, and 3. Volckelius, of the contrary party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heterodox and unſound Opinions. 4. Cromerus, the Hiſtorian. 5. Keckerman, the Profeſſor at Dansk or Dantzick; a man of univerſal Studies, but of greater induſtry than exactneſs.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Viſtula or the Weyſſel, the ancient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europæa, which, riſing, in the Carpathian Mountains, paſſeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and, dividing Pruſſia from Pomerellia, falleth into the Baltick Sea not far from Dantzick, and is navigable for the ſpace of 400 miles of old called Vandalis. 2. Warta, which runneth through the leſſer Poland. 3. Duina the leſs, watering Livonia; and 4. Boryſthenes, or the Nieper, paſſing through Podolia: both ſpoken of before, when we were in Ruſſia. 5. Nieſter, by Ptolomy called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having firſt parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by ſome called the leſſer Tanais, ariſing in Lituania, and falling into the more noted Tanais, which is now called Don. Of leſs note there are, 1. Reuben, or Reuhon. 2. Chronus, now called Pregel. 3. Bog, ſaid by ſome to be the Hypanis of the Ancients. 4. Memel. 5. Niemen, the Mæander of theſe Northern parts. 6. Windaw, a Livonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countries for the moſt part being plain and champain: and thoſe which be are rather Boundaries betwixt this and ſome other Kingdom, than proper unto this alone. The chief of which are thoſe called Sarmatici, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europæa, by Solinus named Sevo, by Ptolemy the Carpathian Mountains; the Boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common Metes and Land-marks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of thoſe ſeveral Provinces of which this Kingdom doth conſiſt, being eleven in number; that is to ſay, 1. Livonia, 2. Samegitia, 3. Lituania, 4. Volhinie, 5. Pedolia, 6. Ruſſia nigra, 7. Maſſovia. 8. Podlaſſia. 9. Pruſſia. 10. Pomerellia; and 11. Poland ſpecially ſo called: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europæa.

1. LIVONIA.

LIVONIA, or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt with the Baltick Sea, on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia and Lituania: extended in length along the Shore of the Baltick for the ſpace of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian, miles, and 40 Dutch, or 160 Italian, miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Levoni, a People of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Viſtula.

The Country is for the moſt part plain, without any Mountains; furniſhed with Corn and Fruits in ſo great abundance, that they ſend part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much Ground untilled in it, by reaſon of the Bogs and Mariſhes, which are very frequent. Here is alſo ſtore of Wax, Honey and Pitch, but they have neither Oyl nor Wine: the want of which laſt is ſupplied by Meth. Of tame Beaſts fit for man's ſervice they are well provided; as alſo of ſuch whoſe Skins are of more value with the Merchant than their Fleſh at the Market; as Ermins, Sables, Caſtors, and others of that kind; beſides good ſtore of Game for Hunting, the Country having in it many large Woods, parts of the Hercynian. And as for Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; it being watered by the Windaw, the Beck, the Dwine, the Reuhon, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Beybas, 45 miles long, and full of Fiſh.

The people are much given to Gluttony and Drunkenneſs, eſpecially in rich mens houſes, where it is to be had: for the Peaſants live in want enough, meer Slaves to their Tyrannical Landlords, who ſpend in Riot and exceſs what theſe get by Drudgery: and when at any time the poor Wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with ſome other, the Lord, if he can overtake him, will cut off his Foot, to make him ſure for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations: as the Eſtones, which are the natural Inhabitants, (derived from the Eſtii, a Dutch people, ſpoken of by Ptolemy) of which Nation are almoſt all the Peaſants; the Moſcovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch and Polanders, intermingled with them, coming in upon ſeveral Conqueſts, and planting themſelves in the beſt parts of it, in which they ſtill Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch eſpecially, for long time Maſters of the whole.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck, imployed herein (in the time of Frederick the firſt) at the perſwaſion of ſome Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbiſhop of Breme; by whom he was made the firſt Biſhop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time is governed by the Archbiſhop of Riga, the Biſhops of Derpt, Aſilia, Oſel, Curland, and Rivallia. In thoſe parts which remain ſubject to the Polander, the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such parts of it as are under the Swedes or Danes are for the moſt part of the Lutheran Profeſſion, planted with Colonies of that People. But the Eſtones, or original Inhabitants, as they have a Language, ſo they have a Religion by themſelves alſo, mixt of the Chriſtian and the Pagan. Extremely well affected unto their Prieſts, to whom they preſent Salt, Candles and Fruits, when they come to them for their Bleſſings; great lovers of Confeſſion, eſteemers of Holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but ſo extremely ignorant in all Points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a Village that can ſay his Pater-noſter. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an Health to him, and poureth his part upon him when his turn comes to drink; putting into the Grave with him an Hatchet, Wine, Meat, and a little Money for his Voyage. And in ſome places they are wholly Idolatrous, (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jeſuites) ſome of them worſhipping the Sun, others Stocks and Stones, and ſome Serpents alſo. The Language of the Country is for the moſt part the High Dutch, being the Language of thoſe Nations who firſt Lorded over them; the Eſtones having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others underſtand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Curland, Eſtland, Semigal, Virland, Harland and Lettenland; but theſe ſix, ſince the Conqueſt of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three, Harland and Virland being united unto Eſtland, and Semigallia unto Curland.

Chief places in Eſtland are, 1. Rivallia, or Revel, a Biſhop's See, and a well-traded Port, ſituate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swede, the keeping whereof, and of Wiborg on the Borders of Moſcovy, ſtand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Habſey, or Habſel, (Aſilia in Latine) a Biſhop's See; and 3. Pernaw, a well-fortified place, belonging to the Swethlander alſo, ever ſince the Conqueſt of theſe parts of the Country by John the ſecond. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as all other pieces of this nature are, which, ſtanding in an Enemie's Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adverſaries. For they are not only Doors, to open a farther paſſage into their Territories, whenſoever we ſhall ſee occaſion; but whilſt the Enemy is beſieging thereof, or otherwiſe buſied in recovering them into his power, our own State is preſerved in quiet, and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be diſtreſſed, without waſting of any part of our proper Countries. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the Engliſh; the Garriſons which the Spaniards and Portugueze have in Africk and India: the Charge of keeping them being ſufficiently defrayed (if the Charge prove greater than the Income, as ſometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4. Velin, a ſtrong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Caſtle; betrayed by the Dutch Garriſon at that time in it, together with William of Furſtenburg, the Great Maſter, into the hands of John Baſilius the Great Duke of Moſcovy, who ſtill holds it. 5. Derpt, or Derbern, (in Latine Tupatum) a Biſhop's See, ſituate on the Beck, or Embeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midſt of the Province, and taken at the ſame time by the Moſcovite, who, tranſporting the Livonians into other places, planted theſe parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Terveſt, a Caſtle of great ſtrength, taken then alſo by the Ruſſes; but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gunpowder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; theſe that follow do: that is to ſay, 7. Borcholm, the Seat and Reſidence of the Biſhop of Rivallia, ſince the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Weiſenburg, incommodiouſly ſeated betwixt two ill neighbors, Narva and Rivallia; but ſerving very well to prohibit the Incurſions of thoſe Garriſons farther into the Country. 9. Wernebeck, in that part of Eſtland, which is called Odinpo; and 10 Weiſſenſtein, in that part thereof which is named Jervia.

In LETTENLAND, lying in the midſt betwixt Eſtland, and Curland, the places of moſt note are, 1. Riga, (the people call it Rig) ſeated on the Mouth of the River Dwina, falling there into the Baltick: firſt built & planted at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbiſhop's See, the ordinary Reſidence of the Great Maſter, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified, according to the modern Rules of Fortification, with a ſtrong Wall, large Bulwarks, double Ditches, Paliſadoes, and well provided of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Empory, of great reſort for foreign Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, Hemp, Flax, and ſuch other Commodities. They are governed (notwithſtanding their Subjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws; and ſuch ſtout defenders of their Liberties, that they will by no means admit of any Foreigner to have Command of the City; obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Dunamund, an impregnable Fortreſs, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garriſoned by the Polanders, who here take Toll of all foreign Merchants. 3. Blokaws, a Garriſon of the King's betwixt Riga and Dunamund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Wenden, more within the Land, on the River Treider. 5. Wolmar, upon the ſame River. 6. Kakenhauſe, a ſtrong Town on the Banks of the Dwina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and ſtood firm for him in the War made by Charles Duke of Suderman againſt his Nephew Sigiſmund King of Poland and Sweden, when almoſt all Eſtland had ſubmitted to him.

CVRLAND, the third and laſt Member of this Diviſion, containing Semigallia alſo, lieth South of Lettenland, and North of Samogitia and Lituania: an entire Dukedom of it ſelf, but holden under the Soveraignty and Homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Candow. 2. Goldingen. 3. Kies, (the Dutch call it Windaw) the Seat of the Great Maſter of the Teutonick Order in times paſt; now moſt frequented as the place of Parliament or general Aſſembly for Affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dubin. 5. Grubin, on the Sea-ſide, but of no Trade at all. 6. Haſenpot. And then in Semigal. 7. Mittaw, the Court and Reſidence of the Dukes of Curland. 8. Selborg. 9. Beſſenborg, 10. Dobelin. There is no Town in all this Dukedom of any Trading, though lying for a great ſpace all along the Baltick, becauſe none of them are furniſhed with commodious Havens. A Dukedom firſt begun in the perſon of Gothardus Ketler, (of one of the Noble Families of Denmark) the laſt Great Maſter of the Dutch Knights in this Country, who in the year 1562 ſurrendring his Order, and the whole poſſeſſion of Livonia, to Sigiſmund-Auguſtus K. of Poland, received back again for him, and his Heirs for ever the Dukedom of Curland and Semigal, to be held by them of that Crown; the Nobility of theſe Countries doing then preſently their Homage and Allegiance to him as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this Houſe have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the Body thereof; not coming to the Diets, not liable to the publick Charges, nor having any thing to do in the King's Election; in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the King's of Poland, than Subjects to them. The preſent Duke is like to be much increaſed in Eſtate and Power, if the now Marqueſs of Brandenburg (whoſe Siſter is his Mother) ſhould depart without Iſſue. For by that means there will be added to this Houſe the great Dukedom of Pruſſia, thoſe of Cleve and Gulick, together with ſuch other Countries poſſeſſed now by that Marqueſs as he holds by deſcent from the Heirs-general of thoſe Dukedoms: which makes him caſt an eye already upon thoſe Eſtates.

There belong alſo to Livonia ſome few Iſlands ſituate in the Baltick Sea: that is to ſay, 1. Oſilia. 2. Dachden. 3. Mona. 4. Wormſe. 5. Wrangen. and 6. Keyn. Of which the four laſt do belong to the King of Poland, Dachden to the King of Swethland, and Oſilia, or Oſel, to the Danes. This laſt is the chief of all the ſix, diſtant from the main Land of Livonia 12 Dutch miles; 14 of the ſame miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns hereof being 1 Oſel, a Biſhop's See, which gives name to the Iſland. 2. Sunneburg. The Iſland was made ſubject to the Danes by Magnus, Brother of Frederick the ſecond, King of Denmark; who, being choſen Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick of Derpt in Eſtland, made himſelf Maſter of this Iſland and ſome other pieces, which, dying without Iſſue, he bequeathed to the King his Brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it ſelf, it was firſt under the Levoni and Eſtii, two German Nations, from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the People of Eſtlanders or Eſtones. Diſtracted into many petit Principalities, it was made acquainted with the Chriſtian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was ſaid. Meinard their firſt Biſhop being dead, and Bertold his Succeſſor ſlain by ſuch of the people as had not yet received the Goſpel; the Knights of the Port-glaive, or the Sword, were ſent hither, to defend the Preachers and the Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themſelves too weak to effect the buſineſs, they united with the Order of Dutch Knights in Pruſſia, to whom from that time forwards they became ſubordinate; the great Maſter of Livonia acknowledging him of Pruſſia for his Superiour. Theſe Knights continued Maſters of it without contradiction till the year 1557, (embracing in the mean time the Opinions of Luther, Anno 1528) then quarelling with the Archbiſhop of Riga, of the Houſe of Brandenburg, becauſe he would not adhere unto their Opinions; who, to ſecure his own Eſtate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moſcovite, who had taken from them almoſt all their Country, they were fain to put themſelves under the Protection of Sigiſmund-Auguſtus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Furſtenburg, the Great Maſter, being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moſcovite, Gothardus his Succeſſour (following the example of Albert the Great Maſter of Pruſſia) tranſacted with the ſaid Sigiſmund for the whole Eſtate, which he ſurrendred to his uſe in the Caſtle of Riga, March 5. 1562, together with his Croſs, the Seal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the ſame, as alſo the Keys of the City and Caſtle of Riga, the Office of Great Maſter, the Rights of Coinage, and all the Powers and Priviledges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratzivil, the King's Commiſſioner, the Dukedom of Curland to him and his Heirs for ever, as before is ſaid. By this Tranſaction the Kings of Pole became Maſters of Liefland, and were more abſolutely ſetled in it after a long War betwixt Stephen King of Poland and John Vaſiliwich the Great Duke of Moſcovie, who in the end ſurrendred all his Claim therein to the ſaid Stephen and his Succeſſors, Anno 1582, reſerving only ſome few Towns on the Eaſtern Borders: the Danes and Swethlanders taking occaſion by their Troubles to impatronize themſelves of Narva, Rivallia, Oſel, and ſome other pieces.

SAMOGITIA is a ſmall Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lituania, having Livonia on the North, Lituania on the Eaſt and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the Weſt: in length extending 50 miles from Eaſt to Weſt, but not of an anſwerable breadth. It is ſo called from the lowlineſs of the ſituation, (the word Samogits in the Language of the Inhabitants ſignifying terram inferiorem, or the Low-lands) by the Moſcovite in the ſame ſenſe called Samotzkaſelma. This lowneſs of ſituation makes it very watery, and almoſt continually frozen: but withal it hath many Foreſts, which yield unto the people abundance of Honey, better, more pleaſing to the taſte, and leſs mixt with Wax, than in other places.

The people are ſuppoſed to be of the Saxon Race, of a good Stature, well ſet, bold, and apt for War; but withall boiſterous, rude and barbarous: Chriſtians in general, but many of them do ſtill retain their old Idolatries; nouriſhing amongſt them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handfulls in length, which they worſhip as their Houſhold-gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repaſt: and if any Miſchance do happen to any of the Family, it is imputed preſently to ſome want of due obſervance of theſe ugly Creatures. They are naturally inclined to Divinations, Charms and Sorceries, and frequently abuſed (as for the moſt part ſuch people are) by Diabolical Illuſions. Nay, they which profeſs the name of Chriſt are ſo ill inſtructed, that they uſe to marry many Wives, without conſideration of Bloud or Parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his Brother's Widow, and not unuſual to marry the Relict of their Fathers, (a Fornication not ſo much as heard of in S. Paul's time amongſt the Gentiles.) They have ſome Cuſtoms alſo as unprofitable as theſe are heatheniſh; breaking up their Land, as they do in Moſcovie, with Spades or Sticks. And when one of their Governours, obſerving the Husbandry of other Nations, had brought them the uſe of the Plough; it fortuned that for two or three years, either by the indiſpoſition of the Weather, or ſome other Accident, they had not ſo much Corn as they uſed to have. Which Want the people attributing to the uſe of the Plough, nec quicquam aliud in cauſa eſſe putantes, and not believing that there was any other cauſe of it, grew ſo much incenſed, that the Governour, fearing ſome Sedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like that of the preſent Iriſh, in ploughing with their Horſes tails, ſpoken of before. So pertinacious for the moſt part are ignorant and ſuperſtitious people, in ſtanding to their ancient Cuſtoms, though abſurd and hurtful.

Towns they have few, their Houſes for the generality being poor and low, covered with Straw or Dirt, with an Hole open in the Roof to let in the light. The principal of thoſe they have (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Swiote; 2. Linkaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath always followed the fortunes of Lituania: ſubject, when that was ſo, to the Kings of Ruſſia, converted when that was to the Chriſtian Faith, and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITUANIA.

LITUANIA hath on the Eaſt the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt Pruſſia, Maſſovia and Poland, on the North Livonia and Samogitia, and on the South Volhinia and Podolia. So called from Lituus the Ceremonial Staff, uſed anciently by the Augurs in their Divinations; to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Goſpel, were called Lituani. but this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it ſhould be peopled by ſome baniſhed Italians, firſt named Italia, then Litalia, and after, by a moſt unlikely Corruption, come to Lituania, as Matthias a Michou would fain have it.

The Country for the moſt part is full of Moors, Foreſts, ſome great Lakes like a Sea for bigneſs, and many navigable Rivers; which frozen over in the Winter make the ways more travellable at that time of the year than they are in Summer. The Air in moſt places is exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have ſome abundance) to be ſeldom ripe, and other Fruits of the Earth to come ſlowly forward. Their Foreſts yield them Bugles, Ermines, Sables, Deer, wild Horſes, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch; but their breed of Cattel is leſs here, and of ſmaller ſtature, than it is in Germany. Theſe Foreſts alſo are the Store-houſe out of which the Engliſh and Hollanders furniſh themſelves with Timber, both for Ships and Building; returning to them in exchange Salt, Wine, and other Neceſſaries which are wanting here.

The people anciently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods; nouriſhing the laſt in their houſes, and keeping the other continually burning; the Prieſts and Miniſters of the Temple always adding Fewel, that it might not fail. The Veſtal Fire was not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater Ceremony. To this God, whom they called Diſhpan, or the Lord of the Smoak, they uſed to ſacrifice young Pullets; to the other, their Cocks. The ſeed of this Idolatry is ſo implanted in them, that it is ſaid, that in a Village of the King's called Lovaniski, not four miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worſhip Serpents. Converted with their Prince Jagello to the Chriſtian Faith, Anno 1386, they yet retained ſuch Cuſtoms as are inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity; marrying, unmarrying, when and as often as they pleaſe; no Bond being ſo ſoon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a married man to uſe the body of an Harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobious Crime: but for the Wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing ſo ordinary and unblameable, that the Husbands call them their Coadjutors, and prize them far above the reſt of their Acquaintance. The common people are in a miſerable Servitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occaſion; yet muſt not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a Crime deſerving death, he muſt hang himſelf as ſoon as the Sentence is ſignified to him, or elſe is beaten and tormented in ſo cruel a manner, that Death at laſt is looked on as a better Life.

The Country is divided into ten parts or Provinces, ſubject unto the Juriſdiction of ſo many Palatines; that is to ſay, the Palatine of 1. Vilna. 2. Trock. 3. Minsko. 4. Novogrod. 5. Breſtia. 6. Volhinia. 7. Kiovia. 8. Mieſlaw. 9. Vitebſco. 10. Polotzkie. But Novogrod and Polotzkie being conquered by the Great Duke of Moſcovie, and added unto that Eſtate, and Volhinia reckoned (of late times) for a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, not depending of it; the remaining number is but ſeven, moſt of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of thoſe, and others which deſerve place here, are, 1. Vilna, a Biſhop's See, equal in bigneſs to Cracow, the chief City of Poland; ſo called of the River Vil, or Viln, upon which it is ſeated; built there in the year 1305 by one Godemin, a great Prince of theſe parts; well walled, but the Gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by foreign Merchants, eſpecially by thoſe that drive the Trade of Moſcovie, who have here their Hall, one of the chief Ornaments of the City. They have in it alſo ſome Churches built of Stone, (but the moſt of Wood) the principal whereof is the Monaſtery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely Structure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski, the Dutch Die Wilde. It is ſituate in the very heart of the Country, the longeſt Day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter; whereas in the moſt Southern parts of the Country it is but 16, and in the moſt Northern not fully 18. 2. Kiovia, or Kiof, ſituate on the Nieper, or Boryſthenes, where the River Deſna falls into it: heretofore a beautiful and moſt ſtately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which ſome remain unto this day; the Ruines of the reſt to be traced out amongſt Shrubs and Buſhes, the receptacles of wild Beaſts. The Seat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Ruſſian Empire, containing alſo under his Juriſdiction the Countries of Walachia in Dacia, and Nigra Ruſſia in Poland. But being deſtroyed by Bathn or Boydo the Tartarian, in the Conqueſt of theſe parts by that People, it never could come near its former Luſtre: yet ſtill it holds the reputation of a Biſhop's See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Moſco for his Metropolitan, and conſequently is of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3. Grodno, on the River Chronus, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4. Grumwald, more memorable for the great Defeat given near it, by Jagello Duke of Lituania and King of Poland, to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province; ſo confident of their Succeſs in the undertaking, that they brought with them abundance of Chains and Torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Chriſtian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained Souldiers ſo tamed their Pride, that he ſlew 40000 of them; ſo that they never recovered of that Blow whilſt their Order ſtood. 5. Pinsko, in the Palatinate of Brzeſt. 6. Klow, reckoned a Country of it ſelf, and 7. Striſſin, fortified with a Caſtle; both under the Palatine of Mieſlaw. The reſt of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates which they give their names to, but not elſe obſervable.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aorſi, Pagarini, Savari, Tribes of the Sarmatæ Europæi. United into this name of Lituanians, they became ſubject to the Kings of Ruſſia, till the breaking of that Kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdizvil, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Ruſſians) withdrew himſelf from their Command; as did alſo many other of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Mindoch, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Chriſtian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the Title of a King; but returning again unto his Vomit, he loſt that Title. In the end, Anno 1386, Jagello Duke of Lituania, marrying with Heduigis Queen of Poland, was upon three Conditions choſen King of that Realm. 1. That he ſhould immediately receive the Chriſtian Faith. 2. That he ſhould draw all his Subjects to the ſame Belief. And 3. that he ſhould unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of theſe the two firſt were performed without any delay; though the ſecond not without ſome difficulty, the people being obſtinate in their old Idolatry, eſpecially in the Religious conceit they had of high Trees, which to cut down was held both unſafe and impious. They could not be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loftieſt Trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up: which when they ſaw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of thoſe whom he employed in that ſervice, Regis mandato & autoritati cedere cœperunt, they then began to hearken unto his Commands, and generally received the Goſpel, and were baptized. In the laſt point there was a longer time of deliberation: For the Princes of the Houſe of Jagello, loth to deprive themſelves of their Patrimonial Eſtate, which was hereditary unto their Poſterity, and to ſubject it to the Election of the Polanders, in which it was poſſible the Princes of their Family might be pretermitted, deferred the accompliſhment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lituanians would revolt if they went about it. But Sigiſmund-Auguſtus, in whoſe perſon the Male-iſſue of Jagello failed, foreſeeing what Diviſions might enſue after his deceaſe, and fearing that the Moſcovites would renew their old Pretenſions, united it unto the Crown: ordaining that the Biſhops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chaſtellans by him eſtabliſhed, ſhould have their place and Suffrage in the great Council of Poland, power in the chuſing of the King, and all other Privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that it is accounted a chief Member of that Body politick; ſubject to thoſe Corruptions, Changes and Innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting thoſe parts only which relate to the Church of Greece, or Moſco, adhering pertinaciouſly to the Rites thereof.

VOLHINIA, by ſome accounted one of the Palatinates of Lituania, (as once it was) but by others a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, is bounded on the North and Eaſt with Lituania, on the South with Podolia, and on the Weſt with Ruſſia Nigra and Podlaſſia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Volgari, who, dwelling on the Banks of the River Volga, came afterwards into this Country, calling it Volgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at laſt unto Volhinia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The Country yields good plenty both of Grain and Fruits, Pools which abound with very good Fiſh, Foreſts which do afford them ſtore of Game and Honey, and much good Paſturage for their Cattel. That people are of the ſame nature with the Lituanians, but more ſtrong and warlike, & better weaned from their old Superſtitions and heatheniſh cuſtoms than the others are. They are of the ſame Language and Religion with thoſe of Ruſſia; to which, together with the reſt of Lituania, it did once belong. It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it: that is to ſay, 1. Luzke, in Latine called Luceoria a Town of above 1000 Families, where 127 only (in the time of my Authour) were of the Romiſh Religion; the reſidue being Ruſſians, Græcians, and ſome Armenians. The Seat and Reſidence of two Biſhops, of which one, being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbiſhop of Lemburg in Ruſſia Nigra; but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece have alſo a Biſhop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Moſco for his Metropolitan. 2. Volodomir, a Biſhop's See alſo, of the ſame condition. 3. Keromenze, which (as the reſt) hath under it many fair Towns and Caſtles, beſides large Villages. The whole was once part of Lituania, as before was ſaid; but of late diſmembred from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State diſtinct: but ſo, that the greateſt part of it is immediatly ſubject to the Duke of Oſtrogoye, who is ſaid to have 4000 Feudataries in this Country; the greateſt Prince of thoſe who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhinia, part of Lituania, and the great Empire of Ruſſia; on the South Moldavia, from which it is parted by the River Tyras, now called Nieſter; on the Weſt Ruſſia Nigra; extending Eaſtward through vaſt uninhabited Countries as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reaſon of the name I find no-where gueſſed at. The people are for the moſt part of the ſame nature and original with the Ruſſians, to whoſe Empire it formerly belonged alſo, till gained (if ſuch a Subjection as they give the King may be called a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at ſuch time as the Ruſſes were inthralled to the power of the Tartars.

The Country is generally ſo fertile, that the Husbandman is accuſtomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one Ploughing for three years together; the Countryman being put to no farther trouble, than at the end of the firſt and ſecond years to ſhake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which ſo falls ſerving as Seed for the next year following. The Meadow-ground is ſo ſtrangely rich and luxuriant, and the Graſs ſo high, that a man can hardly ſee the Heads or Horns of his Cattel; of ſo ſwift a growth, that in three days it will cover a Rod which is thrown into it, and in few more ſo hide a Plough, that it is not an eaſie work to find it. If theſe things ſeem beyond belief, let Maginus, who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go ſo far to diſprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the Miracle, the ground is in moſt places ſo hard and ſtony, that there need ſix yoke of Oxen to break it up; to the great toil both of the Cattel and the men. It is alſo ſaid that in this Country there are great Flocks of Sheep, many Herds of Oxen, abundance of wild Beaſts, and great ſtore of Honey. And yet for all this Plenty and abundance of all things neceſſary, the Country for the moſt part, eſpecially towards the Eaſt, is but meanly inhabited, by reaſon of the frequent Incurſions of the Tartars bordering next unto it, who have ſo waſted it in times paſt, and thereby ſo diſcouraged the people from Building, Planting, and all other works of Peace and Husbandry, that in ſo large and rich a Country there is nothing to be ſeen but ſome ſcattered Houſes, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1. Orzahow. at the Influx of the Boryſthenes or Nieper into the Euxine Sea. 2. Vaſzow, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3. Braclaw, more high upon the Bog. 4. Camieniecz, on the Borders of Ruſſia Nigra, built by ſome divine hand, as it were, amongſt the Precipices of high and inacceſſible Rocks, and ſo well fortified withal, that it is impregnable; as is apparent by the many and great Repulſes which the Turks, Tartarians and Valachians have received before it, with much ſhame and loſs. 5. Lemburg, remarkable for the Sawces or Salt-meats which they ſend thence into other Countries. The former fortunes of this Province, and how it was brought under the Crown of Poland, (with which it was incorporated long ſince) we ſhall ſee anon.

6. RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the Eaſt Volhinia, Podolia, and Moldavia; on the Weſt Maſſovia, and Poland ſpecially ſo called; on the North Lituania and Podlaſſia; and on the South the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called alſo Roxolania, from the Roxolani, a chief People of Sarmatia Europæa, and by ſome Ruthenia: but generally Ruſſia, from the Roſſi ſpoken of before in the Empire of Ruſſia, who ſpread themſelves over all theſe parts. Some hold that it was firſt called Roſſeia, which ſignifieth in the Sclavonian Language a ſcattered Nation, or a Nation diſſeminated and diſperſed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that ſpake the Sclavonian Tongue, and followed the Religion and the Rites of the Church of Greece, extended from the Frozen Sea to the Adriatick, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This and a greater Tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore poſſeſſed by divers Nations under the nme of Sclavonians; a very conſiderable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Ruſſia, given at firſt to all the Ruſſian

Empire, diſtinguiſhed now into Ruſſia Alba and Ruſſia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote, conceiving that it came from the Roſſi, an Armenian People, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864, or thereabouts, attempted the taking of Conſtantinople, and after placed themſelves on the Northern Banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Sclavonians to the North and Eaſt, till they had made themſelves Maſters of all Ruſſia Alba, Lituania, Volhinia, Podolia, and this Ruſſia Nigra. Diſtinguiſhed from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the deſtruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars, either from the colour of their Garments, or their black and more Southernly Complexion. In which regard it is called alſo Ruſſia Meridionalis, or the Southern Ruſſia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Horſes, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: ſuch ſtore of Bees, that they breed not only in Hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of Fiſh, more naturally ſpawning here than in other places, inſomuch that if a Pond be digged, and ſpring accordingly, the Fiſh will breed therein of their own accord, without being brought from other waters. The greateſt want hereof is Wine, either ſupplyed with Mede, or from other places. And it is ſaid that in the Territory of Chelm the Branches of the Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into Stone.

The people are generally valiant, and ſo ſtrong of body, that they uſe Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the Kings of Poland to ſend Colonies of natural Polonians into moſt parts of the Country, inſomuch as moſt of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that Extraction, and follow the Religion of the Church of Rome; the Peaſants and original Inhabitants of it being more generally affected to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of moſt importance in it are. 1. Chelm, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed that the Branches of Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to Stone. 2. Premiſlen. 3. Halitz. 4. Belzo. 5. Grodeck, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemburg, built by one Leo a Moſcovite; a Town of great Traffick, and an Archbiſhop's See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Moſco hath here alſo an Archbiſhop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City it ſelf, and all Ruſſia generally, (as before was ſaid) which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece. There are alſo in this City ſome Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Biſhop, and ſome Prieſts of their own Religion.

Of the Affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Ruſſian Empire, hath been ſaid already. Diſmembred from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governours, ſubject and tributary unto thoſe Barbarians: as had alſo Podolia, its next neighbour. Both, conquered by the Polander, were for a time kept under by ſtrong hand and the power of Garriſons. But being upon all occaſions apt to revolt, by reaſon of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom they were treated rather like Slaves than Subjects) they were aſſured unto the State, by giving the ſame Liberties and Immunities, both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had; and by that means made Fellow-members of that Commonwealth. The Act of Ladiſlaus the 6. the Son of Jagello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who much augmented their Forces, and aſſured their Eſtates, by communicating the Freedom of Rome and the Priviledges of Latium to many of the conquered Provinces: and was imitated by Sigiſmund the firſt, Sigiſmund-Auguſtus and Stephen, his Succeſſors in their incorporating of Pruſſia, Lituania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Lituania, on the Weſt with Poland ſpecially ſo called, on the North with Pruſſia and Podlaſſia, on the South with Ruſſia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Maſſo, one of the Dukes hereof, who in the year 1045, being vanquiſhed by Caſimire Duke of Poland, fled into Pruſſia, and there unfortunately died.

The Country is large, and for the moſt part full of Woods, where they find ſtore of Bugles and wild Bulls. The people are ſtrong, valiant, and couragious in War; differing little from the Polonians in Speech, Manners, or Apparel, ſave that they uſe a kind of Whiſtling, which the others do not. The principal Towns of it are, 1. Warſaw, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the Reſidence of the Duke or Prince; remarkable for the beſt Mede or Metheglin. 2. Czirsko. 3. Poltowskie. 4. Gadziek. 5. Lozara. 6. Droic, the Seat of a Palatine, but not elſe obſervable.

This Province was once ſubject to Princes of its own, not ſubject or ſubordinate unto any Superiour. Of which number that Maſſo was one, from whom it was named Maſſovia. In the years 1246 and 1260, being ſtrangely waſted and diſtreſſed by Mindoy Duke of Lituania, they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Polander; by whom they were made the Portion of the ſecond Son of that Kingdom. But John and Staniſlaus, the two laſt Dukes hereof, dying without Iſſue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, and became incorporate to that Crown, and priviledged in the Election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Volhinia, on the Weſt with Pruſſia, on the North with Lituania, and on the South with Maſſovia and Ruſſia Nigra. The reaſon of the name I know not. The Country differs not much from thoſe before: the people being a mixt generation of Ruſſes, Moſcovites, and Polonians, partake a little of the Manners and Garb of thoſe ſeveral Nations from which they lineally are deſcended.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Bielsko. 2. Bransko. 3. Suras; all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4. Tycockzyn, ſtrongly fortified and well garriſoned, as being the place where the King's Treaſures are kept. 5. Knyſſin, beautified with a Royal Palace, and a pleaſant Park, wherein are ſtore of wild Beaſts for Hunting, and Fiſh-ponds very well repleniſhed. 6. Narew. 7. Vaſilkow, and 8. Auguſtow, a very ſtrong Town, built and well fortified by Sigiſmund-Auguſtus, and by him thus named, Anno 1569, at what time he diſmembred this Province from Lituania, to which before it appertained, uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

PRVSSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Lituania and Podlaſſia, on the Weſt with Pomerania, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Poland and Maſſovia. Called firſt Boruſſia, from the Boruſſi, who ſubdued it, (of whom more anon) which by an eaſie alteration was changed into Pruſſia, by which name it is ſtill called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Dantzick in the Weſt, to Labiaw on the Mouth of the Maillank, Eaſt, for the ſpace of 50 Poliſh miles; and from Torne, bordering on Maſſovia, to Memel in the Confines of Lituania, 58 miles of the ſame meaſure. The Air thereof is very mild and temperate, the Soil both profitable and pleaſant; full of Lakes and Rivers ſtored with Fiſh, plentiful of Corn and other Neceſſaries, and well clad with Foreſts, which yield them Game for Hunting, rich Skins for profit, and abundance of Honey; of which laſt they make Mede for their own uſe, (their ordinary Drink where there is no Wine) and ſell the reſt unto the Merchant. But the Commodity wherein they do excel their neighbours is their plenty of Amber, which is the juice of a Stone which groweth like a Coral in a Mountain of theſe Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and ſhunned by Marriners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwrack: the Mountain is reaſonable large, about 50 yards high of Engliſh meaſure. And when any Tempeſt riſeth in theſe Northern Seas, eſpecially in September and December, the Liquor by violence thereof is rent from the Rock, and caſt into divers Havens, and on divers Coaſts of this Country, and ſometimes upon thoſe of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth moſt, whence they take up firſt ſome ſtore of Weeds, after that this Liquor, which being taken out of the water hardeneth like to Coral. Beſides the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting Straws and Iron, as the Adamant doth, burning like Pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for ſtoping Bloud, all kind of Agues, Falling-ſickneſs, Dropſies, Stone, Cholick, weakneſs of Stomach, Head-ach, and the Yellow-jaundice.

The people, eſpecially the Gentry, deſcend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature; having more Art and Induſtry than the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their ancient Cuſtoms. They were Idolaters for long time together, converted firſt unto the Faith in the time of the Emperour Frederick the 2. by whoſe ſetting on they were ſubdued by the Order of the Dutch Knights, An. 1215, and either won or forced to the Chriſtian Faith. As Chriſtians, governed ſince the plantation of the Goſpel by the Biſhops of Culm, Warmia, Sambia, and Pomeſan, Suffragans to the Archbiſhop of Gneſna; under whom thoſe parts do ſtill continue which have not yet forſaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other ſeparate Congregations diſtinct from them, having their own Forms both of Doctrine and Diſcipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered than this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: ſome of the Lakes being ſeven Dutch miles in compaſs, and well ſtored with Fiſh. The Rivers are 12 in number; that is to ſay, 1. the Viſtula. 2. Chronus. 3. Nogat. 4. Elbing. 5. Vaſera. 6. Paſſaria. 7. Alla. 8. Pregel. 9. Oſſa. 10. Drebnicz. 11. Lica, and 12. Lavia, all plentifully ſtored with Fiſh; beſides a large Sea-coaſt both for Trade and Fiſhing, no ſmall commodity to the Natives.

The Country, formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (ſo they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the induſtry of the Dutch Knights ſo adorned and beautified, (after they had once brought it under their Obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Caſtles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increaſed in theſe later times, hath made it the moſt flouriſhing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of theſe Knights being ſuppreſſed in this Country by an Agreement betwixt Sigiſmund the firſt, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the laſt Great Maſter of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Succeſſors of the ſaid Albert, as Dukes of Pruſſia, and of the ſaid Sigiſmund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or Diviſions of Hogerland, Warmia, Galindia, Michelow, Culmigeria, with the City of Marienburg, the Soveraignty of Dantzick and Melving, with the whole Country of Pomerellia, lying on the Weſt-ſide of the Viſtula, being allotted to the King; the reſidue, containing the Diviſions of Schalavonia, Sambia, Natangia, Nadravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomeſania (except the City and Territory of Marienburg) to the Dukes of Pruſſia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke are, 1. Memel, a well-frequented Port, the Mart-Town for the Commodities of Lituania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the foreign Merchant: part of this Province interpoſing betwixt Lituania and the Baltick. 2. Koningsberg, as the Dutch, Regimont, as the French, and Mons Regius, as the Latines call it; ſituate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulf or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an Univerſity by Albert the firſt Duke hereof 1225, the Seat and principal Reſidence of his Succeſſors; as alſo of the Biſhop of Sambia, in Latine called Sambienſis, by the name of the Province. 3. Mulmeburg, founded by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1279. 4. Brandenburg, on the South-ſide of that Bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I gueſs, by ſome of the Great Maſters of that Family. 5. Ragnitz, the fartheſt Town of note towards Lituania. 6. Angersburg, in Schalavonia; as was alſo Ragnitz. 7. Nordenburg, in Bartonia. 8. Ortelsburg, in Galindia: of which little memorable. 9. Marienwerder, the fartheſt of the Duke's Eſtate towards the Viſtula, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Biſhop of Pomeſan. Beſides which there are reckoned in this Diviſion 80 good Towns more, and about 54 Caſtles, though not of much obſervation in the courſe of Story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are, 1. Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea which they call Friſch-Haffe; a Town of good Trade by reaſon of the commodious Haven, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Biſhop of Warmia. 2. Frawenberg, on the ſame Bay, not far from Braunsberg. 3. Reſel, the chief Town of the Dioceſe and Dukedom of Warmia. 4. Strasburg, in Michelow, confining on Poland ſpecially ſo called; at the Siege whereof by Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden, Anno 1628, Elias Trype, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the uſe of Leathern Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great ſervice in the Wars of Germany. 5. Culm, on the River Viſtula, a Biſhop's See. 6. Marienburg, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1302, and made the Seat of the Great Maſters of their Order, tranſlated firſt from Ptolemais or Acon in Syria to the City of Venice; from thence to Marpurg, and at laſt to this place by Sifride the twelfth Great Maſter of it, whoſe conſtant Reſidence in this Town occaſioned the Biſhop of Culm to remove thither alſo. A very fair and well-built City, the chief of thoſe which do belong to the King of Poland: by him ſo well garriſoned, and furniſhed with ſuch ſtore of Victuals, Ammunition, and other Neceſſaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a ſix years Siege. But it proved otherwiſe when beſieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in leſs ſpace than ſo many months; being on the ſetling of a Peace betwixt the Crowns rendred again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleaſant Iſland made by the Nogat and the Weyſſel, for the fertility of the Soil, and the great number of Houſes, Villages, and People, not equalled (for the muchneſs of it) in all this Country.

To this part alſo belongeth the fair Port of Elbing, (or Melving, as Maginus calls it) ſituate on the Bay of the Baltick called Friſch Haſſe, ſpoken of before, not far from a Fiſhful Lake; well traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants; of great reſort from other Nations, and much frequented by the Engliſh Merchants, who have here their Staple for the Baltick: a ſmall, but neat and well-built City, and fortified with a very good Wall, governed after the manner of a free Eſtate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and Protection of the Kings of Poland, in like ſort as Dantzick alſo is, of which more anon.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the moſt potent Nation of this Tract, extended all along the Coaſt of the Baltick, from them by Ptolemy called Sinas Venedicus: containing under them the Gythones, Phini, Sulanes, Phrungudiones, Avarini; and more within the Land the Sodini and Galindæ, whoſe name the Dukedom or Province of Galindia doth ſtill retain. But great and potent though they were, they were ſubdued by the Boruſſi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphæan Mountains, who, weary of their own cold and barren Dwellings, removed into the Weſtern parts, and, vanquiſhing the Venedi, and thoſe other Nations, poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, which they called Boruſſia, now by us named Pruſſia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having twelve Sons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every Son; continuing by that means diſtracted into divers petit Principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, ſent hither by Frederick the ſecond, Anno 1215, by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Michelow, and the greateſt part of Nadravia, were laid waſte and deſolate: the reſt ſubmitted to their power, and received the Goſpel. After this it continued ſubject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419, when, weary of their Extortion and the continual change of Maſters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their Obedience: ſeconded by the yielding up of Marienburg, with many other Towns and Caſtles, ſold to King Caſimir by the Garriſon-Souldiers, Anno 1457, for 476000 Florens. But the Knights diſdaining to be ſo dealt withall, and refuſing to ſwear Allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open War, which was managed with variable Succeſs on both ſides; Ludovicus, the then Great Maſter, being ſo ſucceſsful at the firſt, that he once beat the King out of the Field, routed his whole Army, ſlew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: nor was he vanquiſhed at laſt, but by the Treachery and Rebellion of his own people. In the end, wearied and worn out on both ſides by continual Wars, Albert of Brandenburg, then Great Maſter, having for 14 years together couragiouſly maintained the Honour of his Order, and for the four laſt years importuned in vain the Aſſiſtance of the Emperour and Princes of Germany, began to think of ſome Expedient to compound the buſineſs. Being inclined to Luther's Doctrines, and willing to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, he ſecretly practiſed with Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, to end the War to the advantage of both parties. By whom at laſt it was agreed, That Albert ſhould relinquiſh his Order, and ſurrender all Pruſſia into the hands of the King: That the King, poſſeſſing the Weſtern parts, with the Town of Marienburg, and the Soveraignty of Dansk and Melving, ſhould inveſt Albert with the Title of Duke of Pruſſia, eſtating on him and the Heirs of his body the whole Eaſtern Moiety, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before ſpecified: and finally, That Albert and his Heirs ſhould hold the ſaid Eſtate as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Aſſemblies at the King's right hand. According to this Agreement, Anno 1525, Albert, attired in the compleat habit of Maſter of the Dutch Order, preſents himſelf humbly on his knees before Sigiſmund at Cracow, the King then ſitting on his Throne. The King, raiſing him from the ground, cauſed him to put off thoſe Robes, and attire himſelf in a Ducal Habit: which done, an Inſtrument was read and publiſhed, whereby the King conferred upon him and the Heirs of his body the Dukedom of Pruſſia, to be held of him and his Succeſſors Kings of Poland. An Act at which the whole Order were extremely incenſed; but they could not help it, and thereupon retired into Germany, where there were ſome good Lands left, to maintain ſuch of them as had no mind to quit that Military honour; leaving their old Eſtates in Pruſſia to the King, and the Duke, whoſe Succeſſors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of Dukes of PRUSSIA.

1525 1. Albert of Brandenburg, Son of Frederick Marqueſs of Onoldsbech, or Onsbach, created Maſter of the Order by the Emperour Maximilian, Anno 1511, and the firſt Duke of Pruſſia by Sigiſmund the firſt of Poland, Anno 1525, founded the Univerſity of Koningsberg, Anno 1544.

1568 2. Albert-Frederick, Son of Albert the firſt Duke, married Mary-Eleanor, Daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.

3. Anne, Eldeſt Daughter of Duke Albert-Frederick, Ducheſs of Pruſſia, brought the Eſtate in Marriage to

4. John-Sigiſmund, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, who was confirmed therein by Sigiſmund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Eſcheat thereof for want of Heirs-males of the body of Albert the firſt Duke.

5. George-William, Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg in right of his Father, Duke of Pruſſia in right of the Lady Anne his Mother, and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by Deſcent from Mary-Eleanor his Grandmother.

6. Frederick William, Son of George-William Marqueſs and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Pruſſia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg; of whoſe Inveſtiture in the Dukedom of Pomeren and other large and goodly Seigniouries we have ſpoken elſewhere.

As for the Government of this Province ſtanding thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of the King; the one being abſolute and uncontrollable in his Eſtates, the other ſubject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal Juſtice, either at Marienburg or Elbing, do compound the buſineſs: who, together with ſome other of the Duke's nomination, receive all Appeals in which the Duke is intereſſed as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

The Arms thereof are Argent, an Eagle Vert, membred and crowned Or, langued Gules.

10. POMERELLIA.

POMERELLIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Viſtula, by it parted from Pruſſia, on the South with Poland ſpecially ſo called, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the Weſt with the Dukedom of Pomerania, merania, of which it was anciently a part, till ſeparated from it, and united to the Crown of Poland under this new name.

The Territory is ſmall, and conſequently not capable of many Towns and Cities of conſideration. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1. Newenburg, on the Banks of the Viſtula, or Wiſſel. 2. Dirſchaw, or Darſaw, (in Latine Darſovia) a well-fortified Town and of great importance, at the Siege whereof, Anno 1627 Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, received the Order of the Garter. 3. Dantzick, in Latine called Dantiſcum, and ſometimes Gedanum, ſituate at the Mouth of the ſame River alſo; a fair and well-built City, the Houſes for the moſt part of Brick, and the reſt of Stone raiſed with great beauty and magnificence ſix or ſeven floors high; beautified with a fair Council houſe for affairs of State, and many publick Gardens for diſport and exerciſe. It conſiſteth of three Cities, governed by as many Senates; the one called Voorſtat, or the fore-City; the ſecond Altſtat, or the old City, and the third Reichſtat, or the Emperour's City: but all incompaſſed with one Wall, and governed by one chief Senate or Common-Council choſen out of all three. A Biſhop's See, and the ſecond in eſteem and rank of all the Hanſe-Towns; of ſo great Trade, ſuch a noted Granary of all ſorts of Corn, iſſued from hence to ſupply the wants of other Countries, that 1000 Meaſures of Wheat (beſides other Commodities in proportion) are here daily ſold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperial, but now as a Free State, acknowledging the Kings of Poland for their Protectors, to whom they allow many Cuſtoms upon their Merchandiſe, and permit their Officers to remain there for receiving them. The firſt Town in the Kingdom of Poland which gave entrance to the Doctrines of Luther, An. 1525, but in ſo tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his Opinions depoſed the old Common-Council-men, and created new ones of their own, prophaned the Churches, robbed them of their Ornaments, and ſhamefully abuſed the Prieſts and Religious perſons, aboliſhed the Maſs, and altered all things at their pleaſure. But by the coming of the King they grew ſomewhat quieter, leaving one Convent of Black Friers and two of Nuns, who ſtill enjoy the exerciſe of their Religion.

This Country, once a part of the Dukedom of Pomeren, was given by Suantibore, once Duke thereof, Anno 1107, to Bugiſlaus his ſecond Son; whoſe Poſterity enjoyed it till the year 1295, when Meſtevin 2. dying without Iſſue-male, gave it to Primiſlaus Duke of the Polonians, whoſe Succeſſors have ever ſince enjoyed it by that Donation. It is called Pomerellia, for diſtinction ſake, from the firſt ſeparating of it from the Dukedom of Pomeren.

POLAND properly and ſpecially ſo called is bounded on the Eaſt with Maſſovia and Podlaſſia, on the Weſt with Sileſia and the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, on the North with Pruſſia and Pomerellia, and on the South with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the ſame miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is ſaid) from the word Pole, ſignifying as much as plain, the Country being plain and level, little ſwelled with Hills.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but ſharp and cold; the Country plain, ſhaded with thick dark Woods, parts of the Hercynian, full of wild Beaſts for Hunting, and of Bees for Honey, which they have here in great abundance, together with ſuch plenty of Grain, but of Rie eſpecially, by reaſon of the continual breaking up of new Grounds gained out of the Foreſts, that it may be called the Granary or Store-houſe of the Weſtern parts of Europe: the Grain is ſent down the Weyſſel unto Dantzick, and thence tranſported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their ſeveral wants.

The Character of the People we have had before; adding now only, that in matters of War they are ſtout and reſolute; ſo forwards in giving the Charge and Purſuit of the Enemy, that John Vaſiliwich, the Great Duke of Moſcovie, comparing them with the Souldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to ſay, that the Moſcovites wanted a Spur to drive them forwards, and the Polander had need of a Bridle to hold them back. Their Language is the Sclavonian Tongue; moſt generally ſpoken alſo in the reſt of the Provinces, but with ſome difference in the Dialect or Pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the leſſer Poland. The GREATER, lying wholly on the Weſtern ſide of the Weyſſel, and ſo accounted anciently as a part of Germany, contains 9 Diviſions, under the Juriſdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1. Poſna. 2. Kaliſch. 3. Siradia. 4. Lancicia. 5. Vladiſlaw. 6. Brzcſtye. 7. Rava 8. Ploczko, and 9. Dobrzin; each of them ſo called from ſome Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the reſt contained in them, are, 1. Poſna, a Biſhop's See, and the principal of the Greater Poland, ſeated amongſt the Hills on the River Warta; built of Free-ſtone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River, but much ſubject unto Inundations, which adde much ſtrength unto the place; of great reſort by reaſon of the Marts or Fairs holden twice a year. 2. Koſcien, ſituate amongſt Mariſhes, and fortified with a double Wall. 3. Oſtrezow, bordering on Sileſia, begirt with Woods. 4. Gneſna, the ancienteſt Town of Poland, founded by Lechus their firſt Prince, the Seat of him and his Succeſſors, till removed to Cracow; ſituate in Kaliſch, and by old preſcription the firſt place for Inauguration of the Kings of Pole, in regard that here Prince Boleſlaus, the firſt King of this Country, received the Regal Diadem at the hands of Otho the third. The Town is well walled, and the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, by ancient Priviledge the Pope's Legat for all Sarmatia Europæa, and in the abſence of the King or Interregnum, the Vicar-general of the Kingdom, having power to ſummon the Diets, to conclude and publiſh their Decrees. 5. Pietrokow, a walled Town in the Palatinate or Diviſion of Siradia, ſituate on a mooriſh ſoil; the place in former times of the general Diets, ſince removed to Warſaw. 6. Vladiſlaw, on the Weyſſel or Viſtula, a Biſhop's See. 7. Bedgoſt, a walled Town on the Bard, a navigable River, conveying the Merchandiſe of theſe parts into the Viſtula. 8. Kruſwick, in Brzeſtye, built of Wood, ſtanding on a great Lake named Gopla, in the Caſtle whereof Popielus the 2. Duke of Poland, was after a ſtrange manner devoured with Rats ſwarming out of the Lake. 9. Ploczko, upon the Viſtula, a walled Town, and a Biſhop's See, with a Caſtle to it. 10. Warſaw, upon the Banks of the ſame River; of no great note in former times, but of late grown the beſt frequented and moſt traded Town in all the Province: honoured for the moſt part with the Court of the King, the holding of all publick Diets, (removed from Pietrokow to this place) & the Tranſaction of all buſineſſes both of Peace and War, which muſt needs draw to it great reſort of all ſorts of people; the fruitfulneſs of the Soil and commodiouſneſs of the ſituation rendring it very capable of thoſe publick Meetings. 11. Mlawa, bordering on the Dukedom of Pruſſia.

The LESSER Poland, lying on the South of the Greater, and divided by the River Weyſſel, comprehendeth only three Diviſions, under the Government of the Palatines of 1. Cracow. 2. Sandomir. and 3. Lublin. Principal Cities of the which are, 1. Cracow, upon the Weyſſel, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Biſhop's See, the chief of all the Kingdom, the Seat of the Prince, and the Sepulture of the former Kings; by Ptolemy called Carodunum; fortified with a double Wall (of the old faſhion) a deep Ditch, the Caſtle of Vanel ſituate on the top of an high Rock, and beautified with an Univerſity, or general Study of good Arts and Sciences. The Buildings are more fair than elſewhere in Poland, of Free-ſtone, and four Stories high; but for the moſt part covered with Shingles, or Tiles of wood: in the midſt is a large Market-place, in form quadrangular; and in the middle of that the Common-Council-houſe, about which are many Shops of Merchants. On one ſide of it ſtandeth the Cathedral Church: and on the Eaſt-ſide of the City the Palace Royal, high ſeated on an Hill overlooking both the Town and Country, fair and well built, of form ſomewhat near a Quadrangle, but lying open to the South without any Buildings above the Wall, affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North-ſide of the Caſtle, the more excellent Proſpect. 2. Lelow, a walled Town with a Caſtle, on the River Bialo. 3. Sandomir, a walled Town with a Caſtle alſo, ſeated on a Hill, under which runs the Viſtula or Weſſel. 4. Wiſlicza, a walled Town amongſt Mariſhes, encompaſſed with the River Nid. 5. Lublin, a walled Town, but more ſtrongly fortified by the Mariſhes and waters with which it is environed; remarkable for three yearly Marts, drawing hither Merchants from moſt parts adjoyning, as alſo Moſcovites, Armenians, Turks and Græcians. The Jews, inhabiting the greateſt part of the Suburbs, have here their Synagogue; making the Town, eſpecially at the time of thoſe Marts, a Medley of all Nations and Religions. 6. Caſimiria, on the Weyſſel, ſo named from the Founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Arii, Helveronæ, Elyſii, and the Naharvali, parts of the Suevi Lygii ſpoken of by Tacitus, all of them lying on the Dutch ſide of the Weyſſel, by conſequence within the Bounds of the ancient Germany: the people of all the reſt of the Provinces before deſcribed being of the Sarmatian Race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in Perſons, Cuſtoms, or Conditions. But theſe diſperſed and ſcattered Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, being united in the common name of Sclaves, part of them ſetled in that part which we now call Poland, at that time reckoned and accounted of as a part of Germany. The time of their firſt coming hither, and the manner of their Government when firſt ſetled here, is not very well known. But for the firſt it is moſt certain, that it was ſome time, and that not long, after the death of Mauritius the Eaſtern Emperour: and for the next it is as certain, that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian who fled his Country for a Murther, with his Brother Zechius, they ſetled into a more conſtant form of Government than before they did. For Lechus, ſeeing his Brother's good Succeſs in Bohemia, where the Sclaves received him for their Prince, paſſed into Poland, the next Province, and was as chearfully received by the Sclaves thereof, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Extraction, and without quarrel or competition ſubmitted themſelves to his Commands, Anno 650, or thereabouts. Of this there is good conſtat amongſt our Authors. But neither the names or number of his Succeſſors do occur in Story till the time of Crocus, the Founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legiſlator of this People. After this, the Succeſſion of their Princes and the ſucceſs of their Affairs becomes more certain: the Eſtate hereof being much improved by the Conqueſt of many Sarmatian Countries, all which together conſtitute and make up the Kingdom of Poland, ſo called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The ſum of their Affairs is this. The Poſterity of Crocus failing in Popielus the ſecond, Piaſtus is elected Duke; the Princes from that time forwards becoming Elective, but always with reſpect to the next of bloud. In the time of Mieciſlaus, Son of Nemomyſlaus, they received the Goſpel, Anno 963. Boleſlaus the Son of Mieciſlaus was the firſt who had the Title of a King, conferred upon him by the Emperor Otho the third about the year 1001, relinquiſhed by Vladiſlaus the firſt, and not reſumed again till the time of Primiſlaus Duke of Poſna, Anno 1300, after which it became perpetual. In the perſon of this Primiſlaus Pomerellia is united to the State of Poland, Anno 1295; in that of Jagello, or Vladiſlaus the fifth, the great Dukedom of Lituania, incorporated into this Body as a Member of it in the time of Sigiſmund-Auguſtus. By Vladiſlaus the ſixth, Son of Jagello, Podolia, and Ruſſia Nigra were alſo added; by Sigiſmund the firſt, Pruſſia and Maſſovia; Podlaſſia by Sigiſmund-Auguſtus, who alſo took Volhinia out of Lituania; by Stephen, the actual poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of Livonia; by Sigiſmund the third, a Title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this order.

Dukes and Kings of POLAND.

A. Ch.
694	1. Lechus of Croatia, the firſt Duke; whoſe Poſterity failing, twelve Palatines were choſen to direct Affairs, and the State became Ariſtocratical.
	2. Crocus, the Legiſlator of Poland.
	3. Lechus II. Son of Crocus.
	4. Venda, the Daughter of Crocus, and Siſter of Lechus the ſecond.
	5. Leſcus the firſt.
	6. Leſcus II.
	7. Leſcus III. Contemporary with Charles the Great.
	8. Popielus, Son of Leſcus the third.
	9. Popielus II. devoured in moſt horrid manner by Rats and Mice, together with his Wiſe and Children, the laſt of the Poſterity or Houſe of Crocus.
800	10. Piaſtus, the firſt Duke elected.
	11. Zemovitus, Son of Piaſtus.
	12. Leſcus IV. Son of Zemovitus.
	13. Nemomyſlaus, Son of Leſcus the 4.
	14. Mieciſlaus, Son of Nemomyſlaus, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Polonians, founded the Biſhopricks of Cracow and Gneſna.
1000	15. Boleſlaus, Son of Mieciſlaus, the firſt who had the Title of King conferred on him by Otho 3.
1025	16. Mieciſlaus II. Son of Boleſlaus.
1041	17. Caſimir, Son of Mieciſlaus.
1059	18. Boleſlaus II. Son of Caſimir, depoſed, and died an Exile in Hungary.
1082	19. Vladiſlaus, Brother of Boleſlaus the ſecond, abandoned the Title of King, and only uſed that of Prince or Duke.
1203	20. Boleſlaus III. Son of Vladiſlaus, Duke of Poland.
1140	21. Vladiſlaus II. Son of Boleſlaus the 3. outed by his Brethren, & at laſt eſtated in Sileſia, united formerly to Poland from the time of Lechus.
1146	22. Boleſlaus IV. Brother of Vladiſlaus the ſecond.
1174	23. Mieciſlaus III. Brother of Boleſlaus and Vladiſlaus, depoſed by his Brother Caſimir.
1178	24. Caſimir II. Brother of the three laſt Princes.
1195	25. Leſcus V. Son of Caſimir the ſecond, depoſed by Mieciſlaus the third.
1203	26. Vladiſlaus III. Son of Mieciſlaus the third, depoſed depoſed by Leſcus the fifth, who again ſeiſed on the Eſtate.

1243 27. Boleſlaus V. ſurnamed Pudicus.

1280 28. Leſcus VI. ſurnamed Niger, the adopted Son of Boleſlaus, and his Couſin-german once removed; after whoſe death, An. 1289, the Eſtate, being diſtracted into many Factions, was for ſome time without a Prince, ſetled at laſt on 1295 29. Primiſlaus, ſurnamed Poſthumus, Duke of Poſna, who again aſſumed the name of King, continued ever ſince by his Succeſſors.

1296 30. Vladiſlaus, ſurnamed Locticus, Brother of Leſcus Niger, outed by Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1300; after whoſe death, Anno 1306, he reſumed the Eſtate.

1333 31. Caſimir III. ſurnamed the Great, Son of Vladiſlaus the fourth, the firſt Eſtabliſher of the Kingdom after all thoſe Troubles, died without Iſſue.

1371 32. Lewis, King of Hungary, Nephew or Grandſon to Charles King of Hungary by Elizabeth the Siſter of Caſimir.

1383 33. Heduigis, the youngeſt Daughter of Lewis, her elder Siſter Mary ſucceeding in the Realm of Hungary, choſen Queen of Poland; married to Jagello Duke of Lituania, Chriſtened, and called Vladiſlaus the fifth.

1386 34. Vladiſlaus V. Duke of Lituania, elected King upon his Marriage with Queen Heduigis.

1435 35. Vladiſlaus VI. Son of Jagello, or Vladiſlaus the fifth, by Sophia, Daughter of the Duke of Kiovia, King of Hungary alſo; ſlain at the Battel of Varna by Amurath the ſecond, King of the Turks, and without Iſſue.

1447 36. Caſimir IV. Brother of Vladiſlaus, firſt brought the Knights of Pruſſia under his Command; Knight of the Order of the Garter.

1493 37. John-Albert, the ſecond Son of Caſimir; his elder Brother Vladiſlaus being pretermitted, on his accepting of the Crowns of Hungary and Bohemia.

1502 38. Alexander, the third Son of Caſimir.

1507 39. Sigiſmund, the fourth Son of Caſimir, his elder Brethren dying without Iſſue: he ſuppreſſed the Order of the Dutch Knights in Pruſſia, and added part thereof unto his Eſtate.

1548 40. Sigiſmund II. ſurnamed Auguſtus, the laſt of the Male-iſſue of Jagello.

1574 41. Henry, Duke of Anjou, Son of Henry the ſecond, the French King, choſen on the death of Sigiſmund-Auguſtus, the only Stranger to the Bloud in all this Catalogue. On the death of his Brother Charles the ninth, he departed ſecretly into France, where he ſucceeded by the name of Henry the third.

1579 42. Stephen Bathor, Vaivod of Tranſylvania, by the recommendation of Amurath the third, Emperour of the Turks, having firſt married Anne, Siſter of Sigiſmund the ſecond, is elected King. He united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Moſcovite.

1587 43. Sigiſmund III. Son of John King of Swethland, and of Katharine his Wife, another of the Siſters of Sigiſmund the ſecond, King of Poland and Sweden. He valiantly oppoſed Oſman the Great Turk, invading his Dominions with an Army of 300000 fighting men.

1633 44. Vladiſlaus VII. eldeſt Son of Sigiſmund the third. After whoſe death the Kingdom was extremely embroiled by Factions, eſpecially by the mutinous and ſeditious Coſacks, not fully ſetled by the Election of 1648 45. Caſimir V. Brother of Vladiſlaus the ſeventh, now King of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this Kingdom is nothing leſs than Monarchical. For though the firſt Dukes hereof were abſolute Princes, and ruled after a Deſpotical manner, having power not only of the Eſtates of their Subjects, but of Life and Death, without Formalities of Law; yet when they once became Elective, they loſt much of that power: which decayed ſo by little and little, that at the laſt the King is counted little better than a Royal Shadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poet's language. A Diminution which began firſt in the times of Lewis of Hungary and Jagello of Lituania; who, to gain the Succeſſion to the Kingdom, contrary to Law, the one for his Daughter, the other for his Son, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives, to buy the Voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their Elections have ſo limited and reſtrained the King's Authority, and enlarged their own, that without their conſent in Council he may neither make a War, nor treat of Peace, nor impoſe Taxes, nor alienate any of his Demeans, nor do any thing of importance which concerns the Publick: inſomuch as Boterus, a great Stateſman, doth expreſly ſay, That the Government of Poland doth rather ſeem an Ariſtocracy than a Monarchy, a Commonwealth rather than a Kingdom. Beſides, the King not only takes a ſolemn Oath at his Coronation to confirm all the Rights and Priviledges which have been granted to the Subject by his Predeceſſors, but adds this Clauſe, Quòd ſi Sacramentum meum violavero, incolæ Regni nullam nobis obedientiam præſtare tenebuntur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects ſhall not be obliged to yield him any Obedience. Which, as Bodinus well obſerveth, doth rather ſavour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majeſty of a King. He is reſpected accordingly by the Great ones, who look not on him as their King, but their elder Brother, (or perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three days laſting. Which notwithſtanding, the King, once choſen and inthroned, hath ſole power in many things without conſulting with the Senate; as viz. in aſſembling Diets, chuſing the Secular Counſellers, diſpoſing abſolutely of his Vaſſals and the Revenues of the Crown to what uſe he pleaſeth; being ſole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal Cauſes, which is a ſtrong Bridle to rein them in with. By which, and either uniting himſelf unto the Clergy, or the well-forming of his party amongſt the Nobility, he may do many things not allowable in ſtrictneſs of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government being proportionable to the ſtrength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be obſerved, that none but the Clergy and Nobility have any Suffrage in the Election of the King: that is to ſay, the 26 Palatines, and 60 Chaſtellans, with the four Marſhals, and ſome others of the principal Officers of State, in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbiſhops and Biſhops in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reaſon why there is ſo much care taken to preſerve the Priviledges of the two firſt Orders, without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third; who are moſt miſerably oppreſſed on all ſides, rather as Bondmen than Tenants in reſpect of their Lords, and not ſo much Subjects as plain Slaves in regard of the King; whereof ſomewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of theſe Elections, but have no place nor Vote in the Council of State, or in any of the general Diets: the firſt conſiſting only of the Prelates, Palatines, Chaſtellans, and principal Officers ſpoken of before, the nominating of which pertaineth to the King alone; the other aggregated of all perſons of thoſe ſeveral Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principal City, ſent thither for the reſt of the Nobility, whom they repreſent. Yet notwithſtanding this excluſion of the Commons from this Common-Council, they there conclude of all matters of publick Intereſt not properly determinable by the great Council or Council of State: in which perhaps (eſpecially in the caſe of Taxes) the Commons may be more concerned than any other.

The Forces of this Kingdom or Commonwealth relate unto Land-Service only. For though they have a large Sea-coaſt upon the Baltick, yet the Danes, Swedes and Hanſe-Towns, having got the ſtart of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-Forces, they conſiſt of Horſe eſpecially, whereof they are able to raiſe 80000, (that is to ſay, 10000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lituania and the Eaſtern Provinces) of which one half at leaſt are thought to be for action. And this ſeems probable enough, in regard of thoſe great Bodies of Horſe which Stephen and Sigiſmund the third had againſt the Moſcovite; whereof the one had 40000, and the other 30000, (beſides Draught-horſes) very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at ſo good a paſs, their Infantry being for the moſt part Germans or Hungarians, whom they hire for money; of which two Nations King Stephen, in his Enterpriſe upon Livonia, had no leſs than 16000 to convey his Ordnance. Upon confidence of this great number of Horſe, and their readineſs to ſerve upon all occaſions, the Polanders bear themſelves ſo high, that they neither fear the power of a foreign Enemy, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortreſſes on their Frontiers; boaſting that they are able to defend their Country without ſuch Helps againſt any Nation whatſoever, and truſting more to a Caſtle of Bones (as was couragiouſly ſaid by Savage an Engliſh Gentleman) than to a Caſtle of Stones. And for the raiſing of theſe Horſe, the Gentlemen of the Country are bound by their Tenure, (like the Turks Timariots) not only to ſerve in perſon for defence of the Realm, but to maintain a certain number of Horſe in continual readineſs; eſpecially in thoſe parts which lye next the Tartar, where their numbers are exceeding great, and with whom many times they join to afflict and harraſs their own Country, though in pay againſt them. Of theſe ſome ſerve in the manner of our Men at Arms, ſome like unto our Light-horſe, others like the Tartars. And theſe they call commonly by the name of Coſſacks, (or Adventurers:) a race of men trained up to ſteal, waſte, and depopulate, whereſoever they come, having little but their Swords to live by; a murtherous and wicked people, chiefly in their Drunkenneſs, and that not only towards Strangers but their natural Countrymen. The cauſe of that Sedition which, for ſome years paſt, hath more depopulated and diſtracted that flouriſhing Kingdom than all the Armies of the Turks.

As for the Revenues of this King, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt and ſome Mines of Silver: the Profits ariſing from the Demeans of the Crown being for the moſt part given away in Penſions and Gratuities to the Palatines, Chaſtellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his deſires. Moſt of which Sum is put up yearly in his Coffers, or expended in the purchaſe of Eſtates for his younger Sons: his Daughters being married at the publick Charge, and the expence of his Houſhold defrayed by the Lituanians and moſt part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongſt them. Nor do the Wars at any time exhauſt his Treaſure, in which caſe by Decree of the Diets, he is inabled to lay Impoſitions and Taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Exciſe, or upon their Lands: which do amount to ſuch a Sum, that by means hereof King Stephen maintained War three years againſt the Moſcovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom are,

1. The Marian or Dutch Knights, inſtituted under the Walls of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land; in a Church whereof, dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, their Order was firſt allowed, from whence they are called Equites Mariani. The Inſtitution was in the year 1190. The firſt Great Maſter was Henry Walpot. The Chriſtians being beaten out of Syria, they firſt removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Haſſia; where, and in ſome other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues: hence they were named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights. Sent into Pruſſia by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond Anno 1239, or called in, as ſome ſay, by the Moſcovite againſt the Pruſſians, they fixed their Seat at Marienburg, under Sigiſride the ſecond Great Maſter, Anno 1340, or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus, the 18. Great Maſter, they were forced to ſubmit to Caſimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450; which was the occaſion of the long War betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing till the time of Albert of Brandenburg, the 24. and laſt Great Maſter in this Country; who ſurrendred his Order (as before is ſaid) to Sigiſmund the firſt, by whom he was created the firſt Duke of Pruſſia. Such of the Knights as diſreliſhed this action retired into Germany, where they choſe one Walter Croneberg Maſter of the Order: the Title being afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger Sons of Maximilian the ſecond; but the Order ſenſibly decaying, and at this time of little eſtimation in the World.

2. Of the Port glaive, or Sword-bearers, (Enſiferi in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom they were ſent into Livonia, to defend the Preachers of the Goſpel againſt the Infidels, at the firſt Converſion of that Country. Being too weak to effect that buſineſs, they united themſelves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and, inſtead of Knights of the Sword, were called Knights of the Croſs. Separated therefrom in the time of Univus their Great Maſter, Anno 1541, the Dutch Knights being then diſpoſſeſſed of Pruſſia, and theſe inclining wholly to the Opinions of Luther, they a while ſubſiſted of themſelves. What became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguiſhed, hath been ſhewn already in Livonia.

The Arms of this Kingdom are quarterly, 1. Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2. Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pee, advancing his Sword, Argent, mounted on a barbed Courſer of the ſecond, for the Dukedom of Lituania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland

Of the Romiſh Church, Archbiſhops 3. Biſhops 19.
Of the Greek Church, Archbiſhops 2. Biſhops 6.

Univerſities 4.

And ſo much for POLAND.

THE Carpathian Mountains.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungary (whither now we go) we muſt of neceſſity paſs over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the ancient Boundary of Sarmatia Europæa from the reſt of Europe. A long and craggy Ledge of Hills, which beginning near the City of Presburg, and the Borders of Auſtria, paſs on in a continual courſe till they come to the very Euxine Sea; and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland ſpecially ſo called, but part Tranſylvania and Moldavia, two Dacian Regions, from Ruſſia Nigra and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolomy, in his ſecond Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici, (Sarmaticæ Rupes by Solinus) becauſe diſterminating the Sarmatian Nation (who poſſeſſed the moſt part of it) from Germany and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third Book by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatus, ſo called (as ſome think) from the Greek word Καρπὸς, ſignifying Fruit, from the Fruitfulneſs of it, compared with the other Mountains in thoſe Northern Countries. At the preſent it is known by divers names, according to the Provinces and People which it paſſeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wurtzgarten, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatus; by the Hungars, Tarchzal. Betwixt Moravia and Hungaria, where it is at the higheſt, it is called in the Sclavonian Tongue by the name of Tatri, in the German Schneberg: where it parteth Tranſylvania from Ruſſia Nigra, the Ruſſes call it Bieſcid, and the Dutch-men Crapack. A Chain of Hills of more length than fame; not much obſervable in Story, but for the ſhutting up the Hungary Sclaves, and others of thoſe Northern Nations which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces: nor of much notice at the preſent, but for giving an Original to many of the principal Rivers which water the Countries lying on both ſides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will paſs them over, and deſcend into the Plains of Hungary; where we ſhall meet again with the Roman Empire, the Territories and Affairs whereof we ſhall take along without interruption until we come unto the Banks of the great River Tigris and the Caſpian Sea. And ſo far alſo from this place we ſhall ſurvey the Fortunes and Eſtates of the Turkiſh Empire, of which the Realm of Hungary is the moſt Weſtern part or Province; not meeting either of them again till we come to Ægypt.

OF HUNGARY.

HUNGARY is bounded on the Eaſt with Tranſylvania and Walachia, on the Weſt with Stiria, Auſtria, and Moravia; on the North with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Poland; and on the South with Sclavonia, and ſome part of Dacia. It extendeth in length, from Presburg, along the Danow, to the Borders of Tranſylvania, for the ſpace of 300 Engliſh miles; and 190 of the ſame miles in breadth. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It lieth in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7. and 9. Climates, ſo that the longeſt Summers Day in the Southern parts is but 15 hours and a half, and not above 16 hours in the parts moſt North: taking up all that Tract of ground on the North-ſide of Danubius poſſeſſed by the Jazyges Metanaſtæ, a Sarmatian People, and part alſo of Pannonia Superior and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it paſſeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know that the Romans, having made themſelves Maſters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to ſay, 1. Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Auſtria, and the moſt Weſtern parts of the preſent Hungary, on the South-ſide of the Danow. 2. Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eaſtern parts of Hungary, on the ſame ſide of the River. 3. Valeria, anciently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Stiria or Stiermark, in the Archdukedom of Auſtria. And 4. Savia, ſo called of the Rivers Savus, anciently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Windiſchland, one of the Provinces or Subdiviſions of Sclavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling with the Roman Empire, and this Country being fallen into the hands of other Maſters, it took a new name from the Nations who poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and was called Hungaria, quaſi Hunn-Avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunni and Avares, two Scythian Nations, who either ſucceſſively or conjunctly were poſſeſſed thereof; or from the Hungari, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Jornandes in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Country by the Emperour Arnulph, to aid him in his War againſt Suantibogius, King of the Moravians. This laſt I look on as moſt probable: the firſt as more probable than that of Aventine, and others of our later Writers, who finding a poor Province in the moſt North-eaſt point of the Ruſſian Empire called Jugria,(and by them Jugaria) would have the name of Hungary to be thence derived.

The people are ſtrong of Body, and rude of Behaviour, reſpecting neither the liberal Arts nor Mechanick Trades. The greateſt Aſperſion is the name of a Coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk: after which they are priviledged to wear a Feather, and by the number of their Feathers to ſhew how many Turks they have ſlain in Battel. They deſire Wars, and like no Trade better, being naturally ſlothful, (like the Iriſh) and therefore beſt approve of that courſe of Life,whereby they may rather live upon other mens Labour than take pains for their living. Extremely covetous they are, yet having rather deſire than art to enrich themſelves, permitting the Dutch to ingroſs all their Trading,and manage ſuch Commodities as the Country yieldeth: Which is the cauſe (ſeconded by the Oppreſſions of the Turk and the Auſtrian Princes, under whom they are) that none of them riſe to any conſiderable Wealth. And for ſuch as have Eſtates in Land, they grow every day more poor than other. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their Father's Poſſeſſions, (to whom they give no Portion, but new Cloaths on the Wedding-day:) Yet being the Sons do equally inherit the Eſtate,(as ſuch who hold in Gavelkind do here in England)it muſt needs be that by ſo many Diviſions and Subdiviſions the greateſt Patrimony that is will be brought to nothing.Both Sexes in the way of their Education are inured to Hardneſs, not ſuffered to lie in Beds till the night of their Marriage.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt planted here in the time of Stephen, ſurnamed the Saint, the firſt King of this Country; who was invited thereunto by the ſpecial means and procurement of the Emperour Henry the ſecond, giving him upon that condition his Siſter Giſela in Marriage; and through the preaching and induſtry of Albert Archbiſhop of Prague, Anno 1016, or thereabouts. Since which time Chriſtianity hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and courageouſly againſt the Turks) but broken into Fractions and Subdiviſions among themſelves: Some pertinaciouſly adhering to the Church of Rome, ſome following the Doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin and ſome new Fancies and Opinions,diſavowed by all the reſt.Free exerciſe of Religion was firſt granted by Maximilian the ſecond, and re-obtained in the time of Rodolphus, his Son and Succeſſor, by the Pacification at Vienna, procured by the power of Botſcai Prince of Tranſylvania, Anno 1606. The violating of which Pacification by Ferdinand the ſecond, in the beginning of his Reign occaſioned great Wars and Troubles betwixt him and this People, not quieted in a long time after. Yet all theſe different parties do agree in this, to puniſh Adultery and Fornication with no leſs a puniſhment than death; the Father forcing his Daughter,the Husband his Wife, and the Brother his Siſters, to the place of their Execution.

The Language generally here ſpoken is a kind of Sclavonian,differing in Dialect from the Poles: but in the parts adjoyning to Germany the Dutch is ſpoken; as the old Jazygian is betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, the ancient Seat of the Jazyges Metanaſtæ.

The Soil is wonderful fruitful, yielding Corn and Fruits in great abundance; the Graſs in ſome places, (as in the Iſle of Komara) if it be ſuffered to grow to its full length before the cutting of it down, being ſaid to exceed the height of a Man: Which doth breed ſuch a number of Cattel, that this Country alone is thought to be able to feed all Europe with fleſh. They yearly ſend into Germany and Sclavonia 80000 Oxen: they have Deer,Partridge, Pheaſants,in ſuch ſuperfluity, that any man that will may kill them, which in other places is utterly prohibited, theſe creatures being preſerved as Game for Gentlemen. For at that great Inſurrection of the Boors in Germany,(before the end of which 50000 of them were ſlain in fight) their chief Demands were, 1. That they might chuſe their own Miniſters. 2. That they might pay no Tithes but of Corn. 3. That they might be free from the power of Magiſtrates. 4. That Wood, Timber and Fewel might be common. 5. And eſpecially, that they might hunt and hawk in all times and places.The other Commodities of the Country are Gold and Silver, whereof they have ſome very rich Veins; as alſo of Tin, Lead, Iron; good ſtore of Fiſh, Copper, Wine: this laſt as good as that of Candia.

The worthieſt Scholar that ever this Kingdom produced was St.Hierom,a worthy Father of the Latine Church, born in Stridon. The moſt worthy of all their Souldiers were 1. Johannes Huniades, who ſo valiantly reſiſted the Incurſions of the Turks, and ſlew of them 50000 at the Battel of Maron. And 2. Matthias Corvinus, his Son, afterward King of Hungary; of whom thus Adrian out of a Poet,

——— Patriæ decus, unica Stirpis
Gloria, Pannonicæ Cædis fortiſſimus ultor.
His Countries Pride, the Glory of his Race,
Revenger of th' Hungarians late Diſgrace.

The principal Rivers are, 1. Danubius, ſpoken of before, when we were in Germany. 2. Savus, which riſing in Carniola, 3. Dravus, which riſing in Carinthia, and 4. Tibiſcus, which riſing in the Carpathian Mountains,pay their Tribute to Danubius: Of which Tibiſcus the Hungarians uſe to ſay, that two parts are Water, and the third Fiſh. Beſides which, and ſome others of inferiour note, there is the famous Lake called Balaton, (by the Dutch Platſee) forty Italian miles in length,but of breadth unequal, in ſome places being ten miles broad, and in ſome but three. There be alſo many Medicinal waters,and more hot Baths than any one Country hath in Europe: ſome Waters alſo of a ſtrange nature; whereof ſome falling on the ground is turned to Stone; others (about the Town of Smalnice) which falling into Ditches make a kind of Mud, out of which tried and melted they make very good Copper; and ſome again which flow in Winter, and freeze in Summer; and near unto Biſtrice, or Menſol, a Spring or Fountain, out of which cometh a green Water, whereof they make Solder for their Gold.

Principal Mountains of this Country are, 1. Carpatus, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, ſpoken of before. 2. Matzan, near the City of Agria, covered with rich Vines. 3. Erdol, omnium ampliſſimus, the largeſt of the three, ſaith the Atlas minor. Which words, if true, muſt needs be underſtood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth; in both which without queſtion it comes ſhort of Carpatus.

The Country is commonly divided into the Upper Hungary, and the Lower: the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the Bounds and Territories of the Roman Empire; the Lower lying on the South of that River, and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again was ſubdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridical Reſorts; that is to ſay, 24 on the Weſt-ſide of Tibiſcus(or the Tieſs,) and 8 on the Eaſt-ſide of it: The Lower (at the ſame time) into 16 only; of which ten were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus, and the other ſix betwixt the Dravus and the Savus.

But this Diviſion and the Subdivions depending on it being ſince the coming in of the Turks almoſt out of uſe, we will now look upon it as it ſtands divided at the preſent, betwixt the Emperour, as King of Hungary, by a mixt Title of Deſcent and Election; and the Great Turk, as Lord of the moſt part of it by Arms and Conqueſt, two parts of three at leaſt being forced into his poſſeſſion. But here we are to underſtand, that by reaſon of the great Jealouſies and Diſtruſts betwixt theſe great Princes, every ordinary Town is fortified and garriſoned like a Town of War, and ſo are almoſt all the Houſes of the Nobility and Gentry throughout this Country: ſo that it were an infinite labour to ſpecifie in this place all thoſe Towns and Fortreſſes which do occur in reading the Hungarian Hiſtories of theſe later times. Some of the principal for Strength, Antiquity, or other mark of Eſtimation which is ſet upon them, we ſhall here ſubjoyn.

And firſt in the Emperour's part of the Lower Hungary we have. 1. Rab, on the meeting of the Danow with the River Rab, coming out of the Lower Hungary, whence the modern Dutch name; by Antonine called Arabo, by the French Javarine, by our preſent Latiniſts Javarinum. Memorable heretofore for being the Boundary of the two Pannonia's, Inferiour and Superiour, hereabouts divided: of late moſt principally for a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the Turks, by whom it was once taken Anno 1594, but within four years after again recovered by the Induſtry of Monſieur de Vaudrecourt, a French Gentleman, as the French-men ſay; but as the Germans write, of the Earl of Swartzenburg, at that time Governour of Komara. 2. Altenburg, in the Road leading towards Auſtria; a ſtrong Town, and the beſt Out-work of Vienna, for which cauſe much aimed at by the Turks, but without ſucceſs. 3. Caſtle-Novo, a new-erected Fortreſs, as the name importeth, but of ſpecial ſtrength, erected purpoſely, in the time of the Emperour Rodolph, to confront the Turks. 4. Sabaria, anciently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior, the Birth-place of S. Martin Biſhop of Tours; now of leſs accompt; by the Hungarians called Kimarorubath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnits. 5. Stridon, the Sidrona of Ptolemy, in the Confines of of Hungaria and Dalmatia, by the common people called Strigman. A Town of good repute, till deſtroyed by the Goths; but after made of more eſteem by the Birth of St. Hierom, one of the four chief Fathers of the Latine Church, and for all parts af Humane Learning nothing inferiour to the beſt of the Græcian Sages 6. Sopron, (Sopronium in Latine) on the Borders of Auſtria. 7. Komara, a ſtrong piece, in an Iſland of the ſame name made by the Circling of the Danow; oft-times attempted by the Turk, but in vain at all times. Then in the Upper Hungary we have 8. Presburg, on the edge of Auſtria alſo, but on the North-ſide of the River, the Carnuntum of Antoninus, but by the modern Latines called Poſonium; ſeated in a pleaſant healthful Country on the River Lyet, whoſe waters the Danow there receiveth: in the Suburbs whereof, on the top of an high Mountain, ſtandeth a goodly Caſtle, the ordinary Reſidence of the Emperours as Kings of Hungary. For though it be a little City, and not very beautiful; yet being ſafe by the Neighbourhood of Auſtria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this Kingdom, ſince the loſs of Buda. Before the Walls hereof died Count Dampierre, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the ſecond in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. 9. Filleck, a place of great ſtrength and conſequence, taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his firſt Attempts upon this Kingdom, and loſt by Amurath the third, the Turks in vain attempting the recovery of it. 10. Nitria, a Biſhop's See, on the River Boch. 11. Vacia, a Biſhops See alſo, on the River Danubius; once in poſſeſſion of the Turks, but reſtored again unto the Chriſtians at the making of the Peace between the Emperour Rodolphus and Sultan Achmet. 12. Caſſovia, a ſtrong piece towards Tranſylvania. 13. Lippe, in the Borders of that Country alſo, commanding the Entrances thereof, and therefore much affected by the Princes or Vaivods of that Province; poſſeſſed by whom in the latter times of the Emperour Rodolph, it was by them incorporated into Tranſylvania; but how long it continued ſo, I am not able to ſay. 14. Tokay, a place of great ſtrength, and as great Fidelity, the people and Garriſon hereof holding out for the Emperour Rodolphus, Anno 1605. againſt ſome of his rebellious Subjects, in the time of ſo extreme a Famine, that the Souldiers did not only eat two Boys, but many times caſt lots who ſhould eat one another. 15. Eperies, a place of no leſs conſequence, and exemplary Loyalty. 16. Newſol, or Newheuſel, a ſtrong Town, and as ſtrongly fortified, not far from the Spring-head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621 proved fatal to that great Commander the Count of Bucquoy, who at the Siege hereof (the Town being then in Rebellion againſt Ferdinand the ſecond, Emperour and King of Hungary) loſt his life. For going privately to view ſome places of advantage for a general Aſſault, he fell into an Ambuſh of Hungarians, who ſuddenly ſet upon him, diſcomfited his ſmall Party, killed firſt his Horſe under him, and at laſt himſelf, having in that Skirmiſh received 16 wounds. There were ſlain with him at the ſame time alſo Torquato, an Italian Prince, Count Verdugo, a Spaniſh Earl, and one of the Gonzagues of the Houſe of Mantua.

Places of moſt importance in the Turks poſſeſſion are, 1. Buda, by the Dutch called Offen, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Curia of Ptolemy, by others the Abrincum of Antoninus; and to have took the name of Buda, either from Buda the Brother of Attila, ſaid to be the Re-founder of it; or from the Budini, a Scythian People, mentioned in Herodotus. It is unevenly ſeated amongſt Hills on the Southern Shore of the Danow, but in the moſt fruitfull part of all the Country; exceedingly well fortified, eſpecially by a ſtrong Caſtle, thought to be impregnable, and therefore very carefully guarded by the jealous Turk; adorned with many Buildings, both private and publick, and furniſhed with ſome Medicinal Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and ſumptuouſneſs to their new Maſters the Turks, who took it from the Chriſtians Auguſt 20. 1591, Solyman the Magnificent then being preſent at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdom; as now the Seat of the chief Baſſa or Lord-Lieutenant for the Grand Seignior. 2. Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weiſſenburg, betwixt the Danow and the Dravus; ſtrongly, but unwholſomly, ſeated, in the midſt of an inacceſſible Mariſh, joyned to the firm Land by three broad Cauſeys, blockt up at the ends with three great Bulwarks; but for all the Situation of it taken by the Turks Anno 1543; before that time the uſual place both for the Coronation and Interrment of the Kings of Hungary; recovered from the Turks Anno 1601, and loſt again unto them in the next year after. 3. Walpo, or Valpo, on the River Dravus, taken by Solyman marching towards Alba Regalis, to leave no enemies behind him at the Siege of that City. 4. Gran, in Latine called Strigonium, ſeated upon the Danow, but oppoſite to the Mouth of Gran, which ariſing in the Upper Hugary doth there end its courſe, whence this Town hath the name of Gran; honoured of a long time with the See of an Arch-biſhop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, and of great power in all buſineſs which concerns the State; taken by the Turks Anno 1534, Solyman the Magnificent being in perſon at the Siege, and loſt again Anno 1595. at what time Sir

Thomas Arundel of Wardor Caſtle in Wiltſhire carried himſelf ſo gallantly, that forcing the Water-Tower, and taking thence with his own hands the Turkiſh Banner, the Emperour Rodolphus created him a Count of the Empire, and King James afterwards made him Lord Arundel of Wardor: but the Chriſtians were not ſuffered to keep it long; for being many times after beſieged by the Turks, who were reſolved not to end the War without it, it was finally recovered by them Anno 1605. 5. Funfkirchen, in Latin called Quinque Eccleſiæ, from five Churches in it, a Biſhop's See, conceived to be the Teutoburgium of Antoninus; taken by the Turks Anno 1566. and giving them a great Command on the River Dravus, upon which it is ſeated. 6. Sirmiſch, betwixt the Danow and the Saw, or Savus, now noted for a Vein of the beſt Wines, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation at the preſent, though heretofore of moſt account in all this Province; the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia Inferior, the Seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici before the Diviſion of the Empire, honoured with the perſonal Reſidence of many of the Emperours, and made in thoſe reſpects the Stage of many great and memorable Actions. For here Vetranio, or Bretanio, as others call him, took on himſelf the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperour by the Illyrian Souldiers lying here in Garriſon: here, being deſerted by his own Souldiers, he ſubmitted himſelf unto Conſtantius, the Son of Conſtantine the Great: here Gratian the Emperour, Son of Valentinian the firſt, was born: and, finally, here was held a Council againſt Photinus, Biſhop of this City, who held that Chriſt had no exiſtence of God the Father till he was conceived and born of the Virgin; which Tenet, being contrary as well to that of the Arian as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the ſaid Conſtantius, (who was there in perſon) Anno 356. 7. Zigeth, a ſtrong Town, ſituate in a Mariſh-ground on the North-ſide of the Dra, taken by Solyman the Magnificent Anno 1566. who there ended his days. 8. Murſa, upon the Confluence of the Dra and the Danow, once a Roman Colony, and as remarkable in the Stories of elder times as 9. Belgrade, on the Confluence of the Saw and the Danow, hath been in the later. This laſt being a Town of divers names: Firſt called Taururum, or Taurunum; after Alba Græca, by the Dutch accordingly Greichs Weiſſenburg; by the French and modern Latiniſts Belgrade and Belgradum, from the beautiful ſituation of it, hemmed in upon the North with the Danow, on the Eaſt with the Saw, on the other ſides defended with ſtrong Walls, deep Ditches, and impregnable Rampiers. It belonged anciently to the Deſpots of Servia, by whom it was conſigned over to Sigiſmund King of Hungary, as beſt able to keep it; the Deſpots being ſatisfied with Lands and Territories of a better value. It was the Bulwark heretofore of Chriſtendom againſt the Turks, who received before it many great and notable Repulſes, (of which the moſt memorable were thoſe of Amurath the ſecond, and Mahomet ſurnamed the Great:) but taken at laſt, to the great loſs and ſhame of the Chriſtian World, not ſuccouring the Defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1520. Then on the North-ſide of the River, in the Upper Hungary, there is 10. Peſth, over againſt Buda, on the River Danow. 11. Colocza, an Archbiſhop's See, on the ſame River alſo. 12. Zegedin, on the Weſt-ſide of the River Tibiſcus. 13. Agria, an old Biſhop's See, and ſtrongly fortified, having a great Command over all thoſe parts of the Country; in vain beſieged by Haly the Baſſa of Buda with an Army of 36000 Turks in the time of Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1552; but taken by Mahomet the third, himſelf lying at the Siege in perſon, Anno 1578: not far from which, immediately after the taking of Agria, Mahomet gave the Chriſtians ſo great an Overthrow, that, if he had purſued his Victory, it is thought that he had finiſhed the Conqueſt of Hungary; as on the other ſide the Turks were ſo worſted and diſordered at firſt, (Mahomet himſelf and moſt of his Commanders flying out of the Field) that, had the Chriſtians followed the chaſe, and not betook themſelves to the Spoil of the Camp, they had in probability for ever freed that Kingdom from the Turkiſh Tyranny. This Battel, from a Village near unto which it was fought, was called the Battel of Kerceſture; a Battel of ſo ſtrange a Fortune, that the Conquerours were driven out of the Field, and the vanquiſhed Army ran away with the Victory. 14. Hatroan, a very ſtrong Town, and as ſtrongly garriſoned, recovered by the Chriſtians after two long Sieges, and many ſharp Aſſaults, Anno 1558, and preſently again abandoned, upon the noiſe of Mahomet's coming into Hungary with a dreadful Army. 15. Temeſwar, on the Eaſt of that River towards Tranſylvania, the ordinary Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. 16. Gyula, a ſtrong Town on the Borders of Tranſylvania, betrayed by Nicholas Kereſken, Governour hereof, in the laſt year of Solyman, on a promiſe of ſome great Reward. But Selimus the Son of Solyman cauſed him to be put into a Barrel ſtuck full of Nails, with the points turned inwards, and ſo to be tumbled up and down till he (moſt miſerably) died: there being on the Barrel this Inſcription written, viz. Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and Treaſon; Gyula thou ſouldeſt for Gold: if thou be not faithful to Maximilian thy natural Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 17. Singidun, on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the Fields of Maron, memorable for the ſlaughter of 50000 Turks, ſlain here in Battel under the fortunate Conduct of John Huniades.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country on the North-ſide of the Danow, and the Weſt of the Tieſs, or Tibiſcus, were the Jazyges Metanaſtæ, and on the Eaſt-ſide of the Tieſs the Daci, known, but not conquered, by the Romans; on the South of the Danow the Pannones, (by ſome called the Pæones) ſubdivided into the Azuli, Latovici, Werciani, Jaſſii, Oſeriates, and ſome others inhabiting the Weſt parts thereof, or Pannonia Superior, and the Ercuneales, Brouci, Araviſci, and Scordiſci, dwelling in the Eaſtern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. Firſt conquered by the Romans Anno V. C. 719, L. Cornificius and Sextus Pompeius being Conſuls; but many times rebelling, and not fully ſubdued till forty years after the Inſurrection of Bato, being then cruſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar, and thereby the whole Province ſettled in Obedience. Divided firſt into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savia and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued, till ſubdued by the Hunns, a People not heard of in the time of the Roman Greatneſs, unleſs we take them, as ſome do, for the Chuni of Ptolemy. But being thoſe Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Baſtarnæ and the Roxolani, on the South-weſt of Boryſthenes, I ſee not how to fit that Dwelling unto the Hunns, who were ſhut up within the Fens of Palus Mæotis, and by all the Writers of thoſe times accounted for a Nation not ſo much as heard of when they firſt ſet footing in Europe. Letting that therefore paſs as an improbable and ill-grounded Conjecture, certain it is that from the Fen-Countries of Aſia, on the other ſide of the Tanais, they came firſt into Europe; living in their own Country a poor and miſerable life, till God thought fit to make uſe of them as a Scourge to chaſtiſe the Chriſtians of the Weſt, then grown luxurious, and almoſt incorrigible, by too much Felicity; and to that end miraculouſly opened them a Paſſage never found before. For having neither mind nor meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which poſſibly they had not heard of, nor knowing how to clear themſelves of that uncomfortable Country in which they dwelt; it pleaſed the great Diſpoſer of all things, by following an Hart or Stag which they had in chaſe, to ſhew them a ſafe paſſage into Europe through the Fens of Mæotis, which before they thought to be unpaſſable. The report made by thoſe Hunters at their coming back, of the rich and pleaſant Land which they had ſo fortunately diſcovered, invited the chiefe Heads of their Clans, with all the ſeveral Raſcalities depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell ſo ſuddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Goths, then dwelling on the North-ſide of the Iſter, to fly over that River, and ſupplicate to the Emperour Valens for new Habitations. This happened in the year 373, Athanaricus the ſecond, or Ermanaricus, (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Goths, and Balamir Captain of the Hunns. Fleſhed with this Victory, Balamir, or Balbember, (as Sigebert calls him) takes the name of King Anno 386, or thereabout; and following the courſe of the Iſter towards this Pannonia, which he had an aim at, found a great Army raiſed on the other ſide of the River, of purpoſe to encounter with him, commanded by Detricus General for the Roman Army, and Macrinus (or Matrinus) Commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals preſuming too much on the depth and wideneſs of the River, and knowing well that the Hunns had neither Boat nor Ship to paſs them over, betook themſelves unto their Reſt with too much ſecurity. But the Hunns, to the number of 100000, having croſſed the River upon Bladders, fell on the Quarters of the Romans, whom they ſlew like Sheep. Macrinus after this fought two Battels with them, in the firſt whereof he was victorious, there being loſt on both ſides about 30000 men: but in the ſecond being ſlain, and his Army routed, the Hunns poſſeſſed themſelves of both Pannonia's, buying this Victory with the loſs of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Bleda and Attila his Sons ſucceeded Anno 436; and Bleda, dying alſo in the year 450, left Attila ſole King of the Hunns, that great Scourge of the Chriſtian World; who, having firſt waſted Illyricum and Thrace, compelled the Emperour Theodoſius the ſecond to buy his Peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of Gold, and an yearly Tribute. Invited afterwards by Genſericus King of the Vandals in Africk to war upon the Goths of Spain, (out of which Country they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations betwixt him and Gaul, and beating down all the Towns and Fortreſſes on the River Rhene on that ſide of the Roman Empire, entered that Province in the Reign of the 3. Valentinian, divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Goths of Spain. Diſcomfited by Aetius and the Kings of thoſe Nations then in League againſt him, in that famous Battel near Tholouſe, ſpoken of before, (with the loſs of 180000 of his men) he went back by the way of Italy, where he ſacked Aquileia, Millain, Vincentia, Pavia; and not without much difficulty was diverted from the Spoil of Rome, by the interceſſion of Pope Leo: committing in all places ſuch unſpeakable Cruelties, that he was always after called (as he ſtyled himſelf) Malleus orbis, and Flagellum Dei. Returning home he picked a Quarrel with Martianus the Eaſtern Emperour, as if the Tribute promiſed him by Theodoſius had not been well paid. But being pacified for the preſent, and mindful of his former project upon the Goths, he reſolved once again to try his Fortune with that People; and was again defeated by them under the Conduct of Thoriſmund, the third King of the Viſigoths, or Goths of Spain, and ſo returned ingloriouſly to his Country. Choaked after with his own bloud, violently breaking out at his Noſtrils on his Wedding-night, he left Pannonia to his Sons, named Hernac, Aladurius and Chaba; who, diſagreeing amongſt themſelves about the Kingdhm, gave an advantage to the Goths, then poſſeſſed of Dacia, to make themſelves Maſters of this alſo; who were ſcarce through-warm in their new Eſtates, when ſent by Zeno the Emperour into Italy againſt Odoacer, where they finally ſettled. After this time we hear no more of the Goths in Pannonia, or any-where of the Hunns at all; unleſs acting under the Avares, or joyning with them in the name of Hun-Avari, as ſome think they did.

The Country, being thus left to the next Invader, was preſently poſſeſſed by the Longobards, ſaid to be originally of Scandia, and there called Winnili, (and of the Winniloth in Scandia Jornandes ſpeaketh) afterwards, ob longas barbas, Longobardi. But concerning this laſt name, take along with you this old Wives Tale, recited, but not approved of, by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals, warring upon the Winnili, went unto Goddan, (he ſhould rather have ſaid Woden) to ſue for the Victory: which the Winnili hearing, wrought by countermine, and ſent Gambata, the Mother of their King Aujou, on the like buſineſs to Frea, Goddan's Wife. So it was that Goddan had promiſed the Vandals, that they ſhould be victorious whom he ſaw firſt in the morning: Whereupon Frea, willing to pleaſe Gambata, and not loving, as it ſeemeth, the ſight of Men, gave order that all the Women of the Winnili, parting their Hair, bringing one half over one Cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their Chin, ſhould appear betimes before the Window the next morning. This they did, and ſhe ſhewing them to her Husband, he demanded of her, Qui ſunt iſti Longobardi? Hence the occaſion of the name. And like enough they might be called ſo from the length of their Beards, though otherwiſe the whole Tale be vain and fooliſh. Compelled by ſcarcity of Victuals to ſeek new Habitations, they ſeiſed firſt on the Iſland Rugia and the adjacent Countries; and ſettled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in thoſe parts of Germany which now make up the Biſhopricks of Meydburg and Halberſtadt. Afterwards, finding that Country too narrow for them, they left their Dwellings there, and fell next upon ſome parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at laſt, having tarried in Pannonia 42 years, or thereabouts, at the ſolicitation of Narſes, (provoked by many Indignities from the Empreſs Sophia, the Wife of Juſtinus the ſecond) Anno 568, under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy, and there fixt their Kingdom; being at the end of 206 years overthrown by the power of Charles the Great, the moſt mighty Monarch of the Weſt. Of their Kings, before their coming into this Country, I ſhall only make mention of Lamiſſus, their third King, and of him this Story. Agilmond, the ſecond King of the Lombards, one morning went a-hunting. As he was riding by a Fiſh-pond, he eſpied ſeven Children ſprawling for life, which one, as ſaith Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many Harlots) had been delivered of, and moſt barbarouſly thrown into the water. The King, amazed at this ſpectacle, put his Boar-ſpear or Hunting-pole among them. One of the Children handfaſted the Spear, and the King, ſoftly drawing back his hand, wafted the Child to the ſhore. This Boy he named Lamiſſus, from Lama, which in their Language ſignifieth a Fiſh-pond. He was in the King's Court carefully brought up; where there appeared in him ſuch tokens of Vertue and Courage, that, after the death of Agilmond, he was by the Lombards choſen to ſucceed him. This Lamiſſus, together with his Predeceſſors and Succeſſors, we find thus recorded.

The LONGOBARDIAN Kings.

The Hiſtory of this people epitomized by Du Bartas (but with far more of the Poet than the true Hiſtorian) is ſummed up this.

> The Lombard ſtrong, who was in Scowland nurſt,
> On Rugeland and Livonia ſeiſed firſt.
> Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
> The death of Agilmond, the bold Barbarian
> Surprized Poland: thence anon he preſſes
> In Danow's Streams to rinſe his Amber Treſſes.
> When he ſtraight after had ſurrendred
> The double-named Iſter's flowry bed
> To ſcar-fac'd Hunns; he hunteth furiouſly
> The reſt of Gauls from wealthy Inſubrie.
> There reigns 200 years, triumphing ſo,
> That Royal Teſin might compare with Po.
> Which after fell in French mens hands again,
> Won by the Sword of worthy Charlemaign.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage, the Avares entred. Some ſay they were the Avarini of Ptolemy, a Sarmatian People; but moſt probably (as Nicetas) a People of Scythia, inhabiting about Palus Mæotis. They firſt began to ſtir in the reign of Tiberius the 2. (forced by the Turks, their next neighbours, to paſs farther Weſtward) and gave that Emperour's Forces a great Overthrow at the Mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithſtanding did ſomewhat quiet them; but he being dead, they took heart again, and with great Courage warred upon Mauritius, his next Succeſſor. Their King at that time was called Caganus, we may Engliſh it Cham, as not being the proper name of any one, but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his firſt Wars upon the Turks, which People were about that time firſt made known to the Inhabitants of Europe; and, with the help of the remainder of the Hunns, invaded and poſſeſſed Pannonia, vanquiſhing both the Emperour's Forces, and the Goths and Gepidæ, who had ſtill kept ſome footing in it, and on the departure of the Lombards were of no ſmall power; the name of Goths being ſwallowed up in that of the Gepidæ, though not quite extinct. After this Blow Mauritius raiſed a ſecond War, but more with an intent to revenge himſelf on his own Souldiers, which had formerly offended him, than with hope of prevailing againſt the Enemy. Comentiolus, according to the Emperour's directions, betrayeth his Army; 12000 of them were ſlain, and the reſt taken. Caganus, an heroick and merciful Conquerour, offers to ranſom them for 8 s. 6 d. apiece, (for ſo much was that Nummus or νόμισμα which he demanded for them.) When the Emperour, as much loving his Gold as hating his Souldiers, had denied that Condition; he offered them all for one Nummus, and after for half a one: but being alſo here unſatisfied, he put them alſo to the Sword. For this cauſe the reſt of the Souldiers not long after made Phocas, one of the Centurions, Emperour; and he moſt barbarouſly ſtewed the Emperor in his own Broath, putting him, his Wife, Friends, and Children to the Sword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, foraging Thrace to the very Walls of Conſtantinople, afterwards ſetled in Pannonia and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungary and ſome part of Auſtria, divided from the Boiarians by the River Ems. They continued poſſeſſed hereof till the time of Charles the Great, by whom, after a War of eight years, they were utterly ſubdued, and driven out of theſe parts; their Country being peopled with new Dutch Colonies: the remainders of them were forced to betake themſelves into Tranſylvania, or that part of Hungaria which lieth beyond the River Tibiſcus, there ſubject for a time to Suantibogius, King of the Moravians; in whoſe Overthrow by the Hungarians they were ſo broken, that their Name was never heard of.

And ſo we come to the Hungarians, the laſt and principal Actors on the Stage of this Kingdom, the givers of the preſent Name: before whoſe coming into this Country it had no other name than that of Pannonia, for ought I can find, in any Authors of thoſe Times. A Scythian People, as the Hunns and Avares were, by Jornandes called the Hunugari; firſt known in Europe by their acts in the time of the Emperour Arnulphus, when, wandring in Sarmatia Europæa without any certain Aboad, they were by him called into this Country againſt Suantibogius King of the Moravians before mentioned; from whom they took Tranſylvania, and ſo much of the modern Hungary as lieth on both ſides of Tibiſcus, inhabited at that time by the Sclaves and ſome ſcattered remnants of the Avares, whom they killed up, or forced to ſeek new Habitations, planting themſelves in thoſe places which they took from them, now the Upper Hungary. In the right of Lewis the 4. Succeſſour to Arnulphus, they paſſed over the Danow, and ſubdued Pannonia, diſmembring it from the Empire and name of Germany: after that they ranged with unmerciful Cruelty over all Germany, Italy, Greece, Sclavonia, Dacia, till, broken by the Forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the ſoftneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the firſt was under Dukes: Stephen the 4. Duke, on his receiving of the Goſpel, being honoured with the Title of King; enjoyed by his Succeſſours to this very day. In the time of Ladiſlaus ſurnamed the Saint Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungary, bequeathed to him by his Siſter Zelomira, the Widow of the laſt King. In that of Bela the 4. the Tartarians, to the number of 500000 fighting men, brake into this Country, and like a violent Whirlwind carried all before them, Anno 1248, tyrannizing here for 3 years ſpace, committing mercileſs Maſſacres, and making horrible Spoils whereſoever they came. In that of Stephen the 4. Myſia and Bulgaria were made tributary, By the Daughters of Bela and Stephen, both the 4. of thoſe names, the Houſes of Naples and Bohemia came to claim the Kingdom of Hungary; as Lewis the firſt, by Elizabeth his Mother, Siſter of Caſimir the 2. did the Kingdom of Poland. The reſt of their affairs ſhall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

The Dukes and Kings of HUNGARIE.

A. Ch.
1. Cuſula, the firſt Duke (or Captain) of the Hungars, ſubdued Tranſylvania and the Upper Hungary, and paſſed over the Danow; ſlain in his Wars againſt the Dutch then poſſeſſed of Pannonia.

2. Toxus, ſubdued Pannonia or the Lower Hungary.

3. Geiſa, Son of Toxus.

1000 4. Stephen, the fourth Duke, and firſt King of Hungary.

1039 5. Peter, ſurnamed the Alman, Nephew of Stephen; depoſed by Andrew and Bela, Sons of Ladiſlaus, Son of Geiſa the firſt, and Brother of Stephen the firſt King.

1047 6. Andrew, eldeſt Son of that Ladiſlaus.

1059 7. Bela, the Brother of Andrew.

1062 8. Solomon, the Son of Andrew, expelled his Kingdom by 1075 9. Geiſa II. Son of Bela.

1078 10. Ladiſlaus, ſurnamed the Saint, Brother of Geiſa the ſecond.

1096 11. Coloman, Son of Geiſa 2.

1114 12. Stephen II. Son of Coloman.

1132 13. Bela II. Nephew of Geiſa the 2. by his Son Almus.

1142 14. Geiſa III. Son of Bela the 2.

1162 15. Stephen III. Son of Geiſa the 3.

1172 16. Bela III. Brother of Stephen the 3.

1191 17. Emaricus, Son of Bela the 3.

1201 18. Ladiſlaus II. Son of Emaricus, reigned but 6 months, being ſlain by Treaſon very young, and without Iſſue.

1201 19. Andrew II. Son of Bela the 3. and Brother of Emaricus.

1236 20. Bela IV. Son of Andrew the 2.

1271 21. Stephen IV. Son of Bela the 4.

1273 22. Ladiſlaus III. Son of Stephen the 4.

1290 23. Andrew III. Nephew to Bela the 4. by his Brother Stephen.

1302 24. Charles, ſurnamed Martel Son of Charles King of Naples, by Mary, Daughter to Stephen the 4. Againſt whom was choſen Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, Son of Wenceſlaus the ſecond, and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Bela the fourth; and after three years Otho of Bavaria, deſcended from Elizabeth, another of the Daughters of Bela the fourth, was choſen alſo by a Faction againſt Wenceſlaus. But Wenceſlaus ſurrendring his Claim to Otho, and Otho not long after being forced to renounce his Title, Charles Martel remained King of the whole.

1343 25. Ludovicus, Nephew to Charles Martel by his Son Carlibert, ſucceeded King of Poland alſo, in right of Elizabeth his Mother, Siſter of Caſimir the 2.

1383 26. Charles II. King of Naples, deſcended from Charles of Naples, and Mary, Daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned, by their Son John of Durazzo, one of the younger Brothers of Charles Martel; poiſoned after a ſhort Reign by the Widow of the former King, to make a way for her Daughter to the Crown.

1387 27. Sigiſmund Emperour, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Luxemburg, ſucceeded in right of Mary his Wife, eldeſt Daughter of Lewis or Ludovicus, her younger Siſter Eduigis being Queen of Poland.

1438 28. Albert of Auſtria, Emperour, and King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his Wife, the Daughter of Sigiſmund

1440 29. Ladiſlaus, or Vladiſlaus, Son of Jagello King of Poland, in the Minority of Ladiſlaus the Son of Albert choſen King of Hungary; unfortunately ſlain at the Battel of Varna, with 30000 of his people; and perhaps his Perjury might deſerve it. For having made and ſworn a Truce with the Turk, the Pope's Legate, upon a ſeeming advantage, abſolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the Field. At the beginning the Chriſtians had the better: but at the laſt, Amurath the 2. againſt whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and deſiring Chriſt to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his Followers had diſhonoured him, re-encouraged his men, and ſo got the Victory.

1444 30. Ladiſlaus V. King of Bohemia, the Son of Albert by Elizabeth, Daughter of Sigiſmund and Mary.

1458 31. Matthias Corvinus, Son of the famous Huniades, after the death of Ladiſlaus the 5. King of Hungary.

1491 32. Vladiſlaus II. or Ladiſlaus VI. Son of Caſimir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the Daughter of Albert, ſucceeded in the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia; his three younger Brothers ſucceſſively in that of Poland.

1517 33. Ludovicus II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, both born and dead before the ordinary courſe of nature; being in the 21. year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign, unfortunately drawn unto the Field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardieſt Captains in his time. The Battel was fought at a Village called Mogachz, or Mugace, juſt betwixt Belgrade and Buda; in which 19000 of the Hungarians were ſlain, and the young King drowned in the Flight. A moſt lamentable Diſcomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Supuſio, Vaivod or Governour of Tranſylvania, was by the States choſen King of Hungary. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria, and Brother unto Charles the fifth, challenged the Kingdom in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Vladiſlaus, and Siſter to Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this Pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his Competitor; who, to recover his Right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took ſo faſt footing in it, that his Succeſſors could never ſince be removed.

1527 34. John Sepuſio, Vaivod of Tranſylvania, choſen King upon the death of Ludovicus, the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Auſtria, reſtored by Solyman the Great Turk, died Anno 1540: after whoſe death the Hungarians cauſed his Son Stephen, an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradle, of which he was immediately deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who, under colour of preſerving that Kingdom for him, ſeized Buda and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himſelf.

1540 35. Ferdinand of Auſtria, elected King of Bohemia, in reſpect to the Lady Anne his Wife, Siſter of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527, did in the ſame Right lay Claim to the Crown of Hungary; choſen to which by a party prepared for him, he was always in contention with John de Sepuſio; each of them acknowledged King by their ſeveral Factions: but he was by both ſides received on the death of John.

1572 37. Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. Son of Maximilian.

1608 38. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.

1618 39. Ferdinand II. of Gratz, next Heir unto Matthias of the Houſe of Auſtria, afterwards Emperour, &c. againſt whom a Party of Hungarians called in Bethlem Gabor, Prince of Tranſylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they ſaid) to crown him alſo. But the Affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperour's ſide, Gabor relinquiſhed his pretenſions, and hearkned to a Peace betwixt them.

1625 40. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the ſecond, choſen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627 King of Bohemia alſo, ſucceeding after him in the Empire, and now living, Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it ſelf to be Elective, and to have ſpecial Priviledges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was ſo in both reſpects, the laſt eſpecially; King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut ſine nota alicujus Infidelitatis, &c. that without any imputation of Diſloyalty they might contradict, oppoſe, and reſiſt their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections and pretence of Priviledges have been ſo ſhaken and reſtrained by their Kings of the Houſe of Auſtria, that the Elections are become a matter of Formality only, and their Priviledges depending wholly on their Prince's pleaſure, now grown too potent for them to contend withal, unleſs they ſhould betray their Country into the hands of the Turks. To which ſome of them have expreſſed ſome ſtrong Inclinations, the Oppreſſions laid upon them by the Auſtrian Family being deemed unſufferable.

The Forces of this Kingdom, when it was entire, may beſt be ſeen by thoſe great Armies which they have brought into the Field againſt the Turk. By whom two parts of three being ſince ſubdued, that which remains muſt not be thought able to anſwer the proportion of former times; though they have done more than could be reaſonably expected from it. For at the Battel of Kercſture, Anno 1596, there were 6000 Hungarian Horſe, and 10000 Foot of this Nation only; beſides thoſe of Germany and Tranſylvania: and the next year, notwithſtanding the Diſcomfiture of that Army, they raiſed no leſs than 20000 Horſe and Foot, on the noiſe of ſome Preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their Foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect wherein is rather to be imputed to the Prince, then unto the people, who can but bring their Bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horſe, (whom they call Heyducks) maintained in continual readineſs at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Couſins to the Coſacks, almoſt as miſchievous as they, and hold as ſtrict Intelligence with the Turks as thoſe do with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdom come from the Silver-Mines, out of which is yearly raiſed about a million and a half of Guldens. Maximilian the ſecond made it up two millions, by ſeizing on the Lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and aſſigning annual Penſions to the Biſhops, Canons, and other Religious perſons. Moſt of which Sum comes clearly to the Emperour's Coffers, the Preſidiary Souldiers being paid with Contribution-money raiſed upon the Country; and the Lieutenant-general, whoſe entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their Purſes alſo.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of the Dragon, inſtituted by Sigiſmund Emperour and King hereof, at ſuch time as by the Council of Conſtance againſt John Hus and Hierom of Prague, and by the ſharpneſs of his Sword proved upon their Followers, he had caſt down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Hereſie and and Schiſm. But the Device proved of no long continuance, expiring almoſt with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hunn, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are ſaid to have been Gules, a Falcon diſplayed Or, membred and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdom at this time are Barrewiſe of eight pieces, Gules and Argent.

There are in HUNGARY

And ſo much for HUNGARY.

SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus, from which it is parted by the River Drinus, and a Line drawn from thence unto the Adriatick; on the Weſt with Carniola in Germany, and Iſtria in the Seigniory of Venice, from which laſt it is divided by the River Arſia; on the North with Hungary, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Sclaves, or Sclavi, a Sarmatian People, of whom more anon.

It contains in length from Arſia to the River Drinus, according to Pliny's Computation, 800 Italian miles; the greateſt breadth being 325 of the ſame miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more than 480 miles: who may be reconciled with Pliny by ſuppoſing this, that theſe laſt meaſure in a ſtraight and direct Line from River to River; and that Plinj coaſted by the Creeks and Reaches of the Adriatick. It is ſituate in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the ſixth and ſeventh Climates; ſo that the longeſt Day in Summer is about fifteen hours and an half.

The Country is generally fruitful of all thoſe Commodities which are found in Italy, to which it is little inferiour; yielding not only Wine and Oyl in very good plenty, but good ſtore of Cattel; and of wild Beaſts of pleaſure is no want at all; ſome rich Veins alſo of Gold and Silver. The Northern parts are mountainous, cold, for the moſt part lying under Snows, not capable of Wine, or any the like Productions which require much Heat. But even theſe mountainous parts afford very good Paſturage, and breed a wealthy race of Sheep, which bring forth young twice a year, and are ſhorn four times. Nor do the Sea-coaſts come behind in advancing the Profit of the people, not only yielding ſtore of Fiſh, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The People are couragious, proud, ſtubborn, and untractable, of ſtrong Bodies and able Conſtitutions, fit for works of Drudgery; and ſo employed by the Venetians, when firſt brought under their Command: who, uſing them in all ſervile Offices both at home and abroad, occaſioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villains or Bond-ſervants, as they of Venice did, by the name of Sclaves; that being originally as to this People the name, not of their Condition, but of their Anceſtors and Country.

The Chriſtian Faith was here planted, I mean in reference to this People who dow now inhabit it, about the time of Charles the Bald, Emperour of the Weſt, Anno 877, Sueropilus being the firſt of their Kings who embraced the Goſpel. But lying in the mid-way of Greece and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greek Church are both allowed of; that of the Greeks being as prevalent in the Eaſt parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Weſtern. But here it is to be obſerved, that though this People, according to their Diviſion into Eaſt and Weſt, follow the Rites and Ceremonies of thoſe ſeveral Churches; yet on both ſides it is indulged them to celebrate Divine Offices in their natural Language, contrary to the uſage of the Church of Rome in all places elſe. And yet the people are not all of the Chriſtian Faith, the Turkiſh and Mahometan prevailing in thoſe Towns and Territories under their Obedience.

But though they be not of one Religion, they are all of one Language, which is the old Sarmatian (or Sclavonian) Tongue, generally ſpoken in the Empire of Ruſſia, Livonia, Poland, Sileſia, Bohemia, Moravia, ſome part of Hungary, Iſtria, Sclavonia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mengrelia, (both in Aſia) and by all the Captains, Officers, and other Souldiers of the Turkiſh Empire: the Language generally ſpreading over all thoſe Countries which either were Sarmatian in their firſt Original, or made theirs by Conqueſt under the united name of Sclaves, or otherwiſe intermixt with them by the neceſſity of Commerce and Trade, or diſpatch of their common Buſineſſes. Inſomuch as, taking in the Subdiviſions of the Provinces and Countries before ſpecified, it is affirmed by Geſner, a right learned man, that there are no fewer than threeſcore Nations which have the Sclavonian Tongue for their vulgar Language.

Chief Mountains in this Country are thoſe called Scardonici, (from Scardona, one of the beſt Towns of Illyris) dividing Dalmatia in the midſt, and extending along the Coaſts thereof; by Ptolemy called Ardium. Of Rivers thoſe of ſpecial note amongſt the Ancients were, 1. Titius, now Variecha, ſeparating Illyris from Dalmatia. 2. Arſia, now Arſa, the utmoſt bound upon the Weſt; as 3. Drinus is upon the Eaſt: of which the firſt falleth into the Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Golfo di Quernero, (Sinus Flanaticus by the Ancients;) the other into the Saw or Savus, ſomewhat Weſt of Belgrade. 4. Narron, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurus.

The Boundaries and Land-Marks being thus ſet out, I ſhould proceed to the Diviſion of the Country as now it ſtandeth. But I muſt firſt look on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: in whoſe time that part of the whole Province which lay from the River Arſia to the Titius was named Liburnia and Illyris; that from the Titius to the Drinus was called Dalmatia. But the Illyrians being the ſtouter and more warlike People, and ſuch as created greateſt Troubles to the Romans, it pleaſed the Conquerours, when they had fully ſubdued both Nations, to call the whole Country by the name of Illyricum; and not ſo only, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Dioceſe of Thrace excepted) which lay between the Alps and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Danow; for ſo far the Juriſdiction of the Præfectus Prætorio of Illyricum did at firſt extend. Huic Præfecto (ſaith Zoſimus) Conſtantinus, ejus Inſtitutor, Macedones attribuit, Theſſalos, Cretenſes, Græciam, & circumjacentes Inſulas, Epirum utramque, Illyricos, Dracos, Triballos, & Pannonias, Valeriam uſque & Myſiam ſuperiorem. And that all theſe did then paſs by the name of Illyricum appeareth as well by that of Pollio in the Life of Claudius the ſecond, expreſly ſaying, Illyricum Thracas, Myſos, Dacos, Dacos, Dalmatias & Pannonias continebat; as by that of Socrates the Hiſtorian, who lib. 32. cap. 10. calleth Sirmium, the chief Town of Pannonia Inferior, and lib. 5. cap. 6. Theſſalonica, the chief City of Macedon, Urbes Illyricas, or Illyrian Cities. By which account Illyricum, in the largeſt extent of that name, contained no leſs than 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to ſay, 1. Noricum Mediterraneum, 2. Noricum Ripenſe, 3. Pannonia Superior, 4. Pannonia Inferior, 5. Valeria, 6. Savia, 7. Dalmatia. 8. Mœſia Superior. 9. Dardania. 10 Dacia Mediterranea, 11. Dacia Ripenſis, 12. Macedonia, 13. Theſſaly, 14. Achaia. 15. Crete, 16. Epirus Vetus, 17. Epirus Nova, and 18. Prævalitana. Theſe 18 Provinces being caſt or made up into three Dioceſes, viz. the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecialy ſo called, containing the ſeven firſt, 2. the Dioceſe of Macedon, containing the ſeven laſt, and 3. the Dioceſe of Dacia, comprehending the other four, were governed by the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, who had firſt his chief Seat and Reſidence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the Diviſion of the Empire betwixt the Sons of Theodoſius the Great into the Eaſtern and Weſtern, the Dioceſe of Illyricum ſpecially ſo called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Weſtern Empire, under the Governance of the Præfectus Prætorio of Italy; and thereupon the Seat or Reſidence of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum removed from Sirmium unto Theſſalonica. So that we are now to look upon Illyricum in a ſtricter Notion, as a Dioceſe of the Weſtern Empire, containing the ſeven Provinces before ſpecified, whereof both Noricums, both Pannonia's, and Valeria, (if at leaſt Stiermarck be that Valeria, as ſome ſay it is) have been deſcribed already in their proper places. There now remain only Savia and Dalmatia to be ſpoken of: the firſt containing all thoſe parts of this Country lying on both ſides of the Savus, (whence it had the name;) the laſt thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the Sea, known by the ancient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyris properly ſo called being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, ſo they give new Names: the Country being divided by the Sclavi into two Kingdoms, viz of Croatia, and Dalmatia; of which the firſt contained the Province of Savia, the laſt took up the whole Province of Dalmatia, bounded as before, but keeping the name of Sclavonia to it ſelf alone, being indeed the only Province in which the name and memory of the Sclavi is retained amongſt us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at laſt it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice, we find it ſubdivided into theſe ſix parts; that is to ſay, 1. Windiſchland, 2. Croatia, 3. Boſnia, 4. Dalmatia, 5. Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, and 6. the Sclavonian Iſlands.

WINDISCHLAND is bounded on the Eaſt with part of the Lower Hungary, from which it is ſeparated by a Line drawn from St. Nicolas near the River Dravus, to the Town of Polega, ſtanding on a little River which falls into the Savus; on the Weſt with Carniola, or Krain, a Province of the Archdukedom of Auſtria; on the North with the River Dravus, on the South with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch, as the Land or Country of the Winnithi, or Venedi, the greateſt Nation of the Sclaves, whom generally they call by the name Windiſch; and anciently, for ſo much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus, accounted part of Pannonia Inferior, as afterwards of the Province of Savia, till conquered by the Sclaves, and laid unto their Poſſeſſions, from them named Wendiſchland, as before.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Windiſch-gratz, ſeated on the Dravus, the Vinundria and Vindomana of the Ancients. 2. Sagona, near unto the Savus. 3. Gradiſkia, on the South, and 4. Zagabria, on the North of the ſame River: from which laſt a great part of this Country is called Comitatus Zagabrienſis. 5. Novigrad, on the Savus alſo, but more near to Germany. 6. Petrowyna, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains which are between the Savus and the Dravus, and divide Hungary from Sclavonia. 7. Siſſeg, or Siſſaken, (the Siſſia of Pliny and Antoninus) ſituate on the Saw, over againſt Zagabria, where it receiveth the River Kulp; famous for the notable Reſiſtance which the Turks there found Anno 1593, who, hoping by the Conqueſt of this Province to open a free paſſage into Germany, entred it with a puiſſant Army, (having in their way taken the Caſtle of Oſtrowitz, and the ſtrong Town of Wihits, in Croatia) and ſate down very ſtrongly intrenched before this Town. But the Town held it out moſt gallantly againſt all their Batteries and Aſſaults, till relieved by a power of Germans who came to ſuccour them: by whom 8000 of the Turks were ſlain in the place, and moſt of the reſt drowned in the River Savus, as they fled haſtily and (through that great haſte) blindly from the Sword of the Conquerour.

This Province, for the moſt part, is under the Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged: thoſe parts of it which lie next to Hungary, on the North and Eaſt, groaning under the Tyranny and Bondage of the Turkiſh Garriſons.

2. CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North with Windiſchland, from which it is parted by the River Una or Wana; on the Eaſt with Boſnia, on the South with Liburnia, or Contado di Zara; on the Weſt with Carniola. The reaſon of the name I find not among my Authors, but only it was impoſed by the Sclaves at their firſt coming hither; who comprehended under this name all the Inland parts of Sclavonia, from the Mountain Ardium to Pannonia, including Boſnia and Windiſchland, though diſtinguiſhed afterwards.

The Country is for the moſt part cold, mountainous and hilly, overſpread by the Branches of the Mountains Bæbii, ſpoken of by Ptolemy; yet reaſonably fruitful, ſtored with all neceſſary Proviſions for the life of man, and would yield more increaſe and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the ill neighbourhood of the Turk, to whoſe Tyranny and Oppreſſions it hath been and is ſtill expoſed. The people for the general are held to be good Souldiers, mentioned in our modern Stories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Towns in it are, 1. Maſch, or Moſth, bordering upon Germany, the Aleta of the Ancients. 2. Oſtrowitz, a ſtrong Fort on the ſame Frontier. 3 Wihits, by the Dutch called Bibigen, by the Ancients Funium, the Metropolis or chief place of the Country, encompaſſed like an Iſland by the River Una, and fortified with ſtrong Works by the help of Art; but taken by the Turk Anno 1592, and all the Souldiers in it cruelly murthered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the Surrendry. 4. Zeng, 5. Wackat, 6. Tarnaw, 7. Modriſch; of which little memorable.

This Country, with the reſt included anciently under this name, was one of the two Kingdoms of Sclavonia; the Princes whereof were uſually entituled Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia. In the year 1007 the Venetians, having before poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Towns on the Sea-ſide, firſt ſet footing there. How the whole Country of Sclavonia came to the Crown of Hungary ſhall be ſhewn anon. It is held part of it, in the right thereof, by the Houſe of Auſtria; part of it by the Turks, in the way of Conqueſt: the Venetians having now no ſhare in it, for ought I can find.

3. BOSNIA.

BOSNIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Servia, a Province of Dacia; on the Weſt with Croatia, on the North with the River Savus and the Eaſt parts of the Lower Hungary, on the South with Dalmatia. So called, as ſome think, from the River Boſna, which runneth through it; as others, from the Beſſi, a People of Dacia, driven out of their Country by the Bulgari, and removing hither, by the change of a Vowel called Boſſi, whence the Country Boſnia.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Jaicza, by the Latines called Jazyga, ſituate on the top of an high Hill, at the bottom whereof it is almoſt encompaſſed with two Rivers, which there uniting paſs from thence unto the Savus. The Town, by reaſon of the rocky Precipices of the Hill, the Unfordableneſs of the River, and an inacceſſible Caſtle, is held to be impregnable: the Metropolis in former times of this petit Kingdom, and the ordinary Sepulture for the Kings thereof. 2. Warboſoni, at this time the chief Town of the Country, but not walled about. 3. Cazach, the uſual Reſidence or Retiring-place of the Boſnian Kings. 4. Schwanica, not much obſervable. 5. Dorobiza, the firſt Town taken by Mahomet the Great in his Conqueſt of this Kingdom; as 6. Cliſſa was the laſt, the unfortunate King Stephen being taken in it.

This Country, anciently accounted of as a part of Croatia, together with it was united to the Crown of Hungary, under the Patronage and Homage whereof it was erected into a Kingdom; but the preciſe time when, I find not. Some ſay about the year 1420. If ſo a Kingdom of late date, and ſhort continuance. For in the year 1464 Mahomet the Great, firſt Emperour of the Turks, having taken Conſtantinople, and almoſt all the reſt of Greece, caſt his eye upon it, ſuddenly ſurpriſed it, and having taken Stephen the laſt King hereof, moſt barbarouſly commanded him to be flay'd alive. After whoſe death this Kingdom was converted to a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, and governed by one of the Baſſa's of it, as it ſtill continueth.

DALMATIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Albania, from which it is parted by the River Drino; on the Weſt with the Titius, (now Varieca) which divides it from Liburnia; on the North with Boſnia; on the South with the Adriatick Sea. This only of all the Provinces of Sclavonia retaineth its ancient Name and Bounds. So called from Dalminium, the chief Town hereof in the time of the Romans, from which the People were called Dalmatæ, and the Country Dalmatia.

The Country in the time of the Romans was full of Woods, and thoſe Woods of Robbers, who from thence iſſued out to make Spoil and Booty. Dalmatæ ſub Sylvis agunt, indè ad Latrocinia promptiſſimi, ſaith the Hiſtorian. And by the advantage of theſe Woods they intercepted and diſcomfited Gabinius, one of Cæſar's Captains, marching through their Country with 1000 Horſe, and 15 Companies of Foot towards Macedonia, to the Aid of his General againſt Pompey. But their Woods being deſtroyed, they became more peaceable, and, in ſtead of Robberies by Land, began to exerciſe themſelves at Sea in the way of Merchandizing, to which their large Sea-coaſts and commodious Havens ſerved exceeding fitly.

Places of moſt conſideration in it are, 1. Sebenico, on the Sea-ſide, not far from the Influx of Titius or Variecha; by Ptolemy called Sicum, in whoſe time a Colony of Roman Souldiers was ſent hither by the Emperour Claudius. 2. Salona, a Roman Colony alſo, one of the Juridical Reſorts for theſe parts of the Province, and the ordinary Arſenal for their Natives. Renowned in ancient Stories for the Retreat of Diocletian, a native of this Country, who, having governed the Roman Empire 20 years with much Felicity, but a great deal of Cruelty, depoſed himſelf, and retired to this City, where he followed the Trade of a Gardener, working with his own hands, and obſerving with great content the productions of Nature. Inſomuch that when Maximianus Herculeus, his Aſſociate, (who at his perſwaſion had done the like) invited him to reſume the Empire, he returned this anſwer, Utinam poſſitis viſere Olera noſtris manibus plantata, &c. That if he would come unto Salona, and ſee how well the Worts which he had planted with his own hands did thrive and proſper, he would never trouble his Head with Crowns, nor his Hands with Scepters. A rare expreſſion of a ſettled and contented mind. The name and ſome of the Ruines do ſtill remain, to preſerve the memory of ſo remarkable a place. 3. Spalato, Eaſt of Sebenico, a Sea-Town, and an Archbiſhop's See, who writes himſelf Primate of Dalmatia; as anciently and of right he was, till the Biſhop of Venice, being made a Patriarch by Pope Eugenius the fourth, Anno 1450. aſſumed that Title to himſelf, together with a Superintendency over all the Churches of this Country, as ſubordinate to him. Of note for many learned Prelates, but for none more than for Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who, ſeeming to loath the Romiſh Superſtition, came for Refuge into England Anno 1616, and having here both by Preaching and Writing laboured to overthrow the Church of Rome, upon I know not what Projects he declared himſelf to be of another mind Anno 1622, and returned again to Rome, where he writ as reproachfully of the Church of England. So that we may ſay of him, as Socrates in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory ſaith of Ecebolius, who under Conſtantius was a Chriſtian, under Julian a Pagan, and a Chriſtian again under Jovinian; Τοιοῦτος μὲν ἦν κοῦφος καὶ εὐχερὴς Ἐκηβόλιος πρότερόν τε καὶ ὕστερον, So wavering and unconſtant a Turn-coat was Ecebolius from his begining to his end. But Ecebolius ſped better than Antonius did, he being received into the Church upon his Repentance: but this infatuated man was impriſoned in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, and his dead Body burnt to aſhes. A juſt reward for ſo great Levity and ſo groſs Apoſtaſie as he had ſhewed unto the World in his going hence. 4. Almiſſa, the Piguntium of Ptolemy, mounted on a high Rock, and defended with an impregnable Caſtle. 5. Stagno, upon the point of a long and ſpacious Cherſoneſe, not far from which the River Naron (or Narento) falls into the Adriatick. 6. Caſtel Novo, a ſtrong Fortreſs within the Gulf of Cattaro, now in poſſeſſion of the Turks. 7. Antivari, on the farther or Eaſtern ſide of the Bay, an Archbiſhop's See; but that and the Sees of his Suffragan Biſhops, being ſeven in number, are now in poſſeſſion of the Turks. 8. Cattaro, on the ſame ſide of the Bay; by Ptolemy called Aſcrivium, inhabited in his time by Roman Citizens; now a ſtrong hold for the Venetians againſt the Turks, and giving name unto the Gulf, which, formerly called Sinus Rhizonicus, from Rhizana, (now Riſine) ſituate at the bottom of it, is at this time called from this Town Golfo de Cattaro. 9. Dulcigno, by Ptolemy called Ulcinium, originally founded by the Colchians and therefore called Colchinium by ſome ancient Writers. 10. Scutari, more within the Land, (the Scodra of Ptolemy and Antoninus) ſtrongly ſeated on a ſteep Rock, memorable for the ſtout Reſiſtance which it made for a whole year againſt the whole Puiſſance of Mahomet the ſecond, battered for the moſt part of that time with 70 pieces of Ordnance of wondrous bigneſs, eſpecially that called the Prince's Piece, which carried a Stone or Bullet of 1200 pound weight; but taken at the laſt, Anno 1578. Not far from this Town is the great Lake called by Strabo Labeatis, now the Lake of Scutari, 130 miles in compaſs, and environed on all ſides with Mountains, except towards the North: out of which iſſueth the Drinus, now called Drino, or Drina, which, parting Sclavonia, from Macedon, and Servia, paſſeth into the Savus. 11. Aleſio, the Liſſus of Ptolemy, the fartheſt Town of all Dalmatia towards Greece; memorable for the Grave of Scanderbeg, who was buried here, whereof more hereafter. 12 Medon, raiſed out of the Ruines of Dioclea, an ancient and famous City, the Birth-place of the Great Emperour Diocletian, ſpoken of before. 13. Dalminium, once the Metropolis of this Province, ſituate on the River Drinus; firſt ſacked by Marcus Figulus, a Roman Conſul, An. U. C. 689; and after, on a new Revolt, by one Naſica, ſpoken of by Strabo: not able after two ſuch Ruines to revive again: nothing being now left of it but the name and memory.

Betwixt the Cherſoneſe of Stagno and the Gulf of Cattaro ſtands the Town and Territory of RAGUSI; not ſubject, as all the reſt are, either to the Turk or to the Venetians, but governing themſelves by their own Laws and Magiſtrates, as a free Commonwealth: paying only to the Turk 14000 Zecchins yearly in a way of Tribute, and as much in Preſents; diſcharged in that regard of Cuſtoms and Impoſitions in all his Dominions. It was anciently called Epidaurus, (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponneſus.) But that Town being raſed by the Goths, the Inhabitants, (after their departure) not knowing where to retire themſelves, built this in the place of it, at the foot of a ſteep Mountain; enjoying a pleaſant ſituation near the Sea, with a little, but commodious, Port, forced out of the water by the art and induſtry of workmen. The Town is well built, fortified with Walls and a well-furniſhed Caſtle; now an Archbiſhop's See, and a noted Empory; rich, and ſtrong in Shipping, commanding over a ſmall and barren Territory within the Land, and ſome pleaſant Iſlands in the Sea. So that the Riches of it proceed not from their Rents and Revenues riſing out of the Earth, but by the benefit of their Traffick upon the Waters: in which they are ſecured by the Protection of the Turk, without which they had fallen before this time into the hands of the Venetians; as on the other ſide preſerved by the State of Venice from being a Prey to their Protectors. They were of more Wealth heretofore than they are at preſent, at what time they traded to moſt parts of this Weſtern world in thoſe great Veſſels which from hence were called Raguſes, but corruptly Argoſies; the laſt of which (their number leſſening with their Trade) they lent unto the King of Spain for the War of England Anno 1588, in which Action it was loſt and wrecked on the Coaſt of Ireland.

5. CONTADO DI ZARA.

CONTADO DI ZARA, or the County of Zara, called anciently Liburnia, and Illyris ſpecially ſo named, is bounded on the Eaſt with Dalmatia, on the Weſt with Iſtria, on the North with Croatia, and on the South with the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It took this latter name (the former being long diſcontinued) from Zara, the chief Town thereof, the Jadera of Ptolemy and the Ancients; a Roman Colony at that time, now an Archbiſhop's See; enjoying a ſafe and large Port, and ſituate on a low Cherſoneſe thruſting out like a Promontory into the Adriatick; belonging to the State of Venice, by whom it is well fenced and fortified againſt foreign Invaſions. For the poſſeſſion and command of this Town there have been great Wars betwixt the Hungarians and the Venetians, to whom it ſeemeth to be of ſuch importance, that being once taken by the Hungarians, it was redeemed for 100000 Crowns of Ladiſlaus King of Naples, pretending againſt Sigiſmund of Luxemburg to the Crown of Hungary. In this Town is the Church of S. John de Malvaſia, which was built by a company of Sailers, who, being in a Tempeſt, made a Vow, that, if they eſcaped, they would conſecrate a Temple to S. John de Malvaſia, whoſe Morter ſhould be tempered with Malmſey: and accordingly they paid their Vows. Far leſs did another Maſter of a Ship intend to perform his Promiſe, though he ſpoke bigger, who, in a like extremity of Danger, promiſed our Lady to offer at her Altar a Candle as great as the main Maſt of his Ship. For when one of his Mates, jogging him, told him he had promiſed an Impoſſibility: Tuſh, Fool, (replied the Maſter) we muſt ſpeak her fair in time of need; but if ever I come aſhore, I will make her be content with a Candle of Eight to the pound. And in a like fit of Devotion was he who on the ſame occaſion plainly told God, that he was no common Beggar, he never troubled him with Prayers before; and if he would hear him that time, he would never trouble him again.

Other Towns herein conſiderable are, 1. Albona, retaining ſtill the old name, (the Alvona of Ptolemy) ſituate near the River Arſia, the Divider of this Province from Iſtria. 2. Flavona, or Flanona, ſituate againſt the Gulf of Quernero, of old called Sinus Flanaticus, as before was noted: of ill report amongſt Sailers, for frequent Tempeſts raiſed on every Wind. 3. Zegna, by Ptolemy and Pliny called Senia, ſituate on a Flat or Level. 4. Nona, of old called Ænona, compaſſed with the Sea. 5. Scriſſia, now a poor Village, in the place where ſtood the Argyruntum of Pliny. 6. Scardona, now a mean Village alſo, heretofore of great note, and the Juridical Reſort for the whole Province; from whence the neighbouring Mountains had the name of Scardonici, the Bounds of this Country and Croatia.

The ancient name of this Country was Liburnia, as before is ſaid, but extending more Northwards beyond the Mountains of Ardium or Scardonici; this and Dalmatia being then the Membra dividentia of the whole Illyricum. The People hereof, called by one general name Liburni, were much given to Piracies; and for the better ſpeed therein, the Authors and Inventors of thoſe ſwift Veſſels which were called Liburnicæ and Liburnæ. Of which thus Horace,

> Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium,
> Amice, propugnacula.
> That is to ſay,
> In a Liburnian ſhalt thou be > Amongſt the ſtouteſt Ships at Sea.

In imitation of which Veſſels, being ſwift and light, the Romans, in the time of their Wealth and Pride, invented a kind of Chair or Litter, (ſuch as thoſe we call Sedans) wherein they were carried on mens Shoulders with ſuch eaſe and pleaſure, that they could not only ſleep or read, but write in them alſo. The Porters or Bearers of them were of this Nation commonly; from whence, or from the faſhion of the Veſſel which they did reſemble, they were called Liburni. Of theſe thus Juvenal in his third Satyr,

> Si vocat officium, turbâ cedente vehetur
> Dives, & ingenti curret ſuper ora Liburno,
> Atque obiter leget, aut ſcribet, vel dormiet intus:
> Namque facit Somnum clausâ Lectica feneſtrâ.

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stapleton, in his excellent Tranſlation of that harſh Satyriſt:

When Buſineſs calls, a Crowd the rich man ſhuns,
And o're mens Heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes, and ſleeps within it, as he goes:
For Sleep will come if he the Curtains cloſe.

Beſides which office of Chair-carriers, or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this People being, when once conquered, a ſervile Nation, furniſhed the Romans with thoſe Beadles whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the Fields to their publick Buſineſſes: to which the ſame Poet alludeth in the next Satyr, ſaying, Clamante Liburno, Currite, jam ſedit, &c. But to proceed. The nearneſs of this Country to the Adriatick occaſioned the Bay of Quernero, or Cornaro, as ſome call it, commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be ſometimes named Sinus Liburnicus; the parts of Italy on the other ſide of it to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a Shole of Iſlands lying on the Coaſt hereof, 60 at leaſt in number, as is ſaid by Strabo. To which and other Iſlands of the Adriatick we are now to haſten, leaving the Story of Illyricum to the cloſe of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN Iſlands.

ALong the Coaſts of Sclavonia lie a Cluſter of Iſlands, to the number of a thouſand, as is ſaid by Pliny, moſt of which (if indeed ſo many) are but Rocks, not Iſlands, or not inhabited at all, nor of any note. The principal whereof, and ſuch as deſerve place place here, are, 1. the Liburnades before mentioned. 2. The Abſyrtides. 3. The Iſles of Raguſi. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Liſſa and Brazzia; the reſt not being worth the looking after as to our Deſign. The whole number of the Inhabitants is reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 perſons.

1. The LIBURNADES, ſaid by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coaſt of Liburnia, or Contado di Zara. The chief whereof are, 1. Iſſa, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compaſs, having a Town of the ſame name; but in all that Tract of ground not above 1500 Inhabitants, in the time of my Author, by reaſon of the ſharp Air, and great want of Fewel. The Saltpits here yield great Commodity not only to the people themſelves, but alſo to the State of Venice, ſupreme Lords hereof. 2. Tragurium, now Trau and Trahu, ſo called from the chief Town hereof, built by thoſe of Iſſa: ſo near the Continent, that it ſeems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tagurium, with ſome little difference. 3. Pharus, ſo called from the Pharii, or Parii, of whom it was once a Colony, long ſince come to Ruine. It is now called Leſina, the greateſt of all the Adriatick, as being 150 miles in compaſs, and very fruitful for the bigneſs. It hath a Town of the ſame name, which enjoys a ſafe and ſpacious Harbour; unwalled, and of no great beauty, but fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the Shipping in it. The Birth-place of Demetrius Pharius, ſo often mentioned in the Stories of Greece and Rome.

2. The ABSYRTIDES are in number many, ſo called from the River Abſyrtus, which thereabout falls into the Adriatick; according unto that of Lucan, Et cadit Adriacas ſpumans Abſyrtus in undas.

Abſyrtus foaming with his haſt,
Into the Adria falls at laſt.

But whether that River were ſo called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memory of Abſyrtus the Son of Æetus King of Colchis, whom they went to ſeek, or for ſome other reaſon, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be ſo named from the ſcattering of his Limbs hereabouts by Medea his unnatural Siſter, as is ſaid by Pliny; that cruel fact being done on the Shores of the Euxine; the place being called Tomos afterwards upon that occaſion. But of theſe Iſlands, being in number many, as before was ſaid, two only are of ſpecial note; that is to ſay, 1. Vegia, or Vegio, not far from Segna on the firm Land, containing in compaſs betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants: the moſt populous of all theſe Seas. It hath a Town of the ſame name, with a very fair Harbour: the Iſland by Pliny called Curicta, the chief Towns of it in his time being Fulfinium and Curicum. 2. Abſorus, as Ptolemy, Abſyrtium, as Pliny calls it, in whoſe time it was one Iſland only, but now divided into two by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherſo, the other Oſero; both joyned together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compaſs; each of them having one Town only, and that of the ſame name with the Iſland; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 perſons. Stored with ſufficiency of Corn, plenty of Wine, and abundance of Wood, great quantities whereof are ſent yearly to Venice. They have alſo goodly Herds of Cattel, and great Flocks of Sheep, affording by their Fleſh, Wool, Cheeſe and Butter, a good increaſe of profit to the Owners of them.

3. The Iſlands of RAGUSI, (for ſo I call them which belong to that Commonwealth) are but three in number. 1. Gravoſa, a very pleaſant place, full of Gardens of Oranges, Limons, and Pomegranates. 2. Languſte, environed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Raguſians Farms, made rich by the great Charge and Induſtry of the ſeveral Occupants, ſo as to yield them Wine, Oyl, and moſt excellent Fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain ſituate in the midſt hereof, and naturally more fruitful than the other parts. Near to this laſt Iſland is good fiſhing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their Trees to bring forth Oiſters, by bending down their Boughs, and ſtaying them under the water with Stones; ſo as in two years there are ſo many Oiſters faſtned unto them as is ſtrange to ſee, and in the third year they are very good meat. 3. Melyda, lying betwixt Raguſi and the Iſle of Curzola, by Pliny called Melita, and on that ground ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Iſland on which St. Paul did ſuffer Shipwreck, Acts 26. But the name of Barbarus, which the Text joyns to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Iſland betwixt Greece and Italy in the times of St. Paul, and his landing, when he parted thence, at Syracuſe, an haven of Sicily ſo far from this, ſo near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, ſufficiently refel this Fancy, though otherwiſe not improbably grounded.

4. Of thoſe which are known only by one ſingle name the chief are, ARBE, ſo called in the time of Pliny, from the beſt Town of it; but by Ptolemy it is named Scardona. A pleaſant Iſland, in compaſs about 30 miles, and containing ſome 3000 Inhabitants; the only Havenleſs Iſle of all the Adriatick: but that defect is abundantly recompenſed by the natural Sweetneſs of the place, which ſo enticed certain diſſolute Rovers of Auſtria, that they ſeiſed upon it Anno 1618, and had like to have occaſioned an heavy War betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke, of the Houſe of Gratz, (not long after choſen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the third of Spain had not made up the Breach.

5. CURZOLA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Corcyra, or Melæna, more rightly Corcyra Melæna, or Corcyra Nigra, to difference it from Corcyra, now Corfu, in the Ionian Sea. The chief Town of it, being of the ſame name with the Iſland, was founded by the Gnidians of the Iſle of Crete. It is ſufficiently fruitful, but of Wine eſpecially; forty miles long, in compaſs ninety, and very populous for the bigneſs; notwithſtanding that the people, being Sea-faring men, do much uſe the Seas, and build many Ships. In the year 1571, a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the Battel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluz Aly, General of the Turkiſh Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contarenus, the Venetian Governour, together with the Townſmen and Garriſon Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof. The ſilly Women thus forſaken, and preferring Death before Diſhonour, defended the Walls, and with Fire, Stones, and ſuch other Weapons as they had, they beat off the Enemy; till at the laſt a violent Tempeſt forced the Turkiſh General to remove his Gallies farther off, to a place of ſafety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three ſmall Iſles, not otherwiſe memorable but for their Misfortunes; ſpoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola, who carried thence 1600 Chriſtians into cruel Bondage. The reſt I purpoſely omit, being rather Rocks than Iſlands, barren and ſtony for the moſt part, and not much inhabited.

The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Iapodes, bordering on Italy; the Scirtones, or Scirtarii, confining upon Macedon; the Mazæi, in the midſt about Salona; the Peiruſtæ, lying towards Pannonia; the Derrii, Ceraunii, Daurſii, Vardæ, Siculotæ, Sardiotæ, and others of inferiour note: all making up the great and potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatæ, and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of theſe the Liburnian Illyrians (Illiryci, ſeu Liburni, as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the firſt who felt the Forces of Rome: which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murthering the Embaſſadours which were ſent unto them to require Satisfaction; Teuta their Queen, a proud and imperious Dame, commanding Execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for ſo many Injuries under the Conduct of Centimalus, one of their Conſuls, they were overthrown, (as having more of the Pirate than the Souldier in them) ſome of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the Wrong done to the Embaſſadours, an yearly Tribute impoſed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greateſt part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithful to them in their War with Hannibal, and Gentius, their laſt King, who commanded over Illyricum, ſidi[illegible]gainſt them with Perſeus King of Macedonia, Anitius the Prætor is ſent with a ſufficient Army to make an end of that work; who uſed ſuch diligence therein, that Scodra the chief Town of the Kingdom was taken, and the King himſelf, together with his Wife and Children, made Priſoners; by conſequence the whole War ended, antequam geri Romæ nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburnians after that became quiet Subjects, the whole Country on the taking of Gentius being made a Province of the Romans Anno V.C. 586, and they employed at Rome in many ſervile offices, as before was ſaid: and then the Dalmatians began to caſt off the Yoke. But Dalminium, their chief City, being firſt ſacked by Marcus Figulus, and after by Naſica before mentioned, they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, when they again rebelled at the inſtigation of one Batto, a man very potent with the People, who, having ten years together maintained the Liberty of his Country, at laſt, broken and wearied by the Forces of Germanicus and Tiberius, ſubmitted himſelf unto the two Generals; who, asking the reaſon of his Revolt, were anſwered, becauſe the Romans ſent not Shepherds to keep, but Wolves do devour, their Flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his Command; as the Goths alſo did, having vanquiſhed him, and thereby made themſelves Maſters of Italy and the reſt of his Purchaſes. But the Kingdom of the Goths being brought to an end by the good fortune of Juſtinian, and the valour of Beliſarius and Narſes, two of his Commanders, (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eaſtern Empire; continuing under the power of the Græcian Emperours till the time of Phocas, that bloudy Tyrant; when it was made a Prey to the Sclaves.

Of theſe though we have ſpoken before in ſeveral places, as their Fortunes and Affairs have led us; yet being this is the only Country which preſerves their name, we will here ſpeak more exactly of them then we have done hitherto; eſpecially as to their Manners, Name, and firſt Original, and finally of their Succeſſes in this Country. And firſt for their Original, I take it for a thing paſt queſtion that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Iſter; uniting themſelves under this Name in their Undertakings and Attempts on the Eaſtern Empire: as the many Nations of Germany took the name of Franks and Almans in their Actions and Atchievements againſt the Weſtern. But why they took this Name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Slowo, which in the Sclavonian Tongue ſignifieth a Speech or Word, becauſe they were all of one common Language: others from Slawa, ſignifying in that Language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great Fame and Honour which they had atchieved by their Succeſſes on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Winnithi, Winuli, or Venedi, a Sarmatian People, called Sclavini by Jornandes, poſſeſſed in his time of the farther Shores of the River Iſter, oppoſite to Illyricum and Thrace, and by that Name waſting and foraging theſe Provinces and other parts of that Empire in the time of Juſtinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould look farther for the name of Sclaves than from theſe Sclavini. For having in the time of Phocas ſubdued this Country, and called it Sclavinia or Sclavonia, after their own Name; by that and other fortunate Succeſſes on the Eaſtern Empire, and the Honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the reſt of the ſcattered Tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in Name and Action, and try their fortunes in the Conqueſt of the Weſt of Europe, as theſe had done already on the Eaſt parts of it. In which Deſign they ſped ſo well, that they became Maſters of almoſt all thoſe Countries which lie betwixt the River Viſtula and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Baltick; communicating their Language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them; and to moſt their Manners, Rites and Cuſtoms. Their Government was at firſt by Kings, but ſo that the Succeſſion ſeldom held in a Race or Family, and thoſe that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongſt themſelves, that he who killed a Tyrant ſhould ſucceed in his place; they had few Kings whom ſome or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then diſpatch him out of the way, that a greater Tyrant than himſelf (as it commonly hapneth in ſuch caſes) might poſſeſs the Power. Inſomuch that they had a new King almoſt every year, none of them for the ſpace of an hundred years dying natural deaths; and all that while the People (as it muſt be) were moſt miſerably torn in pieces by inteſtine Wars. They were not cured of this Diſtemper, till the ſeveral Tribes and Nations of them (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, theſe here, and thoſe of other Countrys) had their ſeveral Princes ſucceeding one another in a regular way. Their Religion was Gentiliſm at the firſt. For being originally Heathens, they worſhipped ſuch Gods as others of the Gentiles did; Jeſſin for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzim for Mars, Zievane for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had alſo a Goddeſs called Fagode, to whom they prayed for Fair weather and a temperate Air. To their Children they uſed to give no Name till they began to grow great, and then they conducted them to the Temple of their Gods; where they cut off their firſt Hair, and offered it as a Pledge of their future Service: at which Solemnity they called together their Friends and Kinsfolk to make merry, with Banquets, Dancing, Singing, and all kind of Sports; offering in ſacrifice an Hog, and Wine mixed with Honey, ſomewhat like Metheglin.

The Goſpel was firſt generally received amongſt them by the Preaching of Cyrill and Methodius, two right godly men, who had before converted the Georgians and Circaſſians, two great Aſian Nations, employed therein by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, with good Succeſs as to the Work, and with no ſmall Honour and advantage to thoſe Patriarchs alſo. The Eaſtern Sclaves, inhabiting thoſe parts of this Country which lie next to Greece, and all the Dacian Provinces, except Tranſylvania, being of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but privileged to officiate all Divine Services in their natural Language. The reſt, as more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Hungary and the German Emperours, ſubmitted by degrees to the Popes of Rome, who by this means did reap where they never ſowed.

But to return unto the Story. The Sclaves, thus ſettled in this Country, (ſince called Sclavonia) continued abſolute Maſters of it, under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, till the year 970; when growing unſufferable by their frequent Piracies, and having raviſhed or ſurprized a company of Venetian Ladies, they forced that State (as the Liburnians did the Romans) to make War upon them: which ended in the Loſs of Leſian and Curzola, two of their beſt Iſlands, and almoſt all the Sea-Towns on the Coaſt of the Adriatick, poſſeſſed for the moſt part ſince that time by the State of Venice: a Tribute alſo of a hundred Barrels of Wine, and a Preſent to the Duke of 3000 Coney-skins, being laid upon them; Petro Urſeolo, being then Duke of Venice, and Marcomir King of the Sclavonians. Afterwards Zelamirus, the laſt King, dying without Iſſue, bequeathed the Kingdom to his Wife, and ſhe as freely to her Brother Vladiſlaus, King of Hungary, ſurnamed the Saint; the Right hereof accruing by this means to the Kings of Hungary, but the Poſſeſſion of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice: the cauſe of much War and Bloudſhed betwixt thoſe Princes, till the Turk came to part the Fray, and got the greateſt part for himſelf by their Diſagreements. Betwixt theſe three Sclavonia at this time doth ſtand thus divided: the Venetians poſſeſs the greateſt part of the Iſlands, and all the Sea-coaſts from the River Arſia to the Bay of Cattaro, (the City and Commonwealth of Raguſi excepted only;) the Houſe of Auſtria, in Right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windiſchland and Croatia; and the Turks (who firſt ſet footing here in the Reign of Mahomet the ſecond) the whole Kingdom of Boſnia, the Patronage of Raguſi, ſome Towns in Windiſchland and Croatia, and all the reſidue of Dalmatia, from the Bay of Cattaro to Albania.

The Arms of Sclavonia were Argent, a Cardinal's Hat, the Strings pendant, and platted in a True-love Knot, meeting in the Baſe, Gules.

There are in Sclavonia

Archbiſhops 4. Biſhops 26.

And thus much for SCLAVONIA.

OF DACIA.

DACIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Euxine Sea and ſome part of Thrace, on the Weſt with Hungary and Sclavonia, on the North with Podolia and ſome other Members of the Realm of Poland, on the South with the reſt of Thrace and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here firſt inhabited; in Strabo better known by the name of Davi: who proving, when firſt known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themſelves to Service in hope of Gain, occaſioned the Romans in their Comedies and common Speech to call a Sycophant or Servant by the name of Davus,

It lieth on both ſides of the Danow, fronting all along the Upper and the Lower Hungary, and ſome part of Sclavonia: extended from the 7. Climate to the 10. ſo that the longeſt Summers Day in the moſt Northern parts thereof is near 17 hours, and in the moſt Southern 15 hours, 3 quarters.

By this account, with reference to the other Limits before laid down, it differeth much in Situation and Dimenſions from the ancient Dacia deſcribed by Ptolemy: that lying wholly on the North-ſide of the Danow, but taking in ſo much of the Upper Hungary as lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of Tibiſcus, this comprehending all the reſt of the ancient Dacia, with both the Myſia's and Dardania, and, in a word, the whole Dacian Dioceſe in the largeſt extent thereof, the Province of Prævalitana excepted only; which, though a Member of this Dioceſe, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer underſtanding whereof we may pleaſe to know, that Dacia properly ſo called was ſituate on the North ſide of Danubius, as before was ſaid, extending as far Weſtward as the River Tibiſcus, ~~where it~~ frontiered on the Jazyges Metanaſtæ; inhabited by a military ~~and~~ valiant People, who many times, eſpecially when the Froſt did favour them, paſſed over the River, and infeſted the Roman Provinces. And though repreſſed and made tributary by Julius Cæſar, yet they brake out again in the time of Auguſtus; who ſending Lentulus againſt them with a puiſſant Army, compelled them to retire on the other ſide of the River, planting the Southern Banks thereof with ſtrong Towns and Garriſons, to reſtrain them from the like incurſions for the time to come. By means whereof, Si Dacia tunc non victa, ſummata atque dilota eſt, ſaith the Hiſtorian, though Dacia was not overcome, yet it was removed ſomewhat farther off, and the Provinces thereby ſecured from the attempts of that People. After this, from the time of Cotiſo, with whom Auguſtus had to deal, we find little of them till the Reign of Decebalus their laſt King, a man both ready in Advice, and quick in Execution. Againſt him Domitian made War by Julianus his Lieutenant, who gave Decebalus a great Overthrow, and had then utterly vanquiſhed him, if his Wit had not better befriended him then his Sword. For, fearing that the Romans making uſe of their Victory, would enter and take poſſeſſion of his Countrey, he pitched in the way a great number of Stakes in Battel-array, putting on them the old Corſlets of his Souldiers; which, looking like ſo many men at Arms, frighted the Enemy from approaching the Countrey. Trajan was the next that made War againſt him and brought him to that Exigent, that having with much loſs endured ſome few Skirmiſhes, he yielded himſelf, and is acknowledged a Friend to the Senate and People of Rome. But being one of a high ſpirit, and born in a free Air, he once again fell off from the Romans; but to his own Deſtruction: for ſeeing by the Valour of Trajan his Kingdom conquered, and his Palace taken and deſtroyed, he fell upon his own Sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Loſt in the time of Gallienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus; who, finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, tranſplanted the Roman Colonies, and the more civil ſort of the Natives, to the other ſide of the River, placing them betwixt the two Myſia's, (in ſome part of each) and calling the Countrey given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia, leaving the Old unto the Goths, and others of the barbarous Nations, whoſe Thorough-fare it was in all their Enterpriſes and Deſigns upon the Roman Empire. It was divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Ripenſis; this lying on the Banks of the Danow, the other more within the Land: which, with the Provinces of Mæſia ſuperior, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Dioceſs of Dacia in the times ſucceeding. It was ſubject with that of Macedon to the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, and conſequently appertaining (after the Diviſion) to the Eaſtern Empire. And it continued in this ſtate till the time of Juſtinian, who being a Native of this Countrey, ſubducted it from the Command of that Præfect, and inſtituted both a Præfectus Prætorio for this Dioceſs only in Civil matters, and a Primate for the Affairs of the Church; both ſettled in the City of Juſtiniana, of his own Foundation; enlarging the Juriſdiction of the firſt by the addition of ſome part of Macedonia Secunda and Pannonia Secunda, and giving to the other all thoſe Preheminencies which had been anciently enjoyed by the greater Patriarchs. But this new Inſtitution was of no continuance. For firſt the Sclaves, and afterwards the Ruſſians, Hungars and Bulgarians; breaking over the Danow, diſmembred it piece-meal from the Empire, and divided it under new names amongſt themſelves. Of which, together with the nature of the Soil and People, I ſhall ſpeak anon, having firſt took a view of the Rivers, Hills, and other Landmarks, which are to be my chief Guides in the Chorography or Deſcription of them.

The Rivers then of moſt note are 1. the Danow, which here at Axium, or Axiopolis, a Town of Bulgaria, takes the name of Iſter, continuing it from thence to its Æſtuarium, where it falleth into the Euxine Sea with 7. Mouths or Channels; that is to ſay, 1. Peuce. 2. Naracuſtoma. 3. Calliſtoma. 4. Plendoſtoma. 5. Spireoſtoma. 6. Boreoſtoma: the name of the laſt I find not amongſt my Authours, quia languidiſſimum, nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemy. 2. Marulius, now called Mariſch. 3. Termes. 4. Aluta, keeping its old name. 5. Hieraſus. All of Old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or Iſter: as do alſo Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Cervia. And 6. Suconia of Bulgaria, or the Lower Myſia. Chief Mountains of it are, 1. The Carpathian. 2. Scardus. 3. Ozbelus; whereof the firſt parteth it from Sarmatia Europæa, the ſecond from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This ſaid, we will proceed to the deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces which we have comprehended under this name of Dacia; that is to ſay, 1. Tranſylvania. 2. Moldavia. 3. Walachia. 4. Raſcia. 5. Servia. 6. Bulgaria: The firſt four in Old Dacia, on the North-ſide of the Danow, the two laſt in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

TRANSYLVANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Moldavia, on the Weſt with the Upper Hungary, on the North with Ruſſia Nigra, a Province of the Realm of Poland, from which it is parted by the Carpathian Mountains; on the South with Raſcia and Walachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwixt it and Hungary; the name in Latine ſignifying the Countrey beyond the Woods. By the Dutch it is called Siebenbergen, from ſeven Caſtles or ſtrong Holds anciently built in it to defend the Frontiers: Septemcaſtrenſis in ſome Latine Authors upon that occaſion. But by the more elegant Latiniſts it hath been named Pannodacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made ſubject to them.

The Soil doth naturally abound with Wine, Corn, and Fruit; of which it was ſo plentiful in the time of the Romans, that the Emperour Trajan cauſed a piece of Money to be coined, having the Figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu-copia, and in the other a plain Tablet with this Inſcription, Abundantia Daciæ. Particularly, beſides great plenty of Wheat and moſt excellent Wines, it yieldeth great ſtore of Cherries, Damaſcens, Malacatoons, Musk-melons, not inferiour to thoſe of Italy, and alſo Centaury good ſtore, and many other Medicinal plants; ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, many of Iron, Braſs, Copper, and not a few Veins of Salt and Sulphur. Of Cattel ſuch abundance, that many times large Oxen are ſold for a Floren, or half a Crown apiece; and a moſt notable breed of Horſes: not to ſay any thing of that variety of Wild Beaſts which they have in their Woods and Foreſts, and of all ſorts of Fowl both for food and pleaſure. So populous withal, (for the moſt fruitful Countreys are commonly populous alſo) that Caſtaldo, Governour hereof in the Minority of Stephen the fourth Son of John de Sepuſio, Anno 1551. advanced Army of 70000 able men, conſiſting of the Natives of this Country only, for the Siege of Lippe, a ſtrong Town of Hungary, but on the Borders of this Countrey.

The People are much of the ſame nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been a long time ſubject, but ſomewhat more ſtubborn and untractable; ſpeak the ſame Language that they do, with ſome difference in the Dialect only; converted at the ſame time to the Chriſtian Faith, and under the ſame form of Eccleſiaſtical Government. In former times they uſed to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late herein they conform to the Weſtern Nations, from whom they are generally deſcended.

For that the people of this Country are the Progeny of the Saxons, is evident 1. by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2. We find that Charles the Great, like a politick Conquerour, placed many of that Nation here, weakning ſo their ſtrength at home, and fortifying the Bounds of his Empire. And 3. by a Story recited by Verſtegan, which we touched in our Deſcription of Brunſwick; the whole Narration is this. Halberſtadt was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Muſician, whom they called the Py'd Piper, undertaking for a great maſs of mony to deſtroy, they agree: hereupon he tuned his Pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after him are drowned in the next River. This done, he asketh his pay, but is denied: whereupon he ſtriketh up a new fit of Mirth: all the Children, male and female, of the Town, follow him into the Hill Hamelen, which preſently cloſed again. The Parents miſs their Children, and could never hear news of them. Now of late ſome have found them in this Country, where I alſo leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is ſaid to happen the 22. of July, 1376. Since which time it is ſaid that the people of Halberſtadt permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Inſtrument to be ſounded in that Street: and eſtabliſhed a Decree, that in all writings of Contract or Bargain, after the Date of our Saviours Nativity, the Date alſo of this their Childrens Tranſmigration ſhould be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main Body of them, yet, being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain ſtill ſome of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of thoſe Members is the Body of this State compoſed: ſo ſtrong and populous, that it is conceived to be able to raiſe an Army of 90000 men; and actually did arm 6000 Horſe and 12000 Foot for the Battel of Kereſture, Anno 1596. being more by 2000 then the whole Realm of Hungary ſent unto that Service.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1. Hermenſtat, in Latine Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was ſituate) ſo named of one Herman the Founder of it; little inferiour to Vienna for ſtrength or greatneſs, well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronſtad, in Latine called Corona, by ſome Braſſovia, by others Stephanopolis; this laſt name being given it by Stephen King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it; ſituate on the Borders of Walachia, amongſt fruitful Mountains; remarkable for a fair Library and a kind of Academy; and the moſt noted Empory or Mart-Town of all this Countrey; of great Reſort, eſpecially in the Time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Polanders, Walachians, and other Nations. 3. Biſtricia, (by the Dutch called Noren) ſo called from the River Biſtrice, which runneth through it: ſo pleaſant and ſo ſweet a Town, that there is no dirt or mire to be ſeen at any time; or if there be, the people preſently ſwell up the River, and ſo cleanſe the Streets. 4. Medieſus (by the Dutch, Medwiſh) ſo called quaſi medius conſeſſus, becauſe ſituate in the midſt of the Countrey; a Town almoſt as neat as Biſtrice. 5. Segoſwaria, or Schesburg, on the declivity of an Hill. 6. Zabeſus, or Laiz, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; ſituate in a very deep Valley, well fenced with Waters, and thoſe Waters well ſtored with Fiſh. 7. Clauſenburg, or Coloſwar, the Zeugma of Ptolemy, in Latine called Claudiopolis, from Claudius the II. Emperor, by whom re-edified: at firſt a Colony of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians, coming in as Strangers, were at laſt privileged as Citizens, and inhabited it together with them. The Town is well ſeated in the middle of a pleaſant Plain, encompaſſed with an handſome Wall, and beautified with elegant Buildings. 8. Alba Julia, now Weiſſenberg, the Apulum of Ptolemy, ſituate on a ſmall Brook then called Apulus, (but now Oratus) whence it had the name. Built on the ſide of an Hill near the River Mariſch, (or Mariſus) over-looking a large and fruitful Plain: heretofore a Biſhops See, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Prince or Vaivod of Tranſylvania; but now a Garriſon of Hungarian Souldiers, holding it for the Emperour, as King of Hungary.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are, 1. Waradin, much mentioned in the Stories of theſe later times, ſince the Invaſions of the Turks; ſituate on the Borders of Hungary. 2. Thorda, built in or near the place where ſtood the Salinæ of Ptolemy, ſo called from the abundante of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Enguedine, by the Romans called Annium, from a Cauſey leading to it, raiſed by one Annius, and from him ſo named; ſome Fragments whereof are ſtill remaining. 4. Deva, remarkable for a Vein of the beſt Wines. 5. Fenuſchium, affording very pleaſant Wines alſo, not inferiour to thoſe of Venuſium in Italy. 6. Zilachi. 7. Gela, of which little memorable. 8. Millenback, not far from which, betwixt it and the Town of Bros, is a very ſtrong Fortreſs, commanding a ſtreight and narrow paſſage leading into this Countrey out of Hungary.

In the North part hereof lieth the Province called ZECKLER, inhabited by the Siculi, an old brood of Scythians, brought hither by, Attila, on his firſt Conqueſt of this Countrey, and here ſtill continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Hunns, and had heretofore a peculiar Language to themſelves, but now they ſpeak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But though, by the neceſſity of Commerce and Cohabitation, they are brought into the ſame Language; they ſtill retain their ancient Cuſtoms, governed by their own Laws, and living after the ſame manner as the Switzers do; each of their Cantons (ſeven in number) being abſolute in and of it ſelf, but all united with the Tranſylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Countrey againſt the ſeveral Pretenſions of the German and Turkiſh Emperours. And though they do acknowledge ſome Subjection to the Emperour as King of Hungary, yet it is but what they liſt themſelves: being anciently priviledged from all Taxes, more then the paying of a Bull for every Houſhold, in the way of an Heriot, at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft ſoever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (Seds they call them) are, 1. Sepſi. 2. Orbay. 3. Kyſdi. 4. Czyk. 5. Gyrgio or Uduarheli. 6. Marous-Zeek. And 7. Arania-Zeek; ſo called from the chief Town in each Diviſion. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better Means and greater Eminence than other, was known amongſt them: but now of late that Parity (or Confuſion rather) is grown out of credit, and ſome begin to over-top the reſt both in Power and Title, as in other places.

The firſt Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anarti, Tauriſci, Rhatacenſii, Cancoenſii, the Buridenſii, and Biephi, &c. Firſt conquered they were by Lyſimachus, the great and mighty King of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable Medals in the age of our Grandfathers were found in this Countrey, having his Image on the one ſide, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards ſubdued by the Emperour Trajan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been ſhewn already.

dy. Being forſaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths; their conſtant Dwelling, till forced over the Danow by the Hunns, the next Poſſeſſours of this Countrey; the Road or Thorough-fare from that time of thoſe barbarous Nations which out of Aſia made their Inroads on the Europæans. Having been ſucceſſively ſubdued by the Sclaves and Roſſes, this part hereof was conquered by Stephen, the firſt King of Hungary, ſurnamed the Saint; by whoſe perſwaſion and inducements they received the Goſpel. They were governed after this time, as a Member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy, whom they called the Vaivod of Tranſylvania, (the word Vaivod ſignifying as much as Præfectus Militiæ, or a Lord-Lieutenant;) a man, by reaſon of the greatneſs of his place and power, of moſt Authority in that Kingdom. The names and Succeſſion of theſe Vaivods, till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more clear and conſtant, in this order following.

The VAIVODS and PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1. John, ſurnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Vladiſlaus the IV. A man of great Valour and Renown, the great Defender of his Countrey againſt the Turks, whom he overthrew in many Battels, eſpecially in that of Maron, where he ſlew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.

2: Stephen, of the noble Family of Cattory, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungary, the Son of Huniades.

3. Stephen II. ſurnamed de Sepuſio, from the place of his Honour or Eſtate; not ſo much memorable for any thing as for being Father of Barbara, the Wife of Sigiſmund King of Poland, and of

4. John II. called alſo de Sepuſio, after the death of Lewis the II. choſen King of Hungary, of whom before amongſt the Kings of that Realm

1526 5. Americus, Biſhop of Veradium, made Vaivod by John de Sepuſio, on his taking of the Crown of Hungary; treacherouſly murthered, for not complying with the Turk, Anno 1534.

1540. 6. Stephen III. ſurnamed Maylat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus uſurped the Vaivodſhip, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that Dignity.

1541 7. Stephen IV. Son of John de Sepuſio the late King of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Tranſylvania, being then an Infant, (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungary not long before:) being incroached upon not long after by the ſaid Solyman, this Countrey was put into the hands of Ferdinand King of Hungary, other Lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.

1551 8. Stephen V. ſurnamed Dobus, for his Valour ſhewed againſt the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Countrey by the ſaid King Ferdinand. But Solyman, not liking that this Countrey ſhould be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the ſame (under the Vaſſalage of his Empire) upon one

9. John III. whoſe Family and ſurname I have no where found; a profeſſed Champion of the Turks, and as profeſſed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his Succeſſors in the Kingdom of Hungary.

10. Stephen VI. ſurnamed Battory, (of which Houſe he was) made Vaivod by the Turk; and afterwards, on the Commendation of Amurath the III. choſen King of Poland.

1575 11. Chriſtopher Battory, Brother of Stephen, on whoſe Election unto Poland he ſucceeded here, and was the firſt who, leaving the Title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Tranſylvania.

12. Sigiſmund, Son of Chriſtopher, ſhook off the Turkiſh Bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and ſlew ſome of their Baſſa's, (the Scanderbeg of the times he lived in.) But not being able to hold out againſt ſo potent an Adverſary, he reſigned his Eſtate to Rodolphus the Emperour, having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppelen and Ratibor in Sileſia, and an annual Penſion of 50000 Joachims. But finding his Penſion ill paid, he made a new Reſignation of it to 1599 13. Andrew Battory, Couſin of Sigiſmund, ſlain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whoſe death

1601 14. Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungary, is admitted Prince of Tranſylvania, on the ſecond Reſignation of Sigiſmund. But his Souldiers behaving themſelves with too great Inſolence, Sigiſmund was called back again, but never well ſettled: ſo that at laſt he was fain to leave the Countrey in the power of the Emperour, and retire to Prague, where in the year 1613 he died unlamented. In the mean time

1604 15. Juſtine, or Iſtivan, ſurnamed Botſcay, a Nobleman of this Countrey, made Prince hereof by the great Turk, and ſupported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans: and being followed by great Companies of thoſe of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperour Rodolphus a Confirmation of this Eſtate unto himſelf, but Liberty of Conſcience, and the free Exerciſe of Religion for both the Nations, preſently after which he died, Decemb. 30. 1606.

1607 16. Sigiſmund II. of the noble Family of Ragotzy, elected in the February following by the Tranſylvanians: but finding himſelf not able to make his Election good againſt the Emperour, and being unwilling to ſubject himſelf unto the Turks, after the end of one year he relinquiſhed the Government, and betook himſelf again to a private life.

1608 17. Gabriel Battory, of the Family of the former Princes, ſucceeded by the favour of Achmet the great Turk: after whoſe death, ſo welcome unto his Neighbours and Subjects,

1630 19. Stephen VII. ſurnamed Ragotzy, on the death of Bethlem Gabor, ſucceeded Prince, by the power and favour of the Turks, under whoſe Clientele and Protection he doth ſtill enjoy it, (as his Predeceſſors did before him) againſt all Pretenſions of the Empire and Realm of Hungary: as on the other ſide he is defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made Thrall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Euxine Sea, on the Weſt with Tranſylvania, on the North with the River Nieſter, the Tyras of Ptolemy and the Ancients, by which it is parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland: and on the South with Valachia.

It is ſo called, as ſome ſay, quaſi Mæotavia, from its nearneſs to the Fens of Mæotis; or rather from the Hunns and other People of thoſe Fens who poſſeſſed the ſame. Others conceive that it was firſt called Maurdavia, i. e. nigrorum Davorum Regio, the Countrey of the black Davi, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and ſome others;) ſo named from their Complexion, or the colour of their Caps and other Garments; as Nigra Ruſſia, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occaſion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it took this name from the River Moldava, which runneth through it; as the Moravians had that name from the River Morava. The Nature and Religion of the People we ſhall find in Valachia, whereof anciently it was reckoned for a part.

The Countrey is very fruitful in Corn, Wine, Graſs, and Wood; but more uſed for Paſturage then Tillage, by reaſon of the great want of people to manure the Land: by means whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they ſupply ſome parts of Poland and the populous City of Conſtantinople. And theſe they iſſue out in ſo great a number, that the Tenth peny, exacted by the Prince or Vaivod in the way of Cuſtom, amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are diſcharged of this Impoſt. But the main Trade of this Countrey is not driven by the Natives: the Port Towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Raguſian Merchants, who foreſtal the Markets, and barter all their Corn and Wine into Ruſſia and Poland; their Skins, Wax, Honey, powdered Beef, Pulſe and Butter into Conſtantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Countrey no fewer then 500 Ships laden with Corn, Victuals, and other Proviſions neceſſary to the life of man, are yearly ſent unto that City.

The Countrey is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 Engliſh miles: but ſo ill inhabited, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars, and Polonian Coſſacks, that certain Engliſh Gentlemen having in the year 1609 travelled at leaſt 240 miles in the Countrey, could meet with in all the way but nine Towns and Villages; and for an hundred miles together the Graſs ſo high, that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattel to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities or Towns of note; though it afford two Archbiſhops and two Biſhops Sees, Followers (as all the reſt of the People are) of the Traditions and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principal of thoſe which be, are, 1. Occazoma, Zucconia, or Soczava, the Vaivod's Seat. 2. Fucciania. 3. Fazeling; of which little memorable. 4. Kotiim, a place of great ſtrength, on the Borders of Poland, by ſome called Cochina; the ordinary Magazine of the Countrey. 5. Jaſſy, commonly called Yas, the chief Town for Wealth and Trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a ſtrong Town on the Euxine Sea. 7. Polada, near the Danow. 8. Bialigrod, ſituate on or near the River Tyras, now called Nieſter; a ſtrong Town againſt the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kilia, anciently called Achilleia ſituate on the Shore of the Euxine Sea, for the moſt part compaſſed round with the waters of it, and therefore ſaid by Ptolemy to be an Iſland. 10. Ac-Germen, of old called Aſprocaſtron, and Moncaſtrum, a very ſtrong Town on the ſame coaſt alſo. Both taken by Bajazet, the ſecond Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1485. But theſe three Towns are not ſo properly in Moldavia, at leaſt not in Moldavia properly ſo called, as in a little Province called Beſſarabia, lying on the Euxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks, in the year aforeſaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A Tract inhabited by the Beſſi in the times of Ptolemy, who being driven out of their Countrey by the Bulgarians, ſettled themſelves (as ſome ſay) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Boſnia.

The whole Countrey, following the Fortune of Tranſylvania and the reſt of Dacia; till the coming of the Sclaves and Roſſes, was for a while accounted part of the Ruſſian Empire, till the diſmembring of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was ſometime Homager to the Polanders, ſometime to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could find beſt Conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made Tributary to the Turks; but the Tribute at the firſt was very light and eaſie, not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperour, who aimed at more profitable Conqueſts, being loth to ſpend his Forces on ſo poor a Purchaſe as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his Son, finding how fit it lay for the more abſolute Command of the Euxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Beſſarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkiſh Province, Anno 1485, as before was ſaid; impoſing on the reſt an increaſe of the former Tribute, and ſo left it unto the diſpoſal of its natural Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vaſſals to the Turks, did many times riſe in Arms againſt them, aided therein ſometimes by the Hungarians, and ſometimes by the Polander; which laſt pretended to the Sovereignty and Chiefage of it. Bogdanus, Vaivod hereof in the time of Selimus the ſecond, uniting himſelf more cloſely with the Polonians, became thereby ſuſpected by the Turkiſh Tyrant; who with a great power chaſed him out of his Countrey, and gave the ſame unto one John, a Moldavian born, but bred up for the moſt part in the Turkiſh Court (where he renounced his Faith, and was circumciſed) under the yearly Tribute of 60000 Crowns. But John the new-made Vaivod was no ſooner ſettled, but he returned again to his firſt Religion, and for that cauſe grew leſs affected by the Turks. Which being obſerved by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he practiſed to obtain that Dignity for his Brother Peter; offering to double the ſaid Tribute, and to aſſiſt in Subjugation of the Countrey. The Turk, accepting of theſe Offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fell into Moldavia; and were ſo gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them eſcaped the Slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old Friend Czarnievicbe, and, againſt faith given, barbarouſly murthered by the Turkiſh Baſſa; Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, Anno 1574: the Vaivods from that time forwards being nominated by the Turkiſh Emperours, and governing as Subſtitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Aaron, one of the ſucceeding Vaivods, did ſhake off this Yoke, and confederated himſelf with Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania, and Michael Vaivod of Valachia, for Defence of themſelves and their Eſtates againſt that Enemy: yet being afterwards ſupplanted by Roſwan, one of his own ambitious Subjects, and that Confederacy disjoynted, it became ſubject firſt unto the Polonians, by the power and practice of Zamoiſkie, Chancellour of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turk, as before it was. And though the Polanders have ſince made uſe of ſome opportunities in impoſing Vaivods on this Countrey, in deſpite of the Turks: yet was it commonly to their own Loſs, little or no Benefit to the Moldavians, and in the end drew the whole Power of the Turks upon themſelves in the Reign of Oſman; they never ſince intermeddling in the Affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks diſpoſing; who receive hence ſome yearly Tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire Poſſeſſion of it, ſo long ſince aimed at by thoſe Tyrants.

VALACHIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Moldavia, and a Branch of the Iſter, or Danubius, bending towards the North; on the Weſt with Raſcia, on the North with Tranſylvania and ſome part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which it is parted from Servia and Bulgaria. Firſt called Flaccia, from one Flaccus a Noble Roman, who, on the Conqueſt hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colony; afterwards by corruption Vlachia, and at laſt Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Vlachia was at firſt of more large extent then it is at preſent, comprehending all Moldavia alſo: divided in thoſe times by a Ridge of Mountains into Ciſalpina, and Tranſalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and ſpecially ſo called) unto the other. The people of both, in token of their firſt Extraction, ſpeak a corrupt Latine or Italian Language; but in Matters of Religion follow the Dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, under whom all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs are governed by one Archbiſhop, and two Biſhops. In other things they partake generally of the Rudeneſs and Barbarity of thoſe Nations, which have ſince ſubdued them; being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the moſt part of Letters and all Liberal Sciences, not weaned perfectly (in ſo long time of their profeſſion of Chriſtianity) from the Superſtitions of the Gentiles, ſwearing by Jupiter and Venus, marrying and unmarrying at their pleaſures, much given to Magical Charms and Incantations, and burying with their Dead both Cloaths and Victuals, for their Relief in that long Journey to the other World.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles. The Countrey is for the moſt part plain and very fertile, affording ſtore of Cattel, a breed of excellent Horſes, Iron-mines, Salt-pits, and all Proviſions neceſſary to the life of man. Some Vines they alſo have, and not few Mines of Gold and Silver, more then for fear of the Turks, and other ill Neighbours they dare diſcover. They are begirt about with woody Mountains, which afford them Fewel; and very well watered with the Rivers of 1. Pruth, called anciently Hieraſus. 2. Stertius. 3. Fulmina. 4. Teltz. 5 Aluta, all of them falling into 6. the Danow, which in this Province, at the Influx of Fulmina, takes the name of Iſter. Yet is it not (at the preſent) very populous, the Spaciouſneſs and Fertility hereof conſidered, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Coſacks: their late long Wars againſt thoſe Nations and the Dutch having much decreaſed their former numbers, with which they ſo abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Countrey, in the year 1473, was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the Field for preſent Service.

Places of moſt note herein are, 1. Galacz, on the Influx of the River Pruth, or Hieraſus, into the Danubius; the water of which River is ſo unwholſome, that it cauſeth the Body to ſwell. 2. Treſcortum, not far from which they dig a Bituminous earth, ſo refined and pure, that uſually they make Candles of it inſtead of Wax. 3. Prailaba, by ſome called Brailovia, the Town of moſt Trade in all this Countrey, ſituate on the Danow, and defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle, fortified by Art and Nature, and furniſhed with a ſtrong Garriſon of Turks, as the Key of this Province, opening the Door unto the reſt. The Town was moſt cruelly deſtroyed and raſed to the ground, with an incredible Slaughter of the Inhabitants of all Sexes and Ages, for the ſpace of four dayes together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, ſpoken of before, at his firſt revolting from the Turks: but the Caſtle, in regard of the great ſtrength of it, was ſcarce attempted by him. 4. Teina, a Fortreſs of great ſtrength, but in the hands of the Turks alſo. 5. Zorza, corruptly for San-Georgio, ſeated on the Danow, with an Arm whereof the Caſtle of it is encompaſſed; garriſoned by the Turks, and by them held to be ſo ſtrong and ſo ſafe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigiſmund the Prince of Tranſylvania, Anno 1596, there were found in it 39 great pieces of Ordnance, with ſuch ſtore of Arms and Ammunition as might well have ſerved for a whole Kingdom. 6. Tergoviſta, or Tervis, ſometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks: once beautified with a fair and famous Monaſtery, by the Turks converted into a Fortreſs; environed with deep Trenches, ſtrong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great ſtore of Ordnance; but many times loſt and got again, according to the changes and chance of War. 7. Bucareſta, about a days journey from Tergoviſta, ſeated on the Danow, remarkable for two Bridges built near unto it. The one was of Boats, (the laying whereof took up no leſs then a whole months time) for the tranſporting of the Army of Sinan Baſſa againſt Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania before mentioned, and broken down by the ſaid Baſſa in his Flight, having been worſted in all places by the Tranſylvanian. The other was the work of the Emperour Trajan, in his War againſt Decebalus King of Dacia, built all of Stone, and laid on Piles and Arches of a wonderful greatneſs; 24 Piles or Pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebium, of old called Lycoſtomos, in vain beſieged by the Forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in perſon to ſubdue this petit Province. 9. Zarmizegethuſa, the Seat-royal of Decebalus King of Dacia, taken and deſtroyed by Trajan in his War againſt him; who, cauſing it to be repaired and more beautified then formerly, gave it the Privileges of Rome, and the name of Vlpia Trajana, which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire; now a ſmall Village called Vetzet. Some ſtones have been digged up hereabouts with this Inſcription, COLONIA. VLPIA. TRAJANA. AVG. DACIÆ. ZARMIS. which clearly ſhew as well the Dignity and eſteem as the Antiquity of the place, before Trajan's times.

This Province, as the reſt of Dacia on that ſide of the Danow, after the coming in of the Sclaves and Roſſes was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as thoſe of Tranſylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in Peace; till, ſenſible of the approaching Danger which the Conqueſt of moſt part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turks was like to bring them, the Vaivod of it in the time of Bajazet the Firſt paſſed over the Danow with his Forces, and having done great Spoil to the Turkiſh Territories, returned again unto his Countrey. Rather provoked then weakened with which Invaſion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched Field, compelling him to ſue for Peace, and to pay him Tribute. But Bajazet being not long after taken Priſoner by Tamerlane, and the Succeſſion controverted amongſt his Sons,the impoſed Tribute was with-held, till Mahomet, the fifth King of the Turks, having ſettled the Affairs of that tottering State, Anno 1417 enforced them to a new Compoſition, and the payment of all former Reckonings. The fortunate Succeſſes of Huniades in ſeveral Battels, induced them once more to change their Maſters, and to put themſelves under the Protection of the Hungarians, as they had been formerly: but they paid dear for it, their Country being made the Thoroughfare of the Turkiſh Forces in their Attempts upon that Kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquiſhed at the Battel of Caſſova by Amurath the ſecond, the accuſtomed Tribute was brought in, and the Turks ſatisfied for the preſent, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderbeg. Not long after, in the year 1462. Mahomet the Great undertook the Conqueſt of this Countrey,upon advertiſement that Wladus, the then Vaivod of it, intended to joyn with the Hungarians in ſome War againſt him: and finding how unprofitably he had ſpent his Forces in fighting againſt Woods,Mountains,and a waſted Country, he ſet up Dracala,the younger Brother of Wladus,to claim the Government; who, making a Party amonſt the people, and having the Turk for his Aſſiſtance and ſupport, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Eſtate, to be holden of him as a Vaſſal to the Turkiſh Empire. And it continued in this ſtate, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all Exactions impoſed upon them, till the Revolt of Sigiſmund the Prince of Tranſylvania, Anno 1595. at what time Michael, the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to ſhake off this Yoke, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common Safety. And though he held out longer againſt Turk and German then either of the other did, diſcomfited the Turks by his own proper Forces at the Battel of Nicopolis, vanquiſhed the Tranſylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto the Eſtate: yet, being at laſt outed of his Countrey by the Polanders, and another put into his place, he was ſhamefully ſlain in his own Tent, by the privity and conſent of Baſta, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperour, and King of Hungary. After whoſe death the Countrey, miſerably diſtracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperour Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Seignior, endured all the Spoil and Wreck which ſo calamitous a Competition could bring upon it: till in the end,the fortune of the Turks prevailing,the Valachians were conſtrained to ſubmit unto their Diſpoſal, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly; performing their accuſtomed Duties, and paying ſuch yearly Tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithſtanding, partly by their own natural Unquietneſs and partly by the ambition of ſuch perſons as contend for that Dignity, they have ſince been many times embroiled in Wars; never ſo quietly compoſed, but that a new Hope, or the Artifices of the Turkiſh Miniſters, ſtarts them into Action. By means whereof, when they have tired and ſpent themſelves in their own Combuſtions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkiſh Monarchy.

Of what Revenue theſe Provinces ſeverally were to their natural Lords, and of what ſeverally to the Turk, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they ſtood at the time of the Revolt ſo often mentioned, and they yielded one way with another into the Treaſury of the Grand Seignior no leſs then a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkiſh Hiſtory doth report it ſo. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the ſaid Revolt, did yearly yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 Horſes for ſervice, 10000 great Meaſures of Wheat, with as much Barley, and a wonderful proportion of Butter, Honey, and other Victuals; adding withal, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly Tribute. After which rate, the Eſtimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But ſince the Reduction of theſe Countries to their former Obedience, the Turks having been more moderate in their Exactions then they were before, for fear of ſtartling them to ſome new Engagement; whom they have brought to this Obedience and Conformity with ſuch a vaſt expence both of Blood and Treaſure as would have purchaſed the beſt Kingdom of Chriſtendom in the open Market. Inſomuch that the ordinary Tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the ſame Coin; beſides 1000 Horſes yearly ſent from both. Such Bribes and Preſents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being marchantable Ware, and wholly at the Turks diſpoſing, not being part of this Accompt.

RASCIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Valachia, on the Weſt with Hungary,on the North with Tranſylvania, and on the South with the River Danow; encompaſſed on three ſides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines Samus; and on the Eaſt divided from Valachia by the River Aluta. Called Raſcia from the Raſciani, a Sclavonian People, whom Ortelius placeth in this Tract, and from him Maginus. But here it is to be obſerved, that beſides this Countrey, the Raſcians held ſome Towns and Territories on the other ſide of the Danow, and amongſt others the ſtrong Town of Chryſonicum; whereof more anon.

The Countrey is poor enough, but the people poorer, oppreſſed in former times by the Servians, and of late by the Turks; which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occaſions, as commonly thoſe people are who give themſelves the hope of bettering thoſe Fortunes which they cannot make worſe. Places of moſt note here are, 1. Bodon, a Town of Trade, on the Danow, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia. 3. Covin. 4. Novebarde. 5. Severin, not far from which,betwixt it and Bucareſta, a Town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trajan's Bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella; of which little memorable.

Theſe Raſcians,as before is ſaid,were a Tribe of Sclaves, ſettled in this Countrey, at the time of their firſt ſpreading in the Eaſt, and here continuing ever ſince in poſſeſſion of it. Governed at firſt by their own Princes, whom, by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Deſpots; that being once the Title of the Heir apparent or deſigned Succeſſor of the Eaſtern Empire, as Cæſar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Monſieur in the ſame ſenſe in the Realm of France, to ſignifie the eldeſt Brother (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperours did affect new Titles, ſo that of Deſpot fell from one ſtep to another, till given at laſt unto the Governours of Provinces; as the Deſpot of Epirus, Peloponneſus, &c. and in the end was aſſumed by the ſeveral Princes of Raſcia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this Eſtate became united unto Servia, I am yet to ſeek: but ſure I am, it was united in the perſon of George Deſpot of Servia, and as a part of his Eſtate ſurprized by Amurath the ſecond, who boaſted his Succeſs therein, (in a Speech made unto his Souldiers at the Siege of Belgrade) notwithſtanding that he had to ſtrive with Hunger, Thirſt, Labour,and Deſperation. Nor have I found at what time or under whoſe Conduct they paſſed over Danubius, and there poſſeſſed themſelves of Chryſonicum, and ſome other Towns and Territories on that ſide of the River, which they ſtill retain, either ſurrounded by the Servians, or at leaſt intermingled with them; which makes ſome Writers of opinion that the Raſcians and the Servians are but one and the ſame People under divers names: to which conjecture their being ſubject to the ſame Prince gave ſome farther ground. But whenſoever they paſſed over, moſt probable it is, that, proving either troubleſom Neighbours, or unwelcome Gueſts, they gave occaſion to the Deſpots of Servia to make War upon them, and, having vanquiſhed them on that ſide of the River, to carry the War over unto this; till in the end the whole Countrey was made ſubject to them. Added to Servia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was ſaid before. But being more impatient of the Yoke then the Servians were, they did the Turks much miſchief many times, as they came in their way: never ſo much nor ſo effectually, as when Mahomet the III warred againſt the Hungarians; at what time they frequently diſtreſſed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the Proviſions of Arms and Victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Baſſa. After which at the time when Sigiſmund Prince of Tranſylvania had won ſo many noble Victories againſt the Turks, 10000 of theſe Raſcians, caſting off that Yoke, offered themſelves unto his Service. Theſe are the only memorable Actions which are told us of them; though this laſt was only the attempt of ſome private Adventurers, the whole Nation ſtill continuing in Obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the Fortunes of Servia, and having a Concernment on that ſide of the Water, we ſhall there ſay ſomething farther of them.

Thus have we ſeen when and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part ſubject, and in part tributary, to the Turks. It is now time to paſs over the Danow, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia Nova, or New Dacia; containing after our accompt four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to ſay, both Myſia's, Scythia, and Dardania, beſides the two Dacia's, Mediterranea and Ripenſis, interjected betwixt the two Myſia's, as before is ſaid: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkiſh Provinces, namely, the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria.

SERVIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Bulgaria, on the Weſt with Boſnia, and ſome part of the Lower Hungary, on the North with the Danubius, by which it is parted from Raſcia and ſome part of Valachia, on the South with Albania, and part of Macedon. It containeth all Myſia Superior, and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Serbi, or Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, of whom more hereafter.

This Countrey, with the neigbouring Raſcia and the modern Sclavonia, was firſt converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembred, between the years 860 and 890. of both which there is reſerved ſome ſpecial Monuments. For Methodius, having obtained both of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all Divine Offices in their natural Language, tranſlated the whole Bible into the Sclavonian Tongue, which ſtill they have among them in high eſteem. And Cyril is ſaid to have deviſed the Servian Character, not uſed in this Countrey only, (though here originally) but alſo in Raſcia, Bulgaria, Boſnia, Moldavia, and moſt parts of Ruſſia: which Character, from this Cyril, (or Chiuril, as they pronounce it) is ſtill called Chiurlizze.

The Countrey was very rich and fruitful before the Conqueſt of it by the Turks, well ſtored with Mines of Gold and Silver, eſpecially about Zerbenic, a ſtrong Town hereof. The people are rude and groſs, and much given to Wine; falſe of their Promiſes, and that upon ſlight occaſions, ſo that there is but little truſt to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, are, 1. Colubra, and 2. Lim, falling into the Savus. 3. Ibar, falling into the 4. Morava; as that into the Danow at Chryſonicum, or Chryſovectia, a ſtrong Town of the Raſcians. Principal Towns hereof, 1. Niſſa, the Neſſum, as I take it, of Ptolemy, by whom it is ſaid to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Countrey, and the Key thereof: beſieged and taken by Amurath, the third King of the Turks, Anno 1367. 2. Vidina, by the Turks called Kiratow, taken by Feriſbeg, in the beginning of Bajazet the firſt, and ever ſince the Seat of a Turkiſh Sanzack under the Beglerbeg or Baſſa of Temeſwar. 3. Cratova, and 4. Zerbenic, rich in Silver Mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Countrey. 5. Simandria, or Senderovia, by ſome called Spenderobe, by the Hungarian Zenderin, by the Turks Semender; ſituate on the Danow not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurath the II. Anno 1438. ſince governed by a Turkiſh Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novograd, in the Borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Caſtle. 7. Stoniburg (in Latine Stonibrigadum) the ordinary Seat of the Deſpots. 8. Priſden, ſaid by Mercator to be the Birth-place of the Emperour Juſtinian; moſt like to be Taureſium, a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the Birthplace of that Emperour, by whom it was repaired and fortified with four great Turrets, thence called Tetrapyrgon. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Lochrida, a Town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9. Scopi, by Ptolemy called Scupi. And 10. Ulpianum, firſt built by Trajan, whoſe forename was Ulpius; afterwards re-edified by the ſaid Juſtinian, and called Secunda Juſtiniana, (Juſtiniana Prima, being in Bulgaria:) now a poor Village called Pyrethi, as Lazius, or Czanadre, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhætiaria, by Ptolemy, for diſtinction ſake, called Rhætiaria Myſorum, then the chief City of the Mæſians, of which now no Ruines are remaining. 12. Raveniczen, the Vendenis of Ptolemy, but not elſe obſervable.

Beſides theſe Towns and many other of leſs note which properly belong to this Province of Servia, the Raſcians alſo hold ſome Towns on this ſide of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chryſonicum, or Chryſovectia, an old Town, almoſt wholly ruinated, till repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1449. who marking the convenient ſituation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the Fall or Influx of the River Morava, and how commodiouſly it ſtood both to command and to annoy the reſt of this Countrey, and for tranſporting of their Forces to the other ſide of that great River, made it their firſt work to poſſeſs themſelves of it, and have held it ever ſince with a very ſtrong Garriſon. Such other Towns as the Raſcians have on this ſide of the River, or of leſſer note, are looked on by our Authour but as Towns of Servia, (by the Deſpots whereof they were long ſince conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, ſuch as are moſt conſiderable in the ſtory of it, were the Baſtarnæ, the Dardani, and the Mæſi: the Tricorneſii and Picenſii, ſpoken of by Ptolemy, being either Branches of the Mæſii, or elſe an obſcure People not worth the looking after. Of theſe the Dardanians were moſt ancient, inhabiting near Mount Hæmus, on the Borders of Macedon; a barbarous People, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown; moſt miſchievous in their Attempts and Deſigns againſt it in the declining ſtate thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the ſpoils whereof they enriched themſelves. Inſomuch that Philip the Father of Perſeus, finding no other likely means to be rid of that Trouble, negotiated with the Baſtarnæ, a ſtrong and hardy Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own Dwellings, and come to him with their Wives and Children; promiſing to aſſiſt them in rooting out the Dardanians, and give them poſſeſſion of their Countrey. But Philip dying as the Baſtarnæ were in their March through Thrace, and no care taken by his Son to purſue the Buſineſs, they returned all home again, except 30000, which pierced into Dardania, and made their own Fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of Quarrel to the Romans againſt the Macedonian; ſo it occaſioned Perſeus, the Son of Philip, to make uſe of theſe Baſtarnæ againſt the Romans, at whoſe requeſt 10000 Horſe and as many foot paſſed over the Danow, under the Conduct of Claudicus, a King amongſt them. But finding that Perſeus was too ſtrait-laced to part with Money for their pay, they returned again, forraging the Countrey as they paſſed. But whether they paſſed over that River, or mingled themſelves with the reſt of their Nation, who upon Philip's invitation had before come over, that I do not find. Howſoever, coming by this means acquainted with the ſweets of this Countrey, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardanians, or bordering near them; inſomuch as Tacitus for the moſt part joyns them both together, either as the ſame, or neigbouring Nations: firſt vanquiſhed and added to the Roman Empire by C. Curio Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the Civil Wars raiſed by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiatores; the Myſians, or the Mœſi, being broken at the ſame time alſo, Anno U. C. 681. As for the Mœſi, being the laſt and greateſt of theſe Nations, they were moſt probably a Colony of the Myſians of the leſſer Aſia, anciently called Myſi, and the Countrey Myſia, as thoſe Aſians were, and as thoſe Europæans are by the Greek Writers generally, and by Florus and ſome others amongſt the Latines; though after, for diſtinction ſake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally moſt Latine Authours, give them the name of Mœſi. A fierce and ſavage People they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Authour calleth them, more barbarous then commonly the Barbarians were: but, for all that, ſubdued by M. Licinius Craſſus in the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, who overcame them in two Battels, and after vanquiſhed the Baſtarnæ, and their King Deldo, whom he killed in fight; the Countrey being reckoned after that as a Roman Province. It continued in this eſtate till the Fall of the Eaſtern Empire, when it was ſubjected by the Sclavi or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the diviſion of the Spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, contractedly called Sorbi, and at laſt Serbi, Servii, and the Countrey Servia. It was reduced again to the Obedience of the Eaſtern Emperours by Baſilius Porphyrogenetus, Anno Ch. 1000. or thereabouts; but more abſolutely conquered by John and Manuel Comnenus, two of his Succeſſors: but ſo as they were ſuffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Deſpots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Inriched with the Conqueſt and addition of Raſcia, (the certain time whereof I have no where found) they were firſt ſet on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Deſpot, from whom Amurath the firſt Took the Town of Niſſa, being the chief of all this Countrey; provoked thereto by the great Forces which the Servian and Bulgarian Deſpots had raiſed againſt him for the Siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus, terrified with this Loſs, made his Peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open War, in which he was overcome and ſlain in the Plains of Caſſova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus ſucceeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroiled in War amongſt themſelves by the Sons of Bajazet. But that Difference being once compoſed, and Mahomet abſolutely ſettled on his Father's Throne; the Turks began again to purſue this Quarrel: which George the Son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the ſecond, Son of Mahamet, paying the Turk an yearly Tribute, and giving him his Daughter Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this Alliance did not ſo well unite their Affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Chriſtian Neighbours) nor ſo well ſettle his Eſtate, but that Amurath in fine diſpoſſeſſed him firſt of Raſcia, and afterwards of Servia alſo, for letting Huniades eſcape, whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was neceſſitated to reſtore Servia again, upon the Peace made with Vladiſlaus the King of Hungary; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, ſoon poſſeſſed himſelf of it. For Lazarus, the youngeſt of George's Sons, having deprived Stephen and George his elder Brethren (whoſe eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them uncapable of the Government) of the Principality, compelled them to ſeek to Mahomet for Aid. But dying whilſt theſe matters were in agitation, his Widow put her ſelf and her three Sons, Peter, John, and Martin, under the Protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren ſtill ſoliciting the Turks againſt her) held the State awhile; till the people, finding no aſſurance in that kind of Government, and weary of the daily Harms they received from the Turks, yielded themſelves abſolutely to the Power of Mahomet, about the year 1460, continuing ever ſince a Province of the Turkiſh Empire.

BULGARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Euxine Sea, on the Weſt with Servia, on the North with the River Danow, which is here in the Eaſt part called Iſter, on the South with Thrace: called formerly by the name of Myſia Inferior, as lying lower then the other on the courſe of that River; as Servia, lying up the Water, was called Myſia Superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cæſars in the Empire of Diocletian, born in this Countrey near the Borders of Thrace, not far from the City Sardica; who therefore, in the Martyrologies of the middle Times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian People, who in the year 566. poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

The Countrey for the moſt part is full of ſharp and rugged Hills, Branches of the great Mountain Hæmus, which divide it from Thrace, and ſpread themſelves over all this Province, inſomuch that even the Mid-lands of it are rough and ſtony: and though the lower parts have ſome Plains and Valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Deſarts; the moſt unpleaſant and leaſt peopled part of both the Dacia's. The Inhabitants hereof, in ſome conformity to the Countrey, are patient of all Toil and Labour, and not eaſily tired; but nothing is more troubleſom then their Converſation: more full of Courage then of Valour; their Courage not proceeding by the rules of Reaſon, but iſſuing only out of Brutiſhneſs, or a natural Fierceneſs.

They firſt received the Chriſtian Faith towards the latter end of Juſtinian the 2. who died in the year 713, Trebellius being then their Prince; afterwards by the perſuaſion of Leo the 4. ſurnamed Porphyrogenetus, about the year 789. But thoſe Converſions being but partial and for private ends, they relapſed ſhortly after to their former Gentiliſm; not totally gained unto the Goſpel till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace 860. Subject ſince that unto the Juriſdiction of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; but not without great oppoſition of the Popes of Rome, who laid a Claim unto them.

Places of moſt note in it are, 1. Axium, or Axiopolis, on the Banks of Danubius, which from this Town begins to take the name of Iſter. It is now called Colonamich, of no great fame otherwiſe. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinigutia, now Drimago, ſituate alſo on the Iſter, oppoſite to the Influx of Hieraſus, and the Town of Galacz. 3. Meſembria, ſituate on the Euxine, and ſtill retaining the old name; in Strabo, by ſome errour of the Tranſcribers, called Menebria. 4. Marcianopolis, on the Iſter or Danubius alſo, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his Siſter, whence it had the name: in vain beſieged by the Goths at their firſt Irruptions on this Country; and afterwards much mentioned in the Stories of that warlike People, for many Bickerings and ſome great Battels they had near it with the Emperour Claudius, in one of which they were overthrown by him with a mighty Slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the ſame Trajan on the Danow, at the Fall of the River Jatre, at his return from the Conqueſt of Dacia, whence was the occaſion of the Name; the word Nicopolis ſignifying the City of Victory; ſufficiently memorable for the Founder of it, more for the many great Battels fought near unto it; whereof two were principal. The firſt, that of Sigiſmund the Emperour and King of Hungary, beſieging it with an Army of 130000 Chriſtians in the time of Bajazet the firſt, (whoſe Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria:) the iſſue of which Siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raiſe the Siege obtained the Victorie, with the loſs of 60000 Turks; the Army of the Chriſtians being wholly routed, 20000 ſlain, all the reſt almoſt taken Priſoners, and the young Emperour forc'd to flie by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Conſtantinople, afterwards to Rhodes, and at laſt, after 18 months abſence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the Forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable Victorie, and, as the Fruits thereof, ſacked the City it ſelf, carrying thence great Spoil and Bootie, and infinite multitudes of People; with ſome whereof he made up his Army, ſending the reſt to inhabit and manure the void and deſart places of his own Dominions. 6. Sophia, called Tibiſcum in the time of Ptolemie, repaired by the Emperour Juſtinian, who gave it this name, from a famous and magnificent Temple founded and dedicated by him unto S. Sophia. The ordinary Reſidence in theſe late times of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, who hath the chief Command of Europe under the Grand Seigniour. Once taken by Huniades, and by him at the command of Vladiſlaus King of Hungary, burnt to the ground; but afterwards repaired, and more ſtrongly fortified then it had been formerly. 7. Varna, anciently called Dionyſiopolis, ſituate on the Euxine Sea, near the Borders of Thrace: remarkable for the great Defeat there given the Chriſtians, the firſt Flight of Huniades from the face of the Turks, and the death of Vladiſlaus King of Hungary, ſpoken of before. 8. Sunium, 9. Pezechium, 10. Calacrium, 11. Galatea, and 12. Macropolis; all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Varna, and loſt again upon the iſſue of that Battel. 13. Siliſtria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary Abode of a Turkiſh Baſſa: delivered to Amurath the firſt by Saſmenos, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to ſave thereby the reſt of his Country. 14. Paraſtlaba, or Perſtlaba, the ancient Seat of the Kings of Bulgaria, till the taking of it by John Zimiſces Emperour of Conſtantinople, who cauſed it to be called Johannopolis: but it ſoon loſt that new Name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peretalaw. 15. Ternova, the uſual Seat or Reſidence of the later Princes of this Country at the Conqueſt of it by the Turks. 16. Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Huniades in the courſe of his Victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cauſe of much War to the Chriſtians there: ſuppoſed to be built in or near the place where once ſtood the old City of Oeſcus, the principal Town of the Triballi, called therefore Oeſcus Triballorum; though ſome will have that City to be now called Ilida. 17. Venuzina, a Town of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt pieces taken by the Turks. 18. Caſſova, fatal to the Chriſtians, who in the Plains hereof had two main Defeats. The firſt by Amurath the firſt, who here diſcomfited Lazarus the Deſpot of Servia, and the greateſt Army that the Chriſtians ever raiſed againſt the Turks: Lazarus himſelf being ſlain in the Fight, and Amurath himſelf ſhortly after the Battel ſtabbed in the Belly by one Miles Cobelitz, a wounded and half-dead Souldier, as he was taking a view of the dead Bodies which lay there in heaps. The laſt by Amurath the ſecond to the famous Huniades, whom he here diſcomfited after a cruel Fight continuing three days together; in which were ſlain 17000 Chriſtians, and amongſt them the greateſt part of the Hungarian Nobility; Huniades put again to flight, and forced to ſome Extremities to preſerve his life: the Turks buying this great Victory with the loſs of 40000 men, as themſelves confeſſed. The place in which theſe Fights were fought, called the Plains of Caſſova, extendeth 20 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, incompaſſed round with pleaſant Mountains, in the form of an Amphitheatre; as if it were deſigned by Nature for a Stage of action. 19. Doroſtorum, by ſome of the Ancients called Rhodoſtolon, the Seat in Ptolemie's time of the Firſt Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Towns which the Roſſes or Ruſſians had in this Country: from whom it was taken by John Zimiſces the Eaſtern Emperour, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinate. 20. Achridus, the Birth place of Juſtinian, by whom it was beautified and enlarged, and called Juſtiniana Prima: who, raiſing the Dioceſe of Dacia into a Prefecture, placed here a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, (which honour it doth ſtill retain, the Biſhop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia) and a Præfectus Prætorio for Affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called l' Ochrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acre, by the Turks called Giuſtandil: a diſtinct Principate of it ſelf in in the time of Amurath the firſt, and by him made tributary at his firſt War with this Country.

And here it is to be obſerved, that thoſe parts of this Country which lie next to the Euxine Sea had anciently the name of Pontus, as had alſo ſome parts of Aſia minor which bordered on the ſame Sea alſo; and that the City of Tomi, as Ptolemie, or Tomos, as Pliny calleth it, to which Ovid was baniſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar, was a City of this Europæan Pontus, and not of the Aſian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemie placed amongſt the Cities of Mæſia in- ferior, and by Ovid on the Weſt or left ſide of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by theſe Lines of his:

Cùm Maris Euxini poſitos ad læva Tomitas
Quærere me læſi Principis ira jubet.

That is to ſay;

My wronged Prince's Wrath commands me 'bide
At Tomos, on the Euxine's Weſtern ſide.

The place is at this day called Tomiſwar, according to Cœlius Calcagninus: but others would have it to be the ſame which is now named Kiovia, in the ſame Tract alſo; not far from which is ſaid to be a Lake called to this day Owidow Jezcocoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cauſe he was hither baniſhed is not yet agreed on. Some ſay it was for the unlawful Pleaſures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours Daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorum under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had ſeen Auguſtus himſelf unnaturally uſing the company of the ſame Julia, his Daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him: and that he alludeth hereunto in his Book de Triſtibus, ſaying, Cur aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumina feci? &c. A Crime of which I dare not think that noble Emperour to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatſoever was the true reaſon of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of thoſe laſcivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi, tending to the Debauchment of Youth and Corruption of Manners, which he in divers places of his Works acknowledgeth for the cauſe thereof.

But to return unto the buſineſs of this Countrey. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were towards the Eaſt the Troglodytæ, dwelling near the Mouth or Fall of the River Peuce into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Peucini, inhabiting on the very Mouth of it; and in a little Iſland oppoſite thereunto, called alſo Peuce, now Pizina, the Cribizi, Piarenſii and Dimenſii, the Weſtern parts being wholly taken up by the Triballi, the moſt potent Nation of them all, who alone had the happineſs to vanquiſh Philip King of the Macedonians. For Philip having, or pretending, a Quarrel againſt Matæas a King of the Sarmatians, entred his Countrey, overthrew him in a ſet Fight; carried with him great Booties, and among other things 20000 Mares for Breed, which he took in the Battel; it being the Cuſtom of the Scythians and Sarmatians to uſe Mares only in their Wars, becauſe their not ſtopping in the midſt of a Race to piſs could be no impediment to them in their Flight. In his return homeward theſe Triballi deny him paſſage through their Countrey, unleſs they might partake of the Spoils. This being denied, they fall from words to blows, and next to a pitch'd Field. In which Fight Philip was wounded with an Arrow, which, paſſing through his thigh, nailed him to his Saddle; his Horſe being galled with the Wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frighted Macedonians ſeeing, and ſuppoſing him dead, fled out of the Field, leaving all their Spoils to the Triballi, as if they had been ſent out onely to be their Receivers. So true an Obſervation is it, that the very Life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in the Veins of the General or ſupreme Commander. Over-topped after this by the Mæſi, or mingled with them, they were firſt broken by the Romans under the Conduct of C. Curio Scribonius, ſpoken of before; the abſolute Conqueſt of them and the reſt of the Mæſians being reſerved for the times of Auguſtus Cæſar. By him, or his Succeſſors, the whole Countrey of the Mæſians being caſt into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mæſia inferior, that, lying Weſtward up the Water, being called Mæſia ſuperior, for diſtinction ſake. By the Emperour Aurelianus the Dacians, being forced from the other ſide of the Danow by the Barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their Fury, were planted here betwixt both the Myſia's, divided afterwards into two Provinces taken out of the other, Mediterranea, and Ripenſis; which, with the help of the higher Myſia, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Dioceſe of Dacia, as before was ſaid. The reſidue hereof, now paſſing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces alſo; another Province being taken out of the Eaſt parts of the lower Mæſia, lying betwixt the River Phaniſſus and the moſt Northern Branch of the Iſter, which they called Scythia, becauſe the Aroteres, a Scythian People, did once poſſeſs it; the Romans ambitiouſly affecting to be thought the Conquerours of that unconquerable Nation. Succeſſively by the Goths and Hunns was this Countrey taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Juſtinian, who had here his Officers which were ſubordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Dioceſe they properly and of right belonged.

But long they held not in that State; the Sclavonians firſt, and after the Bulgarians, being Maſters of them. Of the firſt of theſe enough hath been ſaid elſewhere. Theſe later being a Scythian People, inhabiting on the Banks of the River Volga, were at firſt called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: though ſome conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation: but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anaſtaſius they made their firſt Sally into the Provinces of the Empire, foraging Illyricum and Thrace: afterward, in the Reign of Heraclius, they were hired by Coſrhoes the Perſian (with many other Barbarous Nations) to beſiege Conſtantinople. In the Reign of Conſtantine ſurnamed Pogonatus, conquering or caſting out the Sclaves, they planted themſelves in theſe Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a ſum of mony, from making any farther Inroad into his Dominions. From this time forward we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians: the firſt of which after their ſettling in theſe parts was Trebellius, or Trebellis, as ſome call him, the firſt Chriſtian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Juſtinian the Second was firſt reſtored unto the Empire, of which he had been outed by Abſimarus; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to flie unto Conſtantinople, on ſome Breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eaſtern Emperours, they aided them againſt the Saracens, then beſieging the Imperial City; of whom they ſlew 22000 as they were foraging the Countrey: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenetus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whoſe perſwaſion Telericus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptiſm; and thereupon was honoured by him with a Wife of the Imperial Family, and the honourable Title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many Privileges indulged them by the Conſtantinopolitans, not uſually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of Gold, their Tiar or Cap of Silk, and their red Shooes, for their Regal (which were alſo the Imperial) Ornaments. To theſe Kings alſo, and to theſe only, did the Greek Emperours allow the Title of Βασιλεὺς, as being merely Imperial. Other Kings they called Ῥέγες, from the Latine word Reges. Inſomuch that when Baſilius Macedo had received Letters from Pope Adrian the ſecond, wherein Lewis the Second the Weſtern Emperour was called Baſileus; he raſed out that Imperial Attribute, and diſpatched an Embaſſie to Lewis, wherein he challenged it at his his own peculiar Epithet. Some Quarrels after falling out, Crunus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus, Succeſſor to the Empreſs Irene, invadeth Thrace, and, taking the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his Tent, and worſteth Michael (who ſucceeded) in the open Field; Meſembria, a principal City of this Countrey, being taken and ranſacked by him. But Bogor, of a nother temper, not onely did receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which many of his Predeceſſors had intermitted; but brought his Subjects (who rebelled on the Change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquiſhed by him) to the ſame Faith alſo: gratified for that cauſe by Theodora the Empreſſe with ſome large Acceſſion unto his Eſtate. After long Wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the Fortune of the Conſtantinopolitan did at laſt prevail: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his Souldiers taken and deprived of ſight, and the Country conquered by Baſilius the ſecond, ſurnamed Porphyrogenetus, Anno 1015, from that time Tributary to the Empire; to which they did good ſervice in the time of Conſtantinus Ducas, uſing their Help againſt the Vzi, a new Swarm of Scythyans, paſſing over the Iſter with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and waſting Macedon and Greece. The like did John, another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks againſt the Latines, whom they overthrew with a great Slaughter, Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople being taken Priſoner, ſent in Bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murthered, Anno 1206. Nor were they wanting to aſſiſt them againſt the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the Recovery whereof they raiſed a great and puiſſant Army, unfortunately diſcomfitted by the Forces of Amurath the firſt Anno 1369. Provoked with which Invaſion, Amurath, having ſettled his Affairs in Aſia, with an army of 30000 falleth into Bulgaria; takes divers Places of importance, and prevailed ſo far, that Saſmenos the laſt Prince hereof, wrapping his Winding-ſheet about him, to ſhew that he had deſerved Death, proſtrates himſelf moſt abjectly at the Tyrant's feet, offering to put Siliſtria (his ſtrongeſt City) into his poſſeſſion. For not performance of which Offer, his Country is again invaded, and moſt part of it taken from him; he being permitted to enjoy the reſt vpon hard Conditions, as Vaſſal and Tributary to the Turk. But Bajazet, Amurath's Succeſſor, not content herewith, picked a Quarrell with him, and made an abſolute Conqueſt of Bulgaria, converting it into a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, Anno 1396. In which ſtate it hath ever ſince continued, governed by three Turkiſh Sanzacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanzacks reſiding at Nicopolis, Siliſtria, and Sophia, in which laſt the Beglerbeg himſelf doth ſometimes reſide.

There are in DACIA

Archbiſhops. Biſhops.

And ſo much for DACIA.

Mount Hæmus.

BEfore we enter into Greece, we muſt croſſe MOUNT HÆMUS, a Ridge of Hills extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick, and thereby ſeparating Greece both from Dacia and Sclavonia. They are ſo high and Subject to the Weather, that Stratonicus, an old Græcian, did uſe to ſay, that eight moneths of the Year it was always cold, for the other four, Winter. It was affirmed by ſome of the ancient Writers, that from one of the higheſt Heads hereof as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been diſcerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reaſon, hath been called in queſtion. But out of doubt, from ſome one Top or Summit of it there is ſo full a Proſpect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Perſeus taking a ſurvey of the Site of theſe Countries, poſitis per abrupta Caſtris, &c. as the Storie hath it, was able to make choice of the fitteſt places for Forts and Caſtles, whereby to lock up all the paſſages againſt his Enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace it is ſo rough and craggy, that it is not to be paſſed but at two places onely. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be ſeen a mighty ſtrong Gate built of great ſquare Stone, by which the Paſſage that way was either opned or ſhut at the pleaſure of them who had the keeping of the ſame, with a ſmall Force exceeding eaſily defended againſt puiſſant Armies. The other, being ſituate near a little River by the Bulgarians called Saltiza, not altogether ſo ſtreight and narrow as the other, but riſing high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous Precipeces, is alike impaſſable; defenſible at eaſe, and without any great danger; as was experimentally found by the famous Huniades, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his Forces this way for the Siege of Adrianople. Thoſe parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though ſomewhat opener, are not much eaſier of aſcent; the Paſſages through the broken Rocks and Precipices being very difficult, and not eaſily maſtered: inſomuch that when Perſeus, the laſt King of Macedon, had fortified the Streights hereof againſt the Romans, non reliquiſſe aditum niſi è Cœlo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (ſaith Florus) that there was no paſſage left for any Forces, unleſs they fell immediately from the Heavens themſelves.

This great and rockie Chain of Hills, as they were vehemently expoſed to Wind and Weather, ſo were they deſtitute of thoſe Commodities which were either comfortable, or indeed merely neceſſarie to the Life of man: which made the Paſſage over them in a manner impoſſible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of Cold and Hunger. Yet were they not left deſolate and void of People, eſpecially in theſe ſides hereof which lay next to Greece; but moſt eſpecially in thoſe parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the Spurs and Branches of the Hils ſpreading far and wide and taking up a great part of the Country, occaſioned the Romans, in the Diviſion of the Dioceſe of Thrace into ſeveral Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mœſia by the name of Hæmimontum, or Hæmimontana. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Vſcudama, and Anchialus: the principal Governour thereof being a Roman Preſident. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Errour in the common Impreſſions of the Code, Lib. VII. Tit. 62. Leg. 23. where we find Hæmi montem, for Hæmimontum; the firſt being the name onely of the Mountain, and the latter (which is there meant) of the Roman Province.

But to return unto the Mountain. There is another of this name in Theſſalie, mentioned (or miſtook for this) by Servius in his Notes on the firſt Book of the Georgicks; on the Top whereof was ſaid to be the Habitation of Mars, at the Bottom the moſt pleaſant Valley of Tempe: ſo called from Hæmus, the Son of Boreas and Orithyia, amongſt the Poets. And poſſibly, to diſtinguiſh this from that of Theſſalie, Ptolemy and others call it Æmus, without the Aſpirate: though it may as well be that there are others of this name, as that this is called in divers places or in divers Authours by other Names; one part hereof being called Scombrus by Ariſtotle, another Scombrus by Thucydides, and by Laonicus the whole called Praſobus. The like may be obſerved at the preſent alſo, Piuetus calling it by the name of Catena Mundi, a great part whereof it links together; Cuſpinianus Coſtegnazzo, Lazius Kriviczne, the Italians Mont Argentaro, the French Monte de Caſtegnao, the Sclavonians Cumoniza, and the Turks Balkan. Which I have therefore here obſerved for the Reader's ſake, that, meeting any of theſe names in the Stories either of the ancient or modern Times, he may know what Hills or Mountains are intended by them. Which ſaid, I now paſs on to Greece, the way being thus prepared and laid open to me.

GREECE, in the preſent Latitude and Extent thereof, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Propontick, Helleſpont, and Ægæan Seas; on the Weſt with the Adriatick; on the North with Mount Hæmus, which parteth it from Bulgaria, Servia, and ſome part of Illyricum; and on the South with the Sea Ionian. So that it is in a manner a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland, environed on three ſides by the Sea, on the fourth onely united to the reſt of Europe.

But this is onely in relation to the preſent Extent hereof, the name being anciently reſtrained within narrower Bounds. Confined at firſt to Attica and the parts adjoyning; ab Iſthmi anguſtiis Hellas incipit, as it is in Plinie: and it took the name of Hellas from Hellen, the Son of Deucalion; as that of Greece, or Græcia, from Græcus the Son of Cecrops, the firſt King of Athens. Communicated afterwards to Peloponneſus, then to Theſſalie alſo: and finally, when the Macedonian Empire had enlarged it ſelf over the petit Commonwealths and Eſtates hereof, it came to be communicated to that Country alſo. The People for this cauſe are known by divers names, by ſome called Achivi, by others Myrmidones, ſometimes Pelaſgi, Danai, Argivi, &c. But the name whereby they are beſt known in Sacred Writers is that of Ἕλληνες, ſo called from Hellas, the more proper and genuine name of Greece in the ſtricteſt notion and acception. A name uſed frequently and familiarly in the Book of God, both abſolutely, to denote this Nation, as where it is ſaid, σοφίαν Ἕλληνες ζητοῦσι, that the Greeks ſeek wiſedom, 1 Cor. 1. 22. and relatively, as in oppoſition to the Jews, the Barbarians, and Helleniſts or Græcizing Jews. Firſt with relation to the Jews, and then it ſignifieth the whole Body of the Gentiles generally, of which the Græcians were the moſt eminent and famous people as Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον ϗ Ἕλληνι to the Jew firſt and alſo to the Gentiles, Rom. 2. 9, 10. Give none offence, ϗ Ἰουδαίοις ϗ Ἕλλησι neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 10. 32. and elſewhere frequently. In which, and all other places of that kind, where the Antitheſis lieth between the Jews and other Nations, we are to underſtaud the Gentiles, the whole Body of them; though many times our Tranſlators, I know not why, render it literally the Greeks; as Rom. 1. 16. and 10. 12. &c. 2ly. with reference to all other Nations not ſo well verſed in the Learning and Civilities of that Age as the Græcians were, whom by a common name of ſcorn they called Barbarians: according unto that of Strabo, Barbaræ ſunt omnes Nationes præter Græcos; the Romans themſelves, though then the great Lords of the World, being included in the reckoning. And ſo the word is taken Rom. 1. 14. I am a Debtor, ſaith S. Paul, Ἕλλησι ϗ Βαρβάροις both to the Greeks and the Barbarians, to the wiſe and unwiſe; in which as well the Romans, as thoſe of other Nations, have the name of Barbarians. Laſt of all, for the Græcizing Jews, whom the Vulgar Latine called Græcos, and our Engliſh Græcians: they were ſuch of the Jews who, living diſperſed amongſt the Gentiles, uſed the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, making that the Canon both for Life and Doctrine. which difference betwixt them and the Jews inhabiting in Judæa, who kept themſelves unto the Scriptures in their Mother-tongue, and uſed the Hebrew onely in all Sacred actions, occaſioned many Jars amongſt them, which ſometimes brake out into open Violence; inſomuch as R. Eliezer brake into the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Hieruſalem, and therein committed many Outrages. Of this Unfriendlineſs between them mention is made Act. 6. 1. where it is ſaid, that there aroſe a murmuring of the Græcians againſt the Hebrews, &c. In which place, though the Engliſh and Vulgar Latine uſe the name of Græcians, yet ought they more properly to be rendred Helleniſts, or Græcizing Jews, as in all other places, viz. Acts 9. 29. and 11. 20. &c. where they are colled Ἑλληνισταὶ, and not Ἕλληνες, in the Greek Originals.

But to proceed to our Diſcription of the Country: we find it ſituate in the Northern Temperate Zone, under the fifth and ſixth Climates, the longeſt Day being 15 hours; inhabited by a People which were once brave men of War, ſound Scholars, addicted to the love of Vertue and civil Behaviour; a Nation once ſo excellent, that their Precepts and Examples do ſtill remain as approved Rules and Tutors, to inſtruct and direct the man that endeavoureth to be vertuous: famous for Government, affectors of Freedom, every-way noble. For which Vertues in themſelves, and want of them in others, all their Neighbours and remote Nations were by them ſcornfully called Barbarians barians: a name now moſt fit for the Græcians themſelves, being an unconſtant People, deſtitute of all Learning, and the means to obtain it, Univerſities; uncivil, riotous, and ſo lazie, that for the moſt part they endeavour their Profit no farther then there Belly compells them; and ſo perfidious withall in all their Dealings, eſpecially towards the Weſtern Chriſtians, that it is grown into a Proverb amongſt the Italians, Chi fida in Grego, ſara intrigo, i. e. He that truſts to a Greek is ſure to be couzened. When they meet at Feaſts or Banquets, they drink ſmall Draughts at the beginning; which by degrees they increaſe, till they come to the height of Intemperancy: at which point when they are arrived, they keep no rule or Order; whereas before to drink out of one's turn was accounted a point of Incivility. Hence as I believe, ſprung our By-word, As merry as a Greek, and the Latine word Græcari.

The Women for the moſt part are brown-complexioned, exceedingly-well-favoured, and exceſſively amorous. Painting they uſe very much, to keep themſelves in grace with their Husbands; for when they once grow wrinkled, they are put to all the Drudgeries of the Houſe. Both Sexes generally in their Habit and outward Garb apply themſelves to the State under which they live; ſuch as are ſubject to the Turk conforming unto the Dreſs and Faſhions of the Turks, as thoſe who live under the Venetians do to that of Venice.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by S. Paul, invited by the Spirit to come over into Macedonia, Acts 16. 9, 12. paſſing from thence to Theſſalonica, the chief City of Mygdonia, ch. 17. 1. from thence to Athens in Achaia, v. 15, 16. then unto Corinth, the Metropolis of Peloponneſus, ch. 18. 1. watering the greateſt part of Greece with the Dew of Heaven, and planting Biſhops in moſt Churches where he preached the Goſpel; as Dionyſius (the Areopagite) at Athens, Ariſtarchus at Theſſalonica, Epaphroditus at Philippi, Silas at Corinth, and Titus in the Iſle of Crete. The like he did in many other Countreys alſo accounted Members of the Greek Church, though not of Greece. the name of the Greek Church extending over all the Provinces of the Eaſtern Empire, governed by the 4 Patriarchs, 1. of Alexandria, who preſided over Ægypt and Arabia; 2. of Hieruſalem, whoſe Patriarchate (erected onely in regard of our Saviour's Paſſion in that City, and the great opinion which by that means accrued unto it) confined within the Bounds of Palæſtine; 3. of Antioch, whoſe Juriſdiction contained all Syria, Armenia, Cilicia, and the Iſle of Cyprus, and whatſoever elſe was within the Dioceſe of the Orient; and 4. of Conſtantinople, to whoſe charge were committed all the other Provinces of the Greek Church, as Greece, Ruſſia, Dacia, Sclavonia, part of Poland, and all the Iſlands in the Adriatick, Ionian and Ægæan Seas, together with all Aſia minor, and the Iſles thereof, (except onely the Provinces of Cilicia and Iſauria) and the Countreys lying on both ſides of Pontus Euxinus and Palus Mæotis. The reaſons of the large increaſe of whoſe Juriſdiction, confined at firſt within the Dioceſe of Thrace, were, 1. the reputation of being Seated iu the Imperial City, which drew after it (by a Decree of the Council of Chalcedon) all the Provinces of Aſia, minor, (Cilicia and Iſauria excepted onely;) 2. the voluntary ſubmiſſion of the Græcians upon their Separation from the Church of Rome. by which all Greece, Macedon, Epirus, the Iſle of Crete, and all the Iſlands in the Ægæan and Ionian Seas, which formerly had no Superiour but their own Primate, the Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, became ſubject unto them; 3. the diligence of the Patriarch hereof in converting by his Suffragan Biſhops and other Miniſters the Ruſſians, Bulgarians and Sclavonians, to the Faith of Chriſt, which made thoſe people to look upon Conſtantinople as their Mother-Church; and 4. the Piety and Care of the later Patriarchs, in ſupplying with new Paſtors and Miniſters thoſe parts and Provinces of the Weſt which, being conquered by the Turk, had been forſaken by their old Clergy and left like Sheep without a Shepherd.

And yet this Church, though thus extended and enlarged in the outward Members, is very much ſtreightned and impaired at home; the Country being thinly peopled, and many of thoſe people trained up from their infancy in the Mahometan Law. So that it is a greater wonder that there ſhould be any remainders of Chriſtianity left amongſt them, then that the open Profeſſors of it ſhould be ſo few; the Tyrannie of the Turks on the one ſide, and the Temptations of Preferment upon the other, being rightly pondered. For who could look to finde twenty Churches of Chriſtians in Conſtantinople the Seat and ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Emperours? or that in Salonichi, or Theſſalonica, there ſhould be 30 Chriſtian Churches, and but three Turkiſh Moſquits? that the Primate of this Salonichi, ſhould have under him 10 Suffragan Biſhops, whereof he of Philippi hath no fewer than 150 Churches under his Juriſdiction? or, finally, that under the Metropolitans of Athens and Corinth there ſhould be as many? So mercifully hath God dealt with this luxurious and perfideous People, as not to take away their Candleſtick, though he hath darkned and obſcured the Light thereof.

As for the Fathers of this Church, anciently and at this preſent held in moſt eſteem, they were no other then ſuch as had been Biſhops of the greater Sees. That is to ſay, 1. S. Chryſoſtome, firſt a Reader of Antioch, afterwards Patriarch of Conſtantinople: 2. Baſil, and the two Gregories, 3. Nyſſen, and 4 Nazianzen; all in Aſia minor; this laſt of Conſtantinople alſo: 5, 6. the two Cyrills; the one Patriarch of Alexandria, the other of Hieruſalem: 7. Epiphanius, Biſhop of Salamis in the Iſle of Cyprus: 8. Theodoret, Biſhop of Cyprus, &c. Men of renown and precious memory amongſt them to this very day. From whoſe Writings if they deviate in any material Point of Doctrine, it is in that of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, which they grant to be per Filium, but not à Filio. And though Clichtovius, Lombard, and other moderate men of the Church of Rome, do grant the difference to be rather in modo explicandi, quàm in ipſa re; and that the clauſe à Filióque was added by the Romaniſts to the ancient Creeds, the Græcians not being privy nor conſenting to it: yet ſo uncharitable is that Church towards theſe poor men, languiſhing under the Tyrannie of Turkiſh Thraldome, as to perſecute them with Reproach and Scorn, brand them for Schiſmaticks and Apoſtates, and ſolemnly to anathematize them in Bulla Cœnæ every Maundy-Thurſday. And it is a very hard meaſure to adde, and anathematize too; as is right well obſerved by the late Lord Arch Biſhop of Canterbury, in his notable Diſcourſe againſt the Jeſuite. Other particular Tenets in which the Greek Church differeth from the Romiſh and Reformed (as in ſome Points it doth from both) have been already ſpecified in our Diſcription of Ruſſia: the Churches of the Greeks and Moſcovites differing in no material Points, but, 1. the manner of diſtributing the Sacrament; 2. the exacting of Marriage by the Moſcovite in the party admitted unto Orders; 3. the frequent admitting of Divorces upon light accaſions; and 4 and finally, in being leſs ſtrict in obſerving the Lent before Eaſter then in any of the other three. For whereas the Græcians account it a damnable ſin to eat Fleſh or Fiſh which hath blood in it, in any of their other Lents or times of Abſtinence; (they have in both Churches four in all) in that before Eaſter, which of all reaſon ought to be kept moſt punctually, the Laiety eat all ſorts of Fiſh without any exception, the Bloud of ſome of which, as the Cuttle by name, is held to be a delicate Food, and in great requeſt.

The Language they ſpake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects; viz. 1. the Attick, 2. the Dorick, 3. the Æolick, 4. the Ionick; beſides the common phraſe of ſpeech moſt in uſe among them. A Language of great fame for the Liberal Arts, but more for ſo great a part of the Holy Scripture firſt delivered in it: and for the lofty Sound, ſignificant Expreſſions, genuine Suavity, and happy compoſition of words, ſo excelling all others, that even in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire it ſo much overtopped the Latine, that the Hiſtories of Rome it ſelf (as by Polybius, Appian, Dion and Caſſius) were written in it. It was once alſo the general Language of Anatolia, ſome parts of Italy, Provence in France, and almoſt all the Iſlands of the Mediterranean. But now, partly by the mutilation of ſome words and contraction of others, partly by confuſion of the true ſound of Vowels, Diphthongs and conſonants, and the tranſlating of the Accents, and finally, by the admixture of forein Nations it is not onely fallen from its natural Elegancy, but from its largeneſs of extent. For it is now ſhut up within the Limits of Greece, and the Sea-coaſt of the leſſer Aſia oppoſite unto it; and there not onely much corrupted, but almoſt quite devoured by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian Tongues; but ſpecially by that which they call Franco, a mungrell Language, compoſed of Italian, French, and ſome Spaniſh words, uſed as the ordinary Speech for Commerce and intercourſe betwixt Chriſtians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks themſelves, who do not underſtand, and much leſs ſpeak, the true genuine Greek. So that although they ſtill retain for ordinary days S. Chryſoſtom's Liturgie, and that of S. Baſil for the Feſtivals: yet being both written in the ancient and learned Greek, they are no more underſtood by the Vulgar Græcian, then the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papiſt.

The Soil queſtionleſs is very fruitfull, and would yield great profit to the Husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling: but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things ſubject to the Grand Seigniour and his Souldiers, neglect the Tillage of their Lands, on the ſame grounds with thoſe who ſaid in the Poet's Eclogues.

Impius hæc tam culta novalia Miles habebit?
Barbarus has ſegetes? En queis conſevimus Arva!

Shall misbelieving Turks theſe Acres ſpoil,
Which I manur'd with ſo much Coſt and Toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See, neighbours, ſee
For whom theſe goodly Corn-fields tilled be!

The more natural and certain Commodities which they tranſport into other parts are Wines, which, in memory of the Water which our Saviour turned into wine, and on the ſixth day of January, being that day whereon this Miracle was wrought, they uſe to baptize: for which cauſe the Jews will drink none of them. They ſend alſo into other parts of the World Oil, Copper, Vitriol, ſome Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turkie-Grograms, &c.

This Countrey hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Ariſtides and Themiſtocles of Athens, Liſander and Ageſilaus of Sparta, Pelopidas, and Epaminondas of Thebes, Aratus and Philopœmen of Achaia, Pyrrhus of Epirus, Philip of Macedon, the Subverter of the Græcian Liberty, and Alexander his Son, (to omit infinite others) the Subverter of the Perſian Monarchy; for the divine Philoſophers, Plato, Socrates, Ariſtotle and Theophraſtus; for the moſt eminent Law-givers, Solon and Lycurgus; for the moſt exquiſite Poets, Heſiodus, Homer, Sophocles and Ariſtophanes; for the famous Hiſtoriographers, Xenophon the Condiſciple of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch and Herodotus; for the eloquent Orators, Æſchines, Demoſthenes and Iſocrates; and, laſtly, for the Authors and Eſtabliſhers of all humane Learning whatſoever, onely the Mathematicks excepted.

The cheif Rivers are, 1. Cephiſus, which ariſing in the Frontiers of Epirus, disburtheneth it ſelf into the Ægæan Sea. 2. Erigon, and 3. Aliacmon; which, beginning their courſe in the more Northen parts of Macedon, end it in Thermaicus Sinus. 4. Strymon in Mygdonia. 5. Athyras, and 6. Neſus, in Thrace. 7. Stymphalus, where Hercules killed the Stymphalian Birds. 8. Ladon, in Arcadia. 9. Inachus, whoſe Daughter Io, turned into a Heifer, was worſhipped by the Ægyptians under the name of Iſis. 10. Achelous, in Epirus, much celebrated by the ancient Poets, eſpecially by Ovid in his Metamorphoſis. As is alſo 11. Peneus, the cheif River of Theſſaly, and there ariſing from Mount Pindus, and increaſed with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Apollo is fabled to have loved, and turned into a Bay-tree, lived near or on the Banks of this River Peneus, and is therefore ſaid to be his Daughter: as Io above mentioned was the Daughter of Inachus. Of leſs note,

Populifer 11, Sperchius, & irrequietus 12. Enipeus,
13. Apidanuſque ſenex, leniſque 14. Amphryſus, & 15.
Æas.

That is to ſay,
Cool Sperchius, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphryſe, Æas, and old Apidan.

The reſt of leſs note, and the moſt eminent Mountains in each part hereof, ſhall be remembred in their places, as we ſee occaſion.

Thus much of the whole Countrey in groſs. And as for the Diviſion of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Dioceſes, viz. Thrace, and Macedon: the firſt under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of theſe the Dioceſe of Macedon, lying wholly within the Bounds of the modern Greece, contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima, 2. Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, (now, as in former times, called Albania) 3. Epirus Nova, taking up the Countreys of Phocis, Locris, and ſo much of the Old Epirus as was on that ſide of the River Achelous, 4. Old Epirus, comprehending all the reſt of that Countrey, 5. Theſſaly, 6. Achaia, containing all Achaia and Peloponneſus, the Countreys of Locris and Phocis excepted onely, and 7. Crete or Candie, with the Iſlands adjoyning. And for the Dioceſe of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of, 1. Thrace ſpecially ſo called, 2. Europa, 3. Rhodope, 4. Hæmimontum, 5. Mæſia Inferior, and 6. Scythia: of which the four firſt make up the Body of Thrace, and ſhall there be ſpoken of; the two laſt, being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been deſcribed already in their proper places. But not to bind my ſelf preciſely unto this Diviſion, (though I ſhall look on this as occaſion ſerveth) I ſhall conſider Greece in the ſeveral Provinces of, 1. Peloponneſus, 2. Achaia, 3. Epirus, 4. Albania, 5. Macedon, 6. Thrace, 7. the Iſlands of the Propontick, 8. Ægæan, and 9. the Ionian Seas, and 10. finally the Iſle of Crete.

1. PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the Eaſt with the Cretan, on the Weſt with the Adriatick or Ionian Seas, on the North-eaſt with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia, on the North-weſt with Sinus Corinthiacus; now Golfo di Patras or Lepanto, and on the South with the Mediterranean. So that it is almoſt an Iſland, properly called a Peninſula, rounded with the Sea, except where it is tied to the main Land of Greece by an Iſthmus ſix miles in breadth, which the Grecians and Venetians fortified with a great Wall and five Caſtles. This Wall was called anciently Hexamilium, and was overthrown by Amurath the Second, who haraſſed and ſpoiled all the Countrey. It was afterwards in the year 1453, upon the rumour of a War, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greateſt part of this Countrey) in 15 dayes; there being for that time 30000 men employed in the work. This Wall extended from one Sea unto the other; which, had it been as gallantly guarded as it was haſtily made up, or as it was well fortified had it been as well manned, might eaſily have reſiſted the Turks, until more means had been thought on to defend it. Not leſs obſervable, but more fruitleſs, was the Deſign of ſome in the elder times, to cut through this Iſthmus, and make a perfect Iſland of it. It was attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæſar, and Caius Caligula; by none more eagerly purſued then by the Emperour Nero, who, to hearten his Souldiers, loth to attempt ſo fruitleſs an Enterpriſe, took a Spade in hand, and buſily began the work. Yet at laſt the Souldiers, being frighted with the Bloud which abundantly broke forth, with the Groans and Roarings which they continually heard, and with the Hobgoblins and Furies which were always in their ſight, perſwaded the Emperour, now half out of the humour, to leave this, and enjoyn them ſome more profitable Service. It was alſo given over by the former Princes on the like Diſcouragements. But of this Iſthmus we ſhall add no more then theſe words of Ovid, and ſo paſs forwards to the Deſcription of the Countrey; that is to ſay,

Æquora bina ſuis oppugnant fluctibus Iſthmon,
Et tenuis Tellus audet utrumque Mare.

Which may be thus Engliſhed;

Two Seas aſſault the Iſthmus with their Waves,
And that thin Neck of Land both Seas out-braves.

As for this Countrey of Peloponneſus, it is in compaſs 600 miles, and was called at firſt Ægialia, from Ægialus the firſt King of Sicyon; next Apia, from Apis the fourth King; after that Sicyonia, from Sicyon the 19 King thereof: and finally Peloponneſus, from Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Νῆσος, Inſula, the word ſignifying as much as the Iſle of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that à Maurorum Incurſionibus, from the Incurſions of the Moors, as Mercator thinketh: but by the Moors he means the Saracens, as ſome others alſo do.

It is conceived to be the moſt pleaſant Countrey in all Greece, abounding in all things neceſſary for the Life of man; and in ſuch alſo as do ſerve for Delicacy and Contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, ſwelled with fruitful Hills, well ſtored with Ports and Havens on all ſides thereof. And though no Countrey in the World, for the bigneſs of it, hath ſuffered in the Ruine of ſo many brave and ſtately Cities; yet is it ſtill the moſt populous and beſt inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it, in Laconia, is the Mount Taygetus, from the top whereof there was no City of note in all this Peninſula but might eaſily be ſeen. A moſt gallant Proſpect. The whole was divided commonly into theſe ſeven Provinces; 1. Achaia propria. 2. Elis. 3. Meſſene. 4. Arcadia. 5. Laconia. 6. Argolis. and 7. Corinthia.

1. ACHAIA propria is bounded on the Eaſt with Argolis and Corinthia, on the Weſt with the Ionian Sea, on the North with Sinus Corinthiacus or the Gulf of Lepanto, on the South with Elis. So called from the Achæi, the Inhabitants of it; the Adjunct propria being added to difference it from Achaia in the Continent or Mainland of Greece.

Places of moſt conſideration in it are, 1. Dyme, ſituate in the moſt Weſtern point of it, in or near the Promontory called Araxus. The Town is now called Chiarenza, and the Promontory Cabo di Chiarenza. Not far from which is another Promontory or Head-land, of old called Rhium, oppoſite to another in Ætolia that was called Antirrhium, divided by a very narrow Streight or Fretum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each ſide with a Caſtle for defence thereof, commonly called Caſtelli di Lepanto: both built and fortified by Bajazet the ſeeond, when he had finiſhed the Conqueſt of Peloponneſus, to ſecure the entrance of this Bay; both taken and demoliſhed by Andrew Doria, Lord Admiral to Charles the V. to lay the Bay open to the Chriſtians; and finally, both within few years recovered and repaired by Solyman the Magnificent, as they ſtill continue. 2. Ægium, where Jupiter is ſaid to have been nurſed by a Goat, whence it had the name; ʼΑἴξ in Greek ſignifying a Shee-Goat: once a ſtrong Town, now ruined and deſtroyed by the Turks; called at this day Voſtiza, or Boſtizan. 3. Ægira, once the chief City of all this Tract, ſituate on a ſteep and inacceſſible Hill; now a ſmall Village, called Xylocaſtro. 4. Olenus, ſo named from Olenus the Son of Jupiter and Anaxithea, now called Chaminiſa. 5. Patræ, ſituate at the very Mouth of the Gulf, oppoſite to Lepanto. Firſt called Aroe, but being by one Patreus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patræ, which name it holdeth to this day, being ſtill called Patras; the Town of moſt note on the bay of Corinth, which is called from hence Golfo di Patras. A Town of good Trade, and much frequented not long ſince by the Engliſh Merchants, who had here their Conſul, called the Conſul of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, who here ſuffered Martyrdom. 6. Pellene, diſtant from the Sea about 60 Furlongs: the people whereof being conſtant to their old Faſhions of Apparel, occaſioned the Proverb of Pellenica veſtis, applied to old Cloths out of Faſhion. Here were once alſo the two Cities of 7. Helice, and 8. Buris, ſunk by the violence of a Tempeſt into the bottom of the Sea, about the time of the Battel of Leuctra. Not to ſay any thing of 9. Tritæa, and 10. Phera, two other Towns hereof, of note in the former times; ſo little now remaining of them, as if they had been ſunk at the ſame time alſo.

But the chief Town of all this Province (if not a Province of it ſelf) is Sicyon, ſituate not far from the Iſthmus, in the moſt Eaſtern parts hereof, and giving to the Territory or adjoyning Countrey (as once unto the whole Peninſula) the name of Sicyonia. The Territory is rich, eſpecially in Olives, and Works of Iron; the City the moſt ancient of all Greece, built within little time of the general Flood and reſtauration of mankind. Firſt called Ægialia, after Sicyonia, by the name of the firſt and nineteenth King hereof; by whom and their Succeſſors it was much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues and Images of their ſeveral Gods: the ancienteſt Kingdom in the World, the Aſſyrian and Ægyptian excepted only, and perhaps not thoſe. It took beginning in the perſon of Ægialeus, within 150 years after the Deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah; continuing in a Race of Princes who ſwayed the Affairs of Peloponneſus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reaſon of the undoubted Antiquity of this Kingdom, I ſhall here ſubjoyn in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Kings of SICYON.

A. M.		A. M.
1860	1. Ægialeus,	2421	14. Marathus.
1910	2. Europs.	2441	15. Echireus.
1950	3. Telchin.	2496	16. Corax.
1980	4. Apis.	2526	17. Epopeus.
2004	5. Telxion.	2561	18. Laomedon.

2328	12. Orthoülis.	2771	25. Pelaſgus.
2391	13. Marathon.	2791	26. Zeuxippus,

the laſt King of Sicyon. After whoſe death, A. M. 2812, the Eſtate hereof was governed by the Prieſts of Apollo, ſeven of them ſucceſſively one after another: the firſt five, only years apiece; Amphictyon, who was the ſixth, continuing 9 years in the Regency, and Charidemus, the laſt of them, ruling 18 years. After whoſe death, or departure, I know not which, A. M. 2844, the Heraclidæ, who about that time returned into Peloponneſus, made themſelves Maſters of this Countrey; there being no Kings of Sicyon from this time forwards.

Of theſe Kings the moſt memorable were Ægialeus and Apis, the firſt and fourth, from whom this Peninſula had the names of Apia and Ægialia; Ægirus, the 6 giving name and being to the City Ægira ſpoken of before; Marathon, the 13. of whom perhaps the famous Fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Epopeus, the 17. who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Trophies; Sicyon, the 19. the Founder of the City Sicyon, or at leaſt the Repairer and Enlarger of it; Pelaſgus, the 25. from whom perhaps the Græcians might be called Pelaſgi, if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who bare ſway in Sicyon, till the time of Aratus, the ſpecial Ornament of this Town, (of which a Native) and one of the principal Eſtabliſhers of the Achæan Commonwealth againſt the Spartans and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the general Hiſtory of Peloponneſus.

2. The Countrey of ELIS hath on the Eaſt Arcadia, on the Weſt the Ionian Sea, on the North Achaia propria, on the South Meſſenia. The chief Cities are, 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Eliſha the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fixt himſelf in theſe parts of this Countrey, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his poſterity in honour of him did the Iſles adjoyning, mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel by the name of the Iſles of Eliſha, ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this City runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have ſpoken in Sicilia: and in this City reigned the King Augeas, the cleanſing of whoſe Stable is accounted one of the Wonders or twelve Labours performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympius, one of the ſeven Wonders, being in height 60 Cubits, compoſed by that excellent Workman Phidias of Gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick Games inſtituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City, A. M. 2757. The Exerciſes in them were for the moſt part bodily, as Running in Chariots, Running on Foot, Wreſtling, Fighting with the Whorlbats, and the like. But ſo that there repaired thither alſo Oratours, Poets, and Muſicians, and all that thought themſelves excellent in any laudable quality, to make triall of their ſeveral Abilities: the very Criers, who proclaimed the Victories, contending which ſhould cry loudeſt, and beſt play his part. The Rewards given to the Victour were only Garlands of Palm, or ſuch ſlight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no leſs eſteemed that ſmall Sign of conqueſt and Honour, then the Romans did their moſt magnificent Triumphs: thoſe which were Conquerours herein being met by all the principal men in the City in or under which they lived, and a paſſage broken in the main Walls thereof for their reception; as if the ordinary Gates were not capable of ſo high an Honour, or able to afford them entrance. Inſomuch that when Diagoras had ſeen his three Sons crowned for their ſeveral Victories, a Friend of his came to him with this Gratulation, Morere, Diagora, nunquam enim in Cœlum aſcenſurus es, that is to ſay, Die now, Diagoras, for thou ſhalt never go to Heaven: as if no greater Happineſs could befall the man either in this life or that to come, then that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Preſidents of theſe Games were ſome of the Citizens of Elis, deputed to it; highly commended for their Juſtice and Integrity in pronouncing who beſt deſerved without Partiality. Of theſe thus Horace in his Odes:

Sunt quos Curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegiſſe juvat; Metáque fervidis
Evitata Rotis, Palmáque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.

Quos Elæa domum reducit
Palma cœleſtes.

That is to ſay,
Some in Olympick Duſt take pride
Their Chariots and themſelves to hide;
Whom the ſhunn'd Mark, and Palm ſo priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.

Such as like Heav'nly Wights do come
With an Elæan Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules theſe Games were diſcontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned ſo to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them, cauſing them to be ſolemnly exerciſed every fourth year: from which Cuſtom Olympias is ſometimes taken for the ſpace of 4 years; as quinque annorum Olympiades for 20 years. Varro reckoneth the times before the Floud to be Obſcure; thoſe before the Olympiads, and after the Floud, to be Fabulous; but thoſe that followed theſe Olympiads to be Hiſtorical. Theſe Olympiads were of long time, even from the reſtauration of them by Iphitus untill the Reign of the Emperour Theodoſius, the Græcian Epoche, by which they reckoned their Account: the firſt of them being placed in the year of the World 3174, before the building of Rome 40 years; the laſt in the 440. year after Chriſt's Nativity. According to which reckoning this Account continued for the ſpace of 1214 years; the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponneſus; the Town at this day being called by the name of Scouri. 3. Piſa, whoſe people followed Neſtor to the Wars of Troy; and in their return were by Tempeſt driven to the Coaſts of Italy, where they built the City Piſa in Tuſcany. 4. Torneſe, a new Town, or the new new name of ſome ancient City; from whence the adjoyning Promontory, of old called Chelonites, is now called Cabo di Torneſe.

3. MESSENIA hath on the Eaſt Arcadia, on the North Elis, on the South and Weſt the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Meſſene, ſituate on Sinus Meſſeniacus, now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylos, where Neſtor was King, now called Navarino; a deſolate and poor Village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid ſpeaking in the name of Penelope;

Nos Pylon, antiqui Neleïa Neſtoris arva,
Miſimus; incerta eſt reddita fama Pylo.
To Pylon, aged Neſtor's Seat, we ſent;
But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Modon, or Methone, ſeated in the moſt Southern part of this Peninſula, from whence unto the Iſthmus which joyneth it to the reſt of Greece are reckoned 175 Italian miles. The Town is commodiouſly ſeated in a Demi-Iſland, waſhed on the one ſide with the Sea, and ſo well fortified toward the Land, that in the opinion of moſt men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South-ſide with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, ſecure from all Winds except the North, and ſhut up with a little Iſland called anciently Oenuſa, but now Sapienza, which makes it one of the ſafeſt Harbours in all theſe Seas. It was poſſeſſed once by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turk, after many ſharp and fierce Aſſaults, Anno 1500, both Pylus and Corone yielding on the noiſe thereof. The beſt Retreat ſince that time of the Turkiſh Navies, and the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Sanzack, who hath the Government of this whole Province of Morea under the Beglerbeg of Greece. 4. Corone, or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Meſſene, called from hence Golfo di Corone, and the laſt which held out againſt the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea-coaſt of Peloponneſus. 5. Cypariſſi, now called Arcadia, from whence the Bay adjoyning hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is alſo the Promontory called of old Coryphaſium, now Cabo Zunchi.

The people of this ſmall Province had once a great ſway in the whole Peninſula. At firſt they were confederate with the Spartans in ſo ſtrict a League, that they mutually ſent young Virgins to one another for their publick Sacrifices: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the ſupreme Power. The Spartans, at the laſt getting the upper hand of them, oppreſſed them with a miſerable Servitude. The occaſion this: In the Confines of this Country ſtood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Meſſenians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that ſome Spartan Virgins were by the Meſſenians here raviſhed: which abuſe the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their War; the true reaſon indeed being their Covetouſneſs of the ſole Empire. This War broke out three ſeveral times. The firſt continued twenty years: in which ſpace the Lacedæmonians, fearing their Abſence would hinder the ſupply of Children in the City, ſent a company of their ableſt young men home to accompany their Wives. Their Off-ſpring were called Parthenii, who, coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, ſailed into Italy, and there built Tarentum. The ſecond, being of 23 years continuance, was raiſed and maintained by Ariſtomenes, one of the chief men of the Meſſenians; in which they proſpered till Ariſtocrates, King of Arcadia, one of their Confederates, revolted to ſide with Lacedæmon. Then began they to decline, and Ariſtomenes was thrice taken Priſoner, ſtill miraculouſly eſcaping. His laſt Impriſonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance eſpying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her Tail. The Fox running away, guided Ariſtomenes after; till the ſtreightneſs of the Hole by which he went out made him leave his hold, and fall to ſcraping with his Nails: which exerciſe he never left till he had made the Hole paſſable, and ſo eſcaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, died in Rhodes. The third War was like Drops after a Tempeſt; in which the Meſſenians being finally ſubdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become Slaves unto the Spartans, who put them to all Drudgeries and ſervile works; as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their Bondmen. And to this life ſome of them did apply themſelves with ſo much Obſequiouſneſs, that at laſt it grew into a Proverb, Meſſenâ ſervilior, that ſuch a one was more ſervile, or more ſlaviſhly uſed, than theſe poor Meſſenians. But the greateſt part of them, not brooking that heavie Yoke, paſſed into Sicily, and there built the City of Meſſana. Others were planted in Naupactum, by the State of Athens; the reſt diſperſed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas, having vanquiſhed the Lacedæmonians at the Battel of Leuctra, reſtored them to their ancient Poſſeſſions.

4. ARCADIA hath on the the Eaſt Laconia, on the Weſt Elis and Meſſene, on the North Achaia propria, and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arcas, the Son of Jupiter and Caliſto; but was formerly caled Pelaſgia: the people whereof thought themſelves more ancient than the Moon.

Orta priùs Lunâ, de ſe ſi creditur ipſi,
A magno tellus Arcade nomen habet.
The Land which of great Arcas took its name
Was e're the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are; 1. Mantinea, nigh unto which the Theban Army, conſiſting of 30000 Foot and 3000 Horſe, routed the Army of the Spartans and Athenians, conſiſting of 25000 Foot and 2000 Horſe. In this Battel Epaminondas, that famous Leader, received his death's wound, and not long after died. At his laſt Gaſpe one of his Friends bemoaning his untimely death, Alas, ſaid he, thou dieſt, Epaminondas, and leaveſt behind thee no Children. Nay, replied he, two Daughters will I leave behind me, the Victory of Leuctra, and this other at Mantinea. It was afterward called Antigonia, in honour of Antigonus, Tutour or Protector of Philip, the Father of Perſeus, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperour Adrian reſtored to its old name again, and is now called Mantegna. 2. Megalopolis, the Birth-place of Polybius, that excellent Hiſtorian. The one half of it had ſometimes the name of Oreſtia, from the lodging of Oreſtes in it: the whole is now called Leontari, on what cauſe I know not. 3 Phialia, towards the Sea. 4. Pſophis, ſo called from Pſophis, one of the Sons of Lycaon, once King of this Country, ſlain by Jupiter. 5. Stymphalus, ſituate near a Lake and River of the ſame name, where Hercules ſlew the Stymphalian Birds; ſo great in number and in body, that they darkened the Sun-beams, and terribly infeſted this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was alſo in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Stymphalida. 6. Tegea, famous for the Temple of Pan here worſhipped, and from hence called Tegæus: more for the War made upon the Tegeates, or people hereof, by the Lacedæmonanis; who, thinking themſelves aſſured of Victory, brought with them ſtore of Chains and Fetters, wherewith to lead captive their conquered Enemies; but, being overcome in Battel, were themſelves bound with them, and forced as Slaves to till the Grounds of theſe Tegeates. Here is alſo in this Country the famous River Styx, whoſe water, for the poiſonous taſte, was called the water of Hell; by which Poets feign that the Gods uſe to ſwear, as may be every where obſerved; and that what God ſoever ſwore by Styx falſly, he was baniſhed from Heaven, and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country, for the fitneſs of it for Paſturage and Grazing, hath made it the ſubject of many worthy and witty Diſcourſes, eſpecially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honourable mention: a Book which, beſides its excellent Language, rare Contrivances, and delectable Stories, hath in it all the Strains of Poeſie, comprehendeth the univerſal Art of ſpeaking, and, to them which can diſcern and will obſerve, affordeth notable Rules for Demeanour, both private and publick. Which noble Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the Engliſh Heliodore, ſo the ingenious Author of the Hiſtory of Melintus and Ariana may deſervedly be called the French Sidney.

5. LACONIA is bounded on the Weſt with Arcadia, on the Eaſt and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called firſt Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo ſaid to be the firſt Inhabitants of it; afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedæmon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones who ſucceeded the Leleges in the poſſeſſion hereof, on their removal into the Iſlands of the leſſer Aſia. It is by ſome Writers alſo called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, and the Fields very ſpacious; yet for the moſt part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountains which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bays and Promontories: of which the principall are the Promontories of Malea and Tænaria, now called Cabo Malio and Cabo Matapan; and of the Bays, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the Ancients, into which the River Eurotas (now better known by the name of Vaſilipotamo, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle Streams. The nature of the People we ſhall find in Sparta.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Leuctra, ſituate on the Sea-ſide, near the Bay of Meſſene: of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia; but this laſt moſt memorable. 2. Amyclæ, ſo called from Amyclas, the third King of Sparta, by whom it was firſt founded: renowned afterwards for the Birth of Caſtor and Pollux, the Sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the Foundreſs of the City of Amyclæ in Calabria Superior, at firſt a Colony of this: diſtant from Lacedæmon about 20 Furlongs. 3. Thulana, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules ſlew the Monſter Hydra; and not far off Mount Tænarus, near the Promontory Tænaria, in which the Natives ſhew a Cave, (believed in former times to be the Deſcent into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Salaſſia, where Antigonus vanquiſhed Cleomenes, the laſt King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus, (ſeated on the Bay named Golfo di Napoli) now called Malvaſia: a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the ſweet Wines called Malveſey, or Malmſey, ſent frm hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6 Sparta, So called from Sparta, the Son or Brother of Phoroneus, the ſecond King of Argos, the Founder of it: but afterwards beautified and enlarged by Lacedæmon, the ſecond King of this Country, it took that name alſo; promiſcuouſly known by both in the beſt Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a famous Commonwealth; but at firſt governed by Kings, as moſt of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the Father of Caſtor and Pollux, was once King hereof. After whoſe death, and the death of the ſaid famous Brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta, or Lacedæmon, in right of Helena his Wife, their Siſter. And though Nicoſtratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by another Venter, ſucceeded after his deceaſe; yet the Spartans ſoon rejected them, and received Oreſtes the Son of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione, the Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and conſequently the Niece of Tyndarus. Tiſamenes, the Son of Oreſtes and Hermione, ſucceeded next; in whoſe time the Heraclidæ, or poſterity of Hercules, returned into Greece, under the Conduct of Temenus, Cteſiphon, and Ariſtodemus, Sons of Ariſtomachus: whereof the firſt poſſeſſed himſelf by force of Arms of the City Argos, the ſecond of Meſſene, and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta; which, dying very ſhortly after, he left unto his two Sons, Euryſthenes and Procles, the Roots of the two Royal Families which joyntly and in common governed the Affairs of Sparta; firſt abſolutely as Sovereign Princes, without any controul, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the Command and Check of thoſe popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But becauſe theſe Spartan Kings in each ſeveral period were for the moſt part men of action, and often mentioned in the Hiſtories of the elder time; I will firſt make a Catalogue of them, and then ſubjoyn ſuch Obſervations and Remembrances as I think moſt pertinent.

The Kings of SPARTA of the firſt Family.

A. M.
	1.	Eurotas, the firſt King of Sparta, who gave name to the River Eurotas.
	2.	Lacedæmon, Brother of Eurotas, from whom the City of Sparta was called Lacedæmon.
	3.	Amyclas, Son of Lacedæmon, the Founder of Amyclæ, a Laconian City.
	4.	Argalus, Son of Amyclas.
	5.	Cynorta, Son of Argalus.
	6.	Oebalus, Son of Cynorta, from whom a part of this Country had the name of Oebalia.
	7.	Hippocoon, Son of Oebalus.
2700	8.	Tyndarus, Brother of Hippocoon, in whoſe life he was King of Oebalia only.
	9.	Caſtor and Pollux, Sons of Tyndarus, famous amongſt the Argonauts.
2740	10.	Menelaus, Son of Atreus and Brother of Agamemnon Kings of Mycenæ, together with Helena his Wife, the Daughter of Tyndarus, whoſe Rape occaſioned the Deſtruction of Troy.
2770	11.	Nicoſtratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by a former Wife.
	12.	Oreſtes, Son of Agamemnon, and Hermione his Wife, Daughter of Helena and Menelaus.
	13.	Tiſamenes, Son of Oreſtes and Hermione, who, being outed of Sparta by the Heraclidæ, reigned in Achaia, and left his Kingdom there unto his Poſterity.

3655	26. Acrotatus.	3700	25. Agis III.
	27. Arius II.		26. Eurydamidas, the laſt King of the Line of the Euripontidæ, ſlain by Cleomenes, the laſt of the other Line alſo.
	28. Leonidas III.
	29. Cleombrotus II.
3714	30. Cleomenes III. the laſt of the Line of the Agidæ; who, having ſlain

Eurydamidas, the Son of Agis the third, ſubſtituted his Brother Epiclides in his place. But being himſelf ſhortly after vanquiſhed by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to fly his Country with his Wife and Children, the Government of the Heraclidæ ended, after it had continued here for the ſpace of 900 years, or thereabouts.

Under theſe Kings the Government at firſt was ἄγαν Μοναρχικὸν, as Plutarch termeth it, ſufficiently Monarchical, if it were not more. Under Eunomus, the fourth King of the ſecond Houſe, the people, finding the Reins of Government let looſe, began to mutiny and grow too headſtrong. To bridle whom, and to reſtrain the Kings withall, (ſhould they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus, the Protector of Charilaus, the ſixth King of that Houſe, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the ſupreme Power in matters Civil, and leaving to the Kings the ordering all Military and Sacred buſineſs. To curb the Inſolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own ſtrength, Theopompus, the eighth King of that Houſe, with the conſent of Polydorus, the tenth King of the other, inſtituted a new Magiſtracy choſen out of the Common People, whom thy called the Ephori; which grew in fine to ſuch an height of Pride and Tyranny, as not only to controll the Senators, but to cenſure, fine, impriſon, depoſe, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the ſpirit of Sedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedæmon was at firſt a Monarchy under Kings, then an Ariſtocracy under the command of the Senate, next a Democracy under the Ephori, and finally, by thoſe popular Officers made ſo plain a Tyranny, that Ariſtotle and Plato, two great Commonwealths-men, who died before they had embrued their hands in the bloud of their Kings, call it in plain terms τυραννίδα and τὸ τυραννικὸν, a moſt abſolute Tyranny. What think you would theſe men have called it, had they lived to ſee Leonidas the third depoſed, and Agis the third of that name alſo moſt barbarouſly murthered by theſe popular Villains?

But being the Foundation of this Commonwealth was firſt laid, and the good Laws and Politick Conſtitutions by which it did ſo long ſubſiſt in great Power and Splendour eſtabliſhed, by the Wit and Power of Lycurgus, as before was ſaid; we are to know concerning him, that he was the Son of Eunomus, the fourth King of the ſecond Houſe, ſlain in a Popular Tumult by the Common people. Who, finding by this Eſſay, that the People were become too head ſtrong for the Kings to govern, unleſs reduced to extreme Bondage by their Kings, which he wiſhed not neither, took the advantage of the Minority of Charilaus to new mould the Government; and what he could not do by fair means, to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to flie for Sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleaſed, and ſettled ſuch a Form of Government as himſelf well fancied, the better to decline the Envy of ſo great a Change, he got leave to travel, binding the people by an Oath to obſerve all his Laws untill his return; and, being gone, commanded at his death, that his Aſhes ſhould be caſt into the Sea, leſt, being carried back to Sparta, the people might conceive themſelves releaſed from their Oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Commonwealth did flouriſh in all Proſperity. The particulars of which Inſtitutions he that liſts to ſee, may find them ſpecified at large by Plutarch in the Life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Diſcipline was ſo ſharp and ſtrict, that many went into the Wars for no other reaſon than on a hope to rid themſelves from ſo hard a life; and that Diogenes, returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that he returned from Men to Women, ἐκ τῆς Ἀνδρωνίτιδος εἰς τὴν Γυναικωνῖτιν and being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the compleateſt men, made anſwer that he could no-where meet with Men, but that he had found ſome Boys amongſt the Spartans. A Cynical and rugged Anſwer, but ſuch as carried a great deal of Judgment in it; the Spartans being more ſtout and reſolute in all their Actions, and leſs effeminate in their Lives, than the reſt of the Græcians. But beſides the ſtrictneſs of the Diſcipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them wiſh for Wars abroad; namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in Civil matters, or Affairs of State, entirely left to the diſpoſing of the Senate and the Power of the Ephori. So that the Kings, having by the Laws the Command of their Armies, were willing to engage in War upon all occaſions, and the Common people as deſirous to attend them in ſuch Employments as the Kings could wiſh. Upon theſe grounds War was made a Trade amongſt them; beginning with the Helots, a neighbouring People, then with the reſt of the Laconians, afterwards quarrelling the Meſſenians, their old Confederates: all which they ſeverally ſubdued, and made ſubject to them. In the War which Xerxes made againſt the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the firſt, of the elder Houſe, went forth to aid them; ſlain at the Streights of Thermopylæ, couragiouſly fighting for the Liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit to ſet upon the Perſian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In purſuit of thir War againſt the Perſians Pauſanias and Ageſilaus were of moſt renown: the firſt in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making War upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Perſians, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Sovereignty and Glory. Hence the long War betwixt theſe Cities, called Bellum Peloponneſiacum, managed for the moſt part in Peloponneſus, from thence transferred into Sicily, and at laſt ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Ariſtocracie under thirty Magiſtrates of their own appointment, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. Proud of this fortunate Succeſs, their next Quarrel was with the Bœotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Perſians openly, aſſiſting the Enemy. Here their Proſperity began to leave them. For, beſides many ſmall Defeats, Epaminondas the Theban ſo diſcomfited them at the Overthrows of Leuctra and Mantinea, that Sparta it ſelf was in danger of utter Ruine. Not long after happened the Holy War, chiefly undertook againſt the Phocians, wherein alſo they made a party: but this War being ended by King Philip, they ſcarce breathed more Freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexander's Captains fought for the Empire of their Maſter, all theſe flouriſhing Republicks were either totally ſwallowed into, or much defaced by, the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedæmonians held the chief ſtrength of a Town to conſiſt in the Valour of the people; and therefore would never ſuffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not thoſe Fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Doſon, King of Macedon, who, having vanquiſhed Cleomenes King of Sparta, entred the Town, and was the firſt man that ever was received into it as Conquerour. So much different were the preſent Spartans from the Valour and Courage of their Anceſtours. Cleomenes being forced to forſake his Country, and the Race of the Heraclidæ failing in him, they became a Prey to Machanidus and Nabis, two wicked Tyrants; from whom they were no ſooner freed, but they were made ſubject (in a manner) to the power of Rome: and in the end the Town was ſo weak and inconſiderable, that it was not able to reſiſt the pooreſt Enemy; now a ſmall Burrough called Miſithra. And ſo I leave them to the thoughts of their former Glories, having now nothing elſe to boaſt of but the fame and memory of their Actions in former times.

6. ARGOLIS, ſo called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the Weſt with Corinthia and Achaia propria, on the Eaſt and North with the Sea. A Territory remarkable for a moſt excellent breed of Horſes, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of moſt importance in it are, 1. Argos, founded by Argus, the fourth King of this Country; the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable, as for other things, ſo 1. for the Death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus; who, having forced his Entry into it, was here ignobly ſlain, after all his Victories, by the hands of an old Woman, throwing a Tile at him from the top of an Houſe: 2. for the long Race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the contemporary of our Father Abraham, Anno 2003, unto Acriſius their laſt King: whoſe Daughter Danaë, being ſhut up in a Tower of Braſs, was deflowred by Jupiter; to whom ſhe bare the renowned Perſeus, ſo memorized in ancient Poets. But Perſeus, having by misfortune ſlain his Grandfather, the old King Acriſius quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdom to Mycenæ, a City of his own Foundation, and ſo better fancied, which was by means hereof the ſecond City of eſteem in this little Province; growing in ſmall time unto ſo great Riches, that it got the name of dites Mycenæ, as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horſes of Argos and the Wealth of Mycenæ are placed in one Verſe together:

> Aptum dicit equis Argos, ditéſque Mycenas.
> For Horſes Argos is of fame,
> For Wealth Mycenæ hath the name.

3. Trœzen, ſituate on the Sinus Saronicus, (now called Golfo di Engia) the Royal Seat of Pittheus, the Grandfather of Theſeus by the Mothers ſide, who was born herein: from whence the Town in Ovid hath ſometime the name of Pittheïa Trœzen, and Theſeus many times is called Trœzenius Heros; as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthius Heros from 4. Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was nurſed, 5. Nemea, where Hercules ſlew the dreadful Lion which annoyed this Country. In honour of which noble Act were inſtituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exerciſes were, Running with ſwift Horſes, Whorlbats, Running on foot, Quoiting, Wreſtling, Darting, Shooting. Some have referred the Original of theſe Games to one Opheltes, a Lacedæmonian, in whoſe Honour they conceive them inſtituted, and others fetch it higher, from the War of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable Opinion. 6. Epidaurus, on the Sea-ſide, famous for the Temple of Æſculapius, and the Cure of all ſorts of diſeaſes there; ſo called from Epidaurus, the Son of Argus, the Founder of it. Of the ſame name, but of a different ſituation from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being ſeated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Meliſſa and Æmera, at that time an Iſland, but by an Earthquake laid unto the Continent; now called Pigiada. 7. Nauplia, ſo called of Nauplius King of Eubœa, and Father of Palamedes, to whom it anciently belonged. A Station then, as now, for Shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Neapolis; the richeſt and beſt traded in all this Tract, giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, now called Golfi di Napoli, of old Sinus Argolicus, into which the famous River Inachus, having paſſed throug the City of Argos, doth diſgorge it ſelf; ſo called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the Original and Progenitor of

The Kings of ARGOS and MYCENÆ.

A.M.
2093	1.	Inachus, the ſuppoſed Father of Io, from whom the Græcians are ſometimes called by the name of Inachii.
2143	2.	Phoroneus, the Son of Inachus and Meliſſa, from whom the ſaid Io hath the name of Phoronis in the Poet.
2223	3.	Apis, the Son of Jupiter and Niobe the Daughter of Phoroneus, who, leaving Greece, went into Ægypt, where he taught the people Tillage, and was there worſhipped afterwards in the form of an Ox.
2308	5.	Criaſus, by ſome Peiraſus, the Son of Argus.
2363	6.	Phorbas, the Son of Criaſus; in whoſe time Atlas and Prometheus are ſaid to flouriſh.
2397	7.	Triopas, the Son of Phorbas, and the Brother of another Phorbas, who planted himſelf in the Iſle of Rhodes.
2442	8.	Crotopus.
2464	9.	Sthenelus, outed of the Kingdom by
2475	10.	Danaus, the Brother of Ægyptus; by whom being driven out of Ægypt, he was made King

King of Argos by conſent of the people: the Father of thoſe many Daughters got with child by Hercules From him the Græcians are called often by the name of Danai.

2525 11. Lynceus, Son of Ægyptus, the Brother of Danaus.

2556 12. Abas, the Son of Lynceus and Hypermneſtra the Daughter of Danaus.

2566 13. Prœtus, the Son of Abas.

2606 14. Acriſius, the Brother of Prœtus, and the Father of Danae; who being foretold by the Oracle that he ſhould be ſlain by a Son of that Daughter, ſhut her up in a brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladie's conſent, by whom he had Perſeus, ſo renowned amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians of thoſe elder times.

2645 16. Euryſtheus, the Son of Sthenelus, much ſpoken of for the difficult Tasks which, at the inſtigation of Juno, he impoſed on Hercules his Foſter-child, and the ſuppoſed Son of Amphitryon his Couſin-german.

2753 18. Agamemnon, the Son of Atreus, Commander of the Greeks at the War of Troy, in which action there engaged 69 Kings of the Græcians, wafted over with a Navy of 1224 Ships; killed at his coming home by Ægiſthus, his Couſin-german.

2768 19. Ægiſthus, the Son of Thyeſtes, having defiled Clytæmneſtra the Wife of Agamemnon in the time of his abſence, by her procurement murthered him at his coming home, and uſurped the Kingdom

2775 20. Oreſtes, Son of Agamemnon, revenged his Father's death on Ægiſthus and Clytæmneſtra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and reſtored again unto his Wits, he married Hermione, Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the Kingdom of Sparta alſo.

2803 21. Penthilus, the Son of Oreſtes, and the laſt King of this Line, outed of his Eſtate by the Dores and Heraclidæ, who made themſelves Maſters of all Peloponneſus, which they poſſeſſed untill the Conqueſt of it by the Macedonians.

7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Iſthmus or Neck of Land which joyneth Peloponneſus to the reſt of Greece, betwixt Argolis and Achaia propria. It containeth only the Territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitful of thoſe Commodities which the reſt of this Peninſula doth abound withal; as being mountainous and hilly, and, by reaſon of the nearneſs of the Sea, full of craggy Rocks. The chief, and indeed the only, Cities of note in it are, 1. Cenchrea, the naval Road or Station of Ships for Corinth, mentioned Acts 18. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a diſtinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was: ſituate on that Bay which openeth into the Cretan Sea, called anciently Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; and conſequently oppoſite to 2. Lechæum, the other naval Road for Corinth, ſituate on the Weſtern Bay, called of old Sinus Corinthiacus, now the Gulf of Lepanto. 3. Corinth it ſelf, commodiouſly ſituate for the Command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandiſe than unto the Wars) as being ſeated on the bottom of the Neck or Iſthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the Weſt, and the Ægæan on the Eaſt, waſhing the Walls thereof, and giving it on each ſide a capacious Haven; in which regard it is called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. It is in compaſs about eleven miles, for Strength impregnable, for Command as powerful, maſtering both Seas on which it ſtood, and cutting off all paſſage from one half of Greece to the other: to which laſt end the Caſtle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, ſerved exceeding fitly; and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City is rich, very well traded, and neatly built, moſt Houſes beautified with handſom Pillars, from then called Corinthian: more memorable for the Wealth of the people, and the conveniency of the Situation, than for any notable Exploits performed by them, or any great Influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the Wealth, Greatneſs, and Situation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage and Capua being the other two. In this City lived the famous (or infamous) Whore Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachma's for a ſingle night's Lodging: which made Demoſthenes cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occaſioned the old By-word,

Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum.
'Tis not for every man's avail
Unto Corinth for to ſail.

Near hereunto ſtood the Acrocorinthian Mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Caſtle called hence Acrocorinthus, were ſeated: out of which flowed the famous Fountain named Pyrene, of old conſecrated to the Muſes; by Perſius called Fons Caballinus, becauſe feigned by the ancient Poets to have been made by the Horſe Pegaſus daſhing his foot againſt the Rock. And on the other ſide hereof in the Iſthmus were celebrated yearly the Iſthmian Games, ordained by Theſeus in honour of Neptune; in imitation of the Olympick deviſed by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The Exerciſes were much the ſame, and the Reward no other than a Garland of Oaken Boughs: yet they drew yearly a great Reſort of people to them; partly to exerciſe themſelves, and behold the Sports; and partly to ſacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the Fortunes of this City, it was at firſt called Ephyre, at that time a ſmall and obſcure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus, the Son of Pelops, it took the name of Corinth; governed by him and his poſterity, till the coming of the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus, at what time one Aletes of the Race of Hercules poſſeſſed himſelf hereof, with the name of King, A. M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his Line enjoyed it for the ſpace of 220 years and upwards: when the Houſe failing in the perſon of Automanes, they were governed by temporary Officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was ſeized on by one Cypſelus, A. M. 3294, who left it to his Son Periander, one of the Seven wiſe men of Greece; counted a Tyrant in thoſe times, for no other reaſon than that he had ſuppreſſed the Popular Government. After whoſe death, Anno 3364, the City did recover its former Liberty. In the Buſtle betwixt Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the Eſtates of Greece, for the Superiority, it did little meddle; the aim of this people being Wealth, not Honour; not intereſſed in any Action of renown in all thoſe times, but in the ſending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracuſans againſt the Tyrant Dionyſius, who did Lord it over them. It was ſubdued, together with the reſt, by the Kings of Macedon; and with the reſt reſtored to Liberty by the power of Rome: under whom growing ſtill more rich, and withall more inſolent, they abuſed certain Roman Embaſſadours. But iraſci populo Romano nemo ſapienter poteſt, as is ſaid in Livie, which the Corinthians found too true; the City being beſieged, ſacked, and burnt unto the Ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Conſul, Anno V. C. 607. In the burning whereof there were conſumed ſo many goodly Statues of Gold, Silver, Braſs, and other Metals, that, being melted into a Lump, they made up by that fatal chance the ſo-much-eſtimated Metal called Æs Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great eſteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by St. Paul to the Chriſtian Faith; and having flouriſhed a long time in Pride and Pleaſures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a ſmall Burrough called Crato.

Having thus ſpoken of the ſeveral Eſtates of Peloponneſus, it reſteth that we ſpeak ſomewhat of the Eſtate of the whole, varied according to the Fortunes of thoſe particular, which had moſt Influence on the ſame. The Affairs hereof were a long while ſwayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, reſtrained afterwards to the Territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleaſures; from Apis the third King whereof, (if not rather from Apis the fourth King of Sicyon) in the opinion of ſome Writers, it was named Apia. But Pelops, the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia, Daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the moſt powerful Prince of all this Peninſula, taking from him the name of Peloponneſus. The Kingdom of Mycenæ, growing into Power and Credit, had the next turn in ſwaying the Affairs hereof for a certain ſeaſon; as after that the Dores and Heraclidæ, poſſeſſed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Meſſene. The Spartans, getting the Preeminence over all the reſt, were the next who governed the Affairs of it, and they held it long; having firſt conquered Laconia, and ſubverted the Eſtate of Meſſene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate Succeſs againſt the Perſians, they became almoſt abſolute in their Commands, without any Competitor. But their Power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas in the Theban War, the petit States hereof began to take heart again, and ſtand upon their own Legs; as they did awhile, till the Kings of Macedon ſucceeding Alexander the Great brought them once more under, and made them Fellow-ſervants with their Spartan Maſters. In the Confuſions which enſued in Macedon amongſt the Competitors for that Kingdom, Patras and Dyme, two Cities of Achaia propria, firſt united them in a ſtrong League of Amity, at ſuch time as Pyrrhus firſt went into Italy: into which Confederacy the Cities of Tritæa and Pheræ ſhortly after came; and not long after that of Ægira, and the reſt of Achaia propria. Their Affairs were firſt governed by two Prætors with Advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like Advice; of which Marcus Carinenſis was the firſt, and Aratus of Sicyonia the ſecond. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increaſing by the Vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Træzenians, Argives and Megarian became Members of it, maintaining gallantly the Liberties of Peloponneſus, till finally maſtered by the Romans. In the Diviſion of whoſe Empire it fell, with all the reſt of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans, and in the declining of their Fortunes, when the Latins got poſſeſſion of the Imperial City, moſt of the Sea-coaſts of it were allotted to the State of Venice; the Inland parts, formerly parcelled out amongſt many Princes, whom they called Deſpots, continuing as before they were. By Iſabel, a Daughter of one of theſe Deſpots, (and, as it ſeems, the chief among them) married to Ferdinand, Son of James the firſt, and Father of James the ſecond King of Majorca, the Title of Prince of Majorca came into that Houſe; uſed by them and the reſt of theſe petit Princes, till all together were made a Prey to the Turkiſh Tyrants, Mahomet the Great and Bajazet the ſecond, by whom they were wholly conquered. For howſoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Conſtantinus Palæologus, had fled hither at the taking of Conſtantinople, and were received and obeyed by thoſe petit Princes: yet being unable to hold out againſt the Conquerour, they became his Tributaries. But their falling out amongſt themſelves, and neglecting then to ſend in the Tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occaſion to invade the Country, and, under colour of aiding one Brother againſt the other, to deſtroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Priſoner to Conſtantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponneſus, and fly to Italy, Anno 1457. Such Towns hereof as belonged to the State of Venice followed the ſame Fortune alſo in the time of Bajazet, by whom they were all taken at the laſt, and the whole Country brought under his Obedience, Anno 1500, or thereabouts. Governed ever ſince that time by a Turkiſh Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Greece, who hath his Reſidence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horſe to ſecure the Country, and 700000 Aſpers (that is to ſay, 14000 Crowns) a year for his Entertainment.

ACHAIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt with Epirus, on the North with Theſſaly, and on the South with Peloponneſus and the Seas thereof. Called anciently Hellas, from Helles, the Son of Deucalion; but whence it had the name of Achaia is not yet agreed on: though ſure I am that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achivi, (a name communicated afterwards to all the Græcians) to difference them from the Achæi of Achaia propria.

The Country is famous in the Authors of the elder times, more for the Gallantry of the Men, than any great goodneſs of the Soil and place: yet that is ſufficiently memorable for the Hill Hymettus, ſwarming with Bees, plentiful of the ſweeteſt Honey, and rich in Mines of excellent Marble; as alſo for the River Cephiſus, which runneth almoſt through the whole length hereof; divided into two main Streams, of which the one is called Aſopus, the other retaineth its firſt name. Upon the Banks hereof ſtood the Temple of Themis, to which Deucalion did repair to be directed in the Reſtauration of Mankind, as the Poets fable.

It was divided anciently into theſe ſeven Parts; viz. 1 Attica, 2. Megaris, 3. Bœotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Locris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A Diviſion now as much diſuſed as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turks into that of Lebadia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA hath on the Weſt Megaris and ſome part of Bœotia, on all other parts compaſſed with the Sea: ſo called from Athens, the chief City. The Soil for the moſt part is very barren and craggy; yet by the Arms and Induſtry of the people made both rich and famous; inſomuch as the yearly Revenues of the State of Athens were 1200 Talents. The Money current in this Country was commonly ſtamped with an Ox, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applied to ſuch Lawyers as were bribed to ſay nothing in their Client's Cauſe. Not much unlike to which was the Proverb riſing from the Coin of Ægina (an Iſle adjoyning) ſtamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutem & Sapientiam vincunt Teſtudines.

Places of moſt obſervation in it were, 1. Phyla, a ſtrong Fortreſs on the Borders of Bœotia, ſurprized by Thraſibulus and others of the baniſhed Athenians, during the Government of the thirty Tyrants: the taking whereof was the firſt ſtep towards their own and their Country's Liberty, which ſoon after followed. 2. Eleuſis, on the Borders of Megaris, almoſt impregnably fortified by the thirty Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom it was deſigned for their Retreat in all times of Danger. But having withdrawn hither on the taking of Phyla and Piræus by the Thraſybulians, they found ſtrong Walls a weak defence for ſo much Wickedneſs; being trained out as to a Parly, and ſo deprived of the Place and their Power together. It was firſt build by one Eleuſius, who entertained Ceres as ſhe was in Queſt of her Daughter Proſerpina; who, to reward him, taught him the uſe of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleuſina, and her Sacrifices Sacra Eleuſinia; and ſometimes the City alſo Cerealis Eleuſis, ſo called by Ovid in the ſeventh Book of his Metamorphoſes. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Aſopus, famous for the Temple of Amphiarus, and the Statue of the Goddeſs Nemeſis, hence called Rhamnuſia in the Poets: This Nemeſis, or Rhamnuſia, being the Goddeſs of Indignation, puniſhed thoſe who made themſelves unworthy of their preſent Fortunes. 4. Tricorytum, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the South-ſide of the River Aſopus, oppoſite to Rhamnus; of great note for the Diſcomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, conſiſting of 200000 and 10000 Horſe: the Emulation of which noble Victory ſtarted ſuch brave Reſolves in the breaſt of Themiſtocles. As memorable in the Poets of thoſe elder times for the Marathonian Bull there ſlain by Theſeus. 6. Mopſopia, the ordinary Dwelling-place of Theſeus, before he fixed his Seat at Athens, it being at this Town that he reſtored Helena (whom he had before ſtoln from her own Country) to her two Brethren Caſtor and Pollux; of which both Rape and Reſtitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epiſtle of Oenone to Paris, the other in that of Hermione to Oreſtes; in which laſt it is ſaid expreſly, Reddita Mopſopiâ Tyndaris urbe Soror, that is to ſay, that ſhe was delivered to her two Brethren (who had taken much pains in ſeeking for her) in the Town of Mopſopia. 7. Piræus, the Port-town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their Shipping, the Haven hereof being capable of 400 Sail; diſtant from the City about two miles, but joyned unto it by two long Walls reaching from the one to the other, for ſecuring the conveyance of their Merchandiſe to and from the Sea. The Port it ſelf was impregnably fortified by the Advice of Themiſtocles. But as theſe long Walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them; ſo were the Fortifications of Piræus it ſelf demoliſhed by the command of Sylla, in his War againſt Mithridates King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Panormus, a Sea-town alſo, and of very good Trade, but not of ſuch importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the Eyes of Greece, and the chief of Attica, ſituate from the Sea two miles, as before was ſaid; the Haven of Piræus ſerving it with all Commodities which came from other parts by ſhipping. Firſt built by Cecrops the firſt King of it, by whom it was called Cecropia, A. M. 2409; repaired afterwards by Theſeus, and furniſhed with good Laws by Solon; and finally thus named from Minerva, (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whoſe Honour there were yearly kept ſome ſolemn Games, called Panathenaia. A City heretofore adorned with all thoſe excellencies of Strength and Beauty which Art or Coſt could add unto it. Renowned, as for many things, ſo for three eſpecially: 1. For the inviolable Faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and moſt firm Affection to their Friends: ſo that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2. For the famous Scholars which here taught and flouriſhed; this being ſo happy a Nurſery of the choiceſt Wits, and ſo fitly ſeated for the Muſes, that the very Natives, being in other Countries, could ſenſibly perceive ſome want of that natural Vigour which at home was reſiant in their ſpirits. Ità ut corpora iſtius Gentis ſeparata ſint in alias Regiones, Ingenia vero ſolis Athenienſium muris clauſa eſſe exiſtimes, as Velleius hath it. Yea and, to ſay the truth, it was a moſt famous Univerſity, from whoſe great Ciſtern the Conduit-pipes of Learning were diſperſed over all the World. Yet did not Learning ſo effeminate or ſoften the hearts of the people, but that 3. This one City yielded more famous Captains than any in the World beſides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Ariſtides, Themiſtocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Commonwealth, yet were the people ſo ungrateful to them, or they ſo unfortunate in the end, that they either died abroad in Baniſhment, or by ſome violent death at home. Themiſtocles, the Champion of Greece, died an Exile in Perſia, Phocion was ſlain by the people, Demoſthenes made himſelf away by Poiſon, Pericles was many times indangered, Theſeus their Founder firſt depoſed, and then deſpitefully impriſoned, Ariſtides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. baniſhed for ten years by the Oſtraciſm; a form of Puniſhment, ſo called, becauſe the name of the party baniſhed was writ on an Oyſter-ſhell; and only uſed towards ſuch who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of ſervice. Which Device, allowable in a Democracie, where the over-much Powerableneſs of one might hazard the Liberty of all, was exerciſed in ſpight oftner than for deſert. A Country-fellow meeting by chance with Ariſtides, deſired him to write Ariſtides in his ſhell: and being asked whether the man whoſe Baniſhment he deſired had ever wronged him, he replied, No, he was only ſorry to hear folk call him a Good man. We find the like unfortunate end to moſt of the Romans ſo redoubted in War. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murthered, with divers others; only becauſe their Vertue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was diſgraced by Antony; Agricola poyſoned, with the privity of Domitian; Corbulo murthered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an Age wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In latter times it ſo happened to Gonſalvo the great Captain, who, having conquered the Kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the Mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to ſtand at the Spaniards devotion, was by his Maſter called home, where he lived obſcurely, though honoured after his deceaſe with a ſolemn Funeral. Worſe fared the Guiſes and Biron in France; worſe Eſſex, and Dudley of Northumberland, with us in England. Neither will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who, having ſerved 34 years in our Wars with France, and for 17 years together never coming home, at his return was quarrelled, and baſely murthered. It were almoſt impiety to be ſilent of Joab, the braveſt Souldier and moſt fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lord's Battels, and yet was killed at the horns of the Altar. Whether it be that ſuch men be born under an unhappy Planet; or that Courtiers, and ſuch as have beſt opportunity to endear men of War unto their Sovereigns, know not the way of commending their great Deſerts; or that Envy, the common Foe to Vertue, be an hinderance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are diſtruſtful of men of action, and are not willing to make them greater whoſe name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the Souldiers themſelves, by an unſeaſonable over-valuing of their own Performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cauſe of the death of Silius in the time of Tiberius. Concerning which Tacitus giveth us this good Note, That Over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets Hate in ſtead of Favours. Beneficia eò uſque læta ſunt, dum videntur exſolvi poſſe; ubi multùm anteverterunt, pro gratia Odium redditur, ſaith that wiſe Hiſtorian.

But to look back again on Athens: it was firſt built by Cecrops, the firſt King thereof; governed by him and his Poſterity with no lower Title for 400 years, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The Kings of ATHENS.

A. M.
2394	1.	Cecrops, who firſt made Jupiter a God, and ordained Sacrifices to be offered to him, as Pauſanias writeth.
2444	2	Cranaus, outed of his Kingdom by
2453	3	Amphictyon, the Son of Deucalion, and Uncle to that Amphictyon who firſt inſtituted the ſupreme Court of the Amphictyones, or Common-Council of all Greece.
2463	4.	Erichthonius, the Son of Vulcan.
2513	5.	Pandion, the Father of Progne and Philomela, ſo famous in the old Poets; of whom more hereafter.
2553	6.	Erichtheus, whoſe Daughter Orithyia was raviſhed by Boreas King of Thrace.
2603	7.	Cecrops II. Brother of Erichtheus.
2643	8.	Pandion II. Son of Erichtheus.
2668	9.	Ægeus, Son of Pandion the ſecond, of whom the Ægæan Sea took name.
2706	10.	Theſeus, the Son of Ægeus, and Companion of Hercules, vanquiſhed the Minotaur in Crete, collected the People of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athens, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746	11.	Mneſtheus, the Son of Peteus, Grandchild of Erichtheus, ſerved with the other Greek Princes at the War of Troy.
2769	12.	Demophoon, the Son of Theſeus, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne on the death of Mneſtheus.
2802	13.	Oxyntes, Son or Brother of Demophoon.
2814	15.	Aphydas Son of Oxyntes, ſlain by his Brother.
2815	15.	Thymades the laſt of the Line of Erichtheus.
2823	16.	Melanthius of Meſſene, driven out of his own Kingdom by the Heraclidæ, obtained that of Athens.
2860	17.	Codrus, the Son of Melanthius, the laſt King of Athens; who, in the Wars againſt the Peloponneſians, having Intelligence by an Oracle that his Enemies ſhould have the Victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King, attired himſelf like a common Beggar, entred the Peloponneſian Camp, and there played ſuch Pranks, that at the laſt they were fain to kill him.

Which when the Enemy underſtood, they thought themſelves by this means deprived of all hopes of Succeſs, and ſo broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For this the people of Athens did ſo honour his memory, that they thought no man worthy to ſucceed as King, and therefore committed the managing of the Eſtate to Governours for term of Life, whom they called Archontes: the firſt Archon being Medon, the Son of Codrus. They differed not from the former Kings in point of Power, but only in the manner of their Admiſſion: the former Kings claiming the Government by Succeſſion in right of Bloud; and theſe Archontes holding by Election only: whoſe names here follow in this Liſt of

The perpetual Archontes in the State of ATHENS.

A. M.
2882.	1.	Medon, the Son of Codrus.
2902	2.	Acaſtus, the Son of Medon.
2938	3.	Archippus, the Son of Acaſtus.
2957	4.	Therſippus, the Son of Archippus.
2998	5.	Phorbas, the Son of Therſippus.
3029	6.	Megacles, the Son of Phorbas.
3059	7.	Diogenetus, the Son of Megacles.
3087	8.	Phereclus, the Son of Diogenetus.
3106	9.	Ariphron, the Son of Phereclus.
3126	10.	Theſpieus; in whoſe time began the Kingdom of Macedon.
3153	11.	Agameſtor.
3173	12.	Æſchylus, the Son of Agameſtor.

After whoſe death, Anno Mundi 3195, the Athenians, weary of theſe Governours for term of Life, as being leſs obnoxious to the Check and Cenſure of the People, choſe themſelves Officers or Archontes for ten years onely: at the end of which time they were to yield up their places, and make room for others. But being a People greedy of Novelties and deſirous of Change, they had only ſeven of thoſe Decennial Archontes; their Officers from that time forwards being choſen annually: which Officers, being nine in number, we may call moſt properly the Provoſt, the chief Biſhop, the Marſhal, and the ſix chief Juſtices, all choſen out of the Nobility. And ſo it held for the ſpace of 170 years, till the time of Solon; who was the firſt which put the Supreme Authority into the hands of the People; and gave the firſt hint unto that Democracy which afterwards prevailed in Athens by the help of Pericles, who, being one of the great Council of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their Power in deciding Controverſies and Suits in Law, putting them over to the Judgment of the Common people. A Government ſo dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered, or reſtored to Liberty, or won to their Party from the Spartans, they cauſed it to be admitted: as on the other ſide the Spartans introduced and confirmed an Ariſtocracy (their own beloved Government) in all the places where they proſpered. As for the Court of the Areopagites, of much fame in Athens, it conſiſted from the firſt beginning ἐκ τῶν κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν Ἀρχόντων, of ſuch as had born ſome of the nine chief Offices; who, being once admitted, held for term of Life. Firſt inſtituted in the time of Demophoon, the Son of Theſeus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the Street of Mars, ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ, mentioned Acts 17. 22. or becauſe Mars, being accuſed for a Murther, did firſt plead before them. A Court which held in eſtimation under all theſe Changes, and ſo continued till the time of the Roman Empire.

But to return again to the Story of Athens. In or about the latter end of the life of Solon, Piſiſtratus altered the Free State, and made himſelf the abſolute Maſter of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their Liberty, driving thence Hippias the Son of Piſiſtratus; who hereupon fled for Succour to Darius the Perſian Monarch, occaſioning by that means the firſt coming of the Perſians into Greece. What Succeſs the Perſians had in Greece the Hiſtories of thoſe Times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquiſhed by Miltiades at Marathon, and Xerxes by Themiſtocles at Salamis. Yet did not Athens ſcape ſo clear but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed firſt abandoned and voluntarily diſmantled by the Athenians. When the Perſians were retired homewards, the People of Athens re-edified their Town, and ſtrongly fortified it with high and defenſible Walls: which done, thy put their Fleet to Sea, and ſpoiled the Coaſts of Perſia in all quarters, inriching, their City with the Spoiles, and inlarging their Power and Dominion by the addition of many Iſlands and Sea-Towns. Hereby they grew unto that Wealth and Potency, that they were ſuſpected by their weaker Neighbours, and envied by their ſtronger, the Lacedæmonians eſpecially; who, fearing to loſe their ancient Priority over Greece, but pretending the Surpriſal of Potidæa, a City of Thrace, from the Corinthians, and ſome hard meaſure by them ſhewed upon the Megarenſes, made War upon them. In the beginning of this War the Athenians not onely reſiſted the whole Power of all Greece confederate againſt them, but ſo exceedingly proſpered, that the Spartans ſued for Peac, and could not get it. But the Scales of Fortune turned. For after they had held out 28 years, they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and ſubmit themſelves to the will and pleaſure of the Spartans, now by the puiſſance and good fortune of Lyſander become their Maſters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Ariſtocracie (or rather Oligarchie) eſtabliſhed under 30 Magiſtrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants; expelled not long after by the Valour of Thraſibulus and his Aſſociates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this War, which the Hiſtorians call Bellum Peloponneſiacum, the Perſians, ſeeing how the Spartans, not having now the State of Athens to oppoſe them, began to work upon their Empire, furniſhed Conon, a noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy ſo well provided, that he overcame the Lacedæmonians in a Fight at Sea, and thereby put his Countreymen into ſo good heart, that they made a party in the War called Bellum Sacrum; compoſed at the laſt by Philip of Macedon, who brought not onely the Thebans, whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the reſt of the adverſe party, under his Command. A Servitude from which they were never freed, till as well Macedon as the reſt became Fellow-ſervants unto Rome. But though this brave City had then loſt her power in point of Arms, yet ſhe ſtill kept her credit as an Univerſity in point of Arts. Origen, Chryſoſtom, Baſil, and Gregory Nyſſen, men of Renown and Eminence in the Primitive times, are ſaid to have ſtudied at Athens: the like is affirmed of Pope Joan, if the Tale be true, for the middle Ages. And ſo it held, as I conjecture, though not ſo eminently as before, till the year 1440, when taken by Mahomet the Great, who wondred much (as my Authour telleth) at the extream Beauty of the Caſtle, and the ſtrength of the Walls, not having loſt in ſo long time their former Excellencies. Since that it is ſenſibly decayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough, (by the Turks called Setines) but ſtill preſerveth the Reputation of an Epiſcopal See, the Biſhop of it holding up the Title of Athenienſis.

2. MEGARIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Attica, on the Weſt with the Bay of Corinth, on the North with Bœotia, and on the South with the Iſthmus and the Gulf di Engia: So called from Megara, the cheif City.

This is the leaſt Province of all Greece, and not very fruitfull, (the Countrey for the moſt part being hard and rocky) not beautified with many Cities. The principal of thoſe which were are, 1. Pegæ, or Pagæ, ſituate on the Bay of Corinth, and ſpoken of both by Pliny and Ptolemy; but not otherwiſe memorable. 2. Megara, (now Megra) firſt built by Megareus, the Son of Apollo, and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philoſophers, called from hence Secta Megarica, founded by one Euclide, a Diſciple of Socrates; of whom ſee Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Niſus, once the King of this little Territory on whoſe Head there is ſaid to have grown a purple Hair, on which the preſervation of his Life and Kingdom did depend: Which Jewel his Daughter Scylla is ſaid to have delivered unto King Minos, her Father's Enemy, of whom, then beſieging this City, upon the ſight of him from an high Turret, ſhe became inamoured. But he rejecting her and her Preſent both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy Woman ſeeing, ſhe threw her ſelf after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the morallizing of the Fable unto the Mythologiſts: obſerving onely by the way the antiquity of that politick practice, to love the Treaſon, and hate the Traitour. But the glory of this City did not end with Niſus For, ſhaking off the Cretan Yoke, it became ſui juris once again: and being conveniently ſeated on the very Iſthmus, amounted to that height of Proſperity, that they contended with the Athenians for the Iſland of Salamis. And in this War they ſo cruſhed the power and ſpirit of Athens by one fatal Overthrow, that the Athenians, to prevent all the like Diſaſters, did ordain by Law, that whoſoever mentioned the Recovery of Salamis was to loſe his Life: ſo that Solon was compelled to feign himſelf frantick, the better, to propound the Enterpriſe. In which although the State of Athens got the Iſle of Salamis, yet did the Megarenſes continue a Free people, till brought under (with the reſt) by the Macedonians, and with them made ſubject unto Rome.

3. BOEOTIA is bounded on the South with Megaris and the Bay of Corinth, on the North with the River Cephiſus, on the Eaſt with Attica and a Branch of the Ægæan Sea, and on the Weſt with Phocis. Thus named from Βοῦς, which in Greek ſignifieth an Ox; becauſe when Cadmus, weary of ſeeking his Siſter Europa, (whom Jupiter had ſtoln out of Phœnicia) came to the Oracle at Delphos, he was commanded to follow the firſt Ox he ſaw, and where the Ox did reſt it ſelf there to build a City.

In the Country is nothing ſingular, but an ancient Cuſtom of burning before the Door of an Houſe in which a new-married Wife was deſigned to dwell, the Axle-tree of the Coach which brought her thither; giving her by that Ceremony to underſtand, (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that ſhe muſt frame her ſelf to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country alſo are the Streights of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Baths called Thermopylæ, not above 25 foot in breadth; which in the War that Xerxes made againſt the Greeks were valiently defended by Leonidas King of Sparta with no more then 300 of his men, who, haveing valiantly reſiſted that Army which in its paſſage out of Perſia had drank Rivers dry, and ſlain at leaſt 30000 of them, died every man upon the place. To hide the greatneſs of which Loſs, leſt it ſhould terrifie the reſt of his Army which were coming on, Xerxes commanded all the ſlain men to be buried in ſeveral Pits, except a thouſand; as if no more then they had been loſt in that paſſage.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Theſpia, on a River of the ſame name, at the Fall whereof into the Bay it is pleaſantly ſeated; ſhadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon, aud conſecrated, as that was, unto the Muſes, hence called Theſpiades in the Poets. 2. Platææ; nigh to which Mardonius, General to the Perſians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the loſs of Mardonius himſelf and 160000 men on the Perſian ſide; and on the other no more then 31 Spartans, 16 Arcadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenſes. In memory of which brave exploit, and to preſerve the names and honour of thoſe Worthies who there laid down their Lives for the Liberty of Greece, there was a Feſtival kept anually by the Platæans in the month of September, with ſolemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgement unto the deceaſed; continued from the time of Ariſtides the Athenian, who firſt ordained them, to the days of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to ſay. In this great Fight the commander in cheif was a noble Spartan, called Pauſanias, who, afterwards having a Deſign to make himſelf Sovereign of all Greece, and being diſcovered in the Practice, fled for Sanctuary to the Temple of Pallas. From whence becauſe it was counted Sacrilege to conſtrain him by violence, it was unanimouſly reſolved to wall up the Entrances; his own Mother laying the firſt ſtone. It is recorded that, before the fighting of this Battel, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they ſhould be Conquerous, if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Platæans, within whoſe Territories the Perſians had prepared to fight, beſtowed that Field on the State of Athens. In requitall of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their City, having been firſt burnt and ſacked by the Perſians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedæmonians, becauſe confederate with Athens in the War againſt them. 3. Leuctra, remarkable for the great Overthrow which the Thebans, under the Conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans and their King Cleombrotus, who was there ſlain: by which Victory they did not onely preſerve their own Liberty, but brought their Enemies to that fall of Courage and Reputation, that they could never riſe again: the divine Vengeance overtaking them in that very place where ſome of their Nation had deflowred the Daughters of Scedaſus, who had given them courteous Entertainment. For which when no Reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damoſels ſlew themſelves, to avoid the infamy of conſenting to their own Diſhonour, and were buried in thoſe very Fields where this Battel was fought. 4. Aſcræa; the Birth place of Heſiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleaſed that proud Critick, Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worſt Verſe in the Georgicks of the one before the whole Works of the other. 5. Labadia, near the River Cephiſus; the Inhabitants whereof were counted the moſt ſuperſtitious of all the Græcians: memorable for the Trophonian Den or Cave, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trophonius: into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many Ointings, Waſhings, and the like Superſtitious preparations, too long and many to be ſpecified in this place and time. A Town which ſtill preſerves ſo much of its ancient Eſtimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Countrey of Achaia hath the name of Livadia, by which the Turks call it at this preſent. 6. Chærona, or Chæronæa, the Birth place of Plutarch; near unto which was fought that memorable Battel betwixt L. Sylla and the Romans againſt Archelaus, one of the Lievtenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Army of 120000 Souldiers, of which 10000 onely eſcaped with life, the Romans loſing but 14. 7. Orchomenus, no leſs memorable for another Victory, obtained by the ſame L. Sylla againſt Dorilaus, another of that King's Commanders, having an Army of 80000 men, of which 20000 loſt their lives that day. After which Victories, when Sylla might eaſily have deſtroyed that King, he ſuddenly patched a Peace up with him, that he might haſten unto Rome, where Marius and Cinna had troden his Faction under foot; preferring by that act the purſuit of his own private Quarrels before that of his Countrey, endangered more by Mithridates after his return, then it had been formerly. 8. Aulis, a Port-Town on the Shores of the Ægæan Sea, where the Græcians took ſhipping when they went to the War of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the Enterprize untill they had deſtroyed that City. Concerning which thus ſhe in Virgil,

Non ego cum Danais Trojanam exſcindere Gentem
Aulide juravi.
That is to ſay,
I took no Oath at Aulis, to deſtroy,
As did the Greeks, the Town and State of Troy.

But the cheif City of this Countrey, and ſuch as had a ſpecial Influence over all the reſt, was the City of Thebes, ſituate on the Banks of the River Cephiſus, where it was built by Cadmus the Phœnician, after all his wanderings. Famous in old times for the Wars between Eteocles and Polynices, the Sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and Wife Jocaſta. The Hiſtory of which War is the moſt ancient piece of Storie that we find of all Greece; the former times and Writings containing nothing but Fables, little ſavouring of Humanity, and leſs of Truth; as of Men changed into Monſters, the Adulteries of the Gods, and the like. In this Town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who ſo cruſhed the Lacedæmonians at the Battels of Leuctra and Mantinea, that they could never after re-obtain their former Puiſſance. This Commonwelth long flouriſhed, and at laſt, being over-burthened in the Phocian War, was glad to ſubmit it ſelf to the Protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip; who by this means firſt got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thruſt his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedonians, but Alexander his Succeſſor quickly recovered it: and to diſhearten the Greeks in the like Attempts, he raiſed the City, ſelling all the Inhabitants of age and ſtrength; onely Pindarus's houſe he commanded to be left ſtanding, in honour of that learned Poet. At the Sack of this Town, one of the Macedonian Souldiers entred the houſe of a principal Woman, named Timoclea, raviſhed her, and rifled her Coffers, but ſtill demanding more Treaſure, ſhe ſhewed him a deep Well, ſaying, that there all her Money was hidden. The credulous Villain ſtooping down to behold his Prey, ſhe tumbled him into the Well, and overwhelmed him with Stones. For which noble act, the generous Prince not onely diſmiſſed her unhurt, but moſt highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Caſſender, and followed for the moſt part, as the reſt of the Bœotians did, the Fortunes of Macedon, It is reduced at this time to the ſtate of an ordinary Burrough, and called Stibes by the Turks.

4. PHOCIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Bœotia, on the Weſt with Doris and Locris, on the North with the River Cephiſus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country ſomewhat ſwelled with Mountains, but thoſe of eminent note in the elder times. The chief wheof are, 1. Helicon, 2. Cithæron both conſecrated to the Muſes, and both contending with Parnaſſus for heighth and bigneſs. 3. Parnaſſus, of ſo great an heighth, that in that great Deluge in which moſt of theſe parts of Greece were over-whelmed with the Waters, Deucalion and Pyrrha ſaved themſelves and many others on the Top hereof: for which, and for its two Summits reaching to the Clouds, it is of great renown amongſt the Poets; as in Ovid thus,

Mons ibi verticibus petit arduus Aſtra duobus,
Nomine Parnaſſus; ſuperâtque cacumine Nubes.
Parnaſſus there with his two Tops extends
To the toucht Stars, and all the Clouds tranſcends.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Anticyra, ſituate near the Sea, and famous for the Helleborum there growing, an Herb very medicinal for the Phrenſie; whence the Proverb, Naviget Anticyram, applied to mad-men. 2. Pytho, or Pythia, ſaid to be ſeated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the World: Strabo relating how Jupiter, deſirous to know the exact middle of the Earth, let looſe two Eagles, one from the Eaſt, and the other from the Weſt, which flying with an equal Wing, (ſo we muſt conceive) and meeting at this very place, ſhewed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reaſon of which covenient ſituation in the Heart of Greece, it was made a Seſſions-Town for all the Græcians, and honoured with the Court and general Aſſembly of the Amphictyones; men choſen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controverſies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court firſt inſtituted by Acriſius, as Strabo telleth us: or, as Halicarnaſſæus more probably, by Amphictyon the Son of Helles, from whom they ſeem to have their name. The Commiſſioners from the ſeveral Cities, with reference to the places for which they ſerved, had the name of Phylagoræ; when aſſembled, they were called the Ambictyones: their Meetings were at the beginning of the Spring and Autumn. Some inſtances concerning their Authority will not be amiſs. In the time of Cimon, the Cirrhæans, having by Piracy wronged the Theſſalians, were fined by this Council; and after that the Lacedæmonians, for ſurprizing Cadmea. And the Phocians, for ploughing up the Land of Cirrha, which belonged to the Temple of Delphos, were by them amerced: and becauſe they continued obſtinate, and paid not their Amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiſcate unto that Temple. But they, diſobeying this Decree alſo, ſpoyled the Temple it ſelf: for which War being proclaimed againſt them by the reſt of the Græcians, who by the Aſſiſtance of Philip King of Macedon brought them to Obedience, the Council was again aſſembled; in which it was decreed that the Phocians ſhould raze the Walls of their Cities, that they ſhould pay the yearly Tribute of ſixty Talents, that they ſhould no more keep Horſe and Arms, till they had ſatisfied the Treaſury of the Temple, nor any longer have a Voice in thoſe Conventions. It was alſo then enacted, that the loſt Suffrages of the Phocians ſhould be veſted in King Philip and his Succeſſors, Kings of Macedon; on whom they alſo did confer the perpetual Preſidentſhip, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrin of the ſeventy Elders amongſt the Jews, and, in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Aſſemblies of the Switzers, carry moſt reſemblance. 3. Cirrha, on the Sea-ſide, the Port-town to Delphos. 4. Criſſa, ſo called from Criſſus the Son of Phocus, and grandchild of Æacus, ſituate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth; called ſometimes from hence Criſſæus Sinus. 5. Scarphia, memorable for the Defeat of Critolaus, Captain of the Achæan Army, by Metellus one of the Roman Prætors: the Loſs of which Battel drew after it the Deſtruction of Corinth. It was obſerved in the ſucceſs of this great Fight, that a Band of Arcadians, eſcaping out of the Battel, came unto 6. Elatea, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memory of ſome former Alliances, till news came of the Overthrow of Critolaus; when they were ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquiſh the Town, (for Adverſity ſeldom meeteth with returns of Friendſhip.) They were ſet upon and all ſlain by the Romans in the ſelf-ſame place in which their Anceſtors had unworthily forſaken the reſt of the Græcians in their War againſt Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Liberty. 7. Daulis, a City appertaining to Tereus King of Thrace, who, having married Progne, the Daughter of Pandion King of Athens, raviſhed her Siſter Philomela, and cut out her Tongue, the better to keep his Villany undiſcovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double Injury, firſt made him ignorantly eat his own Son Itys, whom ſhe had baked in a Pie; and after killed him, with the help of her raviſhed Siſter. 8. Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which, with that of Jupiter Hammon in Marmarica, (now reckoned as a part of Ægypt) were the moſt famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles; dark Riddles of the Devil, couched and contrived with ſo much Cunning, that the meaning of them was moſt hidden, when it was thought moſt eaſie to be diſcerned. An Inſtance of which is that given to Crœſus, in the War by him projected againſt the Perſian, which was thus delivered;

Crœſus Haly penetrans magnam ſubvertet opum vim.
When Crœſus over Halys goes,
A mighty Nation he o'rethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, croſſed the River, was vanquiſhed by Cyrus King of Perſia, and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who, before he made War againſt the Romans, conſulted with the Oracle, and received this Anſwer;

Aio te Æacida, Romanos vincere poſſe.

Which doubtful Prediction he thus conſtrued, Te poſſe vincere Romanos, That he ſhould overcome the Romans; but found it unto his coſt that the meaning was, Romanos poſſe vincere te, That the Romans ſhould overcome him: as indeed it happened. By another kind of the ſame Fallacy, which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great Enemy of mankind overthrow another, who, demanding of the Oracle what Succeſs he ſhould have in an Expedition which he was in hand with, received his Anſwer in theſe words,

Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis.

Which he thus pointing, Ibis, redibis, nunquam per, &c. engaged himſelf in the War, and was therein ſlain. Whereupon his Followers, canvaſſing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, Ibis, redibis nunquam, per, &c. The like Juggling he alſo uſed in thoſe ſupernatural Dreams which Philoſophers call δαιμονόπεμπτα. For Cæſar, dreaming that he carnally knew his own Mother the night before he paſſed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common Mother of the Romans: and Hippias, the Son of Piſiſtratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the ſame projects the ſame Dream, was killed and buried in the Bowels of his Mother the Earth. So that had Cæſar miſcarried in his action, and Hippias thrived; yet ſtill had the Devil been reputed his Crafts-maſter, and the Father of Truths. But as the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory telleth us, that Julian the Apoſtata, conſulting with the Devil, was told that he could receive no Anſwer, becauſe that the Body of Babylas the Martyr was entombed nigh his Altar: ſo neither could the Devils deceive the World, as formerly they had done, after Chriſt, the Truth it ſelf, was manifeſted in the Fleſh, and tormented theſe unclean Spirits, though, as they alledged, before their time. Auguſtus, as Suidas telleth us, in whoſe time our Saviour was born, conſulting with the Oracle about his Succeſſor, received this not ſatisfying Anſwer:

——— ———Παῖς
Ἑβραῖος κέλεταί με, θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων,
Τόνδε δόμον προλιπεῖν, καὶ ἀΐδην αὖθις ἱκέσθαι.
Λοιπὸν ἄπιθι σιγῶν ἐκ βωμῶν ἡμετέρων.
An Hebrew Child, whom the bleſt Gods adore;
Hath bid me leave theſe Shrines, and pack to Hell;
So that of Oracles I can no more.
In ſilence leave our Altar, and farewell.

Whereupon Auguſtus, coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereupon in Capital Letters cauſed this Inſcription to be ingraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Chriſt's Birth loſt much of their wonted Virtue, ſo after his Paſſion they loſt it almoſt altogether. Concerning which Plutarch, in a Tract of his Morals called Περὶ τῶν λελοιπότων Χρηστηρίων, Why Oracles ceaſe to give Anſwers, telleth us a notable Story, which was this. Some company, going out of Greece into Italy, were about the Echinades becalmed; when on a ſudden there was heard a Voice loudly calling on one Thamus, an Ægyptian then in the Ship. At the two firſt calls he made no anſwer; but to the third he replied, ſaying, Here I am. And the Voice again ſpake unto him, bidding him, when he came to the Palodes, to make it known that the great God Pan was dead. When they came unto the Palodes, which are certain Shelves and Rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus, ſtanding on the Poop of the Ship, did as the Voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty Noiſe of many together, who all ſeemed to groan and lament with terrible and hideous ſhreekings. News hereof coming to Tiberius, he cauſed the learned men in his Empire to enquire out of their Books who that Pan ſhould be: by whom it was anſwered, that he was the Son of Mercury and Penelope, with Ignorance enough, and little ſatisfaction to the buſineſs propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly obſerved the Circumſtances of this accident found it to happen at the time when our Saviour ſuffered on the Croſs; who was indeed the true God Pan, the chief Shepherd and Biſhop of our Souls, as the Scripture calleth him: and that, upon this divulging of his Death and Paſſion, the Devils, who uſed to ſpeak in Oracles, did with great Grief and Lamentation forſake that Office, which had been ſo gainful to them in ſeducing Mankind. That all Oracles at that inſtant ceaſed I dare not ſay; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being ſaid by Juvenal, who lived in the Reign of Domitian, Delphis Oracula ceſſant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then ſilent; the reſt decaying ſenſibly in a ſhort time after.

But to proceed. The Temple of Apollo being ſpoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, cauſed the War betwixt them and the Thebans, called the Holy War: in which the Thebans, being likely to have the worſt, ſent for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the Quarrel by ſubduing both. The Treaſure which the Phocians found in the Temple was reckoned at 60 Talents of Gold; but it proved Aurum Toloſanum, and brought a ſudden Ruine on their State and Nation: Sacrilege being ſo unpardonable a Crime, even amongſt the Heathen, that the fault of ſome few, countenanced by the reſt of a people, hath brought Deſtruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune ranſacked by Brennus and his Gauls, in the wain of the Macedonian Empire; all of them miſerably periſhing who had any hand in it.

5. LOCRIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis and a Branch of the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt with Ætolia, on the North with a long Ridge of Hills which part it from Theſſaly, and on the South with parts of Achaia, Bœotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Streights of Antirrhium, and a part of the Ionian Sea. So that for largeneſs of Extent, and the commodiouſneſs of the Seas, it yieldeth to no Province in Achaia, though not ſo fruitful as ſome others. Divided into the three Nations, of the Locri Ozolæ, lying towards the South, on both ſides of the Streights, ſo called from ſome ill Smels of the Country or people; 2. the Epicnemidii, inhabiting the middle parts, ſo named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Parnaſſus; and 3. the Opuntii, ſo called from Opus their chief City, lying on the North-ſide of the River Cephiſus, on the Coaſts of the Ægæan or Eubœan Seas.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Opus, the Head-City of the Opuntians, ſituate on the River Aſopus, being one of the main Branches of Cephiſus. 2. Cynus, the Port-Town to Opus. 3. Thronium, the prime Town of the Epicnemidii, mentioned by Polybius, Livie, Ptolemy. 4. Cnemides, at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 5. Amphiſſa, the chief City of the Ozolæ, ſituate in the inland parts of it: the People whereof, refuſing to yield to the Sentence of the Amphictyones againſt their Confederates the Phocians, were the cauſe that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Againſt whom, grievouſly infeſting the Bœotian, and manifeſtly aſpiring to the Command of Greece, the Athenians deſperately oppoſed; not ſo much with poſſibility of prevailing, as being urged on by the ſharp and biting Orations of Demoſthenes made againſt his Proceedings: which being by him called Philippicks, occaſioned Tully to call his bitter Invectives againſt M. Antonius by the ſame name alſo. But the Succeſs hereof was ſuch as commonly attendeth a broken Fortune: The Athenians being vanquiſhed at Chæronæa, and Philip declared Captain of Greece againſt the Perſians, obtained under that Title the Command he ſought. 6. Euantia, as Ptolemy, Oeanthia, as Pliny and Pauſanias call it; oppoſite to Ægira in Achaia propria. 7. Molycria, by Ptolemy placed here, and by others reckoned in Ætolia: not far from whence is the Promontory of Antirrhium, ſo called becauſe juſt oppoſite to that of Rhium in Achaia propria, between which runneth a narrow Streight, (not ſo wide as the Helleſpont) which openeth into the Bay of Corinth: each Promontory being for that cauſe fortified by Bajazet the ſecond with a very ſtrong Caſtle; that on this ſide being gallantly defended by the Turks, when beſieged by Doria, Anno 1532; for being forced with great Slaughter into a ſtrong Tower which commanded the Caſtle, they rather choſe to blow it up, together with the Ammunition, Victuals, and themſelves to boot, than that the Fort ſhould come intire into the hands of the Enemy. Some place this Promontory in Ætolia alſo; but, following the authority of Ptolemy, I have placed it here. 8. Nauractus, ſo called from the building of Ships there by the Heraclidæ; ſituate on the Corinthian Bay, near the Mouth thereof. Given by the Citizens of Athens to the poor Meſſenians, when, after the end of the third War, the Lacedæmonians, unwilling to have them troubleſom Neighbours, (and they ſcorning to be quiet Slaves) compelled them to ſeek new Habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Gulf of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that name ſubject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks Anno 1499. Of theſe Locrians thoſe of Italy were a branch or Colony, whoſe Law-giver was Zaleucus, ſpoken of elſewhere.

6. DORIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Phocis, on the Weſt with Ætolia, on the North with the Hill Oeta, and other Mountains which divide it from Theſſaly, and on the South with Ætolia and part of Locris. The Air hereof is very healthy, and the Soil ſufficiently fruitful, if well manured; but now the greateſt part lieth waſte for want of Tillage. Firſt peopled by the Dores or Dorienſes, deſcended from Dorus the Son of Helen, and Grandchild of Deucalion, by whom they were placed in Theſſaly, afterwards ſpreading into this Country, which they left their name to, as their proper Dwelling: though many of them, following the Heraclidæ into Peloponneſus, poſſeſſed themſelves of the greateſt part of Laconia alſo; imprinting on the ſame their Dialect or form of Speech, from them called the Dorick.

Chief Cities hereof are, 1. Doris, ſo called in memory of Dorus, the firſt Progenitour of this People. 2. Erineus, ſeated at the Foot of Parnaſſus, mentioned by Thucydides, Strabo, Mela, Ptolemy, and the reſt of the Ancients. 3. Bium, as Ptolemy; or Boion, as Strabo and Pliny call it. 4. Cytinum, near Parnaſſus alſo, in the common Impreſſions of Diodorus Siculus the Hiſtorian falſly called Cynthinium. 5. Lilæa, ſituate not far from the Spring or Fountain of the River Cephiſus; which, riſing hereabouts, paſſeth through the whole length of Achaia, and falls into the Ægæan or Eubœan Sea.

7. ÆTOLIA hath on the Eaſt Locris, on the Weſt Epirus, on the North Doris, on the South the Ionian Sea. ſaid to be ſo called from Ætolus, the Son of Mars, who, being by Salmoneus caſt out of Elis, fixed himſelf in this Country.

Here is the Foreſt of Calydon, where Meleager and the Flower of the Greek Nobility ſlew the wild Boar. Here is the River Euenus, over which the Centaur Neſſus having carried Dejanira, Wife of Hercules, and intending to have raviſhed her, was ſlain by an Arrow which Hercules on the other ſide of the River ſhot at him. Here alſo is the River of Achelous, of whom the Poets fable many things: as that being Rival with Hercules in the love of Dejanira, he encountred him in the ſhape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had pluck'd off one of his Horns, the Nymphs made of it their ſo-much-celebrated Cornucopia.

The people of this Country were the moſt turbulent and unruly people of all Greece, never at Peace with their Neighbours, and ſeldom with themſelves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reaſon of the Cragginesſ of the Country: yet they brought them to ſuch terms, that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principal Towns hereof were, 1. Chalcis, ſituate near the Spring-head of Achelous before mentioned. 2. Arachthus, near the River ſo called; which, ariſing hereabouts, paſſeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3. Olenus, not far from the Foreſt of Calydon. 4. Pleurone, giving name to the adjoyning Country, called hence Pleuronia, the People whereof had the name of Curetes ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their ſhaving, it being their cuſtom to ſhave the fore-parts of their Heads, and let the Hair grow on the hinder-parts only, nè Hoſtes eos çæſarie apprehenderent, becauſe their Enemies ſhould not lay hold on them by the Fore-tops, and ſo pull them down. 5. Thermus, the Parliament-City, or place of general Aſſembly, for all the States of Ætolia: which Meeting was called Panætolium. It was choſen for thoſe Meetings in regard of the ſituation and ſtrength thereof; as being ſituate well-near in the midſt of the Country, environed with rocky Mountains, of ſteep and difficult aſcent. For that cauſe it was made alſo the receptacle of their Wealth and Treaſure in all times of danger: but taken at the laſt by Philip of Macedon, with all the Spoil in it, in his War againſt them. 6. Calydon, near the Foreſt ſo called, giving name unto it: the royal Seat of Oeneus, Father of Meleager; divided into two parts by the River Euenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid,

> Et Meleagræam maculatus ſanguine Neſſi
> Euenus Calydona ſecat.
> That is to ſay,
> Calydon, Meleager's Town, the Floud
> Euen divides, defil'd with Neſſus bloud.

Adjoyning hereunto were the Athamanes, whom Pliny makes a People of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Athamania; but ſuch (as little as it was) as gave it the Title of a Kingdom to Animander; a Prince whom the Ætolians made ſpecial uſe of in their Wars againſt Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Perſeus, ſuggeſting to him and his Children, that they were deſcended of the Houſe of Alexander the Great, and ſo engaging them, in hope of that Kingdom, to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of moſt note are, 1 Dium, 2. Athenæum; both of them taken by Philip in that War.

Theſe, as they were the laſt Actors on the Stage of Achaia, ſo had they the moſt deſperate part in all the Tragedy of that Country. The Affairs whereof, governed ſucceſſively by that State which was moſt powerful, were for a long time managed by the Athenians; whoſe Counſels and Concluſions went for Law amongſt them. But that Eſtate being broken, if not ſubverted, by the Power of Sparta, the Thebans and Bœotians, who came next in play, had the chief Command; uniting almoſt all the reſt in deſign with them againſt the Spartans, who now grew terrible to all. Becoming inſolent by the courſe of two much Proſperity, and the many great Victories which they had againſt the Spartans, and thereupon quarrelling with the Phocians, they were the cauſe of Philip's coming into Greece; who, as he had learned amongſt them the uſe of Arms, ſo made he uſe thereof at laſt, and of their Diſſentions, to unite all the States of Greece under his Command; Thebes it ſelf being taken and ſacked by Alexander the Son of Philip, as before is ſaid. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by Force, but eſpecially by Art and Practice, there was no People in Achaia that durſt oppoſe them; till theſe Ætolians, a reſtleſs and impatient People, took the Cauſe in hand. Who thrived ſo well under Antigonus and Philip, two of the laſt Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many Towns, invaded Theſſaly, attempted Macedon it ſelf, and, when they could not otherwiſe obtain their purpoſe in the Deſtruction of that Kingdom, opened a paſſage for the Romans to effect it for them. But finding no ſuch favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks againſt them, drawing thereby thoſe Forces againſt themſelves which they had invited into Greece, and were the firſt People of all the Græcians that were conquered by them; though, by the Mediation of the Rhodians and ſome other Friends, their Country was reſtored unto them, with the loſs only of Cephalenia, Zant, and ſome other Iſlands, which the Romans were reſolved to keep as the fruits of the War. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Conſul, and chief Commander in this War. After which time the ſeveral Eſtates hereof enjoyed ſo much Liberty as the Romans, their new Maſters, thought fit to give them: till they were finally made abſolutely ſubject in the time of Veſpaſian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponneſus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the Diviſion of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, the Weſt parts hereof being divided from the reſt were called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Dioceſe of Macedon, under the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum; the principal Officer of this part being called the Proconſul of Achaia: continuing under him and his Succeſſors, Emperours of Conſtantinople, till the Deſtruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks; but ſo that it remained not always under the Command of one ſole Officer, the Politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments, eſpecially after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, or Weſtern Chriſtians. At that time Theodorus Angelus, a noble Græcian, and one of the (then) Imperial Family, ſeiſed on Ætolia and Epirus; part of which laſt, and all the firſt, he left to Michael his Son, who held them, though with ſome diſpute betwixt him and Michael Palæologus, the firſt Emperour of Conſtantinople after the Expulſion of the Latines. Charles, the laſt Prince of that Family, dying without Iſſue about the year 1430, bequeathed Ætolia to another Charles, the Son of his Brother; and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus which the Princes of Ætolia held) to his baſe Sons, Memnon, Turnus, and Hercules. But many Quarrels happening upon this Diviſion, Amurath the ſecond having then newly conquered Theſſalonica, compoſed the Differences by taking all unto himſelf, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like Authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Bœotia; but the firſt the chiefeſt, as honoured not only with the Title of Dukes of Athens, but of Princes of Achaia alſo; ſuch being the Fortune of that City, as to have the firſt and laſt great Sway in the Affairs of Achaia. For at the Tranſlation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a French-man, was made Duke of Athens and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilius ſpeaketh, Anno 1220: which Honour afterwards was conferred on Walter de Bren, a Kinſman of John de Bren, the laſt King of Jeruſalem, Protector of Baldwin the ſecond the laſt Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the ſaid Æmilius, Anno 1288. And though on the Defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalonians, then ranſacking thoſe parts of Greece, the Title of Duke of Athens was aſſumed by Frederick-Alphonſo, the Son of Frederick King of Sicily, and by other Princes of that Houſe: yet, upon better ground, by the Heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in Marriage to Izaulus di Accio, a Nobleman of the Realm of Naples; whoſe Son Walter (commonly called the Duke of Athens) for a time obtained the Sovereignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342, but loſt it ſuddenly again by his too much Cruelty. Francis de Acciavol, the laſt Prince of this Houſe, having been brought up in the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites, ſurrendred his Eſtate herein, at the perſuaſion of that Tyrant, in change for the Country of Bœotia and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no ſooner had received, but he was ſent by Mahomet to Zoganus his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at firſt he was courteouſly received, at laſt cruelly murthered. And ſo the whole Country of Achaia fell into the poſſeſſion of the Turks, Anno 1454, or thereabouts.

3. EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the Eaſt with Ætolia, on the Weſt with the Adriatick, on the North with Theſſaly, Macedon, and ſome part of Albania, and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the Solidity and Firmneſs of it; the word Epeiros in the Greek Tongue ſignifying as much as Terra firma, or the firm Land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the Lands and Countries in their poſſeſſion lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, Mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the firſt Foreiner who made triall (though to his own Loſs) of the Power and Puiſſance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the ſecond great Souldier of the world. Here is alſo Mount Pindus, ſacred to Apollo and the Muſes, dividing this Country from Theſſaly, and therefore common unto both: as alſo the Acroceraunian Hills, ſo called, becauſe they are ſo much ſubject unto Thunder and Lightning; eminent for their height, and much feared by Mariners, who, when they ſee a little Cloud riſing on the top hereof, are ſure of a Tempeſt. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron and Cocytus, which, for their black waters and unſavoury taſte, are ſaid to be the Rivers of Hell: from which laſt the Sacrifices and Solemnities made in honour of Proſerpine, whom Pluto raviſhed and brought hither, had the name of Cocytia. Whence, by a Metonymie, theſe Rivers are taken ſometime for Hell it ſelf; as in that of the Poet, Flectere ſi nequeo Superos, Acheronta movebo.

Since thoſe in Heaven I cannot move,
The Powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The Soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Foreſts, and thin of people; but towards the Sea reaſonably fruitful: plentiful of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more than ordinary bigneſs, and yielding the beſt breed of Horſes. The people uſe a diſtinct Language from the Græcians, though of the Greek Tongue not utterly ignorant: and, by reaſon of the Barrenneſs of their own Country, become great Wanderers, eſpecially in Summer-time, when they travel into Thrace, Macedon, and Aſia minor, hiring themſelves to work in Harveſt under the Turks, as alſo to threſh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter-time return to their Wives and Children. They are able of body, ſwift of foot, apt to undergo any Toil and Labour; having withall good Courages and high Projections: which makes ſuch of them as delight not in works of Drudgery to look for action in the Wars, and otherwiſe to rob and ſpoil the neighbouring Mountains of Albania. Till their Subjection to the Turks, they were much uſed both by the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice in their ſeveral Wars, ſerving on Horſe or Foot, as occaſion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Weſtern parts, but not ſo faithful to the party entertaining them.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia, (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the Weſt, and Acarnania, bordering on Ætolia, from which it is parted by the River Achelous: the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Theſprotia, and Almene: all very populous in former times, and ſo continued till Paulus Æmilius, on the Conqueſt of Macedon, overthrew ſeventy of their Cities. Few of which being ſince re-edified, and the Country for a long time languiſhing under the Turks, here are not any very fair Towns or well-peopled Cities at the preſent to be ſpoken of; and therefore we muſt look on ſuch as flouriſhed in the times fore-going. The principal whereof were, 1. Dodona, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus; ſituate in a fair Grove, the Trees whereof are ſaid to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle: though others ſay it was delivered firſt by a pair of Pigeons, whereof the one afterwards fled to Delphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the ancienteſt Oracle of all Greece: and ſo perhaps was the Town the ancienteſt Town alſo. Said to be firſt built by Dodon, the Son of Jupiter and Europa: more probably ſo called from Dodanim, the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who firſt inhabited this Region; the whole Countrey (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father, (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew Text) this Town Dodona from the Son. 2. Caſſiope, a Port-Town, with a fair Promontory of the ſame name adjoyning to it. 3. Oncheſmus, by Strabo called Onchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port-Town alſo, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Panormus. on the Sea-ſide alſo, retaining ſtill the old name, and but little elſe. 5. Antigonia, more within the Land, founded or repaire'd by Antigonus a King of Macedon; now called Argiro Caſtro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phœnice, once the cheif Town hereof; which being ſacked by the Illyrians, under Teuta their Queen, gave the Romans an occaſion of Quarrel with them, upon Complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelodes, a Port-Town, the Principal in that part which was called Theſprotia; as 8. Tarona, on the River Thyamis, and 9. Sybota, an ancient Haven-Town, (now called Syoita) was in that part hereof which was called Almene. 10. Argos, the cheif City of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was firſt named Moloſſia, from Moloſſus the Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache, remarkable for the beſt breed of Maſtives, hence called Moloſſi: and afterward Chaonia, by Helenus the Son of Priamus, whom Pyrrhus the Son of Acbilles ſettled in this Country; who having unfortunately ſlain his Brother Chaon, cauſed it in memory of him to be called Chaonia; Chaoniamque omnem Trojano à Chaone dixit as it is in Virgil. Of theſe Moloſſians, Pluto, the third Son of Saturn, was ſometimes King, called, from the flat and hollow ſituation of this Countrey, conſiſting much of deep Valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of eſpeciall note in Acarnania were, 1. Anactorium, on the Bay of Ambracia, now called Vanizza. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoyning Town, ſituate in or near the place where Ambracia ſtood. It was once ſubject unto Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being ſlain by a Woman named Leonna, whom he kept as his Concubine, occaſioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their Deliverance, to worſhip a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the Children of Pyrrhus by the Macedonians, and from them wone by the Ætolians in the time of their greatneſs, it was beſieged by Fulvius, a Roman Conſul ſpoken of before. Who, ſeeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the Mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other Friends of both parties, to conclude a Peace; but ſo that he deſpoiled this City at his going hence of much excellent Imagery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muſes moſt admirably well done by the hand of Zeuxis, the rareſt Painter of his times. 3. Buthrotum, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia ſimply; now a ſmall Village called Butrinto. 4. Leucas, ſituate on the point of a Promontory of the ſame name alſo, anciently memorabe for the Temple of Apollo. By leaping into the Sea from the top of this Promontory, ſuch as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady: the firſt triall of that kind being made by Sappho that famous Poetreſſe. At that time it was joyned unto the Land; but ſince, by the violence of the Sea or the hand of man, it is made into an Iland; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continuam veteres habuêre Coloni,
Nunc Freta circumeunt———
That is to ſay,
Leucas, in former times joyn'd to the Land,
Environ'd round with Waters now doth ſtand.

It was called Leucas, from the Whiteneſs of the Rock or Promontory, having before the Seperation or disjunction of it been called Neritos; the cheif Town of it varying with the name of the Iſle and Promontory. Both Town and Iſland at this time is called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the ſecond from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who do ſtill inhabit it) at their expulſion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colony of the Romans, of great both Wealth and Beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epiſtle to Titus: called in that Poſtſcript Nicopolis of Macedonia, becauſe Epirus at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a diſtinct Province of it ſelf. It was firſt built by Auguſtus Cæſar on a Promontory oppoſit unto Actium, on the other ſide of the Bay: that being the place where his Land-Souldiers were incamped before the Naval Battel betwixt him and Mark Antony; and was thus called either in memory of his Victory, or from a poor man and his Aſs, whom he met there the day before. For asking the man his name, he told him that his name was Eutyches, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Aſs was Nicon, i. e. Conquerour: which happy Omen made his Souldiers couragious and hopeful of Victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Aſs, the other of his Maſter. It is now a ſmall Village called Preveſa. 6. Actium, on the Sea-ſhore, nigh unto which Auguſtus and Antony fought for the Empire of the World. The Navy of the latter conſiſted of 500 Galleys; the former had 250 onely, but thoſe crowned with Victory: Antonius ſhamefully deſerting his Souldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very firſt Charge fled away for Ægypt. The Town being now ruined, the Promontory upon which it ſtood is called Caba di Figalo.

The Countrey was firſt peopled by Dodanim the Son of Javan, or at leaſt by ſome of his Poſterity coming hither from the Iſle of Rhodes; whoſe Memory was preſerved a long time in the Town of Dodona, by him, or from him, ſo denominated. Afterwards, being parted into ſeveral Nations, and thoſe Nations united in the common name of Epirots, it became a great and powerfull Kingdom; governed by a Race of Kings deſcending from Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles, and continuing till the time of Pyrrhus Æacides. A man of ſuch Courage and Magnanimity, that he did not onely recover his own Kingdom, of which Caſſander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Caſſander's Children: outed of which, he tried his Fortune with the Romans Anno Mundi 3683, V. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was ſhrewdly ſhaken by the Macedonians, and ſhortly after ſubdued by Paulus Æmilius, who, as we now ſaid, deſtroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For deſirous to ſatisfie his Souldiers after his Victory in Macedon, he ſent unto the Epirots for ten of the principle men of every City. Theſe he commanded to deliver up all the Gold and Silver which they had; and to that end, as he gave out, he ſent certain Companies of Souldiers along with them; unto whom he gave ſecret Inſtructions, that on a day by him appointed they ſhould fall to ſack every one the Town whereunto they were ſent. A barbarous and bloudy Decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer then 150000 Epirots made and ſold for Slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to ſo great a Cruelty was, by diſpeopling this Countrey, lying with a long and fair Sea-coaſt overagainſt Italy, to give the Romans oppertunity to land their Armies without any Reſiſtance for the farther Progreſs of their Forces into Macedon, Thrace, Mœſia, or where elſe they pleaſed. Which ungodly Policy was afterwards imitated by William the Couquerour, who laid waſte all that part of Hampſhire ſince called New Foreſt, and therein 36 Pariſh-Churches, that he might have a ſafe Landing-place for his Norman Forces, if the Engliſh ſhould at any time endeavour to make head againſt him. Being made ſubject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards, when Macedonia was made a Dioceſe, it became a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eaſtward of it. At the Diviſion of the Empire it belonged to the Conſtantinopolitans, and ſo continued till the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial Family, ſeiſed on Ætolia and Epirus, as before is ſaid, and ſped ſo well in his Deſigns, that he took the ſtrong City of Durazzo from the State of Venice, (to whom it fell in the diviſion of that Spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherouſly) intercepted Peter the third Emperour of the Latins whom, as ſome ſay, he cauſed to be Murthered at a Banquet. After his death, his whole Eſtate being divided into two parts, Ætolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia continued in his Houſe till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus, ſpoken of before, after whoſe death it was ſubdued by Amurath the Second, as before was ſaid. The reſidue hereof, together with that part of Macedon which is called Albania, fell to the Family of the Caſtriots: the laſt of which, named John, (the Father of Scanderbeg) ſeeing himſelf unable to reſiſt that Tyrant, who had already ſwallowed up all his neighbour-Princes, ſubmitted his Eſtate unto him, and gave unto him all his Sons for Hoſtages. No ſooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath ſeiſed on his Eſtate, murthered his three eldeſt Sons, and cauſed George, the youngeſt, to be train'd up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards, eſcaping out of his Power, and recovering all his Father's Countries, aſſumed alſo the Style or Title of Prince of Epirus. After whoſe death his Children, not being able to make good their Game, loſt it to Mahomet the Great; as ſhall be ſhewn more fully in the Story and Diſcription of Albania, which is next to follow.

ALBANIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Macedonia, on the Weſt with the Adriatick, on the North with Sclavonia, on the South with Epirus. The Country is mountainous and barren; watered with few Rivers, and thoſe of no great note amongſt the Ancients; as 1. Laus, 2. Apſus, 3. Panyaſus, 4. Celydnus: all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this Tract from whom the cheif City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other Towns of moſt conſideration are, 1. Sfetigrade, or Veſtigard, (called by ſome the Holy City) ſituate in the Borders of Epirus, on the top of an Hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagle's Neſt: one of the laſt Towns in all this Conntrey which was taken by Scanderbeg at his recovery of his Birthright and Eſtate herein; but being once taken by him, held good courageouſly againſt the Turk, the Souldiers neither fainting in their Oppoſitions, nor corrupted by Money, till at the laſt ſubdued by a Superſtition. There was in the Town one onely Well, into which a treacherous Chriſtian caſt a dead Dog; at the ſight of which, being the next day drawn up, the Souldiers gave up the Town; being ſo unſeaſonably ſuperſtitious, that no perſuaſion, nor the example of the Captain or the Burgo-maſters, could make them drink thoſe (as they thought) defiled waters. 3. Durazzo, a Town of great Strength, firſt called Epidamnum, and afterwards Dyrrhachium. Under the Walls of which Town was the firſt bickering between the Souldiers of Cæſar and Pompey, not onely to the preſent Loſs, but alſo the utter Diſcomfiture of Cæſar, as he himſelf confeſſed, if the Enemie's Captain had known how to have overcome. I muſt not omit the Valour of Scæva at this Siege, who alone ſo long reſiſted Pompey's Army, that he had 220 Darts ſticking in his Shield, and loſt one of his Eys; and yet gave not over till Cæſar came to his Reſcue.

Parque novum Fortuna videt concurrere, Bellum
Atque Virum----denſamque ferens in Pectore Sylvam.
Fortune beholds an unaccuſtom'd Sight,
An Army and a man together fight,
Whoſe Breaſt a Wood of Arrows cover'd quite.

In the Diviſion of the Eaſtern Empire amongſt the Latines it fell into the power of Venice; taken at laſt after a long and tedious Siege, by Amurath the ſecond, Anno 1474. 4. Dibra, in the Hill-countries, near Epirus; the firſt Town which ſubmitted to the valient Scanderbeg at his revolting from the Turks; ſuppoſed to be the Deborus of Ptolemy. 5. Croia, conceived to be the Epicaria of Ptolemy, the chief Town of all this Countrey ſeated amongſt inacceſſible Mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by a Wile; who, having got into his power, the Secretary of the principal Baſſa, forced him to write Letters in his Maſter's name unto the Governour hereof to deliver it unto him; which was done accordingly. Afterwards it was in vain beſieged by Amurath the ſecond, who under the Walls hereof gave up his wretched Soul to the Devil; and thrice beſieged by Mahomet his Son and Succeſſor, before he could again poſſeſs it: but taken at the laſt after Scanderbeg's death, as if the Geneus or Tuteler Deity of the place had departed with him. 6. Petrella, a Town of great Strength, ſeated on the top of an Hill (as almoſt all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia; delivered unto Scanderbeg at his firſt ſitting down before it: as alſo was 7. Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, near the Borders of Macedon, and ſituate like the other on the top of a Mountain, the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8. Stelluſa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high Hill in the middle of a pleaſant and fruitfull Valley, with great and ſpacious Plains about it. 9. Dagna or Dayna, a place of great importance in the Hill-Countrey towards Sclavonia; for the poſſeſſion whereof roſe a War betwixt Scanderbeg and the State of Venice: but the Venetians, being worſted at the Battel of Drino, relinquiſhed their Pretentions to it. 10. Aulon, a Port-Town, now called Valona, ſituate over againſt Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, diſtant from it about 60 miles. The Town is unwalled, but fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. A Town unfortunately fit for the Invaſion of Italy, and was accordingly made uſe by Achmetes the cheif Baſſa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence paſſed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and, had not the death of Mahomet, and the Combuſtions thereon following amongſt the Turks, altered the Deſign, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Conſtantinople. 11. Apollonia, a Town of great note in the time of the Romans; a Sea-Town, furniſhed with a commodious Haven, which they held as their Entrance into Greece; to that purpoſe ſerving them as commodiouſly, as Calais did the Engliſh in their Wars with France.

This Countrey anciently was a part of Macedon inhabited by the Talautii, Æſtræi and Albani, from which laſt (but not till theſe latter times) it had the name of Albania but whether theſe Albani were a Colony of the Albanians of Aſia, (though it be very probable) I determine not. When it was made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prævalitana and ſome part of Macedonia Salutaris; being under the Dioceſe of Dacia in the time of Juſtinian, but at firſt of Macedon. Diſmembred from the main Body of it when the Latines had ſubdued Conſtantinople, it fell unto the noble Family of the Caſtriots; who, though they took unto themſelves the Title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (moſt of which they held) as the Countrey of more Note and Eminence, yet was Albania the greateſt Strength, and Croia the cheif City thereof, the Seat of their Reſidence: they being called in that reſpect by ſome Writers the Kings of Albania. John Caſtriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, ſeeing himſelf unable to reſiſt the Turks, became their Homager, and delivered four Sons for Hoſtages; whom Amurath the ſecond in their Father's life time cauſed to be cercumciſed, and turn Mahometans: and after his deceaſe murthered the three eldeſt, and ſeized upon Croia the cheif City with the reſt of the Countrey. But George, the youngeſt of thoſe Sons, being reſerved for better Fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath (who ſomewhat paſſionately affected him) in the Stratagems of War, though ſome of his Courtiers then told him that he nouriſhed a Serpent in his Boſom, which would one day ſting him. Amurath, to make triall of his Diſpoſition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his Service before all the Kingdoms of the World; and that he held his hand fitter for a Sword, then his Head for a Crown. Satiſfied with which Anſwer the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanzack or Provincial Governour, and gave him ſome office of Command in all thoſe Armies which he ſet out againſt the Chriſtians, Eſcaping out of the Battel wherein Caramben, the great Baſſa, was overthrown and taken Priſoner by Huniades, he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was ſaid; and in a very ſhort time after made himſelf Maſter of Petrella, Petra, Alba, Stelluſa, and all the reſt of the Countrey, by the reputation and terrour of his firſt Succeſs. Having recovered his Inheritance out of the hands of the Turks, he reconciled himſelf to the Church of Chriſt, ſtyling himſelf the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS from that time forwards. Invaded by a vaſt Army of Turks, he overcometh Aly Baſſa, and kills 20000 of his men. With no more then 20 Horſe and 50 foot he aſſaulteth Muſtapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turks were ſlain, and 300 taken. With whom encountring not long after in the open Field, he ſlew 10000 of his men, took many priſoners, and Muſtapha himſelf amongſt the reſt, whom he ranſomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Hoſt of Amurath, then beſieging Croia, he killed Feris Baſſa hand to hand in a ſingle Combat: and in the time of Mahomet, who ſucceeded Amurath, vanquiſhed Iſaac the great Baſſa, routed his whole Army, had the Spoil of his Camp, took 20 of his faireſt Enſignes, and ſlew 30000 of his Souldiers. Not to inſtance in the reſt of his noble Actions it is reported that in the courſe of his War againſt the Turks he killed no fewer then 3000 of them with his own hands; uſing a Turkiſh Scimiter in all his Fights, of great weight and bigneſs. Which when Mahomet on a Peace between them had deſired to ſee, and afterwards returned again with this Cenſure of it, that he ſaw nothing in it more then ordinary: the gallent Prince ſent back this Anſwer, that the Virtue of the Weapon depended on the Strength of his Arme, which he could not ſend him, for that he did reſerve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards againſt Amurath and Mahomet, two moſt fortunate Gamſters, for the ſpace of 24 years, he ſet up his Reſt at laſt a Winner; dying in Peace at Liſſa, then belonging to the State of Venice, Jan. 17. An. 1466, and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turks about nine years after, his Body was digged up by them, not in ſpight, but honour; that man accounting himſelf happy who could get any of his Bones to preſerve as a Relick, ſuppoſing that as long as he had it about him he ſhould be invincible. But with him died the Liberty of his Countrey alſo, not long after ſubdued by the Turks, and made a Province of that Empire, as it ſtill continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and ſo much of Dalmatia alſo as is under their power.

The Armes of this Kingdome (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

5. MACEDONIA.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt with Albania, on the North with Mœſia Superior and a part of Thrace, and on the South with Epirus and Achaia.

It was firſt called Æmonia, from Mount Hæmus, which ſhutteth up that ſide hereof which is towards Mœſia; after Æmathia, or Emathia, from a King of it called Æmathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Deucalion, and the Father of Caranus, the firſt King of the Line of Alexander; and finally Kittim, or the Land of Kethiim, whereof ſee 1. Maccab. 1. 1. and 8. 5. from Kittim the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who was planted here. Anciently it was of more large extent then it is at the preſent, extending from the Ægæan Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath ſtreightned it upon that ſide, but the reſt is as formerly.

The Country taking it together, is very fruitfull and pleaſent though on the outward parts thereof begirt with rough Mountains and thick Foreſts: in former times much celebrated for its Mines of Gold and Silver, which are long ſince exhauſted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Æmathia, Pieria, Pelaſgia, Iſtiæotis, Phthiotis, Theſſalie, Mygdonia, Amphaxitis, Paraxia, Edonis, and many others of leſs note, inhabited by 152 ſeveral Nations: now principally divided (beſides Albania) into, 1. Theſſalie, 2. Macedon ſpecially ſo called, and 3. Migdonia, which the Turks call Jamboli.

1. THESSALIE hath on the Eaſt the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt Albania, on the North Macedon and Mygdonia, on the South Achaia. A ſweet and delectable Country it is, the Pleaſures and Delights whereof inclined the People to be very effeminate and diſſolute in their courſe of life, made them in love with Luxury and Eaſe, and much like the Perſians in Behaviour, whoſe Entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithſtanding this Debauchedneſs, they were eſteemed the beſt Horſemen of all the Græcians: by their excellent managing of which creature, (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horſe their Minds, or borrowed his Body) they gave occaſion unto the Fiction of the Centaurs, half Men, half Beaſts.

It is now called Comenolitari, and of old was very famous for many things, eſpecially 1. for the Hill Olympus of ſo great height, that it ſeemeth to tranſcend the Clouds and is therefore frequently by the Poets uſed for Heaven it ſelf. 2. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Pirithous, was King. 3. for the Mountains of Pelion and Oſſa, the Dwelling-places of the Centaurs, who, intending to raviſh Hippodamia, the new Bride of Pirithous, on her Wedding-day, were ſlain by Hercules and the Lapithæ. 4, For the delectable Valley of Tempe ſituate betwixt Oſſa and Olympus, extending in length ſix miles, and five in breadth; ſo beautified with Nature's Gifts, that it was ſuppoſed to be the Garden of the Muſes. 5. and laſtly, For the Dolopes and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had Command at the Siege of Troy: theſe laſt, by reaſon that they were a laborious and thrifty People, being fabled by the Poets to have firſt been Emmets, transformed into men at the Prayer of Æacus, when he wanted Souldiers.

--------Mores quos ante tenebant
Nunc quoque habent; parcum genus eſt, patiênſq; laborum
Quæſitique tenax, & quod quæſita reſervet.
The cuſtome they of Emmets ſtill retain,
A ſparing Folk, and unto Labour ſet,
Strangely addicted to all kind of Gain,
And wary Keepers of what-e're they get.

Places of moſt obſervation in it are, 1. Tricca, the Epiſcopal See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious Piece called the Æthiopick Hiſtory; which he ſo prized, that he choſe rather to looſe his Biſhoprick then conſent to the burning of his Book, which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A Piece indeed of rare Contexture and neat Contrivances, without any touch of looſe or laſcivious Language: honeſt and chaſt Affection being the Subject of it, not ſuch as old or modern Poets ſhew us in their Comedies or other Poems. For here we have no Inceſtuous mixture of Fathers and Daughters, no Pandariſm of old Nurſes, no unſeemly Action ſpecified where heat of Blood and Opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one paſſage unworthy of the chaſteſt Ear. 2, Lamia, where the Athenians, after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their Freedoms, beſieged Antipater: which was the laſt honorable Enterpriſe undertaken by that great and renowned City, known in old Hiſtories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3. Lariſſa, ſituate on the South of Demetrias, but on the ſame Bay; memorable for the Birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Lariſſæus Achilles, which Birth of his is aſcribed by others to the Town of Phthia, (from whence the Region called Phthiotis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account: and poſſibly, being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his Birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrias, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus, (now Golfo dell' Armiro) of very great Strength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Iſle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth, kept all Greece in aw, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece; the Græcians never thinking themſelves at liberty till thoſe Towns were diſmantled by the Romans. 5. Pharſalus, nigh to which was fought the great Battel betwixt Cæſar and Pompey for the Sovereignty of the Roman Empire. A Battel more famous then bloudy, 6000 onely of 300000 which were in the Field on both ſides, being therein ſlain. A Battel before which the Pompeians were in ſuch a miſerable Security, that ſome of them contended for the cheif Prieſthood, which was Cæſar's Office; others diſpoſed of the Conſulſhip and Preferments in the City of Rome: Pompey himſelf being ſo wretchleſſe, that he neither conſidered into what place it were beſt to flie if he loſt the day, or by what means he might provide for his own Safety, and end the War; as if the War had been made againſt ſome ignoble Enemy, and not againſt that Cæſar who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took priſoners one million of men, and ſlain as many. 6. Philippi, ſo named from Philip the Macedonian, the firſt Founder of it; ſituate in the farther part of the ſame Plains of Pharſalia, and famous for as memorable a Battel as that before, and of no leſs conſequence: that namely betwixt Auguſtus and M. Antonius on the one ſide, againſt Brutus and Caſſius on the other; theſe latter being rather overcome by Chance then Valour. For either of them (thinking the other vanquiſhed) ſlew himſelf in the Field; being the two laſt that ever openly ſtood out for the common Liberty, and are therefore called by Cremutius Cordus Vltimi Romanorum, or the laſt of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphi, a very ancient City bordering on Epirus. 8. Pheræ, in which City Alexander the Tyrent reigned, againſt whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting was ſlain in Battel: the Tyrant being not long after murthered by his Wive's Brother, and by that means all Theſſalie recovering Liberty. 9. Pegaſa, or Pagaſa, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Pelaſgicus which from hence is ſometimes named Pegaſicus; in which the Ship called Argo was ſaid to be built, ſo famous for the renowned Voiage of the Argonauts. The Hill Pelion ſpoken of before is not far from hence. 10. Pythion or Pitheum, of great note (according to ſome) for the Pythian Games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerours in which Games were crowned at the firſt onely with an Oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrel. Of which thus the Poet.

Néve operis famam poſſet abolere Vetuſtas,
Inſtituit ſacros celebri certamine Ludos,
Pythia de domiti Serpentis nomine dictas, &c.

Thus made to ſpeak Engliſh by G. Sandys;

Then leſt the well-deſerved memory
Of ſuch an Act in future time ſhould die,
He inſtituted the ſo-famous Games
Of free Contention, which he Pythia names.
Who Ran, who Wreſtled beſt, or rak'd the ground
With ſwifteſt Wheels, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

Theſe Games, together with the Olympick, Iſthmian and Nemæan, ſpoken of before, made the four annual Meetings amongſt the Græciens, renowned for the univerſal Concourſe of the nobleſt ſpirits. 11. Doliche, which, together with Pytheum, and 12. Azorum, another City of this Tract, ſtanding near together, are called in Livius the Hiſtorian by the name of Tripolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Theſſalie, ſo called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopick Hiſtory before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Ziton and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain Hercules, being tortured with a poiſoned Shirt ſent by his innocent Wife Dejanira, is ſaid to have burned himſelf; thence called Hercules Oetæus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagaſa and Demetrius, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Lariſſa, Doliche, Pytheum and Azorum, in that called Pelaſgia; Gomphi and Tricca in Iſtiæotis; the reſt in Theſſalie properly and ſpecially ſo named.

This Countrey, at firſt called Æmonia, afterwards Pelaſgia, then Pyrrhæa, from Pyrrha the Wife of Deucalion, and finally Theſſalia, from Theſſalus one of the Companians of Hercules; by Pliny is called Dryopis, Eſtiotis by Strabo, Pelaſgia by Diodorus, and by Homer Argos; the name of ſome cheif City or particular Province being figuratively uſed for the whole. It was divided commonly into four parts, 1. Theſſaliotis, 2. Iſtiæotis, 3. Pelaſgiotis, and 4. Phthiotis, the name of Theſſalie or Theſſaliotis in the end prevailing; and accordingly diſtributed into ſeveral Governments, united finelly in the perſon of Philip, the Father of Alexander, who partly by Force, but ſpecially by Art and Practice, made himſelf Maſter of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and ſubject under the Macedonian Kings of the 2. Race, it became ſubject with that Kingdom to the ſtate of Rome: firſt reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon; after a Province of it ſelf, when Macedon was made a Dioceſe, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Dioceſe, and a Member of the Eaſtern Empire, it was made a Kingdom; given with that Title to Boniface Marqueſſe of Montferrat in exchange for Candia, together with the City of Theſſalonica, and ſome part of Peloponneſus, at the Deviſion of that Empire amongſt the Latines. which Title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Theſſalie by the Emperour Emanuel, whoſe Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to Wife In him as it began, ſo this Title ended; Theſſalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theſſalie reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom it was ſubdued, and added to the Turkiſh Empire, in the Reign of Amurath the ſecond, Anno 1432.

2. MACEDON ſpecially ſo called is bounded on the Eaſt with Migdonia, on the Weſt with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Theſſalie. The Countrey is for the moſt part fruitfull, as before was ſaid, but not ſo ſurfeiting with Delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their courſe of life; they being naturally good Souldiers, exact obſervers of military Diſcipline, and inured to Hardneſs, which their many ſignall Victories do moſt clearly evidence both in Greece and Aſia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongſt the barbarous Nations; and yet, by a ſtrange kind of contradiction, aſcribe unto their Countrey the Seats of the Muſes. For in this Country was Mount Pimpla, with a Fountain of the ſame name at the Foot thereof, both conſecrated to the Muſes, from hence called Pimpleides. Here alſo was the Hill Libethrus, and the Province of Pieria; from whence the Muſes had the names of Libethrides and Pierides; by this laſt called more frequently then by any other name what-ever, eſpecially by the Greeks, themſelves. But the Birth of Ariſtotle in this Country doth more convince the Græcians of this fooliſh Arrogance then all the Muſes in the world. A man ſo admirable in the general courſe of Learning, ſo univerſally comprehenſive of all Arts and Sciences, that the beſt-witted Græcian might have been his Scholar, and thought it a great Happineſs, as King Philip did, that they had any Children to be tutoured by him.

The principal Rivers hereof (beſides Erigon and Aliacmon, ſpoken of before) are, 1. Axius, at preſent called Vardari, riſing out of the Hill Scardus, a Branch of Mount Hæmus, and paſſing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Theſſalonica, as it is now named: the faireſt River of theſe parts, and of ſweeteſt Water; but ſuch as maketh all the Cattel black which drink of it. 2. Chabrius 3. Echedorus; both riſing out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the ſame Bay alſo. Beſides which there are three other fair and capacious Bays aſcribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia; that is to ſay, Singiticus, now Golfo di monte ſanto, and Toronaicus, now the Gulf or Bay of Aiomana, and the third common unto Thrace alſo, which is Sinus Strymonicus, now the Bay of Conteſſa.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, were for the Almopi, 1: Horma, called afterwards Seleucia; 2. Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon; 3. Apſalus, Of Sintica, 4. Triſtolus, 5. Paræcopolis, 6. Gariſcus, 7. Heraclea, for diſtinction called Heraclea Sintica; there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonis, bordering toward Thrace, 8. Scotuſa, 9. Berga, 10. Amphipolis, on the River Strymon, with which it is encompaſſed, whence it had the name; ſeated ſo cloſe on the edge of Thrace, that it is queſtionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garriſoned by the Athenians, and from them taken by Philip the Macedonian in the firſt riſe of his Fortunes. 11. Crenides, bordering on Thrace alſo, and by ſome Writers laid unto it, but I think erroneouſly: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom it was called Philippi; and ſituate in a Countrey ſo rich in Mines of Gold, that the ſaid Philip drew thence yearly 1000 Talents, which make 600000 French Crowns, or 140000 l. of our Engliſh mony. Afterwards made a Roman Colony, and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Acts 16. 12. to the People of which S. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. Next in Æmethia we have 12. Tyriſſa in the Mid-lands, bordering upon Theſſalie, now called Cereſi. 13. Ædeſſa, called afterwards Ægæa, and now Vodena; the firſt Town of all this Country taken by Caranaus, the Founder of the firſt Race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Berœa, on Sinus Thermaicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readineſs in receiving the Goſpel. 15. Pella, on the ſame Bay alſo; the Birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Juvenis Pellæus. 16. Pydna, upon the ſame Bay, at the Influx of the River Aliacmon; in which Caſſander beſieged and took Olympias the Mother, Roxane the Wife, and Alexander the Heir apparent of Alexander, all whom he barbarouſly murthered. This Cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himſelf of Alexander, who had once knocked his Head and the Wall together; and partly to cry quit with Olympias, who had before as cruelly murthered Aridæus the baſe Son of Philip, and Eurydice his Wife, with whom Caſſander was ſuppoſed to be over-familier. Memorable alſo is this Town for the great Battel fought near it betwixt Perſeus the laſt King of Macedon and P. Æmilius the Conſul, in which Perſeus, having ſhamefully deſerted his Army, loſt both the Battel and his Kingdom, with no leſs then 20000 of his foot, which were therein ſlain; the Romans having ſo cheap a Victory, that it coſt them not above an hundred or ſixſcore men. 17. Dium, not far from the Hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea, of which mile the River Helicon, becoming there a Lake, and called Baphyrus, taketh up one half. It is ſituate in the Borders towards Theſſalie; the way unto it out of Tempe being ſtreight and narrow, and almoſt impaſſable, by reaſon of the Spurs of the Mountains running overthwart it: which, had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted it. But Perſeus, hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, onely took care to get his Treaſure out of Dium, and ſo abandoned both the Paſſage and the Town together. 18. Phylace, more within the Land; as is 19. Eribœa. But theſe four laſt are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA hath on the Eaſt the Ægæan Sea, on the Weſt Macedon properly and ſpecially ſo called, on the North Edonis and Sinus Strymonicus, on the South Sinus Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Theſſalonica; ſo that it is almoſt a Peninſula, environed on three ſides with Water.

Here is in this Country the Hill Athos, ſtanding in a Peninſula, (the Iſthmus being once cut through by Xerxes, but ſince cloſed again) ſaid to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a day's in breadth, reſembling the ſhape of a Man lying with his Face upwards: the higheſt point whereof, covered perpetually with Snow, is ſaid to caſt a Shadow as far as Lemnos. It is exceeding fruitfull both in Graſſe, Fruit, Oil, and Wine, and wondrous plentifull in Hares, according to that of Ovid,

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes paſcuntur in Hybla:
How many Hares on Athos feed,
What Swarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

It is inhabited onely by Greek Monks, whom they call Caloires, of the order of S. Baſil, to whom the Hill, commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long ſince dedicated: the place being ſo privileged by the Grand Seigniour, that neither Turk nor Græcian may inhabit in it, except ſuch Græcians onely as profeſs this Life. Of theſe there are about 6000, diſperſed in 42 Monaſteries, built after a military manner, for fear of Thieves and Pirates, wherewith they were much infeſted in times paſt: frequented with great Concourſe of People coming thither to behold and adore ſome Reliques, (for which they are of much eſteem;) the free Oblations of thoſe Pilgrims, and ſome Benevolence from the Turks, which do much reſpect them, being the cheif means of their Subſiſtence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Eremites: poorly clad, their Shirts of Woollen, which they both ſpin and weave themſelves; none of them idle at any time, doing ſtill ſomewhat for their Livelihood, and the advancement of the Houſe of which they are, as dreſſing Vines, felling Timber, yea and building Ships. Few of them give themſelves to Study, and ſome of them are of ſo groſs an Ignorance, that they can neither write nor reade. They are bound by their Order to lodge and entertain ſuch Strangers as have occaſion to paſs that way, according to their rank and calling; and that of free coſt too, if it be deſired.

Towns of moſt note, according to the ſeveral Regions and parts hereof, are, for Mygdonia ſpecially and properly ſo called, 1. Antigonia, ſo called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the firſt Founder of it, 2. Xylopolis. 3. Terpillus, 4. Phyſco, 5. Aſſorus; all mentioned by Ptolemy, but not elſe obſervable. 6 Apollonia, for diſtinction ſake called Apollonia Mygdoniæ, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here learn'd the Greek Tongue. For Amphaxitis, there was 7. Arethuſa; 8. Stagira, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the Birth of Ariſtotle, hence named Stagirites. 9. Theſſalonica, ſituate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head-City of Macedon; the Seat of the Prefectus Prætorio for Illyricum, after the removall thereof from Sirmium; as alſo of the Primate of the Greek Church, who reſided here. To the people of this City did S. Paul write two of his Epiſtles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Conſtantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was beſtowed firſt on Boniface Marques of Montferrat, the new King of Theſſaly; after whoſe death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurath the 2 to become Turkiſh. Which notwithſtanding, it ſtill preſerves the reputation of a beautifull and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, eſpecially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferiour unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greateſt number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the uſe of Chriſtians. As for the Jews, they ſwarm here in ſuch great abundance, that in this City and that of Conſtantinople onely there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all ſorts of People. 10. Siderocapſa, of old called Chryſites, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver; ſo beneficiall to the Turk, that he received hence monthly 18000, and ſometimes 30000, Crowns de claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Panormus, a Port-Town. 12. Stratonica, in the Peninſula of Mount Athos. 13. Atho, or Athoſa, in the ſame Peninſula, with a Promontory of the ſame name, nigh which it ſtood. 14. Acanthus, now called Eriſſo, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia we have 15. Ampelus, 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoyning, called anciently Sinus Toronaicus, now Golfo di Aiomana. 17. Caſſandra, on the Sea-ſide, ſo called from Caſſander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidæa. 18. Derris, 19. Merillus, 20. Pallene, ſituate in the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland called Patalene, and by ſome Patalia: formerly conſecrated to the Muſes, but before that infamous for the War which the Giants are fabled to have made here againſt the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoyning Campi Phlegræi, in which this great Battel is ſuppoſed to be fought The occaſion of the Fable was, (as both Theagenes and Eudoxus do expound the ſame) That the Inhabitants hereof in thoſe elder times, being men of a moſt impious and inſolent Life, got the name of Giants; whom when Hercules endeavoured to ſubdue and reduce to Reaſon, it happened that there fell a great Tempeſt of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were conſtrained to flie and ſubmit themſelves. Hence the Report that thoſe Giants made War againſt the Gods. Others have placed theſe Phlegræan Fields in Theſſaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that ſome place nearer to the Hills of Pelion, Oſſa and Olympus, doth agree beſt with it: if at leaſt Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes thoſe Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the ſaying is. For thus that Poet;

Affectaſſe ferunt regnum cæleſte Gigantes,
Altáque congeſtos ſtruxiſſe ad Sidera Montes.
At pater omnipotens miſſo perfregit Olympum
Fulmine, & excuſſit ſubjectum Pelion Oſſæ.

Which may be Engliſh in theſe words;

The Giants once the throne of Heaven affected,
And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
Till Jove with Thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Oſſa take.

But from thoſe Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Countrey was firſt peopled by Cittim, the Son of Javan, paſſing over out of Aſia minor: in memory whereof here was not onely a Town called Citium, ſpoken of by Livie l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Chettiim, 1 Maccab. 1. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Citims in the 8. Chapter of the ſame Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægæan to the Adriatick, ſome Colonies of them paſſed from hence to Italy, and firſt inhabited that Countrey, as hath there been ſaid. Such as continued in theſe parts, divided into ſeveral Tribes, as in all parts elſe, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painfull life, Goatherds and Shephards for the moſt part, ſcarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next Invader, much leſs to dream of conquering either Greece or Perſia: And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him ſpoken in paſſion, and to their Diſgrace) that his Father Philip had firſt made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of War under Epaminondas, (being then an Hoſtage with the Thebans) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not onely freed his own Kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raiſed amongſt the Græcians, (which he knew how to feed and cheriſh for his own improvement) ment) brought them at firſt wholy to relly upon him, and after to be ſubject to him. Inſomuch that never any Monarchy had a ſwifter Growth, nor a more ſpeedy Diſſolution: there paſſing not full 40 years from the firſt of Philip to the laſt of Alexander; in which ſpace it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murther, Perjury and Treaſon, as at firſt it was, was never likely to be bleſſed with a long Continuance.

Of theſe 24 Kings onely 6 are famous: viz. 1. Caranaus, the firſt King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Countrey, and to follow the firſt Flock of Cattel he ſaw before him. Being here arrived in a tempeſtuous ſtormy day, he eſpied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather. Theſe Goats he followed unto Ædeſſa, into which, by reaſon of the darkneſs of the Air, he entred undiſcovered, wone the Town, and in ſhort ſpace became Lord of all the Countrey. On which occaſion as the Goat afterwards became the Armes and Enſign of the Kings of Macedon, ſo by that Beaſt thoſe Kings were figuratively deſigned in the Holy Scripture: of which ſee Dan. 8. 5, 21. 2. Perdiccas, the fourth King, who at Ægæ built a Burial-place for all his Succeſſors, aſſuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there buried his Race ſhould never fail; and ſo it hapned. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was tranſlated to the Sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle againſt the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious. This the Macedons did, either becauſe they thought they could not be beaten, their King being preſent; or perſuading themſelves that there was none ſo void of Honour and Compaſſion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to ſave himſelf from Diſtruction but by the Valour and fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander, the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Perſian Embaſſadours; who, being ſent from Megabyzus, requeſted a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No ſooner were they entered, but petulantius eas Perſis contrectantibus, as Juſtine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, ſending in their ſteads young Springals maidenly attired; who, upon the like Indignities offered ſlew theſe effeminate Aſians. After which he behaved himſelf ſo diſcreetly, that the Perſian Monarch gave him all Greece betweee Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed firſt as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdiccas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himſelf both the Kingdom and Title of King; which he continued in the Depoſition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murther of the reſt of his Brethren, and the Deſtruction of all ſuch as oppoſed his practice. But, being otherwiſe a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Countrey of the Illyrians, ſubdued Achaia, Thrace, and a great part of Peloponneſus, and was choſen General of the Greeks againſt the Perſians. But as ſoon as he had made all things ready for this Expedition, he was ſlain by one Pauſanias, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly abuſed in the heat of his unnatural Luſts. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered ſuch parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had befooled themſelves with a hope of Liberty. He ſubdued Darius the great King of Perſia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Grecians; and in the height of his Succeſſes was poiſoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Caſſander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new-got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succeſſion, he himſelf dying without lawfull Iſſue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him who was thought moſt worthy by his Army: and the Souldiers, according to their ſeveral affections and Relations, thought their own Leaders moſt deſerving. At laſt the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by conſent of the Commanders caſt on Aridæus, a Baſtard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be protector, (for Aridæus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whoſe deſign he was alſo married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before diſpoſſeſſed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were aſſigned unto the Government of the cheif Commanders; viz. Ægypt to Ptolemy, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotas, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonus, Caria to Caſſander, Lydia to Menander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Aſſyria to Seleucus, Perſis to Peuceſtes, Thrace to Lyſimachus; and Macedon it ſelf unto Antipater: the other parts of the Perſian Empire being left to them unto whoſe hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Diviſion held not long: for Perdiccas being once ſlain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus, theſe two became quickly too great for the reſt; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Ægypt, and Antigonus bringing under his Command not onely all Aſia minor, but Aſſyria, Media, and almoſt all the Eaſtern parts of the Perſian Empire. Antipater in the mean time, ſucceeding in the Protectorſhip, baniſhed Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dame's love unto Aridæus. But he being dead, ſhe returned out of Epirus (the place of her Baniſhment) into Macedonia, where raiſing a ſtrong Party amongſt the people, ſhe put Aridæus and his Wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander, the Son of Alexander by Roxane; both ſlain not long after by Caſſander the Son of Antipater, who, to make ſure work, murthered alſo with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Barſine, (another Perſian Lady, as Roxane was) the laſt Survivor of that Houſe. And ſo the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himſelf the Title of King: as did Seleucus, who had now recovered all the Perſian Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemy in Ægypt, and Caſſander in Macedon.

The ſecond Race of the MACEDON Kings.

A. M.
3648	1. Caſſander, Son of Antipater, ſuppoſed to have been the Poiſoner of Alexander, rooted out the Bloud-royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19.
3667	2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Caſſander; but but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lyſimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in ſhort time murthered. 4.

3671 3. Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, the powerfull King of Aſia, after he had in one Battel againſt Seleucus loſt both his Father and all his Aſian Dominions, ſettled himſelf in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrhus, he fled to Seleucus, and with him died. 6.

3677 4. Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, was by the Souldiers, voluntarily forſaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Souldiers revolted to Lyſimachus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.

3678 5. Lyſimachus, King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquiſhed and ſlain by Seleucus, the laſt Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.

3685 6. Ceraunus, or Ptolemy Ceraunus, Son to Ptolemy of Ægypt, having traitourouſly ſlain his Friend and Patron Seleucus, ſeaſed on Macedon: but loſt it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued theſe Countryes. After whoſe death this Kingdom, being diſtracted amongſt many Competitours, ſettled at laſt upon.

3687 7. Antigonus Gonatas, the Son of Demetrius, who, for his Valour ſhewn in expulſing the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrhus, then returning from Italy; yet after the death of Pyrrhus he again recovered his Eſtate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 36.

3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrhus. 10.

3733 9. Antigonus II. ſurnamed Doſon, left by Demetrius as Protectour to his young Son Philip, uſurped the Kingdom. He divers times vanquiſhed and cruſhed the Græcians beginning then to caſt off the Yoak of Macedon. 12.

3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.

3787 11. Perſeus, the Son of Philip, the laſt King of Macedon. The Subverſion of which Eſtate was firſt begun in the time of his Father, who had not onely warred upon the Ætolians and others of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but ſided with Hannibal againſt them. Upon which grounds they ſent firſt Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Conſuls, by whom Philip was vanquiſhed at the Battel of Cunoſcephalos, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel againſt Perſeus alſo, managed with variable Succeſs by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they diſpatched Paulus Æmilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to abſolute Subjection. Who ſped ſo well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perſeus led captive unto Rome Anno 3789. In which Triumph, beſides the Pomp of leading a captive King in Bonds, Æmilius cauſed the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Veſſels, every Veſſel containing three Talents; which made ſo infinite a Sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all Taxes and Impoſitions. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to ſay, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris, and Prævalitana, in the new Modell of Conſtantine became a Dioceſe, the Dioceſe hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, Old and New Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greateſt part of Salutaris; the reſidue of Salutaris and Prævalitana (which makes up the Countrey now called Albania) being laid to the Dioceſe of Dacia. It continued part of the Eaſtern Empire till towards the laſt fatal diſſolution of it; though many times haraſſed and depopulated by the Sclavonians, Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous People, at their ſeveral Invaſions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, firſt, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonicus now the Bay of Conteſa; and after, under Amurath the ſecond, their ſixth King, making themſelves maſters of Theſſalonica, the cheif City of it, and therewith of all the Countrey. By reaſon of which many Invaſions and laſt Deſolation by the Turks, there is ſcarce one of all thoſe many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence, except Theſſalonica onely; the reſt being miſerably deſtroyed. And for the Countrey it ſelf, it is governed by a Turkiſh Sanzach, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing elſe required of him then to maintain 100 Horſe in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to finde 400 Horſe on extraordinary occaſions, as the Grand Seigniour ſhall command him.

THRACE hath on the Eaſt Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and the Helleſpont, on the Weſt Macedon, on the North the Hill Hæmus, on the South the Ægæan Sea and part of Macedon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth; and, in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44. Degree of the Northern Latitude; ſo that the longeſt Day in Summer is about 15 hours, three quarters.

By ſeveral men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus Aria, by Suidas Odriſia, by Lycophron Creſtonia, by ſome Writers Scythia, by Joſephus the Hebrew Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as ſome ſay, from Thrax the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracia, an Inchantreſs: more probably from the Ferity and barbarous condition of the firſt Inhabitants, the name in the Original Greek bearing that conſtruction: moſt likely from Thyras, the Son of Japhet, who firſt planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Joſephus; beſides many other footſteps and remembrances of him in the names of many of their Towns, and ſome of their Princes; of which we have already ſpoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or becauſe Conſtantinople, the cheif City of it, was anciently called Nova Roma: and by that name it is now called in moſt modern Writers.

The Countrey generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleaſent Air: the Corn and other Fruits, by reaſon of the coldneſs of the Climate, leiſurely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade then Juice, and the Trees for the moſt part more Leaves then Fruit: yet in ſome parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good ſtore of Corn, but of Pulſe eſpecially; and towards the Sea-ſide they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for ſtrength and goodneſs.

The People anciently were very bold and valient, and called by ſome Αὐτόνομοι, becauſe every man was a Law to himſelf. So that it was truly ſaid by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they had been invincible. Of Manners they were rude and ſavage, ſomwhat near to Brutiſhneſs; buying their Wives, and ſelling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: in that ſince imitated by the Turks, who poſſeſs their Countrey. The Men were more couragious then comely, wearing Cloaths according to their Conditions, ragged and unſeemly. The Married-woman were in love to their Husbands ſo conſtant, that they willingly ſacrificed themſelves at their Funerals. The Virgins were beſtowed, not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Vertue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Money;moſt times ſold as other Cattel in the Markets. In matters of Religion they worſhipped Mars, Bacchus, Diana; Mercury, as did other Gentiles: ſwearing eſpecially by the firſt, from whom they bragged themſelves to have been deſcended. But their cheif national Deity was one Zamolxes, ſometimes a Native of this Countrey, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, preſcribed them good and wholeſome Laws; aſſuring them that, if they did obſerve the ſame, they ſhould go unto a place when they left this World in which they ſhould enjoy all manner of Pleaſure and Contentment. By this means having gotten ſome opinion of a Divinity amongſt them, he abſented himſelf; and after was worſhipped as their God. Upon theſe Principles, when any one was born amongſt them, his Parents and other Friends, ſitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miſeries and Afflictions whereto he was to be expoſed in this preſent Life, and ſo deplored his condition as abſolutely miſerable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chanſed to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity; highly rejoycing that by this means he was freed from the Croſſes and Diſaſters of this wretched world. Which is expreſſed thus briefly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Puerperia; natique deflentur; Funera contrá Feſta ſunt, & veluti Sacra cantu luſûque celebrantur. A piece of ſuch ſound and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in thoſe times of Darkneſs; and ſavouring very much of the Primitive Piety, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Feſtivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births· According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem, ſed Mortem, Sanctorum Eccleſia pretioſam & feſtam judicat, Here lived the Tyrant Polymneſtor, who villanouſly murthered Polydorus, a younger Son of Priamus: for which fact Hecuba, the young Prince's Mother, ſcratched him to death. Here alſo lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phocis: and Diomedes, who, uſing to feed his Horſes with Man's fleſh, was ſlain by Hercules, and caſt unto his Horſes. And, finally, here reigned King Cotys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propoſe as a pattern of rare Temper both in maſtering and preventing Paſſion. For when a neighbour-Prince had ſent him a Preſent of Glaſſes of the pureſt Metall, and no leſs accurate in the Workmanſhip or Faſhion of them, (having diſpatched the Meſſenger with all the due Complements of Majeſty and Gratitude) he broak them all to pieces; leſt if by miſhap any of his Servants ſhould do the like, he might be ſtirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Countrey, beſides Hæmus ſpoken of already, are, 1. Rhodope, the higheſt next Mount Hæmus in thoſe parts of the World; craggy and rough, and the Top thereof continually white with Snow: memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who, in a melancholick humour, (having loſt his Wife) betook himſelf to theſe Mountains, where with his Muſick he affected both Woods and Beaſts, who are ſaid to have danced unto unto his Muſick: from this place of his Abode called Rhodopeius, from his Countrey Thracius, Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boaſteth in the Poet. The truth is, that he was a man of an heavenly Muſe, and by his Dictates and good Counſel, laid down in Verſe, firſt of all civillized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Beſtiality. Hence the occaſion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it ſelf it is in the midſt of this Countrey, thwarting it from Mount Hæmus towards the Weſt; which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoyning, lying betwixt the River Neſſus on the Weſt, and Melas or Niger on the Eaſt, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silver. 3. Melapus, ſhooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, beſides Strymon ſpoken of before, the Boundary in ſome places betwixt this and Macedon, are, 1. Neſſus, by the Græcians now called Meſtro, by the Turks, Charaſou, which, riſing out of Mount Hæmus, falleth into the Sea near the Iſle of Thaſſus. 2. Athyras, in which name the memory of Thyras the Son of Japhet ſeems to be preſerved; which, riſing in Mount Hæmus alſo, loſeth it ſelf in the Propontick: as doth 3. Bathynias, another River riſing from the ſame Mount Hæmus. 4. Hebrus, the moſt noted River of all this Countrey, riſing out of Rhodope, and falling into the Ægæan near the Iſle of Samothrace: a River of ſo ſlow a Courſe, that it is not eaſie to diſcern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being torn in pieces by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by thoſe Furies. 5. Thearus, good againſt the Scab both in Man and Beaſt, iſſuing out of 30 Fountains, ſome hot, ſome cold; with the pleaſentneſs of whoſe Waters Darius the King of Perſia was ſo delighted, that he erected a Piller in honour of it.

The cheif Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Polyſtilo, ſituate not far from the Fall of the River Neſſus into the Ægæan, the Birth-place of Democritus, who ſpent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Potidæa, of old a Colony of Athens, from whom it revolted, and ſubmitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians, not enduring the Affront, beleaguered it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of 2000 Talents, could not recover it again but on Compoſition. 3. Ænos, on the Ægæan Sea; a Town of great Strength and Safety, and therefore uſed by the later Conſtantinopolitan Emperours for the ſecuring of great perſons. For hither Michael Palæologus ſent Jathatines, the Turkiſh Sultan, flying to him for Aid; and hither Mahomet the great ſent Demetrius, Prince of Peloponneſus, when he yielded up his Countrey to him: both under colour of providing for their Eaſe and Safety, but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Priſons. 3. Lyſimachia, on the Sea-ſhore; once of great importance, built by Lyſimachus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Countrey: afterwards garriſoned by Philip the Father of Perſeus; on the withdrawing of whoſe Forces for ſome other Service it was taken and raiſed to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient ſituation and former glories of the place. 5. Philippopolis, ſo called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a Bridle to hold in the Thracians; called alſo Trimontium, from three Hills on which it was ſituate: beautified in the time of the Romans with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till theſe latter days, and might have laſted longer by many Ages, did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are alſo many other ancient Monuments, though the Town be much waſted and deſtroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 perſons: which not withſtanding it is populous and well-frequented, by reaſon of the convenient ſituation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, ſo called from the Emperour Trajan, by whom it was either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and ſtill preſerving its old name. 7. Selymbria, on the Coaſt of the Propontick Sea; beautified with a commodious Port for receit of ſmall Veſſels, and many Bays adjoyning capable of greater: by Ptolemy called Selybria, and Olybria by Suidas. 8. Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Siſſopoli. 9. Phinopolis, on the ſame Sea alſo. 10. Nicopolis, at the foot of the Mount Hæmus, there being another of that name near the River Neſſus. 11. Perinthus, on the Propontick Sea, near the Influx of the River Arſus. A Town of great note in the ancient Buſineſſes of Greece; of great ſtrength, and peopled formerly with men of ſuch reſolutions, that they maintained their Liberty againſt Philip of Macedon after almoſt all the reſt of Thrace had ſubmitted to him. 12. Heraclea, at firſt a Colony of the Thebans, and afterwards of much requeſt in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Pallaces of Veſpaſian, Domitian, aud Antoninus, Emperours of Rome, as alſo with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's ſeven Wonders; and, finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Dioceſe of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greateſt City of Thrace; as poſſibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatneſs of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and Miſtreſs of a fair and goodly Territory adjoyning to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip ſpoken of before, to ſet upon them. In which Attempt he ſped ſo well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing ſome of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demoſthenes oft moved the People of Athens, in thoſe elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14. Seſtos, in the Thracian Cherſoneſe, which, being a Peninſula abutting over againſt Troas on the Aſian ſide, is now called Saint George's Arm. Oppoſite whereunto, on the other ſide of the Water, is the Town of Abydus; remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Muſæus, an old Greek Poet. 15. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Cherſoneſe, the firſt City of note that ever the Turks poſſeſſed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchanes the ſecond King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they eaſily and in little time ſpred themſelves all over the reſt of Thrace: the ordinary paſſage of late times betwixt Europe and Aſia, by reaſon of the convenient Harbour and ſafe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, ſeated on the Weſtern ſide of it, oppoſit to the Iſle of Lemnos; the Birth place of Eumenes, who, being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to ſuch an ability in the Art of war, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he ſerved, he ſeiſed on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and ſiding (though a Stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Bloud-royal againſt the Greek Captains, vanquiſhed and ſlew Craterus, and divers times drave Antigonus (afterwards Lord of Aſia) out of the Field. But being by his own Souldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him ſlain. 17. Sardica, ſituate towards Mount Hæmus, memorable for the Council there held againſt the Arians Anno 351. 18. Adrianople, ſeated near the midſt of Thrace, called anciently Uſcudama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperour, who repaired and beautified it: made ſubject to the Turks by Bajazet Anno 1362: from the firſt taking of it made the Seat of the Turkiſh Kings, till the taking of Conſtantinople by Mahomet the Great; by whom it was removed unto that City. 19. Pera, oppoſit to Conſtantinople, on the farther ſide of the Water, (as the word doth ſignifie in the Greek;) by ſome called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genoueſe, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the Great Anno 1453, but ſtill repleniſhed, for the moſt part, with Chriſtian Merchants and Artificers.

But the cheif glory of this Countrey, and of all the Eaſt, is the renowned City of 20. Conſtantinople, ſeated in ſo commodius a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Aſia, and commands not onely the Propontis and Boſporus, but the Euxine Sea. Firſt founded by one Byza, and from him named Byzantium: but being taken by the Perſians, and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Perſians ſhould grow ſtrong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pauſanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was beſieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great ſtrength in the Flouriſh of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a juſt height, every Stone whereof was ſo joyned with Couplets of Braſs, that the whole ſeemed but one intire Piece; adorned beſides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War againſt Severus the Emperour, it indured a Siege of three years againſt all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were ſo diſtreſſed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquiſhed. For want of Artillery to diſcharge on the Aſſailants, they caſt down upon them whole Statues made of Braſs, and the like curious Imagery Houſes they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was loſt all by one Tempeſt. Compelled to yeild by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Souldidiers, the Walls thereof diſmantled, and the Town left in rubbiſh. Yet there appeared ſo much of Majeſty and Beauty in the very Ruines, Ut mireris utrùm eorum qui primi exſtruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps ſunt demoliti, vires ſint potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperour Conſtantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the cheif Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finiſhed May 11. Anno 331; and, being ſo finiſhed, was indowed with all the Priviledges of Rome, an equal number of Senators, one of the Annual Conſuls, and all other Officers of State, choſen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of moſt Truſt and Power. For that cauſe it was called NOVA ROMA in ſome following times. This City he adorned alſo with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and ſuch like Ornaments, tranſported hither from Old Rome: which City he ſpoiled of more coſtly Pieces than any twenty of his Predeceſſours had brought unto it. At this day the cheif Buildings are the Turk's Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and ſituation, ſo as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperour Juſtinian. It is built of an Oval form, ſurrounded with Pillers of admirable workmanſhip, adorned with ſpacious and beautifull Galleries, roofed all over with Moſaick work, and vaulted underneath; very ſtrong for the Fabrick, and pleaſing for the Eye. The Doors are very curiouſly wrought and plated; one of which by the Superſtitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more then the Chancel of the ancient Church, which contained in length 260 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may ſeem for the bigneſs to have been but a Chappel of Eaſe. But what it wants in Greatneſs,it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building,wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabricks in the whole World.The Sides and Floore are all flagged with excellent Marble; and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Chriſtians, who viſit it out of Curioſity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkiſh Moſque, as it ſtill continueth; frequented by the Grand Seigniour almoſt every Friday which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto ſtandeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperours, on the North-eaſt Angel of the City, where formerly ſtood the ancient Byzantium; divided from the reſt of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Cercuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypreſſes intermixed with Planes, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleaſures which Luxury can affect or Treaſure compaſs. The Palace it ſelf, enjoying a goodly proſpect in the Sea, was firſt built by Juſtinus the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto thoſe of France and Italy for the neat contrivances, but far ſurpaſſing them for Coſt and Curiouſneſs.

As for the City it ſelf, it is ſaid to be 18 miles in compaſs, and to contain 700000 living ſouls; yet would be more populous then it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Tertian Ague, did not every third year ſo rage amongſt them. It is fortified towards the Land with three ſtrong and high Wals, the one higher then the other, the outermoſt higheſt of them all: towards the Sea with one Wall onely, built after the old faſhion with many Turrets, which very ſtrongly flanker and defend the ſame. But formerly both the Town and Cherſoneſe in which it ſtandeth were defended from the Incurſions of the barbarous people by a ſtrong Wall built on the very Iſthmus of it,ſome ten miles from the City, reaching from one ſide to the other: the work of Anaſtaſius who ſucceeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a moſt pleaſing object: ſo intermixt with Gardens and beſet with Trees, that it ſeems a City in a Wood; but being entred, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promiſed, the Buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the moſt part are exceeding narrow, but raiſed on each ſide for the greater Cleanlineſs: the Houſes but of two Stories high,ſome of rough Stone,and ſome of Timber, without any outward Grace or exteriour Garniſhing; in many places nothing but low Sheds or rows of Shops; and in ſome places long dead Walls belonging unto great mens Houſes. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to ſome Monuments of Antiquity, which are ſtill, preſerved, and the Tombs or Sepulchres of ſome of the Ottoman Kings, which are very ſumptuous, are the Moſques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thouſand in number; and the Port or Haven, ſo conveniently profound, that Ships of greateſt Burthen may ſafely lay their Sides to the Sides thereof, for the receit or diſcharge of their Lading; and ſo commodiouſly ſeated on the Thracian Boſperus, that there is no Wind, whatſoever it be, which brings not in ſome Shipping to it. But that which gives the greateſt Pleaſure to the ſight from the Hills adjoyning is the Situation of it on ſeven Mountains, moſt of them crowned with Magnificent Moſques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finiſhed on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the firſt whereof ſtandeth the Ruines of Conſtantine's Palace, exceeding ſtately to behold. On the ſecond, a fair Turkiſh Moſque, built on the Palace anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third ſtands a ſtately Moſque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the ſecond: and a very large Hoſpital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and releif of the poore: the Annual Rents whereof are valued at 200000 Checquines. On the fourth and fifth the Sepultures of Selimus the firſt, and Bajazet the ſecond. On the ſixth the Moſque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongſt the preſent wonders of the World. And on the ſeventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, ſpoken of already. In which reſpect it is called Πόλις ἑπταλόφος by Nicetas, Urbs ſepticollis by Paulus Diaconus; and ſo acknowledged to be by Janus Douſa, Phineas Moriſon, G. Sandys, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witneſſes of it. So that if there be any Myſterie in the number of Seven, or that the ſitting of the great Whore on a ſeven-headed Beaſt, be an aſſured direction to find out the Antichriſt; we may as well look for him in Conſtantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the profeſſed Enemy of Chriſt and the Chriſtian Faith, hath his Seat and Reſidence, as amongſt the ſeven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope reſideth. Or if his ſitting in the Temple of God ſhew us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkiſh Moſque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, ſtill a Chriſtian Temple.

But to return again unto Conſtantinople. As it was made by Conſtantine the Imperial City, and conſequently the cheif City of the Eaſt in all Civil matters; ſo it came in little time to have a great Sway alſo in Affairs of Religion. The Chriſtian Faith is ſaid to be firſt preached in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apoſtle, the Firſt Biſhop thereof. Afterwards ſpreading over Thrace, and the Churches thereof being regulated by many Biſhops, the cheif Preeminence in matters which concerned thoſe Churches was given unto the Biſhops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province. But after that Conſtantinople was built by Conſtantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was ſaid, it did not onely over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it ſelf the Metropolitan Dignity, but ſtood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the ſupreme Power: inſomuch as at the ſecond General Council holden in this City it was unanimouſly decreed, that the Patriarch hereof ſhould in degree of Honour be next unto the Biſhop of Rome, and above thoſe of Antioch aud Alexandria; the ſame Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon alſo. By which not onely all the Churches in the Dioceſe of Thrace,but alſo of Natolia, or Aſia minor, (except Cilicia and Iſauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no leſs then 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made ſubject to him. And though Pope Leo the firſt, pretending onely the preſervation of the Privileges of thoſe two great Churches, but indeed fearing leſt New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppoſe this Act, and ſome of his Succeſſours perſiſted in the ſame Reſiſtence; yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, eſpecially after the Emperour Juſtinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the ſame; by whom it was finally ordained, Senioris Romæ Papam primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum, beatiſſimum autem Archiepiſcopum Conſtantinopoleos, Novæ Romæ, ſecundum habere locum, that is to ſay, That the Pope of Rome ſhould have the firſt place in all General Councils, and the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, or New Rome, ſhould have the ſecond. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperour Mauritius, John Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himſelf the Title of Univerſal or Oecumenicall Biſhop, the Paſtor-General (as it were) of the Church of Chriſt. And though Pope Boniface, by the Grant of that bloudy Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him : yet the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople made good their ground, never ſubmitting either themſelves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cauſe ſpecially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schiſmaticks, and accordingly reviled and perſecuted with all kind of Indignities. how it ſucceeded with theſe Patriarchs in the times enſuing, and by what means their Juriſdiction was extended over all Greece, Moſcovie, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and Eaſt, hath been ſaid already. Certain it is, the conſtant Reſidence of the Emperours from the time of Conſtantine gave great ground unto it: of whom I ſhould here add the names, but that I muſt firſt ſum up the affairs of Thrace before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the reſt of thoſe Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonii, Bardi, Dolonci, Sapæi; Sai, and ſome others, united by moſt Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at firſt by the Kings or Princes of their ſeveral Tribes, as moſt Nations elſe; diſtinguiſhed from the common People, as in other Pomps, ſo moſt eſpecially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themſelves apart, and were not to be worſhipped by the beſt of their Subjects. Theſe not agreeing well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good oppertunity to invade their Country, to ſeize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in thoſe times being meanly peopled, and conſequently giving that advantage unto the Græcians as the Indies in theſe latter times have to the Spaniards, Portuguezes, Engliſh, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occaſions, at laſt provoked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a ſhare; who, being choſen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at laſt into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with ſuch poor Attendants as Juſtice and Piety, but with a great and puiſſant Army; wherewith having vanquiſhed and ſlain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himſelf, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Countrey was ſeiſed on by Lyſimachus, as his part of the Spoil, who here built the City Lyſimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accuſtomed to a forein Yoak, were either Subjects, or at leaſt Tributaries, to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their Wars againſt the Romans, they incurred the diſpleaſure of that People; who, having ſettled their Affairs in other places, and repulſed the Cimbri, thought it fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but ſped ſo ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Cato loſt his whole Army in the On-ſet, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Faſtneſſes. Didius the Prætor, coming in whilſt the Thracians were buſie in the Chaſe, gave them ſuch a ſtop, that he deſerved a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more eaſie to Metellus, who ſuceeeded Cato in that Charge, and trycumphed alſo over them; as alſo did Lucullus on another Victory A. V. C. 680. Broken with ſo many ill Succeſſes, they were finally ſubdued by Piſo in the time of Auguſtus; and became ſo obſequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhitemalces, a great and puiſſant King hereof, aided him with a ſtrength of Horſe againſt the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Conſtantine's new Model it became a Dioceſe under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it ſelf being caſt into four Provinces, that is to ſay, Thrace ſpecially ſo called Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Mœſia, ſpoken of before, being added to it: of which the Preſidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were, but onely to the Prefect of Conſtantinople, the Emperial City. But as Alfonſus King of Caſtile, ſurnamed the Wiſe, was once heard to ſay, (never the wiſer for ſo ſaying) That had he ſtood at the Elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have ſhewed him how ſome things might have been better ordered: ſo give me leave to play the foole, and to ſay this here, that had I ſtood at Conſtantine's Elbow, I would have counſelled him to lay the Dioceſe of Thrace to the Prefect of Illyricum, who had originally onely the Dioceſes of Macedon and Illyricum under his Command; and not have placed it under the Prefect of the Eaſt, who had both Aſia's and all Ægypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers or Lieutenants of the ſeveral Dioceſes to their ſeverall and reſpective Prefects, how great a trouble muſt it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occaſion of Appeal to poſt to Antioch, there to complain unto the Prefect of the Orient, when Sermium and Theſſalonica, the ordinary Reſidences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, were ſo hard at hand? But Conſtantine was an abſolute Prince, and might do what he liſted. He had not elſe removed his Seat ſo far towards the Eaſt, and left the Weſtern parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a fancy onely to preſerve the Eſtern. For that it was a Fancy onely the event did ſhew: the Perſians for all this prevailing more then ever formerly; and Thrace it ſelf, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with ſo many Roman Colonies, ſo ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay waſte and deſart many Ages after. Inſomuch as the Goths, being by the Hunns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperour Valens planted in this Countrey, (the Emperour having a deſign to uſe them in his following Wars;) where not contented with the Portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, waſting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and endangering Conſtantinople it ſelf, from whence they were not driven (Valens himſelf being killed in the War againſt them) but by the comming of ſome Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Reſidence of the Emperours ſo protect this Countrey, but that it was continually haraſſed and depopulated by the Sclaves, Bulgarians, Roſſes, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Bryonnius, in the time of Michael Ducas and Nicephorus Botoniates, from aſſuming to himſelf the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottaman Race from getting ground every day on the Leſſer Aſia, incroaching upon Thrace it ſelf, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, conſidering the Turks are now poſſeſſed of Thrace and the reſt of Greece, that we ſhould make relation of the Nature of that People, their Cuſtomes, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings.

But the diſcourſe thereof we will defer till we come to Turcomania, a Province of Aſia from whence they made their firſt Inundations, like to ſome unreſiſtible Torrent, into Perſia, and after into the other parts of the World now ſubject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Deſcription of the reſt of Greece, conſiſting of the Iſlands ſcattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Ægæan, Cretan, and Ionian Seas: leaving out ſuch as properly belong to Aſia till our Deſcription of that Countrey, thought otherwiſe Greek Iſlands, and ſo accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Iſlands of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK Seas.

BEfore we come to the Deſcriptions of theſe Iſlands, we muſt firſt look upon the Seas in which they lie; beginning with the PONTICK firſt, becauſe the greateſt, and that which doth communicate and convey its Waters unto all the reſt. A Sea made up originally of the Confluence of thoſe mighty Rivers (the greateſt in thoſe parts of the World) which do fall into it; that is to ſay, the Danow, Boriſthenes and Tanais, falling out of Europe, beſides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of leſſer note) to the number of at leaſt an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compaſs of it being 2700 miles; in form by ſome reſembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not ſo ſalt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter; ſeldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Traffick of it is wholly in a manner engroſſed by the Turk, who is Maſter of all the Sea-coaſt of it, ſave what belongs to the Polonian and Crim-Tarter, At firſt it was called Ἄξενος, from the Inhoſpitableneſs of the neighbouring People, which being brought to ſome Conformity cauſed the Sea to be called Εὔζενος. By Florus it is called Mare Siniſtrum, becauſe in the way from Rome to Aſia minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatneſs; and the Black Sea, becauſe of the great Miſts thence ariſing. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening. For it is a very dangerous Shore, full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cauſe there is on the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Roſin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggeſt of all thoſe parts, gave occaſion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, deerant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the ſame Poet, ——— nil niſi pontus & aer: a better reaſon doubtleſs of the name, then that of the Etymologiſts, Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Iſles are Thynnias, and Erithinus, little famous.

From hence the Sea bending Southward is brought into narrower Bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Boſporus: Thracian, for its Site nigh Thrace; and Boſporus, for that Oxen have ſwam over it. It hath no Iſland worth naming. It is fortified on each ſide with a very ſtrong Caſtle. That on the Aſian ſide, being the elder and the leſſer, is by the Greeks called Aſio-caſtron, by the Turks named Accechiſar; the other, juſt oppoſite to it, is by the Turks called Genichiſar, by the Greeks named Neocaſtron, or New Caſtle. This laſt was the work of Mahomet ſurnamed the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in bigneſs not inferiour to a little City; built by him in or near the place of the ancient Damalis; environed with a Wall 22 foot broad, and containing three great Towers, their Wall exceeding 10 yards in thickneſs; exceedingly well ſtored with all ſorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the Engliſh they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly becauſe ſeated at the Entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly becauſe they ſerve as a Priſon for Malefactors of principal note, who ſeldom are diſcharged thence till releaſed by death.

This Streight, having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it ſelf into the Propontis, 300 miles in compaſs; confined with Thrace on the one ſide, and with Bithynia on the other; ſo as they which ſail in the middle may deſcry the Land on all parts. Now called Mar di Marmora, from the Iſland Marmora, which, formerly called Proconneſus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchaſed this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not deſtitute of Corn; yielding alſo good Paſturage for Goats, whereof here is plenty, with an incredible number of Partridges amongſt the Rocks: the Countrey of Ariſteas, a famous Poet, who flouriſhed in the times of Crœſus. Anciently it had in it two Cities of the ſame name with the Iſland, called the Old and New Proconneſus: the former firſt built by the Mileſians, an Aſian People; the latter by the Natives of this Iſland. But both theſe being long ſince decayed, it hath now only a ſmall Village towards the North, with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the reſt of the Iſland: ſuch Chriſtian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Moſques and other Buildings being only Sojourners, not Houſe-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongſt the Inhabitants. Here is alſo in this Propontick Sea the Iſle of Cyzicus: but being it is on Aſia ſide, we ſhall there ſpeak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a leſſer Chanel is called Helleſpont, from Helle, Daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous Streight did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to paſs into Greece: which when a ſudden Tempeſt had ſhrewdly battered, he cauſed the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and caſt a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was ſubject. Xerxes in this Expedition wafted over an Army conſiſting of two millions and 164710 fighting men, in no leſs then 2208 Bottoms of all ſorts. When all the Perſians ſoothed the King in the Unconquerableneſs of his Forces, Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yielding no ſafe Harbour for ſuch a Navy, the other not yielding ſufficient ſubſiſtence for ſo multitudinous an Army. But his return over this Helleſpont was as dejected as his Paſſage magnificent; his Fleet being ſo broken by the Valour of the Greeks and the Fury of the Sea, that, for his more ſpeedy Flight, he was compelled to make uſe of a poor Fiſher-boat. Neither yet was his Paſſage ſecure: for the Boat, being overburthened, had ſunk all, if the Perſians by caſting away themſelves had not ſaved the Life of their King. The loſs of which noble ſpirits ſo vexed him, that having given the Steerſman a golden Coronet for preſerving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co authour of the death of his Servants. It is now called the Caſtles, or the Sea of the Two Caſtles; which two Caſtles ſtand one on Europe, the other on Aſia ſide, in the Towns of Seſtos and Abydus. Theſe Caſtles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanelli, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furniſhed with Munition. They ſearch and examine all Ships that paſs that way; they receive the Grand Seigniour's Cuſtoms, and are in effect the principal Strength of Conſtantinople. At theſe Caſtles all Ships muſt ſtay three days; to the end that if any Slave be run away from his Maſter, or Thieves have ſtoln any thing, they may be in that place purſued and apprehended. So that theſe Caſtles are as it were the Out-works of Conſtantinople, to defend it from all Invaſions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean; as for the Safety thereof from ſuch as may find paſſage out of the Euxine, there are ſituate at the very entrance of the Thracian Boſporus two ſtrong Caſtles, the one above Conſtantinople on Europe ſide, the other on the Aſian Shore, which before we ſpake of. No Europæan Iſle of note is in either of the Streights. And therefore we paſs on unto

8. The Iſlands of the ÆGÆAN Sea.

HEllespont, after a forty miles courſe, exſpatiateth its waters in the Ægæan Sea: ſo called either from Ægeus, the Father of Theſeus, who, miſdoubting his Son's ſafe return from the Minotaur of Crete, here drowned himſelf; or, ſecondly, from Ægæ, once a principal City in the prime Iſland Eubœa; or, thirdly, becauſe that the Iſlands lie ſcattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἴγκος.

The chief Iſlands of it are, 1. Samothrace, 2. Thaſſus, 3. Imbrus, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cythera: all which eſpecially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Iſlands of the Arches; the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatneſs compared unto the narrow Seas which lie above it.

1. SAMOTHRACE is a ſmall Iſland oppoſite to the Coaſts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; ſo called quaſi Samos Thraciæ, to difference it from the Aſian Samos, bordering on Ionia. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Ariſtotle, writing of the Commonweal of theſe Samothracians, telleth us that it was firſt called Leucoſia, and afterwards Samus, from Saus the Son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interpoſed. It is now called Samandrachi, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better ſtored with commodious Harbours then any other in theſe Seas. It hath a Town of the ſame name with the Iſland, ſituate on an high Hill on the North part hereof, overlooking a capatious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infeſting of theſe Seas wholly, in a manner, deſolate.

2. THASSUS, another little Iſland on the ſame Coaſt, oppoſite to the Influx of the River Neſſus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Plini called Æria and Æthria, by Ptolemy Thalaſſia, at the preſent Taſſo. It is in compaſs betwixt forty and fifty miles, ſufficiently fruitful, well repleniſhed with Woods, and yielding good ſtore of the beſt Wines; mountainous in ſome places, but thoſe Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thaſſian, from the Iſland; and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great ſo rich in Mines of uſefull Metalls, that thoſe Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Cuſtoms of them. It hath one Town of the ſame name with the Iſland, ſituate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which ſerves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts, where the Countrey is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them ſituate on an Hill; but the names thereof occur not amongſt my Authours.

3. Imbrus, another ſmall Iſland, now named Lembro, is ſituate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Cherſoneſe, in compaſs about thirty miles, but more long then broad, ſtretching North and South, and diſtant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Iſland is mountainous for the moſt part, except towards the Weſt; where it hath ſome pleaſant and well-watered Plains: in it is a Town of the ſame name, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains, once ſacred unto Mercury, but not elſe obſervable.

4. LEMNOS, an Iſland of more note, lieth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbrus; memorable amongſt the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Vulcan, who, being but an homely Brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great Paſſion thrown out of Heaven, and, falling on this Iſland, came to get his Halting. Howſoever, he was anciently worſhipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. It is in compaſs about an hundred miles, but more long then broad, extended from the Eaſt to the Weſt; on every ſide well furniſhed with convenient Creeks and ſome pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in ſome ſort recompenſed.

The Countrey is for the moſt part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Iſlands, but otherwiſe ſwelled with riſing Mountainets; the interpoſed Valleys being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulſe, Wine, Fleſh, Cheeſe, Wooll, Flax, Linen, and all other neceſſaries; onely Wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was ſaid, yet have they good Fiſhing on the Sea-coaſt for their uſe and ſuſtenance; and in ſome parts hot Baths for Health and Medicine. But the chief Riches of this Iſland is in a Mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing Wounds, ſtopping of Fluxes, expulſing Poiſons, a Preſervative againſt Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia, from the place, and Terra Sigillata, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into ſmall Pellets, and ſealed with the Turk's Character or Signet, it is then (not before) ſold unto the Merchants; by whom it is diſperſed over moſt parts of the Chriſtian World. Upon the ſixth of Auguſt yearly they goe to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious Preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Iſland, and ſtill continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they diſcover the Vein, reſembling the caſting up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Prieſts think fit, it is cloſed again; certain Bags of it being ſent to the Grand Seigniour yearly, the reſidue ſealed up, and ſold to the forein Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eaſtern parts hereof are ſaid to be fat and fruitful, the Weſtern very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and thoſe three garriſoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Iſland, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the firſt was called Lemnos, by the name of the Iſland, as large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great eſtimation when it was at the beſt, ſeated upon an high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handſome Market place, on which Mount Athos caſts a Shadow, though diſtant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos ſtill remaining. 2. The ſecond of the two Cities was then called Hephæſtias, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephæſtiades; ſince deſolate and deſtroyed, ſtroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochino. This Town is not great, but of a reaſonable ſtrength, memorable for the ſtout Reſiſtence which a notable Virago, named Marulla, made againſt the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Iſland. For ſuddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpoſe to ſurpriſe this Town, they found more Reſiſtence at the Gates then they did expect: none being more commended then this Maiden, who, ſeeing her Father ſlain, took up ſuch Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the reſt of the Citizens, wakened with the Alarm, came unto her Reſcue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the Hill on which Vulcan is fabled to have fell; more eminent for the Mineral earth here only gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have ſtood in the days of old, little inferiour unto thoſe of Crete or Ægypt; the Ruines of it being ſo decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Setira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Caloires begin their Oriſons on the ſixth day of Auguſt, before their gathering of the Earth ſo often mentioned. In this Countrey anciently reigned Thoas, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whoſe time the Women of the Iſland upon ſome diſpleaſure murthered all the men, the King only excepted, preſerved by Hypſipyle his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jaſon with the Argonauts were ſo kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almoſt forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; ſhe her ſelf being got with Child by Jaſon at his being there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at laſt under the power of the Conſtantinopolitan or Eaſtern Emperours. In the Subverſion of that Empire by the Latines or Weſtern Chriſtians, (of which more hereafter) it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians, who held it till the year 1463, or thereabouts.

Beſides theſe on the Coaſt of Thrace, there are alſo ſome of leſs note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Peparethus, as Ptolemy, Euonus, as Pliny calls it, conteining about 40 miles in compaſs, now called Saraquino, as Caſtaldus, or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eaſtern part with a Caſtle built upon a Rock. Others of leſs note are, 2. Scyathos, now Sciati, 3. Scopelos, 4. Haloneſus, 5. Cicynethus, now Pontico, and 6. Dromus: of which little memorable. All which, together with thoſe formerly deſcribed on the Coaſt of Thrace, being but the Acceſſories of the ſeveral Continents upon which they border; followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. EVBOEA, known to the Ancients by the names of Macris and Abantis, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontiereth all along the Coaſt of Achaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying ſtill ſo near unto it, that between the Iſland and the Continent is only a little Euripus, which ebbeth and floweth ſeven times in one day. The reaſon of which when Ariſtotle could not find, it is ſaid that he threw himſelf into the Sea, with theſe words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Iſland is the Promontory Caphreus, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamedes, placed his falſe Fires, to the Deſtruction of ſo many Greeks. For underſtanding how his Son Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been ſlain by the hand of Paris, was treacherouſly circumvented by the Policy of Vlyſſes and Diomedes, he conceived ſuch a Diſpleaſure againſt the whole Hoſt of the Græcians, that he intended their general Deſtruction. To this end he cauſed Fires to be made on the tops of the moſt dangerous and unacceſſible Rocks in this whole Iſland: which the Greeks taking (according to the Cuſtom of the time) to have been the Marks of ſome ſafe Haven, made thitherward, and were there moſt miſerably caſt away; there periſhing 200 Ships, and many thouſand men. But when Nauplius underſtood how Diomedes and Vlyſſes, whoſe Ruine he principally intended, were eſcaped, he drowned himſelf for very Vexation in this very ſame place. Palamedes, this Nauplius's Son, is ſaid to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. ϑ, χ, ξ, φ; to have firſt inſtituted Centinels in an Army, and to be the firſt Inventer of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, ſtretched out from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadeſt; the whole compaſs 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for Greatneſs, but for Fertility and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit, and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours and capacious Bays, and thoſe well fortified; watered alſo with the Rivers of Cireus and Melas, two Rivers of ſo ſtrange a nature, that if a Sheep drink of the former, his Wooll turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Stone called Amiantus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is ſtained, in ſtead of being ſent unto the Fullers, is thrown into the Fire, and ſo cleanſed. But whether this be ſo or not, (for I put it only upon hearſay) certain it is that it was once enriched with Mines both of Braſs and Iron, though thoſe now decayed; and likewiſe with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue ſtill.

The Iſland, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous: but the people moſt delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Caryſto, anciently Caryſtus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Ægæa and Chironia; memorable for its Marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Caryſtiæ. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Eribos, ſeated on a Plain near the Water's ſide, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, ſtrong and wealthy City, ſo fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgement of moſt men it was held invincible when the Turks firſt ſate down before it. Nor was it purchaſed by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Conſtantinople, undertook the buſineſs) at a lower price than the loſs of forty thouſand men, who were ſpent upon it; but taken at the laſt, and the people put unto the Sword, without conſideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of ſo great Wealth and Power, that it ſent Colonies abroad into Macedonia, (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as alſo into Sicily and ſome parts of Italy; and had a ſtrong Influence on the Affairs of Achaia alſo, as being ſituate ſo near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demetrias in Theſſaly, and the Caſtle of Acrocorinth, were called the Fetters of Greece: inſomuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perſeus, to ſet the Græcians at liberty; the Græcians made anſwer, that in vain was their Liberty reſtored them, unleſs theſe three Towns were firſt diſmantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refuſed to declare againſt them in behalf of Antiochus; who thereupon made himſelf Maſter of the Town, and conſequently of the Iſland. But forced to leave the place upon the loſs of the Battel at Thermopylæ, it became free again; till finally made ſubject unto Rome, with the reſt of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eaſtern Empire. In the Diviſion whereof amongſt the Latines it fell to the ſhare of the Venetians; who from hence uſed with their Gallies to infeſt the Shores of Turkie, and diſturb their Trade. Provoked wherewith, eſpecially with their taking of Ænus, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterpriſe had taken 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Iſland, Mahomet the Great reſolves upon the Conqueſt of it, and with a puiſſant Army ſets before the Town. And though it coſt him dear, yet at laſt he got it, and therewith all the Iſland alſo, which depended on the Fortunes of it, An. 1471.

6. SALAMIS is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia; famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Souldiers and Gallies of the Perſian ſide hath been already declared. The whole Græcian Fleet conſiſted of no more then 270 Veſſels, whereof 127 were rigged and ſet forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the reſt by the Aſſociates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common Safety before an unſeaſonable contention for Priority. The Spartans, ſeeing the inequality of Forces, intended not to have hazarded the Battel, but with full ſail to have retired to Peloponneſus, into which Countrey the Perſians had made Incurſions; reſpecting more the Welfare of their own Countrey yet defenſible, then the deſperate eſtate of Attica. This Deſign was by Themiſtocles (as carefull for the eſtate of Athens as they for Sparta) ſignified to Xerxes: who, getting between them and home, compelled them to a neceſſity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were ſunk, and moſt of the reſt taken; the Confederates having loſt of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megarenſes were many Contentions for this Iſland; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the ſame name, the Royal Seat of Telamon, the Father of Ajax, ſo famous in the War of Troy: more memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legiſlator of Athens, one of the ſeven Wiſe men of Greece.

7. ÆGINA, now called Engia, an Iſland ſituate over againſt Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægæan, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Æacus, made for his Juſtice and Integerity one of the three Judges of Hell; the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oenone, and Oenope; but took this name from Ægina, the Daughter of Aſopus a King of Bœotia, on whom Jupiter is ſaid to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The people hereof are properly called Æginenſes and Æginetæ, much ſpoken of in the Wars of Athens, from which they are diſtant about 12 miles. The Ground hereof is very ſtony, but good for Barley, of which it is very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in thoſe days the name of Myrmidons, (the Iſland being alſo called Myrmidonia) quòd Formicarum more Terram foderent, becauſe Emmet-like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwelt at firſt in Caves without any Houſes. Hence the occaſion of the Fable of turning Emmets into Men at the prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after (I know not how) were carried into Theſſaly, where before we found them.

8. The CYCLADES, ſo called becauſe they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are alſo called the Iſlands of the Arches, becauſe they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They ſtand ſo cloſe together, that in a clear day a man may ſee 20 of them at a time; for which cauſe it is with good reaſon accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailours in a Storm. The chief of theſe Cyclades are, 1. DELOS, quaſi Δῆλος, ſignifying apparent; becauſe when all the Earth had abjured the receit of Latona at the requeſt of Juno, this Iſland, then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her; and in it was ſhe delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid;

——————————Erratica Delos
Errantem accepit, tunc cùm levis Inſula nabat.
Illic incumbens ſub Palladis arbore, Palmâ,
Edidit invitâ geminos Latona novercâ.
Unſettled Delos floating on the Wave,
A little Iſland, Entertainment gave
To wandring Laton, ſpight of Juno's Head,
Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.

Notable alſo is this Iſland for the Temple of Apollo, and a Cuſtom, neither permitting men to die, or Children to be born, in it; but ſending ſick Men and great-bellied Women to Rhene, a ſmall Iſland, and not much diſtant. By a more ancient name it is called Ortygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets, both Greek and Latine. The chief Town of it, called alſo Delos, is ſituate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Iſland. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainly then in other places, whence (as ſome ſay) it was called Delos; the word in Greek ſignifying manifeſt or apparent: made famous by the reſort of people from all places hither, eſpecially from the neighbouring Iſlands, who ſent yearly multitudes of men and troups of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the Trade of Corinth hither; that Town being utterly deſtroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reaſon of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient ſituation betwixt Europe and Aſia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Mithridates laid it waſte; and at laſt, on the ceaſing of the Oracles, was utterly forſaken. Both Town and Iſland are now called Sdiles. By which name alſo Rhene, an adjoyning Iſland, (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polycrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the leaſt in name.

2. TENOS, by Ariſtotle called Hydruſa, by ſome Ophiuſa, by the Moderns Tina. The chief Town of it is of the ſame name, ſo called from one Tenes the Builder of it, and giving name unto the Iſland. Memorable for a Fountain called Dipnoſus, of which Ariſtotle and Athenæus do both affirm, that the Waters will not mix with Wine. The only Iſland of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the reſt being ſubject to the Turk; deſerving therefore the firſt place in our Deſcription of thoſe Iſlands that incompaſs Delos, though anciently.

3 ANDROS (prima inter Cycladas,) was reckoned chief amongſt the Cyclades, or firſt at leaſt in order, becauſe next to Delos: originally called Cauros, afterwards Antandros, and at laſt Andros; from Andrus the Son of Eurimachus, who founded the chief Town in it, of the ſame name alſo. Memoroble for a pleaſant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taſte of Wine. It ſtill retains the name of Andro, or Andri.

4. NAXOS, now Nicſia, one of the biggeſt of the Pack, as being about 80 miles in compaſs. In ancient times it was called Veneris Inſula, or the Iſland of Venus; afterwards Dionyſia, by reaſon of its abundance of Wine, and the goodneſs of thoſe Wines together, conſecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionyſius. From its wonderfull plenty of Wheat called by ſome Sicilia minor, or the Leſſer Sicily; but at laſt Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithſtanding this new name, Bacchus did ſtill retain the honour to be worſhipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marriing here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theſeus had left upon the Rocks: whoſe Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the heavenly Conſtellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Iſland, ; though commonly by Aſtronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Iſland are ſaid by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth moneth, as Bacchus was born within that term. But it is more certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much eſteem amongſt the Romans. When theſe Iſlands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City, (as they did divers of the reſt on other Undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Criſpo's, who held it till the year 1572, when James the laſt of that Houſe loſt it to Selymus the ſecond.

5. GYAROS, a little Iſland, into which the Romans uſed to baniſh Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris vel carcere dignum,
Si vis eſſe aliquid: Probitas laudatur, & alget.
If thou intend'ſt to thrive, do what deſerves
Short Gyaros or Gyves: praiſ'd Vertue ſtarves.

6. PAROS, now Pario, by ſome of the Ancients called Pactya, by others Minoa; but it obtained this new name from Parus, a Son of Jaſon: memorable for Quarries of the whiteſt Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latins. It is in compaſs about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from Eaſt to Weſt, having once a Town of the ſame name ſeated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careleſs of keeping their Promiſes and Contracts: whence ἀναπαειάζειν grew into a Byword, applied to thoſe who made no reckning of their Promiſes. There is now a Town in it called Cephalo, but it is of no great note.

7. SCYROS, oppoſit to Magneſia in Aſia Minor, famous for the Birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he ſhould be ſlain in the Trojan War, ſent him to Lycomedes King of this Iſland, where he was brought up in Woman's Attire amongſt the King's Daughters, and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwiſe. Others relate that Ulyſſes diſcovered him by a Wile, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Peti-merchant with Armes and other Ware, to avoid diſtruſt, expoſed his Merchandiſe to the view of the Damoſels: when the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulyſſes had obſerved, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handſomeneſs of the fraud take from Ovid, thus:

Conſcia venturi Genitrix Nereia Fati
Diſſimulat Cultu Natum; & deceperat omnes
(In quibus Ajacem*) ſumptæ fallacia Veſtis.*
Arma ego fœmineis animum motura virilem
Mercibus inſerui, &c.

Thus Engliſhed by G. Sandys in his Tranſlation of the Metamorphoſes;

The whole Deſign in order to relate:
Thetis, fore-knowing great Achilles Fate,
Diſguis'd her Son, ſo like a Vergin dreſt,
That all miſtook, and Ajax with the reſt.
When Arms with Womens Trifles, which might blind
Suſpect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Heros Virgin-like array'd;
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I ſaid,
O Goddeſs-born, for thee the Fate of Troy
Her Fall reſerves: why doubtſt thon to deſtroy
Great Pergamus? then made him d' off thoſe Weeds,
And ſent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Negropont and Leſbos, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this Action: but the general opinion is for this, (though that be the greater Iſle) to which the ſituation of it amongſt the reſt of thoſe Iſlands where reigned ſo many of the Greek Kings intereſſed in the War of Troy ſeems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching in thoſe days ſo much towards the North.

8. MELOS, ſituate betwixt Crete and Peloponneſus, and equally diſtant from them both; The Promontories of Scyllæum in the one, and that of Dictynnæum in the other, ſhooting out againſt it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Byblus, a Town of that Countrey, gave that name unto it: being called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diagoras the Philoſopher, hence ſurnamed Melius, but more properly Ἄθεος or the Athiſt the firſt who in thoſe dark times of Ignorance abſolutely denied that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras excluſit, ſaith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compaſs. The Soil is ſufficiently fruitfull in Corn and Oyl, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble curiouſly beſpotted, and no ſmall ſtore of Milſtones; as alſo great quantities of Pitch and Brimſtone, and ſome Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Diſeaſes. The cheif Town of it is called Milo alſo

9. SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Perſeus the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Iſland, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but ſuch as are brought from other places keep their natural tone: from whence, Proverbially, ſilent and ſullen perſons were called Ranæ Seriphiæ. It is now called Serfine or Serphone, a ſtony and rocky Iſland, and hath a Town of the ſame name.

10. CIA, by ſome called CEOS, and now Zea, oppoſit to the Promontory of Achaia called Sunium, in compaſs about 50 miles; made towards the Weſt, in faſhion of a Creſcent or half-Moon, mountainous and hilly, except towards the North; by Pliny ſaid to have been torn from Eubœa, by a ſudden violence of the Sea, many men periſhing in the waters. Of old times it was beautified with three fair Towns; 1. Julis, 2. Carthea, and 3. Careſſus: of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whoſe names occur amongſt the Ancients: as 11. Miconus, now called Micole; 12. Cythnus, now Cauro; 13. Siphnus, now Siphano; 14. Theraſia, now Santorini; 15. Cimolis, called formerly Echinuſa, but now Polino; 16. Oliarus, now Quiniminio; 17. Sicenus cenus, now Sicino, ; 18. Polyægos, now Falconara; 19. Amorgos, now Murgo, one of the biggeſt of them all, but not elſe obſervable.

9. The SPORADES are ſo called from σπείρω, ſpargo, eò quòd in Mari ſparſæ ſunt, & non in Circulum coactæ, becauſe they lie diſperſed and ſcatered, not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. They are in number twelve. viz. 1. Anaphe, ſo called by the Argonauts, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀναφανείσης σκοτομήνης, becauſe the Moon did ſuddenly, and beyond her natural courſe, appear unto them, then grievouſly diſtreſſed by Tempeſt. Apollo worſhipped here is hence called Anapheus. It is now uſually called Namfio. 2. Aſtypalæa, now Stampalia, in compaſs 88 miles, by ſome of the Ancients called Theon Trapeza, or the Table of the Gods. In Aſtypale, the cheif Town of it, was Apollo worſhipped, from hence ſometimes called Aſtypaleus. 3. Helene, ſo called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here ſaid to have firſt deflowred; now called Macroniſi. 4. Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is ſaid to have been buried: But others finde his Grave at Naxos, and ſome at Chios; the difference being almoſt as great about the place of his Burial as the place of his Birth. Then are 5. Laguſa, 6. Phocuſa, 7. Phæcaſia, 8. Philocandros, 9. Schinuſa, 10. Strybia; of little note either in Poetry or Story. And finally, 11. Thera, not far from Ægina, before mentioned, formerly called Calliſte; but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman, the Son of Auteſion, conducting hither a Colony of Spartans and Minyans, (theſe laſt of Theſſaly) caſt out of Lemnos by Pelaſgus: in memory of whom, as the Founder of their Name and Nation, the Iſlanders uſed to celebrate an annual Feaſt. A Sedition after happening amongſt this People, the weaker party, under the Conduct of one Battus, admoniſhed ſo to doe by the Oracle of Apollo, paſſed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene. The Birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who aſcribes his Original to this Iſland, as himſelf thus witneſſeth,

Καλλίστη τοπάροιθε, τὸ δ' ὕστερον οὔνομα Θήρη,
Μήτηρ εὐόπλου πατρίδος ἡμετέρης.

That is to ſay,

Calliſte, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Countrey the Original.

10. CYTHERA, now called Cerigo, lieth in the bottom of this Sea not above five miles diſtant from Capo Malio in Peloponneſus; formerly called Porphyris, from the abundance of Marble, whereof the Iſland yields good plenty. It is in compaſs about 60 miles, enriched with a delightfull Soil, and having many Havens, but thoſe ſmall and unſafe, and very difficult of entrance. It is environed on all ſides with Rocks, of Themſelves inacceſſible, by which it is defended from the Turks, who hitherto have ſuffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the diviſion of the Spoil amongſt the Latines, ſo often ſpoken of before. It had a Town of the ſame name: ſome two furlongs from the Haven ſtood the Temple of Venus, (the ancienteſt dedicated to that Goddeſs which the Grecians had) and therin her Statua in compleat Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the Ruines whereof are ſtill to be ſeen) was Helen, the Wife of Menelaus, willingly raviſhed by Paris, the Son of Priam; but not enjoyed by him, till he had brought her to a ſmall Iſland of the Sporades by her name called Helene, as before is ſaid. From the Devotions of this People paid ſo duely to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea, by which ſhe is often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil,

Parce metu, Cytherea, manent immota tuorum
Fata tibi———

That is to ſay,

Drive Fear, fair Cytherea, from thy mind;
Thou thy Son's Fate immovable ſhalt find.

And ſo I paſs from the Ægæan to the Cretan Sea, obſerving this onely by the way, that moſt of the 69 Kings which accompanied Agamemnon in the War of Troy were Kings onely of theſe ſmall Iſlands; or elſe of other places as inconſiderable for wealth and Potency: every ſmall Town and Territory having in thoſe early times amongſt the Græcians (when Ambition had not taught the Great ones to devour the leſs) a peculier King.

9. The Iſlands of the CRETAN Sea.

THe CRETAN Sea is properly that part of the Ægæan or Ionian Sea which lyeth about the Shores of Crete, and formerly was under the Command and power thereof: as in thoſe times, the Sea about Carpathus, another Iſle of the Ægæan, had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian; though ſituate in the Ægæan alſo. The Iſles hereof are, 1. Crete, 2. Claude, 3. Dia, and 4. Letoa; for Melos and Cimolis, named by Ptolemy againſt the Iſlands which adjoyn on Crete, having been already ſpoken of amongſt the Cyclades, in the accompt whereof they paſs by conſent of Writers.

1. CRETA, now Candie, hath on the Eaſt the Carpathian Sea, on the Weſt the Ionian, on the North the Ægæan, on the South the African or Libyck. In form it extendeth Eaſt and Weſt with three Points or Promontories: whereof that towards the Eaſt, called anciently Samonium, is now called Capo di Salamone; that on the South-weſt, looking towards Africk, formerly named Hermæa, is now Capo Gabraſſe, and finally, that on the North-Weſt towards Peloponneſus, of old called Cimarus, is now called Capo Cheſtin. This laſt is directly oppoſit to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being ſo troubleſom and tempeſtuous eſpecially on Laconia ſide, that at laſt it grew into an ordinary Caveat, Maleam prætervectus obliviſcatur quæ ſunt domi, viz. that he which was to Sail by the point of Malea, ſhould lay aſide the care of all other matters, and attend his preſent Safety onely.

It hath in ſeveral Ages and in ſeveral Authors obtained ſeveral names. By Homer and Auſtathius it is called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it: by Pliny and Solinus, Macaros, and Macaroneſos, that is to ſay, the happy Iſland, from the goodneſs of the Soil and temper of the Air: by Stephanus, Idæa, from Ida a famous Mountain of it: by Giraldus, Telchinia, from the Telchini, the Prieſts of Cybele, who was here had in great requeſt. At the preſent it is called Candie, either à Candore, from the Whiteneſs of the Rocks wherewith it is environed; or from Candia the Metropolis or cheif Town thereof. But the general name which hath prevailed moſt in all ſorts of Writers is that of Crete, ſo called quaſi Cureta, by a Syncope or Abbreviation, from the Curetes, the firſt Inhabitants hereof; who, together with the Corybantes and Telchini, were the Prieſts of Cybele the principal Goddeſs of this Iſland: and they ſo called ἀπὸ τῆς κουρᾶς, from their Tonſure or Shaving of the Head. A Cuſtome much in uſe amongſt the Prieſts of ſome of the Pagan Deities, and poſſibly enough from them tranſmitted to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymology I do rather incline, then either to derive the name from Cretes, the Son of Jupiter and the Nymph Idæa; or from Crete the Daughter of Heſperus, though both theſe have their Authours alſo. Nor dare I to reject the Conceit of Bochartus, who, fetching the Etymons of moſt people from the Punick Language or Original, will have the Cretans to be deſcended from the Cerethites, a Nation of the Philiſtins, well known in Scripture; the word Cereth being abbreviated into Creth, from which into Crete and Cretans is no difficult paſſage. But in my mind his Conjecture is better then his Proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience that the chief Arms of the Philiſtins were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31. 3. and that the Cretans anciently were expert at thoſe Weapons alſo: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the Race of the Philiſtins, than that almoſt all Nations elſe had the ſame Original; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary Weapons of moſt People formerly, till Cuſtom and Experience trained them up to others of a later date; as he himſelf acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate Tractates.

In reference to the Heavenly Bodies it is ſituate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, ſo that the longeſt Day in Summer is no more then 14 hours and a quarter: and in relation to the Earth, ſet in the middle of the Sea, at ſo even a diſtance from Europe, Aſia and Africk, as if naturally deſigned to be what Ariſtotle hath pleaſed to call it, the Lady and Miſtreſs of the Sea. For it is diſtant from Peloponneſus an hundred miles, as many from Aſia the Leſs, and not above 150 from the Shores of Africk: ſo verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio jacet Inſula Ponto.

Jove's Birth-place Crete, a fruitful Land,
In th' middle of the Sea doth ſtand.

It is in length 270, in breadth 50 miles, in compaſs about 590. The Soil is very fruitful, eſpecially of Wines which we call Muſcadells, of which they tranſport yearly 12000 Butts; together with Sugar-Candy, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Orenges, Limons, Raiſins, Melons, Citrons, Pomegranats. Yet, as other Countreys of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in Corn; the moſt or greateſt part of which is yearly brought hither from Peloponneſus.

The Iſland is very populous, inſomuch that it is thought that upon any ſudden occaſion the Seignioury of Venice can raiſe in it 60000 men able to bear Arms. The people have formerly been good Sea-faring men; a Vertue commaculated with many Vices, which they yet retain, as Envy, Malice, and Lying: to which laſt they are ſo infinitely addicted, that an horrible Lie was called proverbially Cretenſe mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimenides, a Native of this Iſland, whoſe words are thus cited by S. Paul to Titus, Chap. 1. v. 12.

Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσαι, κακὰ θηρία, γάστερες ἀργαί.
The Cretans always Liers are,
Unruly Beaſts, of Labour ſpare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τρία Κάππα κάκιστα, that is to ſay, There are three Nations whoſe names begin with the letter K worſe then any others; viz. Καππάδοκες, Κρῆτες, Κίλικες, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though ſome, I know, apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the ſame Letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day the are ſick of their old Diſeaſes, as great Liers and as Idle as ever formerly; Covetous withal, and very ſubtile, impatient of Labour, and not caring to learn any Science perfectly: only well practiſed in Shooting, to which they are accuſtomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert then the Turks themſelves.

The Language generally ſpoken is the Greek Tongue; though the Gentleman and Merchant, by reaſon of their Dependence on the State of Venice, ſpeak Italian alſo. Both Languages are uſed alſo in Divine Offices: the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine Service is uſed alſo in many places, ſince the Subjection of this Iſland to the Venecians. They were converted firſt unto the Faith by S. Paul the Apoſtle, who, having planted the Goſpel of Life amongſt them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Biſhop of this Iſle; recommending unto him the Care of the Churches there, with power of Ordination and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure; as appears clearly by the Text Which power that it belonged to Titus as Biſhop, and not as their Evangeliſt only, is affirmed expreſly not only by the Subſcription of the ſaid Epiſtle, where he is plainly called τ̃ Κρητῶν ἐκκλησίας πρῶτος ἐπίσκοπος, the firſt Biſhop of the Church of the Cretans; but by the concurrent Teſtimonies of Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 4. S. Ambr. in Præfat ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his Tract de Scriptor. Eccleſiaſticis, Theodoret, cited by Oecumen. in Præfat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himſelf in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact in his Preface to the ſame Epiſtle. All which in plain terms call him Biſhop, and the Biſhop of Crete; according to that ſenſe and meaning of the word Epiſcopus, as it was uſed in their times, diſtinct from Preſbyter. The Church hereof, whilſt wholly under the Greek Patriaches, was governed by four Arch-biſhops and 21 Biſhops. But ſince the Subjection of this Iſland to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbiſhop, which is he of Candia, the chief City, and eight Biſhops only; beſides the titular Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who hath there his Reſidence; ſome Prelate of the Latine Church having been always honoured with that empty Title ever ſince the Recovery of that City from the Weſtern Chriſtians.

Famous was this Iſland amongſt the Ancients for many things memorized both by the Poets and old Hiſtorians. For here reigned Saturn in the firſt Ages of the World, Father of Jupiter, who was born here, and ſecretly nurſed in the Hill called Ida. For ſeeing that, by the Compact betwixt Saturn and his Brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own Life only, but all his Male-children to be murthered as ſoon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his Mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and ſecretly nurſed in Mount Ida, as before was ſaid: the Crying of the Infant being drowned by the noiſe of loud-ſounding Cymbals, purpoſely uſed by his Rockers to avoid Diſcovery. Whence afterwards the Corybantes, or Prieſts of Cybele, uſed in her Sacrifices the like muſical Inſtruments, continually ſounding, and withal ſhaking of their Heads, (like Fidlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian;

Non te progenitum Cybeleius Ære canoro
Luſtravit Corybas.

That is to ſay,

No Cybeleian Corybas that day
That thou was born did on his Cymbal play.

Here alſo lived Minos and Rhadamanthus, whoſe Laws were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who, for their Equity on Earth, are feigned by the Poets to be (together with Æacus) the Judges in Hell. In this Iſland alſo lived the lewdly-luſtful Paſiphae, Wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a Fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they ſay, begat on her the Minotaur: Dædalus having framed for her an artificial Cow, into which ſhe conveyed her ſelf, and by that means obtained her deſire. The Fable is thus expounded, that Paſiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Mino's Secretaries: whoſe company by the Pandariſm of Dædalus ſhe enjoying, was delivered of two Sons, one called Minos, the other Taurus. And whereas it is ſaid that the Mino- taur was ſlain by Theſeus; like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in ſome Priſon, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Paſiphae, I think it not altogether impoſſible to be true, conſidering how Domitian, to verifie the old relation, exhibited the like beaſtly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome: for thus ſaith Martial,

> Junctam Paſiphaen Dictæo, credite, Tauro
> Vidimus; accepit Fabula priſca fidem.
> Nec ſe miretur (Cæſar) longæva Vetuſtas:
> Quicquid Fama canit, donat Arena tibi.
> The Fable's prov'd a Truth, our eyes did ſee
> The Cretan Bull ſport with Paſiphae.
> What cauſe hath then Antiquity to glory?
> We ſaw it done, ſhe only heard the Story.

Finally, here was the ſo-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and ſafe-keeping of the Minotaurus; ſo full of various Windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impoſſible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By this Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute are ſaid to be murthered, till he was killed by Theſeus, Son of Ægeus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the Daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monſter, and gave him the Clew of thread, before ſpoken of, to conduct him out again: the Moral or Hiſtory whereof hath been ſhewn before. Nor muſt it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer, who flouriſhed in the time of Tiberius Cæſar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Amaſia in the Realm of Pontus:) which adds unto this Iſland as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things moſt obſervable at the preſent are theſe that follow. 1. That it breeds no Serpents, no venemous Worm, or ravenous or hurtful creature; ſo that their Sheep graze very ſecurely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it: which if true, then the laſt part of the Privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) muſt needs be falſe. 3. They have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he ſhall feel no Hunger for that day, if Quade may be believed, who ſpeaks it. 4. Here is (beſides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Dictamnum, or Dictamnus, of ſpecial virtue againſt Poiſon, either by way of Prevention or preſent Cure, peculiar only to this Iſland: it affordeth great ſtore of Landanum, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Ciſtus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cauſe Sleep, if moderately and carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the laſt Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the laſt Trumpet raiſe him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Pſiloriti, ſituate in the midſt of the Iſland, begirt about with many fair and pleaſant Villages, ſheltred by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being ſo high, that from the Top hereof both ſides of the Iſland may be eaſily ſeen. Here Jupiter is ſaid to have been ſecretly nurſed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans uſe to ſhew ſome tracts of the ancient Labyrinth; being indeed no other then the Ruines of ſome larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being ſo defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruines of it. 2. Dicte, now called Sethia, in ſome places Laſthi, ſo high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow; yet all the ſides thereof are garniſhed with Cypreſs-trees: a Mountain of ſuch fame, that the whole Iſland ſometimes had the name of Dictæa, the City Dictynna, the Promontory Dictynnæum, and the Herb Dictamnos, all ſeeming to take name from hence. 3. Lenci, a long Chain of Hills, ſo named from the Whiteneſs of them, now called di Madara, and by ſome La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of thoſe that be are, 1, Milopotamus, 2. Scaſinus, 3. Epicidnus, and 4. Divotro, towards the North; 5. Populiar, towards the Eaſt; and 6. Limens, towards the Weſt: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of Burthen, ſcarce of little Barks. But that defect is ſupplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, ſome capacious Havens, and great ſtore of Fiſh, among which a kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fiſh-trade, and the ſituation of it in the midſt of the Sea, the People anciently were eſteemed ſo good Sea-faring men, that when the people of thoſe times did tax a man with any incredible report, they uſed to ſay, Cretenſis neſcit Pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sailour.

In former times there were reckoned in this Iſland an hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatompolis; of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemy, for ſo many of their names he gives us. Thoſe of moſt note were, 1. Gnoſſus, the Seat-royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnoſſis; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2. Cydon, or Cydonia. a midland City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongſt whom they were in great requeſt, as they are at this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongſt the Turks: the moſt ancient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at firſt Colonies of this; for which reaſon it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Eleuthera, as Ptolemy, Erythræa, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it; one of the firſt Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Miletum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemy; the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus ſick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20. which happened when the Apoſtle hovered about that Coaſt, as is ſaid Act. 27. 7, 8. &c. For that it could not be that Miletum to which he congregated the Elders of Epheſus, appeareth by his being at Hiruſalem, Act. 21. 17. and other circumſtances of the Story. 5. Gortyna, nigh to which ſtood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus: memorable alſo for a Reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (near to which it ſtood) of which they made their ſtrongeſt Arrows, by Virgil Æneid. 11. called Spicula Gortynia; as alſo for a light Garment much uſed by Hunters, which Claudian calls Gortyniam veſtem, apparelling Diana the great Huntreſs with it. 6. Dictamnum, as Ptolemy, or Dictynna, as Pliny calls it; ſo named from the Hill Dicte, near to which it is ſituate: one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Iſland; as 7. Ampelus, ſo named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minoa, a Port-town, (now Alumara) ſo named from Minos, in the Eaſt; and 9. Coryeus, on a Promontory of the ſame name, in the Weſt ſide of it.

But theſe, and almoſt all the reſt ſpoken of by Ptolemy, being ſo deſtroyed by Time and Wars that the Ruines of them are hardly viſible, we muſt behold it in the preſent condition and eſtate thereof; divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to ſay, 1. Sittia, 2. Candia, 3. Retimo, and 4. Canea.

In the firſt part, called SITTIA, lying towards the Eaſt, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Pariſhes, of which ſix only are of the Church of Rome, the reſidue holding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by ſome to be the Cytæum of Ptolemy; a ſmall Town, but populous, and very well fortified. 2. Gierapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, ſeated on the Sea-ſide, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is ſaid to be a dangerous Whirl-pit, ſuppoſed to be the Panormus of Ptolemy. 3. S. Macor, the dwelling-place of one of the Biſhops of the Latines,

2. In the ſecond part hereof, called the Territory of CANDIA, lying directly Weſt of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongſt them 99 Pariſh Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of theſe the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbiſhop's See, the Metropolis or Head-City of the Iſland, which takes name from hence. It is ſituate on the North-coaſt hereof towards the Ægæan, beautified with a ſafe and commodious Haven, and fortified ſo ſtrongly, that it ſeems impregnable; affirmed by ſome to be the Matium of the Ancients: but I find no ſuch place in Ptolemy, or in Ortelius his Theſaurus. The City is fair and large, built for the moſt part of Free-ſtone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and ſpacious from whence a fair and pleaſant Plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Malviſin, 3. Themene, 4. Caſtel novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello; of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of RETIMO, formerly Rhithymna, lying North-weſt of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Pariſhes, whereof 36 are Græcians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Biſhop's See; but not elſe obſervable. 2. Milopotamo, an Epiſcopal See alſo, ſo called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is ſeated. 3. Agiſtiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lappa; hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and laſt part hereof, being the Territory of CANEA, taking up all the Weſt of the Iſland, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, diſtributed into 47 Pariſhes; of which 33 are of the Greek Church, and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1. Canea, built by a Colony or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen, on the North Coaſt alſo, ſuppoſed to ſtand in the ſame place where once Cydon did; ſecond to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiouſneſs of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capeable of more then a thouſand good Gallies at a time, and therefore ſtrongly fortified with two Cittadels or Caſtles, on each ſide of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. 2. Chiſamo, in Latine called Ciſamus, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good againſt the Ruines of time; ſituate in a low mooriſh place towards the Ægæan. 3. Selino, built upon a Hill on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to Chiſamo. 4. Sfachia, or Spachia, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains, of old called Leuci, now della Spachia, from this Town: unwalled, but fortified with a Caſtle; built for a place of Refuge againſt the Incurſions of ſuch Pirates as annoied the Coaſts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Aboad. By which account it will appear that in the whole Iſland are no more then 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Pariſh-Churches; of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the reſidue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Iſland, we can aſcend as high as the times of Saturn, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth; who, better favoured by his Mother, obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars ariſing betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, That Saturn for his own Life ſhould enjoy the Kingdom, which after his deceaſe ſhould return to the Titans: and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saturn were to be ſtrangled as ſoon as born. But Cybele, the Wife of Saturn, unawares to her Husband, preſerved firſt Jupiter, and after other of her Sons; which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War againſt Saturn, but in concluſion were ſubdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring againſt the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquiſhed, a new War aroſe betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occaſioned only (as many unnatural Wars ſince theſe times have been) by Fears and Jealouſies: which ending at the laſt in the Flight of Saturn, Jupiter became ſole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnoſſus, with this Inſcription or Epitaph in old Greek Letters, ὁ Ζεὺς τȣ̃ Κρόνȣ, that is to ſay, Jupiter the Son of Saturn. After his death he was worſhipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the title of Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε the Father both of Gods and Men: though moſt incongruouſly and abſurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thouſands living in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, ſucceeded here; who, wiſely taking the advantage which the convenient ſituation of the Iſland gave him, made himſelf Maſter of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conqueſt of the Megarenſes and Athenians, upon which laſt he impoſed, amongſt other hard Conditions, a Tribute of ſeven male Children yearly to be kept as Hoſtages; which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theſeus. But Minos being ſlain in Sicily, and his Poſterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themſelves after the manner of a Commonwealth or Free State: the Laws and Ordinances whereof, firſt deviſed by Minos, were of ſuch eſteem, that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large deſcribed by Ariſtotle in the 2. Book of his Politicks, ch. 8. Under this Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the reſt of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his War againſt them; yet Florus ſtates the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but ſolâ nobilem Inſulam vincendi cupiditate, out of a covetous deſire only of ſubduing ſuch a wealthy Iſland. And to this War they went with ſo proud a Confidence, that M. Antony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Priſoners then Arms to conquer them. An Inſolence which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquiſhed by the Cretans, the bodies of his ſlain Souldiers hanged upon the Maſts, and himſelf periſhing in the Action by a fit of Sickneſs. Metellus, who ſucceeded him in that charge, went on more ſucceſſfully, firſt taking Gnoſſus, Eleuthera, (or Erythræa, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Iſland; uſing the vanquiſhed Iſlanders with ſuch Inhumanity, that moſt of them poiſoned themſelves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for ſo great a Victory, then that he got the ſurname of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, againſt whoſe will he had put himſelf upon that Service. Thus being added to the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenaica by Auguſtus Cæſar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconſul till the death of Nero; afterwards ſeparated from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Conſtantine, in 36 years together there fell no Rain, ſo that this Iſland was in a manner wholly deſolated, But Helena, the Mother of Conſtantine, having obtained Rain for it by her Prayers to God, it was again new peopled by ſeveral Colonies brought out of Ægypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoyning. By Conſtantine made a Province of the Dioceſe of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eaſtern Empire till the time of Michael Balbus, when it was ſubdued by the Saracens; from them recovered by the more fortunate Conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire Anno 963. In the diviſion of the Spoil amongſt the Latines, it was firſt given to Boniface, Marqueſs of Montferrat; by him ſurrendred willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be poſſeſſed of all the Iſlands of that Empire: he being recompenſed with the Kingdom of Theſſaly, the fair and wealthy City of Theſſalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponneſus. Under that State it ſtill continueth, in vain attempted by Selimus the ſecond in the year 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus; and gallantly defended for this year laſt paſt againſt all the Forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seigniour. What the Succeſs of this War will be, we ſhall ſee hereafter.

For the Defence hereof againſt the Inſurrections of the Inhabitants, who did at firſt ill brook the Venetian Government, there are ſome ſtanding Forces kept in conſtant pay; beſides ſuch as are maintained in ſeveral Garriſons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer then ſix Companies of Souldiers, Candia 2000 Souldiers, and the leſſer Cities proportionably: over which there is ſet ſo ſtrong a Guard, that a natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preſervation of their Intereſt in it from a forein Power, they have furniſhed the Iſland with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda with two ſtrong Caſtles, this Haven being capable of more then 1000 Veſſels, and therefore meritoriouſly reputed the Door and Entry into the Countrey. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the ſecond, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven money more then enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniard ſeemed only to intend the Retreat and Relief of his own Navy when he ſhould undertake any Expedition againſt the Turk; yet the wiſe Venetians ſaw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he liſted ſurprize, the whole Countrey.

II. The other Iſlands of this Sea, as of leſſer note, will be paſs'd over in few words. The firſt of which is called CLAUDE, mentioned Acts 27. 16. ſituate on the Southweſt of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein in Plinie's time was a Town or City named Gaudos, now called Gozo, with the Iſland. 2. DIA, now Standia, a very ſmall Iſland, and of little note. 3. LETOA, on the South-eaſt of Crete, now called Chriſtiana. And 4. ÆGILIA, or Ægialia, by Pliny Ægila, more in the Sea towards Peloponneſus; now called Cecerigo by Sophianus. Of which and others of leſs note (if leſs may be) there is no more to be ſaid, but that they have always followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they ſeem to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Iſlands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is ſo called either from Ionius, the Son of Dyrrhachius, whom Hercules having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preſerve his memory, as Didymus is of opinion or from Ionia a Region in the extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the Daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lieth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which it is parted about Epidamnum, (otherwiſe called Dyrrhachium) as is ſaid by Ptolemy, or rather at the ſhooting out of the Acroceraunian Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and ſo along the Shores of the two Calabria's to the Iſle of Sicily. Chief Iſles whereof which paſs in the account of Greece (for of thoſe lying on the Coaſt of Italy we have ſpoken elſewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2 Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalenia, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. The STROPHADES are two ſmall Iſlands, now called Strivali, lying againſt Meſſene in Peloponneſus; famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the Faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, ſent by the offended Gods (as the Fable goeth) for the puniſhment of Phineus King of Arcadia, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Wiſe at the inſtigation of their Stepdame. For which he was ſo plagued by theſe Harpyes, that he could ſet no Meat on his Table whereſoever he was, but theſe ravenous creatures firſt devoured it, and then bewrayed the Diſhes in which it was. Much pitied by the Argonauts, whom he had courteouſly entertained, they ſent Zethes and Calais, the winged Iſſue of Boreas and Orithyia, who drave them thence, and having purſued them to thoſe Iſlands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was contained the ſad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and falſe Accuſers, by whom their Name and Government was made diſtaſtful; till by good Counſel they had purged their Courts of ſuch ugly Monſters: concerning which Alphonſus King of Naples was uſed to ſay, that theſe Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by ſome few Greek Friers: and in one of them there is a Spring of freſh Water, which hath his Fountain in Peloponneſus, and, paſſing under the Sea, ariſeth here. The Greek Prieſts are called Caloires, quaſi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς, boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never eat Fleſh, and but ſeldom Fiſh; feeding uſually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Iſlands, neither do they on any occaſion permit Women to come amongſt them. They all labour for their Suſtenance, ſome in Tillage, ſome in Vineyards, ſome in Fiſhing; ſo that among very many of them, three or four only can reade. But of theſe ſomewhat hath been ſaid elſewhere already.

2. ZACYNTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compaſs, and diſtant from Peloponneſus 20 miles; ſo called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanus. The Countrey is wonderfully ſtored with Oyl, Wines and Currans: of which laſt they made yearly 150000 Zecchines for their own Coffers, and 48000 Dollars which they pay for Cuſtom to the Seignioury of Venice. They were a very poor people when the Engliſh uſed to traffick there firſt; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants firſt frequenting the Countrey, they much marvelled to what end they bought ſo many Currans, and demanded whether they uſed to dye Cloaths or fat Hogs with them, for ſo they themſelves did: but now they have learned a more profitable uſe of them. Here are alſo very good Salt-pits, Freſh water plenty, but little or no Wood, and leſs Corn: their ground being husbanded, as the caſe ſtands with them, to their better advantage; but ſo that many times they are ready to ſtarve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove croſs unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Proviſions both of Fleſh and Corn out of Peloponeſus. in which reſpect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turks, conſidering how eaſie it is for him to diſtreſs them for want of Victual. The Iſland is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their Houſes very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Prieſts are to ring the Bells, to ſtir the people to Prayers. They have a Cuſtom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as deteſtable a Sin as Inceſt for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chuſe ſuch to be their Compeers who have formerly been ſuſpected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Iſland is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a ſpitefull and vindicative nature, not to be reconciled, if angred. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which paſſeth by the name of a City, is called alſo Zant, ſtreched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not anſwerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, ſafe from the danger of Pirats, though not of Winds, capable of great Fleets of ſhipping both for bulk and number, and ſo frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not ſtay for a paſſage. Yet, notwithſtanding this great Concourſe and reſort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich then well-built or beautifull; the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reaſon of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the Eaſt ſide of it, on a round ſteep Mountain, ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, a little City of it ſelf, well garriſoned, impregnably fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour onely, but a great part of the Sea adjoyning. Upon the Wall thereof continually ſtands a Watchman, to deſcry what Shipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many Flags as he diſcovereth Veſſels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to inſtruct the Magiſtrates in their publick Duty) it is ſaid theſe Verſes are inſcribed:

Hic locus 1. odit, 2. amat, 3. punit, 4. conſervat, 5. honorat,
1. Nequitiam, 2. Pacem, 3. Crimina, 4. Jura, 5. Probos.

Thus Engliſhed by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine,

This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3 puniſh, 4. keep, 5. requite,
1. Voluptuous Riot, 2, Peace 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. th' Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greeks both in Birth and Language, are for the moſt part of that Church alſo; but ſome adhere unto the Latine; each party having their own Biſhop: of which the Greek Biſhop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicolas, near unto the Haven which it giveth name to, and therein a Monaſtery of Caloires, or Monks of Baſil; the Latine Biſhop hath his Reſidence and Cathedral within the Caſtle, and therein a Convent of Franciſcans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue alſo: but there are not many of them, if not lately encreaſed. In Civil matters they are ſubject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whome they call the Providore) having his Reſidence in the Caſtle, aſſiſted by a Chancellour and two Counſellours, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Iſland in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we ſhall ſhew anon.

3. The ECHINADES are certain little Iſlands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 ſail of Ships the Venetians and their Confederates but 145 of all ſorts. But it pleaſed God to give the Victory to the weakeſt: the Iſſue of it being ſuch, that the Turks loſt 29000 men who were killed in the Fight, 30000 more which were taken priſoners, 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Chriſtian Captives which were then redeemed: the Chriſtians buying this great Victory with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchaſed with a leſs. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Actium, wherein Auguſtus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himſelf alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adverſary. So that this place ſeems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions; and that this later Naval fight was but the ſecond part of the firſt.

But to return unto theſe Iſlands. They ſtand juſt againſt the Mouth of the River Achelous; of which thus the Poet, Turbidus objectas Achelous Echinadas exit.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt,
Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt.

Theſe Iſlands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be ſo many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whome Achelous the River-God upon ſome diſpleaſure metamorphoſed into theſe Rocky Iſlands. But the truth is, that they were cauſed by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at laſt it ſettled to firm Ground. Of which himſlf ſaith thus in Ovid,

——— Fluctus noſtrique mariſque
Continuam deducit humum, pariterque revellit
In totidem mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis.
The fury of the Sea-waves and mine own
Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down,
Which, parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou ſeeſt, theſe five Echinades.

5. CEPHALENIA, the moſt populous Iſland of this Sea, is ſituate overagainſt Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South-eaſt Zant, on the Notrh-weſt Corcyra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compaſs being reckoned at 160. Once called Tetrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the ſame name with the Iſland. It is woody and mountainous in moſt places, but the Mountains intermixt with Valleyes and the Woods with Champain: plentifull in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Oyl, incomparable, though not long-laſting, Muſcadells; as alſo in Cheeſe, Wool, Turkies; and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So deſtitute of Water, as having no River, and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the Dew diſtilling inſenſibly from the Clouds.

The People are for the moſt part Greeks; ſome few Italians, naturals of the Seignioury of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are, 1. Cephalenia, now Ceſalona, fortified with good Works and a very ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Argaſtoli, a Haven-town, diſtant ſix miles from Ceſalona: the Port whereof is capable of a ſufficient Navy. 3. Sidro, another Port-town alſo, lying towards the South.

As for the Fortunes of this Iſland, it was firſt called Melæna, after Teleboe: and being known by that name was made ſubject to Thebes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphitryo, the Theban General, by whom Pterelas, the King hereof, was ſlain in Battel. During which War, and the Stay of Amphitryo in this Iſland, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by miſadventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he ſhot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Countrey, fled unto Amphitryo his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans; who, pitying his caſe, made him the Governour of this Iſland, ſince, from his name, called Cephalenia. Having continued for ſome time in the power of the Thebans, it paſſed, together with Zant and ſome other Iſlands into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs; the Achæans got the Iſle of Zant, and the Ætolians Cephalenia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of ſetting the Continent at liberty, made themſelves Maſters of both the Iſlands, that ſo they might at leiſure poſſeſs the whole, as in fine they did. In the Diviſion of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece, to the Conſtantinopolitans: and on the takings of that City by the Weſtern Chriſtians, they fell, with almoſt all the reſt of the Iſlands, to the State of Venice; the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and ſome other of moſt Importance in the hands of the Seigniour, permitted theſe (as many other of leſs note) unto private Adventurers. At the concluſion of the Peace betwixt Mahomet the Great and the ſtate of Venice, theſe two, with Neritos, or Leucas, (ſpoken of in Epirus) were ſeiſed on by that Tyrant in deſpight of that Treaty or Concluſion, as belonging unto private perſons, not to the Republick: but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Bajazet the ſecond, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof are ſtill governed and defended by them.

5. CORCYRA, (now CORFV) more anciently was called Phæacia; but took this latter name from a Nymph ſo called, whome Neptune is reported to have here deflowred. It is ſituate over againſt Epirus, from thence 12 miles diſtant, ſtretched out from Eaſt to Weſt in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth; and ſo it is the biggeſt of theſe Seas. Commodiouſly ſeated for the Trade and Eſtate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defective in Water, much ſubject to be blaſted with Southernly Winds; and therefore they ſow little Corn, and plant leſs Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightfull, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Figtrees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great ſtore of Oyl and Olives, and moſt excellent Honey; bleſt with a very temperate and healthfull Air, made odoriferous by moſt pleaſent and ſweet-ſmelling Fruits, which grow moſt plentifully in each part hereof. Alcionus, who ſo courteouſly entertained Vlyſſes after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Iſland; whoſe Gardens, anſwerable to the natural Delights and Sweetneſs of it, are ſo much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus;

Quid bifera Alcinoi referam Pomaria, vóſque
Qui nunquam vacui prodiſtis in æthera Rami?

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words,

Why ſhould I name Alcinous fertile Ground,
And Trees which never without Fruit are found?

Towns of moſt note and ſtrength herein are, 1. Pagiopoli, 2, Caſtello S. Angelo, of good eſteem in reſpect of many others, but far ſhort of 3. Corfu, the chief and ſtrongeſt of the Iſland, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulſes to be impregnable. For it is ſituate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inacceſſible Fortreſſes, as being ſtrongly fenced with a natural Rock; the one called the Old Fortreſs, and the other the New: juſtly eſteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whoſe Trade and Power would ſoon decay ſhould theſe Forts be loſt. For which cauſe the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are ſworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; leſt by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought alſo from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more then two years; their Commiſſion then terminating, and new Succeſſours being ſent them. The Town is inhabited for the moſt part by Græcians, as is all the reſidue of the Iſland; beautified with one of the moſt commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Reſidence of an Archbiſhop. A Town of ſuch publick Concernment, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Venice, and one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks of Chriſtendom againſt the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it ſince diſmembred from the Eaſtern Empire, at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

6. ITHACA, now called Val de Compare, lieth on the North-eaſt of Cephalenia, being in compaſſe 50 miles: moſt famous for the Birth of Vlyſſes, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet;

Effugimus Scopulos Ithacæ Laertia Regna,
Et terram altricem ſævi exſecramur Ulyſſis.
From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm, we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Vlyſſes bred.

It was alſo called Dulichium, or elſe there was ſome other Iſland of that name, not far from Ithaca, whereof Vlyſſes was alſo King, who is hence called Dulichius Heros among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Aiax to him, Dulichius vertex ſignifieth the Head of Vlyſſes,

Sed neque Dulichius, ſub Achillis caſſide, Vertex
Pondera tanta feret.
Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Vlyſſes Head to undergo.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Maſter-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the beſt Swordman of them all. A War to which he went ſomewhat unwillingly, as fearing the ſad Conſequences and events thereof; inſomuch that he feigned himſelf mad, ploughing the Shore, and ſowing Salt inſtead of Corn. But Palamedes, to make triall whether this was real, or but counterfeit onely, caſt young Telemacus, the Son of Vlyſſes, before the Plough, which he obſerving, either drove the Plough beſides him, or lifted it over him. Diſcovered by this means, and engaging with the reſt in the Trojan War, he found out the Deſign of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it alſo: in the courſe whereof, by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; aſſociated with Diomedes in the action againſt Rheſus King of Thrace, and with Palamedes in foraging the Countrey for Proviſions. By his Policy was the Palladium ſtoln out of Troy, and conſequently the City taken and diſtroyed, whoſe Fate depended on the preſervation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Ithaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempeſts and the Diſpleaſure of the Gods which favoured Troy: in which he ſaved himſelf from the Inchantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Polyphemus; and after many Dangers came home in ſafety. A man of ſo compleat a Vertue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odyſſes, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect Soulder.

The Countrey is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plentifull of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the moſt part by Pirates and Exiles, men baniſhed out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superiour over them; but ſubject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained theſe Iſlands againſt the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the moſt proſperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified, at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, with almoſt all the Iſlands of the Ægæan and Ionian Seas, (as being a People ſtrong in Shipping, and ſo moſt able to preſerve the Poſſeſſion of them) ſome of the greateſt and moſt conſiderable, either for their Riches or commodiouſneſs of Situation, were furniſhed with convenient Garriſons in the name of the State. The reſt they did beſtow on the better ſort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own Coſt and Charges; who accordingly poſſeſſed themſelves of one, two or more of them, as they were of ability to ſet out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Seignioury having nevertheleſs a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not onely preſerve thoſe Seas from the Genoua Pirats but for long time defended all their Iſlands alſo, as well againſt the Greeks as the Turkiſh Emperours. But all the Iſles of the Ægæan being loſt to the Turk, except Cythera and Tenos on the Europæan, and Carpathos or Scarpanto on the Aſian ſide; they have now onely Crete with the Iſles adjoyning, and thoſe of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and theſe (but ſpecially the Iſle Crete) endangered at the preſent by the Turkiſh Tyrant.

Thus having taken a view of the ſeveral Provinces and Iſles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and preſent ſtate of each particular: let us next take a vew of the Græcian Emperours, who have had here their principal Reſidence, and poſſeſſed the whole, (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the Eaſt) as they here follow in this enſuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN, GRÆCIAN, or Eaſtern Emperours.

A.Ch.

331 1. Conſtantine, ſurnamed the Great, having reigned 12 years in Rome, tranſlated his Imperial Seat to Conſtantinople, which himſelf had founded.

341 2. Conſtantius, the ſecond Son of Conſtantine, in the Diviſion of the Empire, had for his Partage Thrace, Conſtantinople, and all the Provinces of the Eaſt. After the death of his two Brethern he remained ſole Emperour, but reſided for the moſt part in the Eaſt; a great Patron of the Arians, and as great a Perſecutor of the Orthodox Chriſtians.

366 3. Julian, ſurnamed the Apoſtate, Son of Conſtantius the Brother of Conſtantine the Great; at firſt a Chriſtian, afterwards a profeſſed Enemy of the Goſpel: fortunate in his Wars againſt the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whileſt he was a Chriſtian; prodigiouſly ſlain in the Perſian War, when become a Perſecutor.

368 4. Jovian, or Jovinian, choſen by the Army, a Religious Prince, made Peace with the Perſian, and ſettled the Affairs of the Chriſtian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of mean Birth; but great Abilities in War, was elected Emperour.

369 5. Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made Partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Conſtantinople and the Eaſt; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Weſtern parts. A great Patron of the Arian Faction and the firſt who brought in the Goths on this ſide of the Danow, whom he placed in the deſart parts of Thrace, to the Deſtruction of the Empire, and himſelf to boot.

382 6. Gratian, the eldeſt Son of Valentinian, ſucceeded his Father in the Weſt, and his Uncle Valens in the Eaſt, after whoſe death he left Italy and the Weſt to Valentinian his younger Brother. Diſtreſſed by the Goths, he made Theodoſius Partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherouſly murthered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.

383 7. Theodoſius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the Traitour Eugenius. He vanquiſhed the Goths, utterly ſuppreſt the Pagan Superſtitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it ſelf, and ſtrengthened the Church of Chriſt with good Laws and Ordinances.

399 8. Arcadius, the eldeſt Sun of Theodoſius, ſucceeded his Father in the Eaſt, as his Brother Honorius did in the Weſt: the Roman Empire after this laſt Diviſion of it being ſo diſtracted and torn in pieces, that it was never ſince united.

412 9. Theodoſius II. Son of Arcadius, made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed againſt the Hunns and Perſians; his more dangerous Enemies, and cauſed the Epheſine Council to be called againſt Neſtorius.

454 10 Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodoſius, ſucceeded his Maſter, and married with Pulcheria his Maſter's Siſter. He called the Council of Chalcedon againſt Dioſcorus.

461 11. Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joynt conſent of the Senate and Souldiery, ſitting in the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.

478 12. Zeno, the Son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, ſent Theodorick and the Goths into Italy againſt Odoacer. A Tyrant and a great Drinker; in one of his drunken Fits buried quick by his Empreſs. In his time Conſtantinople was almoſt wholly deſtroyed by Fire, in which periſhed, amongſt other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuſcripts.

497 13. Anaſtaſius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empreſs created Emperour: a great Patron of Eutyches, yet fortunate in his Wars againſt the Perſians and Arabians. In his time Conſtantinople, beſieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great Diſtreſs, if Proclus, a Famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

521 14. Juſtin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anaſtaſius; a Catholick Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Baniſhment.

528 15. Juſtinian, the Siſter's Son of Juſtinus, with whom he was at firſt Conſort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Vandals by Beliſa- rius, and Italy from the Goths by Narſes; and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.

566 16. Juſtin II. Nephew of Juſtinian, inſtituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and loſt a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himſelf to oppoſe the Perſian, he choſe

577 17. Tiberius, one of his cheif Commanders, to be Conſort with him, who afterwards ſucceeded in the ſole Command.

584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars againſt the Perſians, from whom he recovered Meſopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Conſtantina his Daughter, and declared his Succeſſor. Reſuſing to ranſom ſome of his Souldiers, taken Priſoners by Caganus King of the Avares, he loſt the Affections of his Army.

604 19. Phocas, a common Souldier, in a military Tumult choſen Emperour, murthered the Emperour Mauritius, with his Wife and Children, aud made Pope Boniface Supreme Biſhop or Head of the Church: ſlain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Luſts and Cruelties.

611 20. Heraclius, a Nobleman of Conſtantinople, choſen by the general conſent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquiſhed the Perſians, recovered Hieruſalem out of their hands: and brought home the Croſs unto Conſtantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feaſt called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to diſperſe his Dotages.

641 21. Conſtans, or Conſtantine II. Son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his Wars againſt the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choiceſt Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ranſacking the Iſle of Sicily, was there ſlain by the Women.

670 22. Conſtantinus III. Son of the former Conſtantine, from his long or early Beard ſurnamed Pogonatus, repulſed the Saracens from Conſtantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from paſſing over the Danow.

687 23. Juſtinian II. Son of Conſtantine the 3. ſubdued Meſopotamia, Armenia, and ſome part of Perſia, forcing the Saracens to ſue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Againſt whom Leontius on the one ſide, and Abſimarus on the other, ſeverally taking Arms; were declared Emperours. Juſtinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Noſe cut off, and his perſon commited to Cuſtody: bnt making an Eſcape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the purſuit of his Revenge, was finally murthered at the Alter by the command of

713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperour by the Souldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he cauſed to be caſt out of the Church, thereby incurring the Diſpleaſure of 715 25. Anaſtaſius II. called alſo Artemius, his principal Secretary, who thruſt himſelf into the Empire; forced to relinquiſh it by that Army which he had raiſed againſt the Saracens: in which Tumult the City of Conſtantinople was ſacked and ſpoiled.

717 26. Theodoſius III. made Emperour in this Tumult by the Souldiers, hearing of the Approch of Leo, Commander of the Eaſtern Armies, reſigned the Empire, and took Orders to preſerve his Life.

718 27. Leo Iſaurus, in whoſe time Caliph Zuleiman beſieged Conſtantinople the ſpace of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 300000 of the Saracens were deſtroyed, they deſiſted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it call Wild-fire; and the Latines, becauſe the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little moleſted. He was alſo a great Enemy to Images, and for this cauſe hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nickname of Iconomachus.

741 28. Conſtantinus IV. Son of Leo, ſurnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Artabardus being choſen Emperour againſt him, but at laſt defeated.

777 29. Leo III. Son of Conſtantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Uſurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an Enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars againſt the Saracens.

782 30. Conſtantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, firſt governed the Empire withhis Mother, by whom at laſt ſupplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.

798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. firſt Conſort with Conſtantine her Son, and afterwards ſole Empreſs of Conſtantinople: for her better ſupport in which Eſtate ſhe ſided with the Popes of Rome, and called the ſecond Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, ſurnamed the Great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperour of the Weſt. For the Popes, knowing their own Greatneſs to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the weſt unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbaroſſa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperour, Emanuel of Conſtantinople ſued for a Re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this anſwer, Non licere illi conjungere quæ majores ejus de induſtria disjunxerunt: Let no man preſume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put aſunder.

803 32. Nicephorus, a Patrician, made Emperour by the Souldiers, perſuaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Succeſſor: ſlain in a pitcht Field againſt the Bulgarians.

812 33. Michael, ſurnamed Curopalates, from his Office, (the Maior of the Palace, as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, aſſumed the Empire, which, finding his own Weakneſs, he did ſoon relinquiſh, and betook himſelf unto a Monaſtery.

814 34. Leo V. ſurnamed Armenius, from his Countrey, General of the Horſe to Michael, demoliſhed the Images which his Predeceſſors had ſet up. He was ſlain in the Church during the time of Divine Service.

821 35. Michael II. ſurnamed Balbus, having murthered Leo, aſſumed the Empire; unfortunate in his Government, and died of Madneſs.

830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Balbus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; loſing many Battels to the Saracens, at laſt he died of Melancholy.

842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, firſt ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto her ſelf the ſupreme Command; and after of himſelf ſole Emperour, his Mother being made a Nun.

866 38. Baſilius, ſurnamed Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Conſort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he baſely and treacherouſly murthered; killed caſually by a Stag.

886 39. Leo VI. for his Learning ſurnamed Philoſophus, the ſon of Baſilius, a vigilant and provident Prince: moſt of his time, with variable Succeſs, was ſpent againſt the Bulgarians.

912 40. Conſtantine VI. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philoſophus, firſt under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire; by which laſt he was ſo miſerably depreſſed, that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting. But Lacopenus being depoſed and turned into a Monaſtery by his own Sons, Conſtantine at laſt obtained his Rights, and reſtored Learning unto Greece.

961 41. Romanus, the Son of Conſtantine.

963 42. Nicephorus, ſurnamed Phocas, firſt Governour or Protector of the young Emperour Romanus; after whoſe death, created Emperour by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greateſt part of Aſia minor, from the power of the Saracens: ſlain in the night by John Zimiſces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.

971 43. John Zimiſces, Emperour in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better then he did obtain it, vanquiſhing the Bulgarians, Roſſes, and others of the barbarous Nations; and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.

977 44. Baſilius II. ſurnamed Porphyrogenetus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour: he ſubdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.

1027 45. Conſtantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Baſilius, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whoſe death he governed three years by himſelf, but did nothing memorable.

1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality ſurnamed Argyropolus, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Conſtantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the Treaſon of his Wife and her Adulterer.

1035 47. Michael IV. ſurnamed Paphlago, from his Countrey, firſt the Adulterer, and afterwards the Husband, of Zoe; but died very penitent.

1042 48. Michael V. ſurnamed Calaphates, a man of obſcure Birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he depoſed from the Government, and turned into a Monaſtery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, ſhe put out the Eyes of Calaphates, and, being then 60 years of age, beſtowed both the Empire and her ſelf upon 1043 49. Conſtantine IX. ſurnamed Monomachus, formerly Husband to a Niece of Romanus the 2.

1055 50. Theodora, Siſter unto Zoe, after the death of Conſtantine, managed for two years the Affairs of the Empire with great Contentment of all people. But grown in age he ſurrendred it to

1057 51. Michael VI. ſurnamed Stratioticus, an old, but military, man, depoſed within 3 years by

1060 52. Iſaacius, of the noble Family of the Comneni; valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with conſent of the Senat and people, to 1063 53. Conſtantine X. ſurnamed Ducas, a great Juſticiar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his Subjects, and contemned by his Enemies.

1071 54. Romanus III. ſurnamed Diogenes, married Eudoxia, the Wife of Conſtantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken priſoner by the Turks, and ſent home again, he found a Faction made againſt him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himſelf at his return depoſed, and ſo died in Exile.

1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Conſtantinus Ducas, ſurnamed Parapinatius, by reaſon of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperour in the aforeſaid Tumult. But being found unable for ſo great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was depoſed again, and put into a Monaſtery.

1081 56. Nicephorus II. ſurnamed Botoniates, of the Houſe of Phocas, ſucceeded in the place of Parapinace; depoſed within three years by the Comneni.

1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperour Iſaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whoſe time the Weſtern Chriſtians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy Land: of whoſe purpoſes being very jealous, he denied them paſſage through his Countrey; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Neceſſaries.

1113 58. Calo-Joannes, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand againſt the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and ſome other places of Importance. He alſo vanquiſhed the Scythians or Tartars paſſing over the Iſter, moſt of which he either ſlew in Battel, or ſold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this ſide that River. He alſo conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, tranſporting many of them into Bithynia.

1142 59. Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemy to the Weſtern Chriſtians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being entrapped in the dangerous Streights of Cilicia, and his Army miſerably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.

1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Manuel, depoſed and barbarouſly murthered by Andronicus, the Couſin-german of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.

1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Manuel to Oenum in Paphlagonia, by reaſon of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Conſtantinople: firſt made Protector, afterwards Conſort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarouſly ſlain, and got the Empire to himſelf, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.

1185 62. Iſaacius Angelus, a Nobleman of Conſtantinople, and of the ſame Comnenian Race, deſigned to death by Andronicus, was in a popular Election proclaimed his Succeſſour; depoſed by Alexius his own Brother, and his Eyes put out.

1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Iſaac Angelus, who being unjuſtly thruſt out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourſe to Philip the Weſtern Emperour, whoſe Daughter Mary he had married; who ſo prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promiſe for ſubjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome) that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to reſtore him. On the approch whereof Alexius the Uſurper fled; Alexius the young Emperour is ſeated in his Father's Throne, and not long after ſlain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines aſſault and win Conſtantinople, make themſelves Maſters of the Empire, and divide it amongſt themſelves: allotting to the Venetians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponneſus, and moſt of the Iſlands; to Boniface Marqueſs of Montſerrat the Kingdom of Theſſaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and, finally, to Baldwin Earl of Flanders the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperour. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bithynia in the Leſſer Aſia, by Theodorus Laſcaris, Son-in-law to Alexius the Uſurper, continued there till the regaining of Conſtantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years poſſeſſed by the Weſtern Chriſtians.

Emperours of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, firſt Emperour of the Latines reigning in Conſtantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and ſent Priſoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulſed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conquerour.

1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngeſt Son to Lewis the Groſs of France, and Husband of Yoland the Daughter of Henry, ſucceeded in the Empire after his deceaſe. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had beſieged in Dyrrhachium: but of an Enemy being perſuaded to become his Gueſt, was there murthered by him.

1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having ſeen the miſerable uſage of his beautiful Empreſs, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had moſt deſpitefully mangled, cutting off both her Noſe and Ears, died of Heart's grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his Melancholy had carried him to conſult the Pope in his Affairs.

1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Brenne, the titular King of Hieruſalem, ſucceeded in his Father's Throne: which having held for the ſpace of 33 years, he was forced to leave; the City of Conſtantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to ſue in vain for Succours to the French, Venetians, and other Princes of the Weſt. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King, in right of Catharine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did ſometimes pleaſe themſelves with the Title of Emperours of Conſtantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or poſſeſſion there.

The Empire reſtored unto the GREEKS.

1260 70. Michael VIII. ſurnamed Palæologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperours, Emperour of the Greeks in the City of Nice, moſt fortunately recovered Conſtantinople; the Town being taken by a party of 50 men ſecretly put into it by ſome Countrey-Labourers under the Ruines of a Mine. Preſent in perſon at the Council of Lions, at the perſuaſion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Chriſtian Burial.

1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled againſt him.

1328 72. Andronicus III. firſt Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards ſole Emperour.

1341 73. John Palæologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whoſe Minority Cantacuzenus his Protectour uſurped the Empire, and held it ſometimes from him, and ſometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monaſtery, leaving the Empire unto John, during whoſe Reign the Turks firſt planted themſelves in Europe.

1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Palæologus.

1387 75. Emanuel Palæologus, the Son of the ſaid John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whoſe time Bajazet the ſixth King of the Turks did beſiege Conſtantinople; but found ſuch notable Reſiſtence, that he could not force it.

1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.

1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Palæologus, in perſon at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches, in hope thereby to get ſome Aid from the Weſtern Chriſtians; but it would not be.

1444 78. Conſtantinus Palæologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whoſe time the famous City of Conſtantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great 1452, the miſerable Emperour, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Souldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may obſerve ſome fatal Contrarieties in one and the ſame Name. As firſt, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the firſt

Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the Father of Perſeus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the firſt, and Baldwin the laſt Emperour of the Latines in Conſtantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Conſtantine, the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch; and was loſt by a Conſtantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch alſo. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecy, that as it was wone by a Mahomet, ſo ſhall it be loſt by a Mahomet. So Auguſtus was the firſt eſtabliſhed Emperour of Rome, and Auguſtulus the laſt: Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes, the Reſtorer; and Darius, the Son of Arſamis, the Overthrower of the Perſian Monarchie. A like note I ſhall hereafter tell you of Hieruſalem. In the mean time I will preſent you with a fatal Obſervation of the letter H, as I find it thus verſed in Albion's England.

Not ſuperſtitiouſly I ſpeak, but H this letter ſtill
Hath been obſerved ominous to England's Good or Ill.
Firſt Hercules, Heſione and Helen were the cauſe of War to Troy, Æneas Seed becoming ſo Outlaws.
Humber the Hun with forein Arms did firſt the Brutes invade:
Helen to Rome's Imperial Throne the Britiſh Crown convey'd.
Hengiſt and Horſus firſt did plant the Saxons in this Iſle:
Hungar and Hubba firſt brought Danes, that ſwayed here long while.
At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie-Cnute the Dane.
Henries the firſt and ſecond did reſtore the Engliſh Reign.
Fourth Henry firſt for Lancaſter did Englands Crown obtain.
Seventh Henry jarring Lancaſter and York unites in Peace.
Henry the eight did happily Rome's Irreligion ceaſe.

A ſtrange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were uſhered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire ſince the Diviſion of it into the Eaſt and Weſt, I could never yet learn. That they were exceeding great may appear by three circumſtances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Emperour Baſilius had in his Treaſury 200000 Talents of Gold, beſides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Moneys. 2. Lipſius relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his diſcourſe of Europe ſaith, that the Cuſtome due to the Emperours out of the Victuals and Merchandize ſold at Conſtantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Conſtantinople there was found an invaluable maſs of Gold, Silver, Plate and Jewels, beſides that which was hid in the Earth. For ſo the covetous Citizens choſe rather to employ their Wealth, then afford any part of it to the Emperour, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Souldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Croſs Sol between four Greek Beta's of the ſecond: the four Beta's ſignifying (as Bodin ſaith) Βασιλεὺς, Βασιλέων, Βασιλεύων, Βασιλεῦσι.

It may perchance be expected that we ſhould here make an additional Catalogue of thoſe Turkiſh Emperours who have reigned in Conſtantinople ſince the taking of it; and, being they are poſſeſſed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we ſhould here alſo ſpeak of the Turks themſelves, their Cuſtoms, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the diſcourſe of thoſe things we intend to reſerve for Turcomania, a Province of Aſia, from whence they made their firſt Inundation into Perſia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now ſubject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninſula called anciently Taurica Cherſoneſus (now part of Tartaria Precopenſis) be within the Bounds of Europe alſo; yet we will defer the deſcription and ſtory of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars, and will here conclude our Diſcourſe of Europe, and prepare for Aſia.

And ſo much for GREECE, the laſt of the Provinces of EUROPE.

COSMOGRAPHY, The Third Book,

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY & HISTORY OF THE
LESSER and GREATER ASIA,
AND ALL
The Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Iſles, thereof.

Of ASIA.

A*SIA* is bounded on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean, and Ægean Seas, the Helleſpont, Propontis, Thracian Boſphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Mæotis, the Rivers Tanais and Duina, a line being drawn from the firſt of the two ſaid Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the Eaſt, the Straights of Anian (if ſuch there be;) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which ſeparated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian Sea, waſhing the ſhores of Anatolia; and the main Southern Ocean, paſſing along the Indian, Perſian, and Arabian Coaſts: and finally, on the South-weſt, the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk Environed on all ſides with the Sea, or ſome Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Iſthmus in the South-weſt, which joyns it to Africk, and the ſpace of ground (whatſoever it be) betwixt Duina, and Tanais, on the North-weſt, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as ſome will have it from Aſia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Iapetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: as others ſay, from Aſius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country firſt, afterwards all Anatolia, or Aſia minor, and finally, the whole Continent, had the name of Aſia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Aſius the Philoſopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country firſt, and after the whole Continent did receive this name: But theſe Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Punick or Phœnician Language) will have it called ſo from Aſia, a Phœnician word, ſignifying Medium, or the middle; becauſe Anatolia, or the Leſſer Aſia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater alſo, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt ſome parts of Europe and Africa. And ſo far the Conjecture doth find countenance from ſome ancient Writers, that Aſia is ſaid by Pliny to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medium noſtris æquoribus excipi, to be embraced in the middle of the two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean,) and finally, by Euſtathius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Leſſer Aſia) μέσην ἀμφοῖν ἔχειν διάθεσιν, to have a middle ſituation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds ſoever it be called by the Greeks, and Latines, it is otherwiſe, and with better reaſon called in holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole Poſterity of Sem had their ſeats and dwellings, if the obſervation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is ſituate Eaſt and Weſt, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude; and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Æquator; ſome only of the Iſlands lying on the South of that Circle: ſo that the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only: but in the moſt Northern parts hereof, for almoſt four whole months together no night at all. And for a meaſurement by miles, it ſtretches in length 5200 and in bredth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in eſpecial honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his firſt making in this part of the world; 2ly. Becauſe in this part of it ſtood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the firſt place of his habitation; 3ly. Becauſe here flouriſhed the four firſt great Monarchies of the Aſſyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Perſians; 4ly. Becauſe it was the Scene of almoſt all the memorable actions, which are recorded by the Pen-men of the Scriptures; 5ly. Becauſe that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought he moſt divine Miracles, and here accompliſhed the great Work of our Redemption; 6ly. And finally. Becauſe from hence all Nations of the World had their firſt beginning, on the diſperſion which was made by the Sons of Noah, after there vain attempt of Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of thoſe we are to ſpeak in their ſeveral places) are 1 Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, paſſeth directly Eaſtwards to the Indian Ocean, and reckoning in its ſeveral windings and turnings, with its ſpurs and branches every way, is ſaid to be 6250 miles long, and 357 miles broad. This Mountain, or rather ridge of hills, divideth the Greater Aſia, as the Æquator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three difficult paſſages from the one to the other; the firſt out of the reſt of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pylæ Ciliciæ; the ſecond out of Scythia, or Tartary, into Turcomania, called Caucaſiæ Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Perſia, called Portæ Caſpiæ. Of which, and of the whole courſe of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2 Imaus, which beginning near the ſhores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South; dividing the Greater Aſia (as the Meridian doth the World) into Eaſt and Weſt, and croſſing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latines, then Imaus only; and by that name divideth Scythia, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay; by ſome Writers, Belgion. And on the South-ſide of that Mountain is known in Ptolomy by the name of Bitigo, extending from Mount Caucaſus, or ſome other branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean: ſuppoſed by ſome to be Mount Sephar, mentioned Gen. 10. 30. of which we ſhall ſay more alſo when we come into India.

The eſtate of Chriſtianity in this vaſt Continent is in ill condition, diſcountenanced and oppreſſed, though not quite extinguiſhed. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mahometans or Pagans, the moſt that can be hoped for of the Chriſtian Faith, is a toleration or connivence; and that not found but with an intermixture of ſuch afflictions as commonly attend diſcountenanced and diſgraced Religions. Yet is not Chriſtianity ſo over-powered either by Mahometaniſm, or Paganiſm, but that in Aſia the Leſſer, Syria, Paleſtine, and Armenia, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Goſpel, under their ſeveral Patriarchs and Metropolitans: differing in ſome few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correſpondency nor Communion. Nor want there many Chriſtian Churches in the Empire of Perſia, nor in thoſe of Tartary, China, and the Indies, anciently planted in thoſe Countries; beſides the late increaſe thereof in the Eaſtern Iſlands by the diligent preaching of the Jeſuites, and ſome late Factories there ſettled by the Engliſh and Hollanders: of all which I ſhall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whoſe Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Euphrates, this Continent contained only three Dioceſes, or Juridical Circuits; that is to ſay, the Dioceſe of Pontus, Aſia properly ſo called, and the Oriental: which with the Dioceſes of Thrace and Egypt, were under the Command of the Præfectus Prætorii Orientis; the greateſt Officer of power and juriſdiction, next to the Emperours themſelves, in the Roman Monarchy. And theſe three Dioceſes contained in them to the number of thirty ſeven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia. 2 Helenopontus. 3 Pontus Polemoniacus. 4 Galatia prima. 5 Galatia Salutaris. 6 Honorius. 7 Paphlagonia. 8 Cappadocia prima. 9 Cappadocia ſecunda. 10 Armenia prima, and 11 Armenia ſecunda, contained in the Dioceſe of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius or Lieutenant thereof. II. The Provinces of Pamphylia. 2 Lycia. 3 Caria. 4 Pyſidia. 5 Lycaonia. 6 Lydia. 7 Phrygia Pacatiana. 8 Phrygia Salutaris. 9 Aſia ſpecially ſo called. 10 Helleſpont, and 11 the Iſles of Anatolia, making up the Dioceſe of Aſia: whereof the three laſt were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconſul of Aſia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Iſauria. 2. Cilicia prima. 3 Cilicia ſecunda. 4 Cyprus. 5 Phœnices. 6 Phœnices Libani. 7 Syria 8 Syria Salutaris. 9 Paleſtina prima. 10 Paleſtina ſecunda. 11 Paleſtina Salutaris. 12 Euphratenſis. 13 Oſroene. 14 Meſopotamia, and 15 Arabia, conſtituting the Dioceſe of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The reſt of Aſia ſubject unto the Parthian or Perſian Kings, beſides thoſe of India (and of many Regions and Countries not then diſcovered) was never conquered by the Romans; and therefore not within the compaſs of this diſtribution.

At this time Aſia ſtands divided amongſt ſix great Monarchs; that is to ſay, the Turk, commanding all thoſe parts and Provinces, which anciently belonged to the Roman Empire. 2ly. The Perſian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, poſſeſſed by the Perſian Kings in the time of Alexander the Great, or the Aſacidæ or Parthians in the times of the Romans. 3ly. The Great Cham of Tartary, commanding over all the North parts of Aſia, anciently known by the name of Scythia. 4ly. The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5ly. The King of Barma, whoſe Dominion comprehends all or the greateſt part of India beyond the River Ganges. And 6ly. The Great Magor, whoſe Empire is extended over all India on this ſide of that River. And ſome there be who in the deſcriptions of this great Country, follow this diviſion. But for our parts, for the better underſtanding of the Greek and the Roman Stories, and the eſtate of the Aſſyrian, Babilonian and Perſian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do ſo much relate; we ſhall conſider it as divided into the Regions of 1 Anatolia, or Aſia Minor. 2 Cyprus. 3 Syria. 4 Paleſtine. 5 Arabia. 6 Chaldea. 7 Aſſyria. 8 Meſopotamia. 9 Turcomania. 10 Media. 11 Perſia. 12 Tartaria. 13 China. 14 India; And 15 The Oriental Iſlands.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Aſia; on the Weſt, with the Thracian Boſphorus, Propontis, Helleſpont, and the Ægean Sea, by which parted from Europe; on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called alſo the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore; and on the South, by the Rhodian, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, ſeveral parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is a demy-Iſland, or Peninſula, environed on all ſides with waters, excepting a ſmall Iſthmus or neck of Land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joyned to the reſt of Aſia.

It was anciently called Aſia Minor, to difference it from the reſidue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, from the more Eaſtward ſituation of it, in reſpect of Greece; and now Natolia by the Turks, with little deviation from the former name. But here is to be obſerved, that as this Leſſer Aſia was a part of the greater; and the Dioceſe of Aſia, a part of Aſia the Leſs: ſo was Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, but a part only of the Aſian Dioceſe; the Lydian Aſia, a part of Aſia properly ſo called; and the Proconſular Aſia, but a part of that. The limits of Aſia the Leſs, and the ſeveral Provinces contained in the Aſian Dioceſe, have been ſhewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, it containeth only the two Phrygias, both the Myſias, Æolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria, which falling unto the Romans, by the laſt Will and Teſtament of Attalus, the laſt King of Pergamus, were by them made into one Province, and called Aſia, after the name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the earneſt penny, to make ſure the reſt. So witneſſeth Strabo, where he ſaith, Ῥωμαῖοι ἐπαρχίαν ἀπέδειξαν τὴν χώραν Ἀσίαν προσαγορεύσαντες, ὁμώνυμον τῇ ἠπείρῳ, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Aſia, that contained only ſo much of the Roman or proper Aſia, as anciently did belong to Lydia; that is to ſay, Lydia it ſelf, together with Æolis, and Ionia, and ſome parts of the Greater Myſia adjoyning to it. Which as it had originally the name of Aſia, from Aſia a chief City of it near the foot of Mount Tmolus, which both Suidas, and the Great Etymologiſt have taken notice of, before that name became to be communicated to the greater Continent: ſo it retained that name to it ſelf in ſeveral, diſtinct both from the Greater and the Leſſer Aſia; as alſo from the Aſia propria of Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers. And of this Aſia only it is, which the Scriptures ſpeak; both in the Book of the Acts, and the Revelation: the ſeven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Aſia, and the paſſages in the other concerning Aſia, not to be underſtood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is ſaid Acts 16. that when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the Word in Aſia; after they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: moſt clear it is, that neither Galatia, nor Bithynia, though Regions of the Leſſer Aſia; nor Phrygia, Myſia, or Troas all Regions of the proper Aſia, were any part of that Aſia which the Scripture ſpeaks of. So alſo where it is affirmed, that upon St. Pauls preaching and diſputing for two years in Epheſus, all they which dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord, Acts 19 10. it is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Aſia, whereof Epheſus at that time was the principal City. So alſo Acts 19. 22, 26, 31. and Chap. 20. 18. Finally, for the Proconſular Aſia, which together with Helleſpont and the Iſles, made up a government apart, exempt from the command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Aſian Dioceſe, it contained only Æolis, and Ionia, with the South part of Lydia, or the Countries lying about Epheſus. So witneſſeth St. Hierom from the Chriſtian Writers, where he affirms, that although all the whole Peninſula have the name of the Leſſer Aſia, Specialiter ubi Epheſus Civitas eſt, Aſia Vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoyning unto Epheſus have the name of Aſia. And this appeareth by the diſtribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, diſtinct from the Proconſular Aſia, which we now inſiſt on.

So haveing cleared our way in regard of the name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the notion in the largeſt latitude, extending from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 51 to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, being eſtimated at 630 miles; the breadth from Sinus Iſſicus in Cilicia, to the City of Trabezond, at 210. As for the ſituation of it, in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, it lyeth almoſt in the ſame poſition with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime, to the middle Parallel of the ſixt: So that the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen hours and a half; and one hour longer in thoſe parts which lie moſt towards the North.

The temperature of the air is exceeding ſound, and the ſoil generally exceeding fruitful, abounding in moſt excellent paſtures, which breed a notable race of Horſes, of very good ſervice in the Wars, if backed with European Riders; it being a by-word amongſt the Turks, that the Horſes of Aſia, and the Horſemen of Europe are of greateſt action. It was anciently very plentiful of all fruits, both for uſe and pleaſure, as ſtill it would be, were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous, and repleniſhed with goodly Cities, now in a manner waſte and deſolate, lamenting the diſtruction of 400 Towns: ſome of them deſtroyed by Earthquakes, (the falling ſickneſs of moſt great Cities in the Eaſt) but moſt by War, and have little now to boaſt of but the commodiouſneſs of the Havens, which are very many; though moſt of them but meanly traded, as in a Country ill manured, and of little Manufactures.

The people anciently, eſpecially thoſe of Greek original, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and induſtrious: the reſt, eſpecially the Lydians, and thoſe of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleaſures. All of them at this time affected with the ſame diſeaſe; inſomuch that the Turks, (unleſs compelled thereunto by extreme neceſſities) never inrol their Children in the number of Janizaries. The greateſt part of them generally profeſs the Chriſtian Faith; but overpowered by Mahometaniſm, which is here moſt prevalent: all followers of the Church of Greece, and ſubject all (except thoſe of Iſauria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And as they are of the Communion of that Church, ſo they retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not ſo well underſtood amongſt them as in former times, when it was more generally ſpoken there than it is at the preſent; now over-topped in moſt places by the Turkiſh and Sclavonian Tongues. And though in former times, by reaſon of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country, the Conqueſt of it by Alexander the Great, and the ſubjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon Race, that Language became generally underſtood amongſt them; inſomuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. The Dorick, the Ionian, and the Æolick, were ſpoken here: yet did it never ſo prevail, as to become the Vulgar Language of the people, or to extinguiſh any of the Vulgar Tongues. For it is ſaid of Mithridates King of Pontus, that he underſtood two and twenty Languages, without any Interpreter; which were no other than the Languages of ſo many Nations ſubject to himſelf, whoſe Dominion was contained for the moſt part within Aſia Minor.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Leſſer Phrygia, Olympus in Myſia, Tmolus in Lydia, Amanus in Cilicia, and finally Antetaurus, and Scordiſcus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the moſt part, flow the chief Rivers hereof, that is to ſay, 1 Iris, (now Caſilmach.) 2 Thermodon. 3 Hallis (now Ottomangruch.) 4 Parthenius (now Dilop.) 5 Sangarius (now Sangry.)

All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6 Aſcanius. 7 Rhyndacus. 8 Æſapus, and 9 Granicus, paſſing into the Propontis. 10 Simocis. 11 Scamander, called alſo Xanthus, ending their ſhort courſe in the Helleſpont. 12 Caicus. 13 Hermus. 14 Cayſtrus. And 15 Meander, loſing themſelves in the Ægean. 16 Calbis. 17 Xanthus, called alſo Lycus. 18 Limicus. 19 Cataractes, diſchanelling into the Mediterranean; and 20 Melas, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of moſt which we ſhall ſpeak more particularly in their ſeveral places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Dioceſe of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Aſian Dioceſe intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia, together with the Provinces of Iſauria and Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſe of the Eaſt. But becauſe the names of many of thoſe Provinces were of new invention, and ſome of them of as ſhort continuance, we will conſider it according as it ſtood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any conqueſts in it, into the Provinces of: Bithynia. 2 Pontus. 3 Paphlagonia. 4 Galatia. 5 Cappadocia. 6 Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontick Dioceſe. 7 Phrygia Minor. 8 Phrygia Major. 9 Myſia the greater and the leſſer. 10 Aſia, ſpecially ſo called, comprehending Æolis and Ionia. 11 Lydia. 12 Caria 13 Lycia. 14 Lycaonia. 15 Piſidia. 16 Pamphylia. 17 The Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconſul of Aſia. 18 Iſauria. 19 Cilicia, parts of the Dioceſe of the Eaſt, as before was ſaid.

1 BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the Weſt, with part of the Euxine, the Thracian Boſphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Myſia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at laſt Bithynia, and that as ſome ſay from Bithynius, once a King hereof; more probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who paſſed over the Boſphorus, and ſubdued it, called therefore by ſome Writers Thracia Aſiatica. So witneſſeth the Poet Claudian, ſaying.

Thyni Thraces erant, quæ nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Juſtin the Hiſtorian it is called by the name of Metapontus, by reaſon of its neighbourhood to the Euxine, and the Pontick Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in thoſe parts hereof which lie next the Boſphorus, oppoſite to Conſtantinople, ſo plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleaſant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Chriſtians, that it was thought not to be inferiour to the ſo much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all thoſe former beauties by the careleſsneſs of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor ſumptuoſity, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers hereof are Phillis. 2 Sangarius, now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this laſt ariſing from Mount Dindymus, in the furtheſt parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3 Aſcanius, which riſing alſo in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Aſcanius; Which with a Lake in the ſame Country, called Lacus Aſcanius, doth plainly manifeſt, that the Bithynians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and grand-ſon of Japhet.

The Principal Towns hereof are 1 Scutari, over againſt the Haven of Conſtantinople, called anciently Chryſopolis, for that there the Perſians received their tribute from the other Cities of all theſe parts of Aſia Minor. An ample Town, well garriſoned within, and ſurrounded round about with moſt pleaſant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, ſerving both for a Fort and Watch-tower; and being furniſhed for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2 Chalcedon, on the ſame ſhore alſo, a Colony of the Megarenſes, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and chooſing the leſs convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Conſtantine the Great reſolve upon the ſame place alſo for his Regal City; but changed his reſolutions on a kind of miracle: it being obſerved, that when his workmen began to draw the Platform, ſome Eagles conveyed a way their Lines to the other ſide of the Boſphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there aſſembled by command of the Emperour Martianus, for repreſſing the Hereſie of Neſtorius; in which were 530 Biſhops: now ſo decayed, that it can only ſhew ſome few of the ruines of it; Scutari being riſen on the fall thereof. 3 Nicomedia, ſo called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the Son of Zipes, and Grandchild to that Bithynian King, who ſo valiantly defended his own and his Countries liberty againſt Calantus, one of Great Alexanders Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an hill, environed with a pleaſant and delightful plain, honoured with the ſeat and reſidence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the Eaſt, before the building of Conſtantinople; on that occaſion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, eſpecially in the perſecution under Diocleſian. In thoſe times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithſtanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiouſneſs of the freſh ſprings which are thereabouts. 4 Libuſſa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Aſcanius; memorable for the death and ſepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made priſoner to the Romans, when Pruſius King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himſelf by poyſon. 5 Pruſa, founded by another Pruſius, whoſe name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as moſt in Aſia: honoured for a long time with the reſidence of the Turkiſh Kings, till the removal of their ſeat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the firſt; and ſtill ennobled with the ſepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperours themſelves. By the Turks called Burſa. 6 Nicæ or Nicæa, by the Turks called Neichia, but moſt commonly Iſnichs, ſituate near the Fens of the River Aſcanius, occaſioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by ſome affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. Firſt named Antigonia, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicæa, by the name of Nica, Wife unto Lyſimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which laſt had the happineſs to ſurvive the overthrow of the former, and was the longeſt liver of thoſe Great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Story, for the firſt General Council there holden, by the appointment of Conſtantine the Great, Anno 314. for ſettling the peace of the Church, then miſerably diſtracted by the Arian Hereſie. The number of Biſhops there aſſembled, no more than 318. yet of ſuch high eſteem for Learning and Piety, that never Council hath been held in ſo great an honour. Here was alſo held the Council by the Empreſs Irene, for eſtabliſhing the veneration of Images; that paſſing by the name of the Nicene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongſt ignorant men. In which it was decreed by ſuch doubty Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly inſiſted on by a Legate of the Eaſtern Churches, that they ſhould be reverenced and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the bleſſed Trinity it ſelf. This City was alſo the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, and there continued till the expulſion of the Latines, under theſe

Emperours of the GREEKS reſiding at NICE.

A. Ch.
1200	1	Theodorus Laſcaris, Son in-law- to Alexius Angelus the Uſurper, upon the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latines, paſſed over into Aſia and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygias, both the Myſias, Lydia, Æolas, and Ionia.
1223	2	John, ſirnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Laſcaris, ſucceeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, moſt of the Iſles of the Ægean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it ſelf.
1256	3	Theodorus II. the ſon of Ducas.
1259	4	John II. the ſon of Theodore the ſecond, an Infant of about ſix years old, ſupplanted firſt, and after cruelly depoſed and deprived of ſight.
1259	5	Michael Palæologus, deſcended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, firſt took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his aſſociate in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate ſucceſſes, as well againſt the Latines, as ſome Greek Uſurpers in Theſſaly and Peloponneſus, eſpecially the taking of Conſtantinople, he deprived the young Emperour of his ſight, made himſelf ſole Emperour, and left it unto his poſterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual diſquiets, till the year 1452. when conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was ſaid. But this recovery of Conſtantinople was the loſs of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial ſeat, by Sultan Ottonar, Anno 1299. who preſently thereupon took on himſelf the ſtyle of King, from which before he had abſtained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia it ſelf, I look upon the Bithynian as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus ſpeak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of ſuch a King of theirs as Bithynius I find ſome mention in my Authors; and poſſibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni in this expedition, that being the name rather of this Nation, than his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flouriſhing of the Roman greatneſs, they began to reign here ſome few generations, before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: by which laſt, having other imployment, and lying out of the road towards Perſia, they were little troubled. Calantus, one of Alexanders Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquiſhed by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexanders greateſt Princes) who though he humbled them for the preſent, yet got he neither title nor poſſeſſion by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Pruſias, ſo ſhuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they ſtill preſerved their own eſtates. This Pruſias, when the Romans became ſo conſiderable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, pieced himſelf with them; and having aided them in their wars againſt Philip, and Antiochus both, and moſt unworthily promiſed to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for ſuccour) unto their Embaſſadours, made all ſure to this ſide. His ſon and ſucceſſour Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and reſtored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Feudatary, as did Nicomedes his next Succeſſor, ſirnamed Philometor: who dying without iſſue in the time of Auguſtus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing ſo till the diviſion of that Empire into the Eaſtern and Weſtern; when falling to the ſhare of the Conſtantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkiſh Tyrants, who do ſtill poſſeſs it.

2 PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Colchis, and Armenia; on the Weſt, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia, So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Aſia Minor, from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of anſwerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoyning, à Ponto regione illi adjacente ita appellari, as Ortelius hath it, called from hence Pontus by the Latines, the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occaſion, which we have ſpoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Maſters of it) into theſe four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus ſpecially ſo called, 2 Pontus Galaticus. 3 Polemoniacus, and 4 Pontus Cappadocius.

1 PONTUS, eſpecially ſo called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the Eaſt with the River Parthemius, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1 Claudiopolis, ſo called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour; as 2 Flaviopolis, in honour of Flavius Veſpacianus; and 3 Juliopolis, in honour of the Julian Family; all midland Towns. 4 Dioſpolis, on the Euxine Sea, ſo called from a Temple conſecrated to Jupiter, of great reſort. 5 Heraclea, a Colony of the Phocians, called for diſtinction ſake (there being many of that name) Heraclea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the ſeat or reſidence of a branch of the Imperial family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into theſe parts: the firſt fixing here his Royal reſidence, commanded over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other poſſeſſing himſelf of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regal or Imperial City. But theſe two Empires, though of the ſame date, were of different deſtinies: that of Heraclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours reſiding at Nice, and partly ſeized on by the Turks in the beginning and firſt fortunes of the Ottoman family; the other keeping up the Majeſty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461. when ſubdued by Mahomet the Great. 6 Phyllium, at the mouth or influx of the River Phylis, upon which it is ſeated. 7 Amaſtris, the fartheſt Town of this part towards the Eaſt, on the Sea-ſide alſo, once of great ſtrength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Synope, Amiſus, and other Towns, in the war againſt Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

2 Eaſtward of Pontus, ſpecially ſo called, or Metapontus, as Juſtin the Hiſtorian calls it, lyeth PONTUS GALATICUS, ſo named, becauſe added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were 1 Synope, pleaſantly ſeated on a long point or Promontory, ſhooting into the main, remarkable in ancient ſtory for the birth and ſepulture of Mithridates, before mentioned; and in the later times for being the chief ſeat of the Iſſendiars, a noble family of the Turks, who had taken it with the reſt of this Tract from the Comneni, and held it till the ſame year in which the Empire of Trabezond was ſubdued by Mahomet. Firſt built by the Mileſians, and continuing in a free eſtate, till taken by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdom. 2 Caſtamoña, the head City of the Principality of the Iſſendiars, before mentioned; preferred by them for ſtrength and conveniency of ſituation, before Heraclea, or Synope. 3 Themiſcyra, now called Favagoria, ſeated on a ſpacious plain near unto the Sea, and anciently giving name to the Province adjoyning. 4. Amaſia, the birthplace of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodorus, and of late times for being the reſidence of the eldeſt Sons of the Grand Signior, ſent hither as ſoon as circumciſed, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accompted now amongſt the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province: a midland town, as alſo is 5 Cabira, called afterward Dioſpolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates, more for the trick which Mithridates there put upon Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetouſneſs of the Romans, he ſaw no better way to ſave himſelf and the reſt of his forces after the defeat, than to ſcatter his treaſures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his enemies might ſlacken the purſuit to collect the ſpoils, and he preſerve himſel to another day; and ſo accordinly it proved. 6 Comana, to difference it from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in ſafety by the trick aforeſaid, and thence eſcaped unto Tigranes the Armenian King, with 2000 horſe.

3 Eaſtward of Pontus Galaticus lies POLEMONIACUS, ſo called by the Romans either from Polemonium a chief town of this tract, or from Polemo the laſt King hereof; after whoſe death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of moſt importance in it. 1 Polemonium on the Sea-ſide, ſpoken of before. 2 Hermanaſſa, a Sea-town alſo. More in the land, 3 Neo-Cæſarea (now Nixaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it ſelf. 4 Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis; by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Helenopontus. 5 Sebaſtia, ſo called in honour of Auguſtus, whom the Greeks called Sebaſtos, a place of great ſtrength, and one of the firſt Towns in the Leſſer Aſia, which held out againſt Tamerlane: in revenge whereof, when he had took it, he cauſed 12000 men, women, and children, to be moſt cruelly buried alive in ſome hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpoſe. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where alſo Tamerlane with an Army of 800000 of his Tartars, encountred with Bajazet the Turk, coming to the relief of Sebaſtia, with an Army of 500000 fighting men. The iſſue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having loſt 200000 of his ſouldiers, was himſelf taken priſoner, and carried by the inſolent Conquerour in an iron cage, againſt the bars whereof he beat out his brains. 6 Barbiniſſa. 7 Megaloſſus. 8 Gozalvia, &c. not much obſervable in ſtory.

In this part of Pontus is the riſe and fall of the River Thermodon, on the banks whereof the Amazons, a ſort of warlick women, are ſaid to dwell; ſo called either quaſi ἀμάζαις, becauſe they uſed to cut off their right papps, that they might not be an impediment to their ſhooting; or from α and μάζα ſine pane, becauſe they uſed not to eat bread; or from ἅμαζῆν, becauſe the uſed to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their husbands to theſe parts, about the time of the Scythians firſt irruptions into Aſia, in the time of Seſoſtris King of Ægypt. The leaders of this people into Cappadocia were Plinos and Scolpythus, two young men of a great houſe, whom a contrary faction had baniſhed. They held a great hand over the Themiſcyrii, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At laſt they were by treachery all murdered: But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood, and extremity of grief and fear producing its uſual effect, deſperateneſs, they ſet upon the Conquerours under the conduct of Lampedo and Marpeſia; and not only overthrew them, but alſo infinitely inlarged their Dominions, and for ſome time continued in great reputation: the names of whom, or of ſo many of them at leaſt as occur in ſtory, we ſhall here ſubjoyn.

The Amazon Queens.

1 { Lampedo, Marpeſia, } Firſt Queens of the Amazons in theſe parts.

2 Ortara.

3 Antiopa, whoſe ſiſters Hippolite and Menalippe, challenged Hercules and Theſeus to ſingle combate, and were at laſt hardly vanquiſhed, to their eternal credits.

4 Pentheſilea, who came with a troop of brave Viragos, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy: ſhe invented the Battel-Axe, and was at laſt ſlain by Pyrrhus, ſon to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thaleſtris, who came to Alexander, being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him that ſhe came to be his bedfellow; which done, ſhe returned: and at laſt by little and little this femal Nation was extinct. They uſed in matters of copulation to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year; if they brought forth Males, they ſent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them, and trained them up in all diſcipline of war and courage. Of theſe more elſewhere.

4 The moſt Eaſtern part of Pontus, called CAPPADOCIUS, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniacus to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmoſt boundaries of this Country. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1 Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2 Ceraſus, by Conſtantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought firſt to Rome, An V.C. 680. called therefore Ceraſa by the Latines; brought firſt into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his war with Mithridates, no leſs deſerving for that ſervice to be made a God (as wittily Tertulian ſcoffs it) than Bacchus was for his tranſplanting of the Vine from the Eaſtern Countries. 3 Iſcopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And ſo is alſo, 4 Trapezus, now Trabezond, the Imperial City of the Comneni here reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and theſe parts of Pontus. An Empire founded firſt by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his ſon Emanuel) who at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern Chriſtians, fled into theſe parts, which willingly ſubmitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his poſterity flouriſhed in great proſperity, preſerving the Majeſty of the Empire in a better meaſure, than the Conſtantinopolitans themſelves, till the time of David the laſt Emperour; in whoſe reign the City of Trabezond, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great;

the poor Emperour led priſoner unto Greece, and there cruelly murdered. A famous Empory, and ſpecially for the trade of fiſh, caught by the people on the ſhores of the Euxine Sea; here ſalted, and from hence tranſported in great quantities to Conſtantinople, Caffa, and other places. And for the better help herein, it is ſaid that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black ſtone, which being beaten in a Mortar ſerves inſtead of ſalt, wherewith they ſeaſon the fiſh which they ſend abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the reſidence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Grecian Emperour, for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine againſt the Perſians; and now the Station of ſuch Gallies as are maintained by the Grand Seigneur, to ſcoure the coaſts of the Black ſea, and ſecure their trade. More in the land ſtand 5 Zephiriam. 6 Aza. 7 Cocalia. 8 Cordyle, and many others named in Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were called LEUCOSTRI, or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings deſcended from the Royal houſe of Achemenes King of Perſia. The firſt of them called Mithridates, one of the ſeven Competitors for the Perſian Kingdom, on the death of Cambyſes. But that honour falling on Darius (of which more hereafter) he ſeated himſelf in theſe remote parts of Aſia Minor; the Anceſtor of many great and puiſſant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own name, Regum Orientis poſt Alexandrum Magnum Maximus, the moſt potent King of all the Eaſt ſince the time of Alexander the Great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war and counſel, and one who longer held it out againſt the Romans, than Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon, and Syria, had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part againſt Ariſtonicus; who would not conſent to the admiſſion of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the will of Attalus. Afterwards, conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Aſia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Citizens diſperſed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the Engliſh, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then reſident in England; and the Sicilians maſſacred all the French, inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He diſpoſſeſſed Nicomedes, ſon to Pruſias, King of Bithynia; Ariobarzanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philumones, King of Paphlagonia, of their eſtates; becauſe they perſiſted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebel, poſſeſſed himſelf of Athens, and divers places of importance in Greece, Thrace, and Aſia; and allured all the Iſles, except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally, having diſturbed their victories, and much ſhaken their eſtate, for the ſpace of 40 years, he was with much ado vanquiſhed by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greateſt Souldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puiſſance ſo much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of his ſon Pharnaces, againſt him; which he no ſooner heard, but he would have poyſoned himſelf: but having formerly ſo uſed his body to a kind of poyſon allayed, (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridate) that the venome could not work upon him, he ſlew himſelf. He is ſaid to have been an excellent Scholar, and to have ſpoken perfectly the Languages of 22 Nations; the Languages of ſo many Nations which were ſubject to him. But neither his learning nor his courage could preſerve him from thoſe common miſeries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatneſs. And ſo ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troubleſome to the Romans, but withal very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchis, Iberia, and both Armenia's: Inſomuch as it is truly ſaid by L. Flor. Totum penè Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his ruins he involved both the Eaſt, and North. But to proceed; after his death the Kingdom continued unto his poſterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, till the time of Nero: when Polemo the laſt King hereof dying without iſſue, it was cantoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; only that part of it which was called Polemoniacus, retaining the dignity of a Province, diſtinct and ſeparate. And ſo it remained till the reign of Conſtantine the great, who changing the names, leſſening the bounds, and increaſing the number of the Provinces, left only the Province of Pontus and Bithynia in the ſtate he found it. And for the reſt, he caſt it into two new Provinces, that towards the Eaſt, retaining the name, but not the bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cæſarea, Ceraſus, Comana Pontica, Palæmonium, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwards Juſtiniana; of which Neo-Cæſarea, was the Metropolis. That towards the Eaſt, ſeparated from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia, by the River Parthemius, he cauſed to be called Helenopontus, by the name of Helena his Mother: and thereunto aſſigned the Cities of Amaſia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Euchaita, Zela, Andrapus, Ægeum, Climachus, Sinope, Amiſus, and Leontopolis, But this diviſion held not long, both being united into one, and called Helenopontus, by Juſtinian; continuing after that a member of the Roman Empire, till the coming of David and Alexius Comneni from Conſtantinople; whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabezond, as before is ſaid. But their eſtates being overthrown, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now poſſeſs it.

The Arms of the Emperours of Trabezond, the greateſt Princes of theſe parts, till the Turks ſubdued them, were Or, an Eagle volant Gules.

3 PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Halys, by which parted form Cappadocia; on the Weſt, by the River Parthemius, which parteth it from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia; on the North, with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus which was named Galaticus; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, and Galatia. So called of Paphlago the ſon of Phineus, eſtated in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Country was but ſmall, and of little power, and conſequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of ſuch as were, were 1 Gangra, obſervable for a Council holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 339. commanly called Synodus Gangrenſis. 2 Conica, or Coniata, of ſo convenient a ſituation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was Maſter of this Country. 3 Pompeiopolis, raiſed out of the foundation of ſome leſſer town by Pompey the Great, and by him ſo named. 4 Germanopolis. 5 Xoana. 6 Andrapa, called afterwards Nova Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus.

This Province, though but ſmall in circuit, was heretofore the ſeat of four different Nations, viz. 1 The Tibareni, of whom it is ſaid that they never waged war on any enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand, of the time and place of their fight. 2 The Heptacometæ. 3 The Moſynæci, both which were a people ſo beaſtly and ſhameleſs, that they uſed to perform the work of generation in publick; not knowing that Multa ſunt honeſta factu, quæ ſunt turpia viſu. And 4 The Heneti, to whom the Venetians, as we have already ſaid, do owe their firſt original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themſelves from Philomenes, who aſſiſted Priamus King of Troy in his defence againſt the Greeks: in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philomenia. Applying themſelves unto the times, they were alwaies favourable to the ſtrongeſt, ſerving the Perſian, and ſubmitting to Alexander as he paſſed that way; and ſo maintained their eſtate without much moleſtation, till the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Leſſer Aſia, deprived Philomenes, then King hereof, and took the Kingdom to himſelf, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Reſtored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Country being very much waſted, and moſt of the Cities of it deſtroyed and deſolated in the courſe of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a diſtinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the Jews, diſperſed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Aſia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwiſe eſteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Ptolomy. Afterwards it was joyned to Pontus, by the Emperour Conſtantine; part of it after that, with ſome parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperour Theodoſius, and called Honorius, in honour of his ſon Honorius; whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus, properly ſo called, was made the Metropolis. But by Juſtinian the name of Honorius being aboliſhed, and that of Paphlagonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Prætor Juſtinianus: continuing under the command of the Conſtantinopolitans, till the taking of that City by the Latines. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabezond, till the conqueſt of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

4 GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Cappadocia; on the Weſt, with the River Sangarius, and ſome part of Pontus ſpecially ſo called, or Metapontus; on the North, with Paphlagonia, on the South, with Lycaonia. So called from the Galls, who having ranged over Greece, paſſed into Aſia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Myſia and the leſſer Phrygia, were at laſt confined to this Country. It was alſo called Gallo-Græcia, from that mixture of Galls and Grecians, who uniting into one body when they came for Aſia, were commonly called Gallo-Græci. By Suidas, Græco-Galli, and the Country ſutably Græco-Gallia. Which mixture of Grecians notwithſtanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preſerved their own Language, but in ſhort time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued ſo till S. Hieroms days, who telleth us in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Pauls Epiſtle to this People, that it was Similima Treverenſium, a language like to that of the Treveri, or people of Triers. A ſure and certain Argument of their firſt Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto voluptuouſneſs; and providently provided of the ſtone called the Amethyſt, which is ſaid to preſerve from drunkenneſs the man that weareth it. The name doth ſignifie as much, derived from α privativum, and μέθυτος, ebrius, which cometh from μέθυ, ſignifying wine.

The people had a cuſtome in their publick funerals, to caſt letters fairly written, into that laſt and fatal fire, wherein the dead body was to be burned; ſuppoſing that their friends ſhould read them in the other world. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: inſomuch that Athæneus telleth us of one Ariamnes, a rich Galatian, that he feaſted the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine, and other Proviſions, boyled in great Caldrons made for that purpoſe, and diſtributed amongſt them in Tents and Booths erected for that entertainment. A brave flaſh of vain-glorious hoſpitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and ſome others. The Towns of moſt conſideration in it were, 1 Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tectoſages, a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-ſtory for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, Anno 399. called Synodus Ancyrana, but of moſt note at the preſent for the making of Chamlets: now called Angauri. 2 Olenus. 3 Agrinama, Cities of the ſame people alſo. 4 Tavium, or Tanium, (for I find both names) the chief City of the Trocmi, or Trogmi, where was a brazen Statue of Jupiter, whoſe Temple there was a priviledged Sanctuary. 5 Androſia. 6 Phabarena, Cities of that Nation alſo. 7 Thermæ, a Roman Colony, ſo called of the hot Baths there; the chief City of the Toliboſti, as Ptolomy, or Toliſtobogi, as Strabo nameth them. 8 Talachbachora, belonging alſo to that people.

Beſides the Nations above-named, here dwelt alſo the Byceni and Proſeliminitæ; who had alſo their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Ptolomy, but of little or no obſervation in the courſe of ſtory. Of all which Nations, only the Tectoſages, were of Gallick Original; who with others of their Country-men under the conduct of Belgius and Brennus, having ranſacked Pannonea and Illyricum, fell at laſt into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waſte the Country, they were at laſt vanquiſhed and expulſed by Antigonus Gonatas. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lammorius, and Lutorius, they ferried over the Helleſpont, and ſubdued almoſt all Aſia Minor on this ſide the Taurus; employed there by thoſe petty Kings and States againſt one another: their reputation grown ſo great, that no Prince thought himſelf ſecure without their alliance, or able to make war without their aſſiſtance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto thoſe that hired them. But being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too ſevere in the exacting of their Tributes, they inforced Attalus King of Pergamus, by whoſe favour they had ſettled about the Helleſpont, to become their enemy. Vanquiſhed by him, they were conſtrained to contain themſelves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Gallo-Græcia. Here for a while they kept their ancient courage and eſtimation, moleſting many times their neighbours, and ſometimes ſetting themſelves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they loſt both courage and eſteem, and were Galls only in name, retaining little in them of their Anceſtors valour. For as moſt plants and trees loſe much of their vertue, being tranſplanted into another ſoil: ſo theſe men loſt their native courage, ſtrength, and hardines, being weakened by the Aſian pleaſures and delicates. And as Tully ſaith, for a man to be good in other places, is no maſtery; but in Aſia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praiſe-worthy: ſo might one have ſaid to the Galls, that to be couragious and patient of travel amongſt the mountains, tains, was no whit to be admired; but to have continued ſo amidſt the delights of Aſia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But theſe men were ſo far from aſſailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they loſt their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A war which Manlius undertook for no other cauſe, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus againſt the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein: but that of Chiomena the Kings Wife, who being raviſhed by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilſt he buſied himſelf in telling the money agreed on for her ranſom, to cut off his head, which ſhe preſented to her husband. But Manlius got little honour by his ſucceſs, not being welcomed with a triumph, at his coming home, according to the Roman cuſtom; becauſe he undertook the war of his own accord, without Commiſſion from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Feudataries. This hapned An. V. C. 564. After which time I find Deiotarus, by conſent of the Romans to reign here as King: who ſiding with Pompey in his war againſt Cæſar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his cauſe, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Auguſtus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Paulinus being the firſt Preſident or Governour of it: enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and ſome part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticus. Reduced to its firſt bounds by the Emperour Conſtantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodoſius, the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire, it was partly ſeized on by the Turks; not totally come into their hands, till the ſubverting of the Empire of Trabezond, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chianger.

5 CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Armenia Major, and ſome part of Armenia Minor; on the Weſt, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus Polemoniacus, and Cappadocius; and on the South, with Lycaonia, and the reſt of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and moſt kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Braſs, Iron, and Allom; affording alſo beſides a mean ſort of Alabaſter, good ſtore of Cryſtal, Jaſper, and the Onyx ſtone: But the greateſt wealth hereof is their breed of horſes, infinite almoſt in numbers, and fit for any ſervice they can be put to. And this is univerſal, in all parts of the Country, but not the other; there being ſome parts of it mountainous and very barren, eſpecially about the ſpurs and branches of the Antitaurus, which is a chain of hills thruſting out of the Taurus, and bending themſelves unto the North, upon the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is alſo in this Country the mountain Argæus, ſaid to be of ſo great an height, that from one of the ſummits or tops thereof, a man of perſpicuous eyes may diſcern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, ſo vicious and lewd of life, ſo monſtrouſly addicted to all kind of wickedneſs; that beſides the ſhare they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Τειὰ Καππὰ κάκιϛα, they had ſome proverbs to themſelves, Καππαδόκης: and Καππαδόκιον τέρας, that is to ſay, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monſter, being uſed proverbially, to ſignifie a man moſt extremely wicked. The words ſo uſed by Gregory Nazianzen, ſpeaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Eraſmus, two right learned Criticks, underſtand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Goſpel, Gregory that bloudy butcher of Alexandria, Auxentius, Aſterius, Euſtathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-Heretick Eunomius; being all of this Country. Yet ſuch is the influence of Chriſtianity, where once entertained, that this lewd diſpoſition of the Cappadocians was ſo corrected and reſtrained by it, that this Country afforded as many godly Prelates, and couragious Martyrs, as any other whatſoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembred, who with Gregory Nyſſen, and St. Baſil, all learned and religious Biſhops, were all Cappadocians. And amongſt many Martyrs of great faith and conſtancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of ſouldiers under Diocleſian, more celebrated in the Churches both Eaſt and Weſt, than any other Saint in all the Calendar, the bleſſed Apoſtles and Evangeliſts excepted only, and for that reaſon made Patron of the Order of the Garter by King Edward the third. Finally, it is reported of theſe Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venemous alſo; inſomuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans bloud was a poiſon to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1 Halys, ſpoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original; the end of Crœſus Empire both in ſite and fate, the utmoſt bound of his dominions on that ſide: which purpoſing to paſs over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountred with, and vanquiſhed by Cyrus the great King of Perſia. 2 Iris, which ariſeth in this Country alſo, and paſſing thorough it, and a part of Pontus, diſchannelleth it ſelf, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperour Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, by him called Cæſarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Epiſcopal See of renouned St. Baſil. 2 Nyſſa, the See of Gregory, ſirnamed Nyſſenus, the brother of Baſil. 3 Nazianzum, the Epiſcopal See of another Gregory, ſirnamed Nazianzenus; three men, which as for the piety of their converſation they were not equalled in thoſe times: ſo for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing more inferiour to the moſt eminent of the ancient Grecians. 4 Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia ſecunda, after the ſubdiviſion of it by the Emperour Valens. 5 Archelais in the Præfecture of Garduacreta, ſo called from Archelaus a Cappadocian King, the founder or repairer of it. 6 Comana, for diſtinctions ſake called Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that name in Pontus; by Ptolomy placed, I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is alſo Nyſſa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple conſecrated to Bellona, whoſe Prieſts and other inferiour Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Prieſts received the Revenue of the Region next adjoyning to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the ſame kindred alſo. 7 Dio Cæſarea, called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8 Fauſtinopolis, ſo called in honour of Fauſtina, wife of the Emperour Antonius. 9 Andraca. 10 Phiara. 11 Salambria. 12 Campæ, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, with many others as obſcure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is 13 Erzirum, ſituate on the very confines of the Greater Armenia for that cauſe made the Rendezvouz, or place of meeting for the Turkiſh Souldiers when there is any expedition in hand againſt the Perſian; at which place alſo after the ending of the war for the preſent year, they are disbanded and ſent home to their ſeveral quarters. And 14 Pterium, not named in Ptolomy; but memorable for the great battel fought in ſight thereof, between Crœſus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Perſia; in which Crœſus having loſt the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the ſenſe which he expected) that Crœſus paſſing over the River Halys, ſhould overthrow a great eſtate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Perſians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Son of Gomer, hath been ſo fully proved already in our General Preface, that we ſhall not trouble our ſelves to repeat it here: Nor ſhall we need to ſay more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Capthorim out of Egypt from the reſt of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been ſaid. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: ſubjected by the Perſian, with the reſt of Aſia Minor, after the overthrow of Crœſus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Phrygians, Paphlagonians, Bithynians, Myſians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Atoſſa his Siſter, to Pharnaces a noble Perſian, who had ſaved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was hunting. A noble loyalty, and no leſs royally rewarded. From him deſcended Ariarathes King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great; continuing ſtedfaſt in his duty to the Crown of Perſia, when almoſt all the reſt of the Kings of Aſia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Perſia. But after his deceaſe, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, ſet upon him, vanquiſhed him, and moſt cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had eſcaped this ſlaughter, ſpying his time, when the Macedonians were at wars amongſt themſelves, recovered his eſtate again, and paſſed it over to his off-ſpring: continuing in his line, without any ſubjection, till the time of that Ariobarzanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Reſtored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Succeſſors, by their curteſie only: Continuing yet in ſtate of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the laſt King hereof; Who having angred Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life time of Auguſtus, as did others of the tributary States and Princes, was by him then poſſeſſed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting ſomewhat againſt the State. Where the old Prince, even ſpent with Age, the Gout, and ſome other Diſeaſes, had without queſtion been condemned by the ſervile Senate; but that one of the witneſſes depoſed, that he had ſaid, that if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius ſhould find, quales ſibi nervi eſſent, what a man he was. Which moved ſuch a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to ſit nor ſtand, that he was diſmiſſed; Tiberius thinking that he could not puniſh him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King conſtrued to the beſt, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly inlarged by the addition of the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and ſo it ſtood in the time of Ptolomy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniacus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided beſides thoſe into theſe eight Præfectures, that is to ſay, Clanianienſis, Sargaranſene, Gardiocreta, Cilicia, Tyanidis, Lycaonia, Antiochiana, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycaonia, and Antiochiana (he means Piſidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themſelves, by the Emperour Conſtantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cæſarea, as is ſaid before, was the Metropolitan; and ſo remained, till the Emperour Valens, a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpoſe to deſpight St. Baſil, who oppoſed that Hereſie, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia ſecunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eaſtern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trabezond; together with which it fell unto the hands of the Turks, by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now called Amaſia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his reſidence, and is ſaid to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000 Ducats.

6. ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which ſeparates it from Cilicia; on the Weſt, and North, with a long chain of Hills, called Mons Scordiſcus, by ſome called Mons Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reaſon of the name hereafter.

The Country of the ſame nature with Cappadocia, before deſcribed; in ſome parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates ſo incloſed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance: in others pleaſant and delightful, well watered with ſweet ſtreams, and ſome fair Rivers iſſuing out of the Mountains, the principal whereof is Melas, ſo called from the blackneſs of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into theſe four Regions, that is to ſay, Laviana, Aravena, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates, Mariana more within the land towards Cappadocia; each of which had their ſeveral Cities, whoſe names are to be found in Ptolomy. The principal 1 Melitene, the chief City of the Region ſo called, and the Metropolis of the leſſer Armenia, called afterwards Malaxia, and now Suur; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferiour to the beſt of Greece. The City ſaid by Onuphrius to be a Colony of the Romans, much ſpoken of by Euſebius, and other Writers of Eccleſiaſtical ſtory, for the piety of the Chriſtians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Perſecution. 2 Nicopolis, and 3 Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained againſt the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenias. 4 Garnace, a well-fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gorneas. 5 Cucuſun, and 6 Arabyſſus, memorable for the exile of St. Chryſoſtome, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, confined unto theſe places by the power and malice of the Empreſs Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxie in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incurſions and Colonies poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor: continuing part of their eſtate till the war of Mithridates againſt the Romans; who being diſcomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thouſand Horſe to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter. By whom at firſt neglected, and not ſuffered to come into his preſence; but afterwards on the apprehenſion of the common danger, more eſteemed and ſet by: inſomuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refuſal of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans, occaſioned Lucullus to bring his forces into theſe parts, ſubduing all before him to the banks of Euphrates. His Victories being ſeconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Auguſtus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other ſide of that River, though conquered alſo in that war, not being taken into the accompt of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Auguſtus, thinking it an high point of wiſdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond thoſe banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eaſtern Empire; when waſted by the Perſians, and ſubdued by the Turks; by whom called Genech, or as ſome ſay Pegia.

And ſo much of the Provinces of the Pontick Dioceſe, lying within Anatolia, or Aſia Minor; converted to the Chriſtian faith by the two great Apoſtles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appeareth by S. Paul's Epiſtle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers diſperſed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the ASIAN Dioceſe, and firſt to that part thereof which Ptolomy and others (for the reaſons ſpoken of before) call Aſia Propria. Anciently the moſt rich and flowriſhing part of all this Peninſula; and ſo affirmed to be by Tully, who telleth us that the tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly ſufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Aſia verò tam opima eſt & fertilis, ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine paſtionis, & multitudine earum rerum quæ exportentur, facilè omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Aſia (ſaith he) it is ſo fertile and ſo rich, that for the fruitfulneſs of the fields, variety of fruits, largeneſs of paſture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence, it very eaſily excelled all other Countries. The fortunes of the ſeveral Provinces we ſhall ſee anon. Brought under the command of the Perſians, they continued ſubject to that Crown, for ſome generations: but at laſt taken from them by the Grecians, under the proſperous enſigns of victorious Alexander. After whoſe deceaſe, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Aſia fell to the ſhare of Antigonus, whoſe ſon Demetrius ſeized on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Aſia to Seleucus Nicanor, King of Syria and the Eaſt, being alſo one of Alexanders heirs. The ſixth from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolomy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans, and otherwiſe practiſing againſt their eſtate, provoked the Senate of Rome to ſend Scipio (ſirnamed from his Aſian victories) Aſiaticus, againſt him; who compelled him to forſake Aſia, which the Romans preſently took into their poſſeſſions. But finding it agreeable to the preſent eſtate of their Affairs, (the Kingdom of Macedonia ſtanding in their way) to make further uſe of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former war, they gave unto Eumenes the Provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia, Myſia, Ionia, Lydia; Lycia and Caria to the Rhodians: knowing full well, that they could eaſily take them back again, when they ſaw occaſion. More hereof in the ſtory of the Kings of Pergamus, on the deceaſe of Attalus the laſt King thereof; theſe Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the accompt of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Myſia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygias for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionia, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will conſider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor. 2 Phrygia Major. 3 Myſia. 4 Æolis and Ionia, or Aſia more eſpecially ſo called. 5 Lydia, and 6 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Myſia, interpoſing betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia; on the Weſt, with the Helleſpont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as ſome ſay, from Phryxus, the ſon of Athamas King of Thebes, who flying from the treacherous ſnares of his Mother-in-law, did here ſeat himſelf. Minor was added to it to diſtinguiſh it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was alſo called Phrygia Helleſpontiaca, from its ſituation on that Streight: and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it; by which name it occurreth in the book of the Acts. It was called alſo Epictetus, but the reaſon of the name I find not, except it came from the Epicteti, a People dwelling on the Eaſt parts of Bithynia, and conſequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it, 1 Scamander, on whoſe Banks ſtood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Heſiod with the Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Country a little before they were to be married, uſed to bathe themſelves, and to ſay theſe words, Λάβε τὴν μου Σκάμανδρε παρθενίαν, that is to ſay, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River-god, and ſo deflowred Callirrhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another; occaſioning thereby the leaving off of this fooliſh cuſtome. It was alſo called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumque bibiſſent, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Ovid in his firſt Epiſtle uſeth Lyciam haſtam, (Sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam tepefecerat haſtam) to ſignifie a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2 Æſopus, parting this little Region from the Leſſer Myſia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Lectium, is the furtheſt point of it towards the South. 3 Simoeis, now called Simores, falling into the Helleſpont, not far from the Promontory called Rhæteum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax;) but riſing out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father expoſed to the fury of wild Beaſts) judged the controverſie of the golden Ball in favour of Venus; reſpecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wiſdom of Pallas, but tranſported with a ſenſual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Dardanum, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Æneas, 2 Aſſos, mentioned Acts 20. 13. by Pliny called Apollonia; who telleth us that the earth about it is of ſuch a nature, that it will conſume a dead body in forty days. 3 Trajanopolis, whoſe name declareth its founder. 4 Lyrneſſus, on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to the Iſle of Lesbos, deſtroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the very firſt beginnings of the Trojan war, who brought thence amongſt other captives the Lady Briſeis, reſerved by Achilles to himſelf for his part of the booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which cauſed ſuch a deep diſpleaſure in him, that he would not go into the field, till ſhe were reſtored.

5 Sigæum, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the ſame name. 6 Troy, ſituate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the Eaſt, called Ilium, and Pergamus for the reaſon to be ſhewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations deſire to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as ſome write) yet ſeen in the ruines, which with a kind of Majeſty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, conſiſting of a black hard ſtone cut four-ſquare; ſome remnants of the Turrets which ſtood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and Monuments of curious workmanſhip. But certainly theſe are not the ruines of that Ilium, which was deſtroyed by the Grecians, but 7 Troas, or New-Troy, built ſome four miles from the ſituation of the old by Lyſimachus, one of Alexanders Captains; who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who begun the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas only, and by that name mentioned, Acts 20. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruine only; but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry dayly the ſtones and Pillars of it to Conſtantinople, to adorn the houſes of the Baſſas. 7 Scamandria, a ſtrong piece, but of latter foundation, cunningly ſurpriſed by Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks, in the time of a funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this ſtory with you.

The KINGS of TROY.

A. M.

2487 1 Dardanus, ſon to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jaſius, fled into this Country, where be built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that verſe of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor.

Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race,
Dardanus the firſt founder was.

2518 2 Erichthonius, of whom little memorable. 75.

2593 3 Tros, the ſon of Erichthonius, who ſo much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troes. By ſupporting the unnatural malice of Saturn againſt his ſon Jupiter, he loſt his own ſon Ganymedes: who being taken priſoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Enſign, is by the Poets ſaid to have been ſnatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60

2653 4 Ilus, the ſon of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did withal ſo enlarge the City, and added ſo much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turrets of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Πύργοι, and ſometimes Πύργαμα, occaſioned the whole City to be called Pergamus. 54.

2707 5 Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (juſtly conceiving diſpleaſure againſt the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himſelf being ſlain the latter time. 36.

2743 6 Priamus, who re-edified Troy; but giving leave to his ſon Paris to raviſh Helena, wife to Menelaus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient quarrel: who, after a ten years ſiege, forced the Town, having loſt of their own men 860000. and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Aſſociates, A. M. 2783. ſo as that of Ovid was moſt true,

Jam ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit reſecandaque falce
Luxuriat Phrygio ſanguine pinguis humus.
Corn fit for ſithes now grows where Troy once ſtood,
And the ſoyl 's fatted with the Phrygian blood.

Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be conſidered. Firſt, whether the Grecians in theſe ten years lay continually before it; and it ſeems they did not: but that rather they did beat up and down, waſting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the firſt nine years; and in the tenth only laid a formal ſiege. This is the more probable, becauſe that in the tenth year of the war, Priam is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have ſat on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders: which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had ſo long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken: and here we find a difference. For ſome Hiſtorans tell us, that Æneas and Antenor, being either weary of the war, or diſcontented that it was not managed by their ſole advice, or otherwiſe corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Æneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-Horſe, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sinon, one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy gates; and that the people deſirous of that monument of the Enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on Hiſtory, it is thought by ſome, that over the Scæan Gate where the Greeks entred, was the portraicture of a large and ſtately Horſe: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engine, called an Horſe, as the Romans in after ages uſed a like Engine called a Ram. Neither of which is much improbable: but with me perſwade not the integrity of Antenor or Æneas, for whoſe ſakes the fable of the wooden Horſe was firſt invented.

The City being thus deſtroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Æneas and Antenor had forſaken it, began to think of ſome other place for their habitation, which having often ſhifted, they fixed at laſt by advice of an Oracle, ſome four miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and ſorry Village when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had, and a mean one too) offered up his own ſhield, and took down another, which he uſed after in his fights againſt the Perſians, honouring it with gifts, and promiſing the people to rebuild and inlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good was performed by Lyſimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at laſt Troas ſimply. A free City it continued till the war of Mithridates againſt the Romans; in the courſe whereof Fimbria a Roman Queſtor having ſeditiouſly ſlain the Conſul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himſelf Maſter of the Army, being refuſed entrance here as a Thief and a Rebel, beſieged the City, and in the ſpace of eleven daies took it. And when he boaſted that he had done as much in eleven days as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly anſwered, That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæſar, emulous of Alexanders attempts, and deſcended from Julius of Trojan race, reſtored them to their liberty, and inlarged their Territories: a Colony, and an Univerſity of the Romans of no mean eſteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbiſh, as before was ſaid.

In the diſtributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, this little Region, with that of Myſia Helleſpontiaca adjoyning to it, made up the Province called by the name of Helleſpontus, ſubject with Æolis, Ionia, and the Aſian Iſles, to the exempt Juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Following the fortunes of Conſtantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then ſubject to the Greek Emperours reſiding at Nice; conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzucian family. In the diviſion of whoſe Empire on the death of the ſecond Aladine, the whole Province of Helleſpont, with part of the greater Myſia and Æolis, adjoyning to them, and ſome part of Lydea, were ſeized upon by Caraſus, a man of great power amongſt the Turks, who here erected a ſmall Kingdom, called from him Caraſia, or Caraſi-illi; long ſince ſwallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, ſon of Ottaman, and the ſecond King of that houſe.

8. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Galatia; on the Weſt, with Myſia, interpoſed betwixt it and the Leſſer Phrygia; on the North, with Metapontus, or Pontus ſpecially ſo called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reaſons before laid down; the word Major being added for diſtinctions ſake, becauſe the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more ſuperſtitious than the other Aſians, as appeareth by the rites uſed in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and ſome other Goddeſſes: ſaid to be alſo the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the moſt part men of after-wits, and all for had I wiſt; whence the Proverb, Serò ſapiunt Phryges, applied to thoſe who wanted forcaſt, and knew better to lament misfortunes than to keep them off; and uſed not to bethink themſelves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightneſs of converſation; and for fear they ſhould not of themſelves be wanton enough, their very Muſick was ſo fitted as to diſpoſe them to laſciviouſneſs. Where by the way, I find three ſorts of Muſick ſpoken of amongſt the Ancients: the firſt, that which Ariſtotle calleth ἠθικὼν, becauſe it ſettled and compoſed the affections; and Boetius, the Lydian Muſick, becauſe much uſed by that people, before corrupted by long eaſe and ill example. It conſiſted principally of long notes or Spondees, ſuch as is that ſuppoſed to be which Eliſha called for, 1 Kings 3.15. to invite the ſpirit of propheſie to him; and was played by David before Saul; to drive a way the ill ſpirit from him. And of this ſort was the Church-Muſick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens paſſions, and raiſe their devotions, Ut per oblectamenta aurium (as St. Auguſtine hath it) aſſurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleaſure of the ears the paſſions might be calmed, and the ſoul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The ſecond ſort is that which Ariſtotle calleth διατονὸν, or Active, (as the other ἠθικὼν or moral) commending it before the other in the education of youth, becauſe more ſtirring them to action; conſiſting of Dactyles, or one long note, and two ſhort ones, by him and Boetius both called Dorian, as moſt peculiar to that people. The third and laſt by the Philoſopher called ἐνθουσιαστικὸν, or raviſhing, becauſe it unhingeth the affections, and ſtirreth men to laſcivious geſtures, and wanton thoughts; conſiſting of ſhort notes or Tribrachies. Boetius terms it Phrygian, as moſt in uſe amongſt this looſe and ungoverned Nation; ſuch as the French Muſick in our age. A ſort of Muſick forbidden to be uſed by Ariſtotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpoliſhed people, by reaſon of that influence which it had upon mens behaviours. Mutatâ Muſicâ (ſaith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaque ut Muſica quàm graviſſima & ſedatiſſima retineatur, that is to ſay, the change of Muſick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore is to be taken in the Common-wealth, that the Muſick be compoſed and grave, and ſuch only uſed. But ſee how this fidling humour hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Country very rich and pleaſant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marſyas. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof ſtandeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was ſo called from one Marſyas, who ſtriving with Apollo for preheminence in Muſick, was by him flead; which fact (ſay the Poets) was ſo lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordion, the ſeat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raiſed and choſen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tyed in ſuch a knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promiſed to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2 Midæum, the ſeat of Midas, ſon to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched ſhould be turned into gold; which Petition granted, he was almoſt ſtarved, his very victuals turned into Gold, till he had repealed his wiſh; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Aſſes ears. 3 Coloſſe, where dwelt the Coloſſians, to whom St. Paul writ one of his Epiſtles. 4 Peſinus, where the Goddeſs Cybele being worſhipped, was called Dea Peſinuncia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they ſhould be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddeſs into their poſſeſſion. Hereupon they ſend to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to pleaſe a potent neighbour, eſpecially the Romans, being their Country-men, as deſcended from Æneas and his Trojans, granted their requeſts, and the Goddeſs is ſhipp'd away for Rome. But behold the unluckineſs of fortune: The Ship, Goddeſs and all made a ſtand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forward by force or Art. It hapned that one of the Veſtal Virgins, named Claudia, being ſuſpected of unchaſtity, reſolved to put her ſelf upon this experiment: and faſtning her girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddeſs, that if ſhe were cauſeleſly ſuſpected, the ſhip might be ſuffered to go forward, which was no ſooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the ſhip up the water to Rome; where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it ſtands in the borders of Galatia, and is by ſome made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot placed in it alſo; but neither rightly. Not far off ſtood the Mountain Dindyme, overlooking the City, in which the Prieſts of Cybele had their uſual reſidence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, ſituate not far from the banks of Mæander, anciently a moſt flouriſhing Emporie, and the Metropolis of the whole Country, till Conſtantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana: making 6 Symada the Metropolis of the firſt. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Laodicea, two noted Cities in thoſe times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Juliopolis, and 10 Tiberiopolis, ſo called from the Emperour to whoſe honour dedicated. 11 Dorylæum, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern ſtories, are 1 Sagua, the habitation of Etrogul, Father of Ottoman the firſt King of the Turks. 2 Chara-chiſar, by the Grecians called, Melampyrgus, or the Black Tower, 3 Billexnga, 4 Einegiol, places of conſequence and importance, taken by the ſaid Ottoman from the Chriſtians, in the firſt riſe of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they deſcended (as was ſhewn before) from Gomer the eldeſt ſon of Japhet, and Askenaz, the eldeſt ſon of Gomer: of which, Gomer firſt placed himſelf in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleaſant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris (the poſterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preſerve his memory. And as for Askenaz, he firſt took up his dwelling in the Leſſer Phryga, and the banks of the Helleſpont; where was anciently a City and Territory called Aſcania, ſome Iſles adjoyning called Inſulæ Aſcaniæ, the name of Aſcanius alſo very frequent in Troy it ſelf. An ancient people they were doubtleſs, eſteemed the ancienteſt of the world by Pſamniticus King of Egypt, upon this experiment. Deſirous to inform himſelf to what Nation the priviledge of greateſt Antiquity did of right belong, he cauſed two children to be kept in a fold, where they were ſuckled by Goats; all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties to have recourſe to them. All the language which the children learned from their ſpeechleſs nurſes, was no more than Bec, which in the Phrygian language ſignifieth bread; and being of no ſignification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict on their ſide: But other Nations of the world not yielding to this ſentence, by a Writ of Errour, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impannell'd a new Jurie; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians ſide Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima. Where by the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like uſe of this experiment, to prove the High Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world; becauſe Becker in that language ſignifieth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Country reigned Niobe, who preferring her ſelf before Latina, the mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her children ſlain before her face by an unſeen means, and was her ſelf turned into a ſtone, as the Poets fable. Here alſo reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wiſdom to make uſe of it, is feigned to ſtand in Hell up to the chin in water; and that too under a tree whoſe fruit toucheth his lips: yet both the one and the other flie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid,

—————— Tibi Tantale nullæ
Deprenduntur aquæ; quæque imminet, effugit arbor.
In Engliſh thus,
Thou canſt not, Tantalus, thoſe waters taſte;
The tree juſt at thy lips, flies off as faſt.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made ſubject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the conqueſt of Lydia by the Perſians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the ſtronger by the acceſſion of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battel of Ipſus, to Seleucus the Conquerour, the firſt King of that race: following the ſame fortune after that with the reſt of Aſia, till they came to be poſſeſſed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Conſtantine laying to it the Greater Myſia, made two Provinces of it; the one called Salutaris, from ſome miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pacatiana, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the ſaid Conſtantine was Præfect for the Prætorium of the Eaſt, and divers years before had begun his honours with the Lieutenantſhip of Britain. In the declining of the Conſtantinopolitans, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; poſſeſſed by them till the death of Aladine, the laſt King of that race: when ſeized upon, together with the Greater Myſia, and thoſe parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkiſh Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidinilli; extorted ſhortly from his heirs by the houſe of Ottoman.

9. Myſia.

INterpoſed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Country of MYSIA, bounded on the Eaſt, with Phrygia Major; on the Weſt, with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Propontis, and the Helleſpont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Æolis, and the Ægean. So called from the Myſians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether theſe Myſians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or ſome interlopers which thruſt in afterwards amongſt them, I find not determined. Moſt probable it is, they were natural Phrygians, being as ſuperſtitious in the worſhip of their ſeveral Deities, as any Phrygian of them all; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongſt them, by them called Myſæ. A people of ſo baſe and contemptible quality, that it grew into a common Proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Myſiorum poſtremus.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, ſituate in the North-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Myſius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; ſo the people of the Greater Myſia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympeni, to difference them from the Myſii or Mæſi of Europe. And as for Rivers, thoſe of moſt note beſides Æſopus, parting it from Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia, are, 1 Caicus, on whoſe banks ſtands the City of Pergamus, and from thence paſſeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elæa; and 2 the famous River of Granicus, which hath his fountain in Myſia Major, and paſſing through Myſia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his firſt eſſay againſt the Perſians: by whom upon the firſt noiſe of his preparations he was ſo ſlighted, that Darius King of Perſia, gave command to his Lieutenants reſiding in Aſia Minor, that they ſhould take him alive, whip him with rods, and ſo convey him to his preſence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Perſians. But Alexander ſoon taught them another leſſon. For though the Perſians were poſſeſſed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to ſtop his paſſage; yet he reſolved to charge them in the face of their ſtrength: knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of ſo great advantage, he ſhould not only leſſen them in ponit of reputation, but beget an opinion of himſelf that he was invincible. And ſo accordingly it proved, the Perſians being vanquiſhed by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Aſia ſubmitting to him on the noiſe of the Victory (as an enemy not to be reſiſted upon equal terms) ſome few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wiſely adviſed by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a paſſage, ſhould with his ableſt forces oppoſe the Aſſailant; becauſe in all Invaſions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only diſhearten their Souldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being ſuccoured and defended by ſuch weak Protectors, Which caution if the Perſian Commanders had obſerved either here, or at Pylæ

Ciliciæ, ſpoken of hereafter, Alexander had not ſo eaſily ſubverted the Perſian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or elſe prodigiouſly beſotted.

It is divided commonly into Myſia Minor, or the Leſſer Myſia, which lying on the Weſt towards Troas and the Helleſpont, is called ſometimes Myſia Helleſpontiaca; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperour Conſtantine, made up that Province which he called the Conſular Helleſpont: and Myſia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Myſia Olympena, and the Inhabitants Olympeni; which joyned by that Emperour to the Weſtern parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he cauſed to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reaſon formerly delivered.

Places of moſt obſervation in the leſſer Myſia, were 1 Abydus, ſtanding on the narroweſt of the Helleſpont, oppoſite unto Seſtos in Thrace; firſt built by the Mileſians with the conſent of Gyges King of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; Memorable both in the ancient and modern ſtories. In ancient ſtory for the famous reſolution of the Inhabitants, when beſieged by Philip the father of Perſeus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into ſome diſtreſs, and hopeleſs of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themſelves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, ſet fire thereof, and barbarouſly ſlew themſelves, with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved ſo little compaſſion, that he ſaid he would give the Abydeni three daies leiſure to die; and therefore would not ſuffer any of his ſouldiers to enter the Town, then ſet open to him, either to take the ſpoil thereof, or hinder this bloudy execution, till the three daies end. In Modern ſtory no leſs memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orchanes the ſon of Ottoman, through the treaſon of the Governours Daughter: who bewitched with the perſon and valour of Abderach-men, a young Turkiſh Gallant, whom ſhe had beheld from the Towers of the Caſtle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the wall; wherein ſhe manifeſted her affection, and promiſed to make him Maſter of that Fortreſs, if he would perſwade his General to raiſe the ſiege, and come with a ſtrong Party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever ſince in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Caſtles ſpoken of before, which defend Conſtantinople on that ſide from all force by Sea. 2 Cyzicus, ſeated in the Propontis, in an Iſland of the ſame name alſo, but ſo near the Continent, that it joyned to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of the Conſular Helleſpont, by conſequence an Archbiſhops See in the proſperous times of Chriſtianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their ſeveral Province. A Town of wonderful ſtrength and beauty, when firſt known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Aſia, who gives this Character alſo of it, Cyzicum nobilis civitas, arce, mœnibus, portu, turribuſque marmoreis Aſiaticæ plagæ littora illuſtrat, that is to ſay, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautifie and illuſtrate the ſhores of Aſia. Honoured amongſt many other goodly and magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one intire ſtone only; the whole Fabrick all of poliſhed Marble, every ſtone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain beſieged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who loſt before it by the Sword, Peſtilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the Falling-Sicknes of the Eaſt, as before is ſaid, it could never be reſtored to its former luſtre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by tranſporting the Stones and Marbles to Conſtantinople, for the Embelliſhing of that City. 3 Lampſacus on the ſame Propontis, in which the beaſtly god Priapus was worſhipped in as beaſtly a figure: Quem non denudo (as wittily Lactantius ſcoffeth it) ne quid appareat riſu dignum; ſuppoſed to be the ſame with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on ſome other reaſons, Alexander had conceived againſt it ſuch an high diſpleaſure when he was in Aſia, that he reſolved to raze it to the very ground. And ſeeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Embaſſadour from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace; and ſware as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatſoever he requeſted of him: whereupon Anaximenes intreated him to deſtroy the City, which now for his Oaths ſake he could not do; and ſo this wicked City at that time eſcaped. 4 Parium, ſo called, as ſome ſay, from Parius the ſon of Jaſon, a Colony at firſt of the Myleſians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homer called Adraſtia; as Lampſacus in the ſame Author, is called Pityuſa. More in the land, are 5 Scepſis. 6 Hiragerme, both mentioned by Ptolomy, but of more antiquity than fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPENA, are 1 Dainta, in the North-parts, not far from Olympus. 2 Apollonia, near a larg Lake ſacred to Apollo; in the ſame parts alſo. 3 Palæ Scepſis, or Scepſis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia. 4 Adramyttium, mentioned Acts 27. where St. Paul took ſhip to go to Rome. 5 Antandarus, on the ſame Sea alſo, now called St. Dimitri; named at firſt Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmerians here inhabiting (which ſheweth that Myſia anciently was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at laſt Antandrus, and that either becauſe built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Iſland of the Ægean, ſpoken of before, amongſt the Cyclades; or becauſe the Grecians having taken Polydorus the ſon of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ranſom or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 6 Protoſelene, on the ſame coaſt alſo. More in the Land, 7 Præpemiſſus, 8 Trajanopolis, 9 Alydda, of which little memorable. 10 Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, ſituate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the River Caycus; of a ſmall Town or Fortreſs made a ſtately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing or tranſcribing whereof, Parchment was here firſt invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here alſo were thoſe coſtly hangings firſt invented, which we now call Tapeſtry; by the Romans called firſt Aulæa, from Aula, ſignifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the firſt room furniſhed and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Phyſitian, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years: his health preſerved to ſo great age, by theſe means eſpecially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2ly. Never eating any thing that was raw. 3ly. Alwaies carrying about him ſome ſweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the ſeven Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Myſia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Aſia; within the limits whereof thoſe ſeven Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hereof which flouriſhed here for ſome ages in ſuch wealth and ſplendor, they came but from a poor and obſcure original. The firſt of them one Philetærus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonus, one of the Great Alexanders greateſt Captains; and after his death to Lyſimachus King of Thrace, by whom truſted with his money and accompts. Fearing the fury of his Maſter then grown old and tyrannous, he ſeized on the Caſtle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 Talents, which he offered with his ſervice unto Seleucus, the firſt King of Syria. But both Lyſimachus and Seleucus dying ſhortly after, he kept the money to himſelf, and reigned in this City as an abſolute King; leaving the Kingdom at his death to his brother Eumenes, no better man than a poor Carter, till raiſed by the fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furniſhed with money, though of no great territory, was able by the Galls and other Mercenaries, not only to preſerve himſelf againſt the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but alſo to enlarge his bounds as he ſaw occaſion. But the main improvement of this Kingdom hapned in the daies of Eumenes the ſecond, the ſon of Attalus, the brother and Succeſſor of this Eumenes: who being uſeful to the Romans in their wars againſt Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolis, Ionia, Troas, and both the Myſias; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that war. The reſt of the affairs hereof, till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this ſhort Catalogue of

The KINGS of PERGAMVS.

A. M.

3668 1 Philetærus, the firſt King of Pergamus, of whom before 20.

3688 2 Eumenes, brother, or as ſome ſay, the brothers ſon of Philetærus, vanquiſhed Antiochus, ſirnamed Hierax, in a fight near Sardis, and awed Seleucus Callinicus, both Kings of Syria. 22.

3710 3 Attalus, brother of Eumenes; reſtored Ariathes the Cappadocian to his Kingdom, and diſcomfited the Galls, compelling them to keep themſelves within the Country ſince named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans, and by them much courted.

3754 4 Eumenes II. ſon of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the ſpoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemy to the Kingdom of Macedon, which he laboured the Romans to deſtroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more uſe of theſe Pergamon Kings, began to grow to leſs liking with them.

3782 5 Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans in the life of his Brother, then leſs gratious with them; but he moſt gallantly refuſed it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.

3792 6 Eumenes III. Brother of Attalus the ſecond, and Tutor or Protector to his Nephew Attalus, in whoſe minority he governed the Eſtate, as King.

3813 7 Attalus III. ſon of Attalus the ſecond, ſucceeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceaſed without iſſue, and bequeathed it by his laſt Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had poſſeſſion of ſo great a Legacy, Ariſtonicus the baſe ſon of Eumenes, made himſelf Maſter of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and Eſtates hereof. Againſt whom the Romans making war were aided by the greateſt part of the Aſian Kings; not ſeeing their own danger and deſtruction to draw near unto them, by letting ſuch a potent neighbour come amongſt them, to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this war, though they had the better of it. For being now made Maſters of the Riches and Sweets of Aſia, they took with them their Vices alſo: growing thereby to great riot, and unparalleld luxury, which overcame the rigour and ſeverity of their former diſcipline, and made them apt for Faction, and thoſe bloody quarrels, which proved the ruine of their State. So truly was it ſaid by Juſtine, Sic Aſia facta Romanorum, cum opibus ſuis vitia quoque ſua Romam tranſmiſit. This Kingdom, taking it in the largeſt extent thereof, being thus ſubdued and ſettled as a Roman Province, had the name of Aſia, according to the name of the Greater Continent; by Ptolomy, and others, called Aſia Propria: continuing under the ſubjection of the Roman Emperours, till the tranſlating of the Imperial ſeat unto Conſtantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of the Eaſt, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Selzuccian family. Which being ended in the perſon of Aladine the ſecond, thoſe parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi; as thoſe which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia, made up the Aidinian: both of them ſwallowed up long ſince by the Ottoman Kings, the Acceſſories running the ſame fortune as the Principals did.

10. ASIA SPECIALIVS DICTA.

BEſides the Propria Aſia ſpoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdom, there was one part hereof which anciently had the name of Aſia, before it was communicated to the greater Continent, or this whole Peninſula. This for diſtinctions ſake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; becauſe committed to the government of one of their Pro-conſuls (who had his reſidence in Epheſus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Conſular Helleſpont, and the Province of the Iſles of Aſia. This we have ſpoken of before, as alſo how the Country lying about Epheſus, had more eſpecially the name of Aſia, than any other: ſo ſpecially, that Eraſmus thereupon inferreth, that by Aſia in the New Teſtament, (but more particularly in the Acts) is meant that part of Aſia only in which Epheſus ſtandeth.

This beeing agreed on for the name, we ſhall bound it on the Eaſt with Lydia, whereof it was anciently a part; on the Weſt, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Myſia; and on the South, with Caria. And having ſo bounded it, we ſhall divide it into the two Regions of ÆOLIS, and IONIA: that of Æolis lying on the North, towards Myſia; as Ionia doth upon the South, towards Caria: poſſeſſed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them ſo named.

Principal Towns in ÆOLIS, are 1 Acarnea, over againſt the Iſle of Lesbos, the Royal ſeat ſometimes of the Tyrant Hermias; who being once a Scholar of Ariſtotles, but unworthy of ſo good a Maſter, ſeized on this City, and here committed ſo great cruelties, that at laſt he was taken by the people, ſewed in an Oxes hide, and ſo baited to death. 2 Pitane, on a little River ſo named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making Bricks which would ſwim on the water. 3 Elæa, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4 Myrina, afterwards in honour of Auguſtus, called Sebaſtopolis. 5 Cene, by Strabo called Cane, by Mela, Cannæ, not far from a Promontory of the ſame name. 6 Cuma, the principal and greateſt of all Æolis, the birth-place of Ephorus a learned man of elder times; and the habitation of Sibylla, ſirnamed Cumana, to difference her from Sibylla Cumæa, ſo named from Cumæ, a City of the Realm of Naples. 7 Phocæa, a Colony of the Athenians, ſo named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phocæ) which thruſt themſelves a ſhore at the building of it. The people hereof over-burdened by the Perſians, and impatient of ſo great ſervitude as was laid upon them, forſook their Country, binding themſelves by a fearful Oath, never more to return unto it: and after many and long wanderings came at laſt into Gaul, where they founded the famous City of Marſeilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Joſephus ſaid to be deſcended of Eliſha the ſon of Javan, who therefore calleth them by the name of Eliſæi. And it is poſſible enough that ſo it was, Eliſha being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponneſus; from whence ſome of his race in ſucceeding times might paſs over into Aſia, and poſſeſs thoſe coaſts. For that they were a Greek people, is confeſſed by all; the Æolick Dialect or phraſe of ſpeech, taking name from hence. Not otherwiſe much mentioned in the courſe of ſtory, than as partakers of the ſame fortunes with the reſt of their Aſian neighbours before related, and ſo not neceſſary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular and punctual deſcription. For here the River Lycus falleth into the Mæander, and here Mæander and Cayſtrus, two of the moſt famous Rivers of Aſia Minor, (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Epheſus, honoured with one of the worlds ſeven wonders, the long abode of St. Paul, and the death and ſepulture of St. John; the Promontory Trogyllum, with a little Iſle adjoyning of the ſame name, mentioned Acts 20. 15.

Principal Cities of this tract, are 1 Myas, on an arm of the Sea, aſſigned by Artaxerxes, together with Lampſacus, and Magneſia, to Themiſtocles; when being baniſhed his own Country, he fled to his greateſt Enemy for entertainment; and there met with more ſafety than Athens would, and more honour than it could afford him; So that he well might ſay (as he often did) Periiſſem niſi periiſſem. And on the other ſide, the King was ſo overjoyed at his coming to him, (as having now upon his ſide the man who had moſt hindered him in the Conqueſt of Greece) that many times in his ſleep he was heard to clap his hands, and ſay, Habeo Themiſtoclem Athenienſem. In after-times, the water drawing further off, the ſoyl brought forth ſuch an innumerable multitude of Fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to foreſake the City, and with their bag and baggage to retire to Miletus: nothing hereof being left but the name and memory in the time of Pauſanias. 2 Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibyls, from hence called Sibylla Erythræa; of which Propheteſſes we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Africk. 3 Lebedus, of moſt note in the elder times, for thoſe publick Playes which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4 Clazomene, ſituate on a ſmall Ilet, near unto the ſhore, of much eſteem amongſt the Romans for the wines there growing; and no leſs honoured by the Aſians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo ſeated near unto it. 5 Priene, the birth-place of Bias, one of the ſeven Wiſe-men of Greece. 6 Ipſus, renowned for the great battel betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexanders chief Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adverſary, eſtated him in all the Conqueſts of his Maſter, except Ægypt only. 7 Teos, the birth-place of Anacreon, that laſcivious and drunken Poet, hence ſirnamed Teius; the Ovid of the Grecians both for wit and wantonneſs: of both which it may well be doubted, whether the ſmoothneſs of the verſe, or the wantonneſs of their expreſſions, be the more predominant. 8 Smyrna, a fair and ancient City, on a Bay thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greateſt part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the faireſt on the ſide of an hill overlooking the waters. Deſtroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antigonus and Lyſimachus, two of Alexanders great Commanders; of good accompt in the time of the Romans, and one of the ſeven Aſian Churches, to which St. John inſcribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, eſpecially for Chamlets, Grograins, and ſuch Stuffs; made for the moſt part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vended to the forein Merchant. For government of the trade whereof, and of other commodities of theſe parts, the Engliſh Merchants have an Officer called the Conſul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongſt others, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, ſaid to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9 Colophon, moſt memorable for the Inhabitants of it, ſo skilled in Horſe-man-ſhip, that the ſide on which they ſerved in war was ſure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any buſineſs, grew into a Proverb. It was alſo another of thoſe Cities, which ſo ambitiouſly contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were ſeven in all, as the old verſes tell us ſaying,

Septem urbes certant de ſtirpe inſignis Homeri,
Smyrna, Rhodus, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ.

Whether Homer purpoſely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to ſay: but ſure I am, that Paterculus ſpeaketh it in the commendation of Heſiodus (the next Greek Poet after him in courſe of time) that he had ſpecified his birth-place: Qui ut id vitaret in quod Homerus inciderit, patriam & parentes teſtatus eſt. 10 Epheſus, the Metropolis of the Roman Aſia, and the ſeat of the Primate of the Aſian Dioceſe: memorable in the pureſt times of Chriſtianity, for being the Epiſcopal See of Timothy the Evangeliſt, the firſt Biſhop hereof; 2ly. In that St. Paul directed to the people of it one of his Epiſtles; and 3ly. for the burial of St. John the Apoſtle, who by ſome learned men of the elder times, is ſaid to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but ſleeping; building that thought upon that ſaying which went abroad among the Brethren, that that diſciple ſhould not die, Joh. 21. 23. And no leſs memorable amongſt the Gentiles for that ſumptuous and magnificent Temple here conſecrated to Diana; which for the largeneſs, furniture, and workmanſhip of it, was accompted one of the wonders of the World. The length thereof ſaid to be 425 foot, 220 foot in breadth; ſupported with 127 Pillars of Marble ſeventy foot in height; of which twenty ſeven were moſt curiouſly engraven, and all the reſt of Marble poliſhed. The model of it contrived by one Cteſiphon, and that with ſo much Art and curioſity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finiſhed. When finiſhed, it was fired ſeven times, the laſt time by Eroſtratus, only to get himſelf a name: which hapning on the ſame night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occaſion to that weighty but witty ſcoff, that Diana (ſhe was counted one of the Goddeſſes of Midwifery) could not attend the preſervation of her Temple, being then buſied at the birth of ſo great a Prince.

As for thoſe Iones, or Ionians, they were no doubt the deſcendents of Javan, the fourth ſon of Japhet, as hath been ſhewn before in our general Preface: but whether they came hither out of Græcia, or paſſed from hence into that Country, hath been made a queſtion. The Athenians boaſting of themſelves to be Aborigenes, men growing as it were out of the Soil it ſelf, without any Anceſtors, report that thoſe Ionians were a Colony of their Plantation. But Hecatæus in Strabo doth affirm the contrary, Saying, that the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from thoſe of Aſia; for that Attica was anciently called Ionia, Plutarch in the life of Theſeus doth declare expreſly. Moſt probable it is, that Hecatæus was in the right; theſe parts of Aſia lying ſo directly in the way from the Valley of Shinaar unto Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave ſome of his company here, when he ferried the reſt over to the oppoſite Continent. I know Pauſanias, ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion the ſon of Xuthus, and grandchild of Deucalion: wherein he came ſo near the truth, though he miſſed the men, that it was the Grandſon of that man who eſcaped the floud, from whom both the Athenians and thoſe Ionians had their true original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to thoſe Ionians againſt the Perſians; who on the overthrow given to Crœſus, pretended to the Lordſhip or Dominion of Aſia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the firſt Perſian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the ſending of freſh aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King firſt undertook the invaſion of Greece: Xerxes and the ſucceeding Kings purſuing that firſt quarrel with great animoſities. After this yielding to the times they followed the fortune of the ſtrongeſt, ſubject ſucceſſively to the Perſians, Macedonians, Romans, Conſtantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladine, before mentioned: when both Æolis and Ionia got a new name, and are now called Sarcan, from Sarachan a Turkiſh Captain, who on the death of that Aladine ſeiſed upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom, long ſince ſubdued by thoſe of the race of Ottoman.

11. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Phrygia Major, and ſome part of Piſidia, from which ſeparated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the Weſt, with Æolis and Ionia, or Aſia ſpecially ſo called; on the North, with the Greater Myſia; on the South, with Caria. So called from Lud, the ſon of Sem, by ſome of whoſe poſterity it was firſt inhabited. In th full Latitude and extent thereof, as anciently, comprehending Æolis and Ionia, the adjoyning Provinces, it made the Lydian Aſia, ſpoken of before; within the verge whereof all the ſeven Churches were contained, mentioned by St. John in the Revelation.

The people of this Country are ſaid to have been the firſt Coyners of Money, the firſt Huckſters and Pedlers, and the firſt inventers of Dice, Ball, Cheſs, and the like games: neceſſity and hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Perſius, Artis Magiſter, ingeniique largitor venter. For being ſorely vext with famine, in the time of Atis, one of the Progenitors of Omphale, they deviſed theſe games; and every ſecond day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years, they continued playing and eating by turns: but then ſeeing that themſelves were more fruitful in getting and bearing children, than the ſoil at that time in bringing forth ſuſtenance to maintain them, they ſent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the ſon of Atis, who planted in that Country, called at firſt Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuſcany.

This Country was alſo called Mæonia, and was thought to have been the native ſoil of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the ſeven contending Cities, and thoſe which ſeem to have moſt colour for their claim, were anciently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was ſaid before. Hence Homer hath the name of Mæonides and Mæonius Vates: and in ſome Authors Carmen Mæonium is uſed for Homers Poetical abilities, as Carmine Mæonio conſurgere, in Ovid. Bacchus is alſo called ſometimes by the name of Mæonius; but for a very different reaſon, viz. becauſe anciently there were no trees in all this Country but the Vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1 Sipylus, and 2 Tmolus this laſt of moſt accompt in regard of the great fruitfulneſs of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the beſt Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1 Hermus, which riſing out of Phrygia Major, paſſeth only by the ſkirts hereof, and ſo falleth into a fair Bay of the Ægæan, opening towards the Iſle of Clazomene. 2 Pactolus, which riſing at the foot of Mount Tmolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongſt the Poets for its golden Sands. 3 Cayſtrus, no leſs notable for the abundance of Swans which ſwim thereon, whoſe Fountain is in Phrygia Major alſo, near the borders hereof; and his fall into the Ægean alſo over againſt the Iſle of Samos. 4 Mæander, which riſing out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furtheſt parts of the ſaid Phrygia, towards Lycaonia, paſſeth by Magneſia, and endeth his courſe in the ſame Sea, near the City of Epheſus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the leaſt, as Pruſæus counteth them. Of which in general thus the Poet,

> Mæander toties qui terris errat in iiſdem,
> Et lapſas in ſe, ſæpe retorquet aquas.

That is to ſay.

> Mæander wandring in the ſelf ſame ſoil,
> Whoſe waters meeting do as oft recoil.

And in another paſſage thus,

> Quique recurvatis ludit Mæander in undis.
> Mæander playes his watry pranks,
> In his ſo many winding banks.

The Country by reaſon of theſe Rivers was exceeding fruitful, abounding in all ſorts both of wealth and pleaſures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and underneath inriched with prodigal veins of Gold and Silver, and ſome precious Gems. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more ſenſual and voluptuous, and leſs fit for action, than any plot of their new Maſters could have brought them to, had not the natural delicacies of the ſoil it ſelf contributed to the advancement of their deſign. And yet before, they were ſufficiently infamous for their luxury, and exceſs of riot, when beſt ſeen in wars: ſo that it is a marvel they were able to prevail on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their command; as in the times of ſome of Crœſus Predeceſſors it is ſaid they did. Unleſs perhaps they did participate of the temper of Mæcenas, the great favourite of Auguſtus Cæſar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: Ubi res vigiliam exigeret, erat ſanè inſomnis, providens, & agendi ſciens; ſimulac aliquid ex negotio remitti poſſit, otio ac mollitie penè ultra fœminam fluens: No man more vigilant than he in times of buſineſs, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leiſure.

Principal Cities of this Country were, 1 Sardis, on both ſides of Pactolus, the Seat Royal of Crœſus, and the Kings of Lydia, till the Conqueſt of Lydia by the Perſians. After which time, being taken by the Grecians, it ſo ſtartled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his Attendants to ſay aloud every day whilſt he was at dinner, That the Grecians had taken Sardis; continuing that Memento till it was recovered. Which courſe (I note this only by the way) was commonly obſerved in the Parliaments of France, as long as Callice did remain in the hands of the Engliſh; and might be profitably revived, till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a moſt terrible Earth-quake (to which Diſeaſe moſt of the Aſian Cities had been very much ſubject) it was re-edified again at the coſt of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the ſeven Churches of the Lydian Aſia, of which the Holy Spirit took ſuch ſpecial notice. The others (beſides Pergamus, already mentioned in the Greater Myſia, and Epheſus and Smyrna in the Proper Aſia) were 2. Philadelphia, neer or on the banks of the River Cayſtrus, the ſecond City in accompt next to Sardis it ſelf, and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolitan, as appeareth by the Acts of the Conſtantinopolitan Council, where Euſtathius Biſhop hereof doth ſubſcribe himſelf, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφίων Μητροπόλεως, Biſhop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia, in the Province of Lydia. 3 Thyatira, honoured with the ſame Priviledge alſo, as appears by the conſtant Order, obſerved as well in the Civil as Eccleſiaſtical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The reaſon whereof (for otherwiſe it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis) was the reſpect had to thoſe ſeveral Churchs, in regard of their Primitive Antiquity, and the Foundation of them by St. John the Apoſtle, as it was generally believed. 4. Laodicea, by Ptolomy placed amongſt the Cities of this Province, as it ſtood in his time, and before: but afterwards laid by Conſtantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well obſerved by Strabo, that the Romans did not diſpoſe of their Provinces according to Nations, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἕτερον τρόπον διατάξαι τὰς διοικήσεις, ἐν αἷς τὰς ποιοῦσας δικαιοδοσίας, but according to thoſe Diſtricts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of Juſtice. Next unto theſe, there were of eſpecial conſideration, 5 Magneſia ad Mæandrum, ſo called becauſe ſituate on that River, to difference it from 6 Magneſia penes Sipylum montem, another of the ſame name neer the Hill Sipylus. The firſt aſſigned over to Themiſtocles, together with Myus and Lampſacus, as was ſaid before. The other memorable for the great Battel fought near unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loſs whereof falling unto Antiochus, occaſioned the loſs of all his Aſian Provinces on this ſide of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 Talents for the charge of the War, beſides ſome other hard Conditions then impoſed upon him. 7. Alabanda, oppoſite to Magneſia on the other ſide of Mæander, the People whereof, immediately on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only ſent Embaſſadours to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did; but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniverſary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddeſs. A thing more to be wondered at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor People for beſtowing on their City ſo divine an honour. 8. Trallis, on the banks of Cayſtrus, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Biſhop and Godly Martyr writ the Epiſtle ad Trallenſes.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Son of Sem is teſtified by the general conſent of ſuch ancient Writers, as treat of the diſperſions of the Sons of Noah; to which opinion the neerneſs of the Names of Lud, Ludin, and Lydi (or Λύδοι, as the Grecians call them) ſeems to give good countenance. Nor ſhall I here diſpute it further, as a point unqueſtioned: the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman, that ſhould name this Country, being taken up amongſt the Greeks for want of more certain truths. Once ſettled here, they grew up ſuddenly to a Kingdom; amongſt the ancient Kings whereof are numbred Manes as the firſt, Cotis, and Atis, and then Aſius (from whom Lydia firſt, and after, all the Continent, had the name of Aſia) as his immediate Succeſſors. After them I find mention of one Camblethes, ſaid by Athenæus to be ſo great a Gormandizer, that in his ſleep he eat his Wife, and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, ſlew himſelf for ſhame: and of another named Andramytes, as infamous for his filthy luſts, as Camblites for his gluttony. But the Race of theſe Kings ending in Omphale, the Miſtreſs of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion ſpin amongſt her Damoſels, the Heraclidæ or Poſterity of Hercules ſucceeded next, of whom there is no conſtant and continued Succeſſion till the time of Ardiſius, the nineteenth in order of that Line, who began his Reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his Succeſſors the Affairs hereof ſo exceedingly proſpered, eſpecially under Halyates the Father of Crœſus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Myſia, Caria, Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, acknowledged themſelves Vaſſals to this Crown: Conceived both in Wealth and Power to be equal to the Ægyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conqueſt of Syria and Ægypt by Nebuchadnezzar gave him the preheminence. But being come unto the height, it received a fall in the perſon of Crœſus, the Succeſſor of him who ſo much advanced it. The Kings hereof, from the time of the ſaid Ardiſius, take in order following.

The KINGS of LYDIA.

A. M.
3190	1	Ardiſius. 36.
3226	2	Halyates. 14.
3240	3	Melos, who overcame the people of Sardis. 12.
3252	4	Candaules, who ſhewing his Wife naked to Gyges, was by him ſlain; who marrying his Wife, ſucceeded him in his Kingdom. The whole Story is this: Candaules had to Wiſe a Woman of unparallell'd beauty; and ſuppoſing the greatneſs of his happineſs not to conſiſt ſo much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to ſhew her in Natures bravery to Gyges the Maſter of his Herds. Gyges at firſt diſſwaded him from an attempt ſo fooliſh; but ſeeing no perſwaſion could prevail, he condeſcended. When he had ſeen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cried to him, Eſto fidelis Gyges: Which words the Queen marking, and ſeeing the back of Gyges as he left the Chamber, the next morning ſent for him: When holding a ponyard in her hand, ſhe gave him his choice, either preſently to be ſlain, or elſe to kill the King, and take her to wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dower. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the leaſt, and ſo killed Candaules.
	5	Gyges, the firſt of this new line, added Ionia to his other dominions. A Prince of ſo great wiſdom, for the time he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours ſate (as it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occaſioning thereby the fiction of a Ring he had, by which made inviſible, when and as often as he pleaſed.
3305	6	Ardis II. the ſon of Gyges. 37.
3342	7	Sardiattes. 15.

3357 8 Halyattes II. of whom before.

3406 9 Crœſus, the laſt King of Lydia, ſubdued Doris and Æolis; after which victories, he was overcome by Cyrus, King of Perſia: in which battel, a ſon of Crœſus who had been dumb from his cradle, ſeeing a Souldier ready to kill his father, ſuddenly broke out into theſe words, Rex eſt, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Crœſus (one of the richeſt Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Perſian Province, A M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again ſubdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horſes of ſervice, diſpoyled them of all their armour, and trained them up in all manner of looſe and effeminate living; weakning by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoyning. After this they continued Perſian till the Conqueſt of Aſia by the Macedonians, in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoyls they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the reſt of this Aſia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Myſia, or Myſia Olympena annexed unto it; by means whereof the limits of each became ſo confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times aſcribed to the other. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire it was made (as all the reſt of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that part of it which lyeth next to Æolis, ſubject to the Carauſian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major, were to the Aidinian.

CARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Lycia; on the North, with Lydia and Ionia; on the Weſt, with the Icarian or Ægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the Son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof; who is ſaid to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others aſcribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Latmus, the dwelling, or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the ſtudy of Aſtronomy, found out the changes and courſes of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and caſt him into a dead ſleep; (which notwithſtanding, ſhe deſcended ſometimes to kiſs him) whence came the old Byword, of Endymionis ſomnum dormit. Here is alſo in this Country the River Salmacis, ſaid to infeeble all ſuch as either drinke of it, or bath in it: from whence the Poets raiſe the fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus deſcribed by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida ſpolia ſine ſanguine & ſudore, mentioned by Tully in his Book of Offices, and there uſed for effeminate and wanton exerciſes.

Places of moſt note in it, 1 Miletus, not far from the hill Latmus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the ſeven Wiſe-men of Greece, from hence called Mileſius; and the mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny ſaith of 80) Colonies, diſperſed in ſeveral places of Greece and Aſia: anciently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, ſirnamed Didymæus, whoſe Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Mileſians, to ſo vaſt a greatneſs, that it remained without roof; compaſſed about with a Grove, and dwelling houſes, and ſumptuouſly ſet out with coſtly workmanſhip. This is that Miletus mentioned Act. 20. to which St. Paul called together the Biſhops of Epheſus, and of other the adjoyning Cities, Ab Epheſo & reliquis proximis Civitatibus ſaith St. Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was called Lelegis and Anactoria. 2 Mindus, which being but a ſmall Town, had ſo great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynick cried out, and ſaid, Ye men of Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3 Heraclea ad Latmum, ſo called becauſe ſituate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4 Borgylia, or Borgylos, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Epheſus. 5 Milaſa, in old times famous for two Temples ſacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with ſtone for the eaſier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Proceſſions; the principal of the Citizens ſerving there as Prieſts, which office they held unto their death. 7 Primaſſus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Perſeus. Who meaning to force it by Mine, and finding the earth ſo ſtony that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithſtanding to make a noiſe under the ground, and cauſed great Mounts of Rubbiſh to be raiſed ſcretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the Work went very well forwards. At laſt he ſent word unto the Townſmen, that two parts of their wall ſtood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they ſhould find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So uſeful in the Art of War is a piece of Wit, that it prevailes ſometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-weſt of the Province, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea like a ſpacious Promontory, ſtands the Country of DORIS, ſo called of the Dores, a Greek People, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1 Cnidus, not far from a foreland or Promontory of the ſame name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2 Creſſa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolomy. 3 Halicarnaſſus (now called Neſi) the birth-place of Herodotus, and Dionyſius, named hence Halicarnaſſeus, two famous Hiſtorians, and the ſeat-Royal of Artemiſia Queen of the Carians (called from hence ſometimes the Queen of Halicarnaſſus) who in the honour of her Husband Mauſolus, built a ſtately monument, accounted one of the Worlds ſeven wonders; of which thus Martial, ſpeaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,

> Aere nec vacuo pendentia Mauſolæa
> Laudibus immodicis Cares ad aſtra ferant.
> That is to ſay,
> Mauſolus Tomb filling the empty Air,
> Let not the Carians praiſe beyond compare.

that the Carians were ſo called from Cares, the ſon of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been ſaid before. But Bochartus will rather have them ſo called from Car, which in the Phœnician language ſignifieth a Sheep or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may ſeem more probable, in regard that the Ionians next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called ſheep by the name of Cara, Κάρα. Ιωνες τὰ πρόβατα, ſaith Heſychius, the old Grammarian. But from whomſoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlick people. Eò armorum pugnaque amantes, (ſaith Pomponius Mela) ut aliena etiam bella appeterent, who when they had no wars at home, would ſeek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mauſolus raigned here, whoſe wife Artemiſia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings againſt Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the Great, we met with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him againſt the Perſians; adopting him for her ſon and Succeſſor; Subject after her deceaſe to the Macedonians, it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of theſe Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magneſia: in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoyls it was given to the Rhodians, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wreſted from the Eaſtern Emperours by the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; the greateſt part hereof, on the death of Aladine II. was raiſed unto a petit Kingdom by the name of Menteſia, ſo called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the reſidue being laid to the Caraman Kingdom, both long ago ſubdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Menteſia by Mahomet ſirnamed the Great, who diſpoſſeſſed Elias the laſt Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

13 LYCIA.

LYCIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pamphylia; on the Weſt, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three ſides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned, by conſequence naturally ſtrong, and not very acceſſible: the Sea for the ſpace of 20 miles ſhutting up the fourth. And here is to be obſerved, that beſides this, there was a little Region of the ſame name, not far from Troy, not much obſerved by our Geographers either old or new; but mentioned ſometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil, *Æneid.*4. Qualis ubi hybernam Lyciam, Xanthique fluenta Deſerit, &c. which is meant plainly of the Phrygian, or Trojan Lycia; the word hyberna being added becauſe of its Northern ſituation in reſpect of this. Of this ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in Phrygia Minor. In which alſo that there was a River called Xanthus, appears not only by thoſe words of Virgil which are cited there, but by two paſſages in Oenones Epiſtles unto Paris no leſs and evident.

The people hereof were ſometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which riſing in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, paſſeth by a Town called Xanthus alſo, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lycii and the Country Lycia, from Lycus the ſon of Pandion King of Athens, who either conquered them, or did ſome memorable act amongſt them, which deſerved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Aſia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eaſtward to the great Oriental Ocean: of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already, and more is to be ſaid hereafter, when theſe hills are grown unto the greateſt.

One of the branches of it, and the moſt notable in this Country, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infeſted with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monſter, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphoſis:

> Quoque Chimæra jugo mediis in partibus Hircum,
> Pectus & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat.

In Engliſh thus,

> Chimæra from a Goat her mid-part takes,
> From Lions head and breaſt, her tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was firſt planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monſter; employed upon this buſineſs by Jobares the King of Lycia, to whom he had been ſent by Prætus King of Argos, who was jealous of him, and ſent his Letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the ſaying, Bellerophontis literas portare; applied to thoſe, who were unawares employed to carry Letters tending to their own deſtruction: ſuch as thoſe carried by Vriah to Joab the General, by command of David.

This Country was ſo populous, that anciently there was reckoned threeſcore Cities in it, of which ſix and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul; now nothing left of them but the names and ruines. Thoſe of chief note were 1 Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See, when Chriſtian. St. Nicolas one of the Biſhops hereof in the Primitive times, is ſaid to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his Feſtival annually holden on the ſixth of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with ſeveral Paſtimes; and ſtill in ſome Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon, where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feaſt and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. 5. 2 Telmeſſus, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-ſaying, and accounted the firſt Interpreters of dreams. 3 Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven, and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4 Phaſelis, on the Sea-ſide alſo, a neſt of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatneſs, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algier is now: but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at ſuch time as Pompey ſcoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former ages were indebted for the firſt invention of thoſe ſwift Veſſels, which the Romans called a Phaſelus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5 Cragus, with the Mountain of the ſame name, thruſting out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6 Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Pliny calleth it, moſt probably of the Foundation of the neighbouring Rhodians. 7 Solyma, on the borders hereof towards Piſidia; the people of which were conquered and added unto Lycia by the ſword of Bellerophon, whom Jobares, with a mind to kill him, according to the requeſt of Prætus, imployed in that ſervice. 8 Corydalla, near the Mountain called Maſſigrum, the Maſſycites of Pliny. 9 Podalea, the chief Town of Mylias; as 10 OEnoanda is of OEbalia, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lycians were in former times a puiſſant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Perſian not without great difficulty; the people with ſuch obſtinacy defending their liberty, that ſome of them being beſieged by Harpagus, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the firſt Perſian Monarch, they firſt burnt their wives, children, ſervants, and riches, in a common fire; and then made a furious ſally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the ſword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Perſia, they ſubmitted without any reſiſtance. After whoſe death they fell with the reſt of theſe parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battel of Magneſia, it was given to the Rhodians for their aſſiſtance of that War; but governed as a Free Eſtate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out in their principal Cities: over whom was one chief Preſident, or Prince of the Senate, whom they called by the name of Lyciarchus. In theſe remained the ſole power of impoſing taxes, making War and Peace, appointing Juſtitiaries and inferiour Magiſtrates, and all things appertaining to the publick Government. A ſhadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a ſhadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain priviledge of ordering and diſpoſing the publick Games, wherein by his Office he preſided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the ſame fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks: after the death of the ſecond Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the Weſt, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Piſidia. So called from the Lycaones a People of Lycia, or from the Lycaonians, Inhabitants of Lycaonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themſelves into theſe parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I ſhould prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycaon King of Arcadia, diſpoſſeſſed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycaon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note herein, 1 Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: A place of great ſtrength and conſequence; ſituated advantageouſly in the Mountains for defence and ſafety, and therefore choſen for the Seat of the Turkiſh Kings in Leſſer Aſia, at ſuch time as they were moſt diſtreſſed by the Weſtern Chriſtians; who under the Command and preſence of the Emperour Conrade did in vain beſiege it, forced to depart thence with great loſs both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former Race being extinguiſhed by the Tartars; and finally of the Kings of the houſe of Caraman, whoſe Kingdom called the Kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South part of the Leſſer Aſia, that is to ſay, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Iſauria, Cilicia, Piſidia, and this Lycaonia. 2 Lyſtra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangeliſt; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculouſly healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the inſtigation of ſome Jews which came down from Antioch and Iconium, moſt deſpitefully treated; Paul being ſtoned in to the bargain, though it pleaſed God to raiſe him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleaſure of Almighty God, that he that did conſent to the ſtoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the cloaths of his Executioners, ſhould ſuffer in the ſame kind wherein he had treſpaſſed, and feel ſome ſmart remembrance of his former Actions. 3 Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the ſaid Apoſtle. 4 Laranda, ſo called by Ptolomy, and ſtill preſerving its old name, the ſecond place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5 Adopiſſus. 6 Paralais. 7 Canna. 8 Caratha, with others named by Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable.

Nor indeed were the Lycaonians themſelves, from whomſoever they deſcended, of any great note or obſervation in the former times: ſubject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Ptolomy, when made a Province of the Empire. Diſmembred from it by ſome of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and Preferments for ſome Court-Favourite, or to ſatisfie the ambition of ſome Prelates, aſpiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of it ſelf. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at firſt a member of the Selzuccian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which laſt founded by Caraman a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the ſecond, the laſt King of the Selzuccian Family, was a great eye-ſore unto thoſe of the Houſe of Ottoman from the time of Amurath the firſt, who firſt warred upon it, to the Reign of Bajazet the ſecond, who in fine ſubverted it, Anno 1486. as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the laſt of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the courſe of this Work.

PISIDIA hath on the Eaſt, Armenia Minor; on the Weſt, ſome parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycaonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and ſome part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Piſidæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reaſon of their name I find not amongſt my Authors.

The Country ſmall, but furniſhed with great plenty of all proviſions, as appeareth by that paſſage of Livie, where ſpeaking of the Expedition of Manlius into theſe parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalaſſa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich ſoil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Inde ventum eſt (ſaith he) in agrum Sagalaſſarum, uberem fertilemque omni genere frugum: But this to be underſtood only of the Plains and Champian, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for diſtinction ſake Antiochia Piſidiæ; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the ſum of whoſe divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the firſt King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him ſo called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2 Seleucia, the foundation of the ſame Seleucus, called alſo, to diſtinguiſh it from others of that name, Seleucia Piſidiæ. 3 Lyſinnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4 Selge, a Colony of the Lacedæmonians. 5 Sagalaſſa, ſituate in the moſt fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livie before-mentioned. 6 Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7 Termeſſus, ſtrongly ſituate in the Streights of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which hath the name of Milyes. 8 Olbanaſſa. 9 Plutaneſſus, of which little memorable.
